The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
B. L. FENCE & A. L. FENCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, JANUARY 1, 1891. No. 1.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well as the instructions as in its authorities."—Washington.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Counsellor-at-Law.
Practice in Chancery, Supreme and Circuit Courts.
Office, Park and North avenue. 4-10-ly

Counsellor-at-Law.
Real Estate Property solicited. P. O. Box 1, Plainfield, N. J. Office in the rear of Chemical Bank. Terms reasonable.

CHARLES H. THOMAS,
Dentist,
Has Fort street. A new local anesthetic application for extracting teeth without pain. Gold fillings a specialty.

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. address, Look Box 71, Scotch Plains, N. J. Orders left at C. C. Cheney's coal office, Second street, West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—4-1tf

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
120 Broadway, New York city, Room 38 and 39. (Opposite Astor House.) Bank Building, 3 Madison place, Room 16, P.—4-6tf

J. E. FERSTER,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office, E. K. Sweney's stable, Somerset Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Dogs and cats under treatment. Boarding. Telephone at No. 16. Consultation on diseases of all domestic animals. Residence, 29 East Fifth street.—2-6tf

P. A. DURHAM,
Civil Engineer and Surveyor.
No. 7 Stelle avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Particular attention given to the adjustment of disputed boundaries. Maps and surveys of all parts of the country. Residence, 11 West Fifth st. 3-6tf

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VanArsdale,
PIANO TUNER.
Is remunerable parts thoroughly order. Terms reasonable. Orders may be left at the store of Mr. Smith's Music Store, No. 17 Park avenue will receive prompt attention. Residence, 11 East 2d street, Plainfield. 4-6tf

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER.
PLAINFIELD, N. J.

C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
[Successors to E. P. & C. E. Brown & Co.]
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tints, Lenaptyns, Hand, Leather Stamp Flock Papers, &c. Burlaps for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
No. 36 East 2d St. 2-25-1y

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds.
FRUIT Send 7 2 CENT STAMPS IN THE SEASON. NO. 18 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey. Goods delivered to any part of the city.
A. LUTKINS. L. A. HUMMER. 4-1tf

Plainfield District Telegraph and Fire Alarm Co.
Prompt Messenger Service Furnished.
Baltimore & Ohio Telegraph Co.
LOW RATES. QUICK SERVICE. MONEY TRANSFERRED BY TELEGRAPH. COMMUTATION STAMPS FOR SALE.
OFFICE—4 PARK AVENUE.
W. S. SLITER, Manager.

TO THE PUBLIC!
We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of
LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.
It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and at short notice. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Mason's Materials at short notice.
A. D. COOK & BRO.
Depot.

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
[Formerly Gere's.]
Watches, Clocks And Jewelry.
Repairing neatly and promptly done.

Steam Marble Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones, Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large stock of Granite Monuments
A full workmanship is the most striking feature of our work. Estimates furnished. Orders by mail or telegraph will receive prompt attention. J. MANNING, Manager.
Plainfield, Somerset Co., N. J.
Monuments erected in Greenwood Cemetery, N. Y.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No. 5 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of Ladies', Gents', Misses' and Children's Boots and Shoes, Rubbers, Slippers, &c., always on hand. Repairing done to order.

A. Moore,
(Late Jas. Moore.)
Dealer in a full assortment of the best established brands of
No. 44 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will continue to supply his customers with the finest grades of Family and Bakers' Flour, at the lowest prices. Also, Feed, Corn Meal, Oats, Corn, Bran, Middlings, Hay and Straw, always on hand. Goods delivered free to any part of the city. Orders by mail or telephone promptly attended to.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR D. R. STATION.)
JAS. M. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat. First-class Plumbing throughout.
Thirteen rooms at reasonable rates. 10-31-ly

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset Alley 41 & North Plainfield N. J.
RICHARD A. BOICE, Proprietor.
Permanent and Transient Board, at Intervals.
First-class Liquors and Meals attached.
Hostler at attendance. 1-8tf

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, and will pay interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice " ISAAC HARPER, "
ELIAS R. POPE, Treasurer.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
Children's Class will include Modeling, Drawing and Cooking. F 11 tf

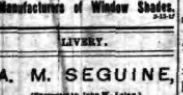
DODWORTH'S
CLASSES FOR
Dancing & Deportment,
Seminary Hall, Plainfield, N. J.,
Commencing Wednesday, Oct. 8th, 1890.
From 2½ to 5½ P. M.
For particulars inquire of E. E. KNOTTS, Seminary Hall, or THOS. J. DODWORTH, Residence, 1,193 Fulton Ave., N. Y. City. 9-25tf

Jas. M. Dunn,
Center in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS, SENT IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOOD DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE. 4-6tf

J. A. DUNHAM,
Civil Engineer and Surveyor.
No. 7 Stelle avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Particular attention given to the adjustment of disputed boundaries. Maps and surveys of all parts of the country. Residence, 11 West Fifth st. 3-6tf

PAINTERS & PAINTERS SUPPLIES
Paints, Varnishes, Glass.
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield. 4-25tf

L. D. WOOLSTON. J. F. BUCKLE
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTERS' SUPPLIES. 36 NORTH AVENUE 6-25tf

LIVERY.
A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables


Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings Parties and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure drives. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day, week or month.
TELEPHONE CALL, NO. 34.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will be pleased to see his friends and all who want to drive a first-class team or ride in a comfortable carriage. Horses and carriages for funerals a specialty.

Accommodation Express.
PETER SICKELS, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderbilt's Manifold, whereby the Accommodation Express connects the Plainfield Depot with all trains, delivering goods or baggage to and from any part of the city. Orders promptly attended to. Furniture, pianos, etc., without breakage. Prompt attention given to orders.

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The undersigned are the appointed agents for the Star and Merchants Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York, and prepared to grant insurance equally as favorable as any other reliable agency. Office in Stelle's building, Park avenue, Plainfield.
NATHAN HARPER & SON.

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also, representing other Eastern Fire Insurance Companies of the highest standing. Dwellings, Business Property and Stock. Fire and City National Bank Stock Bought and Sold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale.
OFFICE:
5 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS R. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry,

EDUCATIONAL.

Mr. EDWARD E. HOWE
OF NEW YORK CITY,
Will take scholars' pupils on the PIANO
THURSDAYS OF EACH WEEK.
With Kind consent of the Rev. Wm. H. Ackerson, 122 East Front street, address is as follows:
Mr. FEININGER
Has formed
His Lessons in Plainfield.
For terms, address
C. FEININGER,
Seminary Hall, N. J.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 Latirande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
Children's Class will include Modeling, Drawing and Cooking. F 11 tf

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The most delicious cigar in the State, and made entirely from the finest of tobacco.
CLEAR HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
Also constantly on hand the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars. Cigarettes and Pipes always on hand.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety.

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMESTIC
SEGARS!—
6, 28 PARK AVE., (Plainfield Bank Building.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Segars of Materials, of every description.

Translation of "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, with other Choice Brands. Call and Satisfy Yourself. 4-1tf

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
(Successor to E. D. Hayward.)
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 26 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting a Specialty. Shaving, Shampooing, &c., satisfactorily performed. 12tf.

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Machine Alley (Rear) Park Ave.
Residence—Corner Somerset and Second streets.
Correspondence or consignments solicited.

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Best Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 8-25-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
30 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.

WHATEVER form of printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings,
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memorials,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Public or Private Circulation,
Everything

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST,

DAILY PRESS

(Chautauqua Building)

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING,
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc. Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above branches carefully, promptly, and reasonably.
Having associated myself with the Messrs. Randolph, I am now prepared to do all kinds of Plumbing, Gas Fitting, Tin Roofing, Brick and Portable Furnaces, Ranges, Stoves, &c., at the lowest possible rates. Orders left at the shop of Randolph Bros., Park avenue, will receive prompt attention.
D. W. LITTELL,
No. 6 NORTH AVE. (OPPOSITE TRUBEDO, N. J.)

MICHAEL UHDAL,
CONTRACTOR
AND LANDSCAPE GARDENER!
Residence:
HETHERWOOD, NEW JERSEY.
P. O. BOX 97, PLAINFIELD.
P. O. Box 8, Somerville, N. J.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE WOE OF THE WINE-BIBBER.

Oh! dost to the light, and the wild dawn mist
Oh! dost to the light, and the wild dawn mist
Oh! dost to the light, and the wild dawn mist

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE. A. L. FORCE
Editors and Proprietors.

THE NEW YEAR.

The interchange of good wishes is a pleasant feature of the advent of another year. To cultivate and kindly expected personal regards, and to cast aside petty ill feelings is true nobility.

So observed, the customary usages of a New Year are honorable and beneficent.

The past is gone and forever. The future approaches with stately step, but concealed from mortal view.

To impartially scan the past and apply knowledge gleaned for better life, and to meet the coming year, is wisdom and safety.

This, too, is the season for registering new resolves, to firmly abandon evil and faithfully pursue the right.

May such resolutions be made and kept with the implored help of Him who is mighty to succor and save.

That 1891 may be richly freighted with the priceless blessings of peace, prosperity, health and happiness for all the people in our sincere desire, and "With charity for all and malice toward none," we extend the hand of fellowship and voice the heart-prompted salutation of a HAPPY NEW YEAR.

COMMENCING THE 24TH VOLUME.

With this issue commences the 24th year of existence of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, and we deem it a time to express thanks to the public for their patronage to and maintenance of a journal that for twenty-three years has fearlessly upheld the political sentiment and will of the people. In all truth years the Democratic party has had what is termed—"A hard hill to climb," but by it there "just the same" in 1884, after the people had their eyes opened to the monstrous iniquities perpetrated by the Republican party, who had held the reins of government so long. But for other iniquitous means and measures the Democratic party would have succeeded fairly in 1888. Quayism was, however, too much for us, although the popular will of the people was that GROVER CLEVELAND should be returned to the position of President of the United States in that year, which seat he had so ably filled for four years. THE CONSTITUTIONALIST has always endeavored to uphold and encourage Democratic principles, and by its fearless course has made for itself a name throughout the State and country, as one of the leading Democratic journals. It will continue to do in the future, as it has in the past—endeavor to inculcate pure Democratic ideas to the masses, and uphold the principles of Democracy. To our thousands of readers and numerous advertisers we extend a hearty wish that the New Year may be a happy and prosper ous one to all.

WILL HE LOSE HIS SEAT?

Can Councilman Brigham Represent the Third Ward as One of Its Inhabitants When He Lives Outside of It?

Great interest and excitement have been aroused by the information published exclusively in THE PRESS, that the incoming Council stood 5, to 4, to 2 on organization, with 6 necessary for a choice.

But greater interest and excitement will be aroused when the people herewith read that there is a possibility that the 5 straight-out Republicans will lose one of their number, and the Council will fill the vacancy.

The clause dividing the city into wards says that there shall be elected from among the inhabitants of each of said wards two councilmen, etc. And the city's charter says that in case of a vacancy happening in any elective office by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise, it shall be filled by the Council, etc.

The point to be raised and vexed because of all that, is Councilman Brigham's. He was elected from among the inhabitants of the third ward as their representative. But he moved outside of the fourth ward. The question is whether by such removal a vacancy in the third ward's representation has been occasioned and whether one of the inhabitants of the fourth ward can serve as Co uncilman from among the inhabitants of the third ward.

WAY TO RUN A Newspaper the Way to Run a Church.

Those Pinhfield pastors who have been trying to frighten their congregations to believe that an assistant clergyman is needed to do the "work of a big church property, will read with interest the following argument in favor of their claim, from The Independent, the paper of which Dr. H. K. Carroll, of North Pinhfield, is one of the editors:

"It has come to be a rule among all our Protestant denominations, with the exception of the Episcopalians, that they will put the total burden of all the work [in a parish] upon one salaried pastor. It matters not whether it is a church of 50 members or of 2,000, that one man must conduct the whole of all the services on the Sabbath, must prepare all the sermons without exchanging, must do all the visiting, must bury all the dead. Of course he cannot do this work as it should be done in a large church. This is beyond the capabilities of human nature. It is a cruelty to ask it of any man.

"Just worse than all this cruelty to the pastor is the injury done to the church itself. The church ceases to be a well-arranged organization; it becomes a mob looking about a preacher, and a preacher who is unable to do anything they need provide or supervise pupils. The minister is not for the church, but the church for the minister. The real work to which a church was called by its Lord is neglected. It cannot engage in aggressive work; or if aggressive work is undertaken, it must depend upon irregular and ill-organized volunteer services, supplemented perhaps by a Bible reader or a nurse. It is not strange that the churches waste considerable time in fruitless boodoggle plans, and spend little money to their work, are the natural results.

They have their room given deep in the hearts of their people; they are not in danger of dissolution when one man goes. If the Protestant churches of our large cities and towns propose to do good work and to retain the people they must adopt some such form of paid laborers. They should have a body of earnest ministers who have the time to do the work for the poor, to use the word in its scriptural sense, and who will be ready to minister to the sick. It is folly to expect that the large city pastor is a

THE CLOSE OF A BUSY YEAR.

EXIT OF THE CITY'S COMMON COUNCIL OF 1890.

The Board Meets and Transacts Routine Business—Resolutions Passed, Speeches Made, Etc.

The Public Schools Closed Yesterday—The Last Session of the Board—Its Work Reviewed—Resolutions Passed—Speeches Made—Retiring Members Thanked—Final Adjournment.

The Board of Councilmen met in regular session at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and transacted the routine business of the day.

The following bills were presented and referred:

Amount of bills paid in 1890.....$ 97,000 00
Number of bills paid during the year..... 1,500 75
Amount estimated expended for 1891.....$ 97,000 00
Number of lamps in use:
100 lamps at $54 50 per annum.....$ 5,450 00
100 lamps at $57 50 per annum..... 5,750 00
200
4 lamps for Plainfield avenue, at $17 50 per annum..... 100 00
300
Surplus..... $2,000 00
Appropriation..... 97,000 00

As the amount paid for public lighting by the Council of 1890 was $7,100 65, and the amount appropriated for the year was $1,349.78 for the Light Committee of the new Council to meet, the $7,731.50 paid out for the expiring year's light can hardly be considered an extravagant one. The truth of the matter is that this Committee, with other Committees of the Council of 1890, have exercised wise thrift and economy in the year, have husbanded carefully their resources, and have wrought much benefit to the people by their thoroughness and efficiency in handling the items of public government.

The appropriation for streets this year, as shown in the report of Commissioner Hetfield, presented to Councilman Smith, Chairman of the Street Committee, was $15,000. Of this amount the Street Commissioner has used $2,021.77 in the streets belonging to the Council of 1890. The sum actually expended on street work for this year was $10,281.36, but in meeting all the current expenses of the Department for the twelve months just ending, in setting up old debts, and squaring accounts in full, almost the entire amount of $27,000 was required. The sitting down on and from the constitutions of citizens whose property was benefited by improvements, had to be used. That all have been faithfully done the public is already knows.

But though thus handicapped by the debts of the preceding Council, the Council of 1890 succeeded in cutting down the city tax 7 points less than last year. The only thing that caused the increase in the tax rate this year from 13 to 2.34, as THE PRESS has already explained, was the big jump in the county tax, resulting from the heavy expenditures on the county prisoners.

Much of the work of the Council at its closing session Monday was of a routine character, but several interesting resolutions were adopted. Among them was of water-works bobbed up with its perennial severity in a communication from G. M. Dorrance, who offered to construct a first-class water works and electric light plant for the city which should give good service at moderate cost. He himself was not from the capital, and promised that if he were given the franchise the city might have free of charge all the water necessary for fire protection. All he required was the same same hold on the subterranean supply of water was adequate to operate the works, and he stood ready to begin the work of construction, the country round.

For the Water Board Councilman Newhall said that the Board might, if it chose, report the final default of the Waterworks Company of Plainfield, but thought it best to leave the matter for the incoming Council to dispose of. The Corporation Counsel, he added, had advised that no legal action be taken till after Jan. 1. The Water Board had done its best—he said—throughout the year, but the matter of water-works default, but thought it best for which the Board had hoped at the beginning of their term.

A Christmas fund of $595.61 was reported by Councilman Hetfield, after all bills that he had learned that ex-City Treasurer Jeremiah VanWinkle still held that sum, besides various books and papers, belonging to the city. The money belongs to the assessment account, and was raised, years ago, by a tax on property-holders benefited, to help pay for the construction of a sewer. Mr. VanWinkle's to the present treasurer's hands.

Steps to abate the public nuisance caused by a portion of North avenue, near the Nelson cemetery, being used, being constantly under water, were taken in the adoption of a resolution presented by Councilman Hetfield. By order of the Court of the Street Commissioner will open the sewer to abate the nuisance, and an attempt will be made to make the partners in the ownership of the nuisance, to wit: the Jersey Central Railroad Company, or the Land Improvement Company, or both —respond to suits for damages in the Circuit Court of Union County, being constantly under water. Here

...TY DEPARTMENT.

...PAPER OF THE STATE, THE ...THE CITY, AND HAS THE ...OF ANY PAPER ...CITY OF ATLANTA.

City Editor.

...Jones!

...tention at St. Mary's ...Church.

...a 50c chase New Year's ...t Grand.

...Many are already looking about for a change of residence for next year.

...About this time the sun starts north again. Not Winter will not find it out by some mistake by looking for it.

...The snow held off just long enough to give the young people a Christmas. Day of splendid skating.

...A lobster talk was given by S. J. Malone to a large audience of young men at the Y. M. C. A. room Sunday.

...Gambling" will be the subject of the talk to be given by L. F. P. Randolph, at the Y. M. C. A., Thursday, at 4 o'clock p. m.

...The calendar of L. C. Childs & Son, of 25 Charlotte street, Union, N. Y., for 1891, is one of the most convenient of the kind put issued.

...The Board of Trustees of the Grocers' Club League, recently appointed Jos. Lothery, Manager and Captain of next season's ball team.

...James Emmons has contributed $10 to the city treasury as the result of his street-fair work for Intoxication. The Overplus is necessary to restore his nerves.

...You can spend your New Year's after-noon and evening most enjoyably and comfortably at The Crescent, either skating, or watching the sport and listening to the band concert.

...W. H. Winslow, a former assistant in the Westfield public school, is accused of defrauding the people of the West Orange school, where he is now teaching. He denies the charges.

...All donations of either food or money for the entertainment of the boys at the Boys' Club on New Year's Day, will gladly be received on the morning of the day at the rooms on North avenue.

...Junior John M. C. Marsh, of West Solt, fell down the steps of the First National bank, the other day, and almost broke his leg. He was hustled down with money that made his fall that heavier.

...The sleighing in Central New Jersey is capital, particularly on Plainfield's macadamized streets and on the solid county roads; and those who have sleighs are taking every advantage of it.

...To-not at rest all varied rumors The Times is able to state by authority of the Treasurer, that the net profits from the W. C. T. U. Rink, recently held in The Crescent, amount to $450. This is added to the building fund.

...C. C. Garretson, Captain of the Bound Brook, N. J., rowing club, who trains the New Brunswick to this place this morning, in the face of the driving snow storm, in an hour, without dismounting.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

...Alonzo Randolph, Emil Keller, John Trice and George Washington were among those who spent Christmas in jail for intoxication. Randolph was all paid a fine of $5 each, except Randolph, who preferred to go to Elizabeth for twenty days.

...A colored clergyman who was visiting in Rahway on the 7th "Bound Brook Minister" who married William Snook, colored, to a white girl, as copied last week from the Somerville Democrat. Several of the colored people of Rahway form the ceremony.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

...Upon a taut train rushed past the North car shed shortly after 1 o'clock Dec. 29 just as a crowd of people were on the track about to board another train, and quite a terrible wholesale slaughter was narrowly averted. No train ought to have the right to pass when another train is at the station.

...The Westfield Methodist Episcopal Sunday School held its Christmas services Christmas evening, at six o'clock. The exercises consisted of a flag presentation by the Westfield Scott Grand Army Post and Plainfield; speech of Christmas music, instrumental and vocal; offerings for the poor; and distribution of gifts.

...There is no better time at the year for squaring up accounts than the present. To begin the new year with as clean a financial record as possible will not only make one feel better but will make things go at any time, but never a better time than now.

...Electric light subscribers complain because they can't get light from their electric lamps late enough in the morning, and because on dark stormy days when they need light they have to resurrect kerosene lamps or send for the gas meter man. Such places as New Brunswick have abandoned the light and motive power all night and all day.

...The Reception Committee of the Y. M. C. A., whose reputation is established, have in charge the New Year's reception from 7 to 10 P. M., at the Association rooms Thursday, January 1. A fine assortment of pictures from the Camera Club will be on exhibition. The program will be rendered at 8 P. M. and refreshments will be served during the day and evening.

...The case of Gessner vs. Hill was the second case on the Circuit list and the first one tried, at Somerville, last Tuesday. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff. This is the first ground fight, the long standing connection between the Hill Bros., who formerly kept the Nashanic hotel.—Somerville Messenger & Courier. Hill, on his own, were the attorneys for the plaintiff.

...The list of assessors caused by Sale on slippery sidewalks is becoming fabulous. Monday morning Mrs. Ann Sullivan fell to have a death on their hands as the result of their grossness. Tuesday morning Mrs. W. E. Cadmus in her grandaughter. The funeral took place at White House, Monday morning, the remains having been on the 9:45 train.

...Henry E. Bowen, of Belvidere avenue, has arrived home after a 5,000-mile trip through the West. He was gone fifty-six days and was hired sixty days. Everything he ordered a Western city half the size of Plainfield, and found it provided with electric street cars, water works and sewerage, he felt ashamed of our own home. He has hopes in the next Council, however, although Ivins was defeated.

...The choir of the Crescent Avenue church rendered a great deal of very beautiful music, at special services of praise, both Sunday morning and evening. The programme distributed was marked to be printed, except in the evening, when Mrs. Myers repeated her solo "Solitude," in place of "O Holy Night"; and Miss Hattie Richmond Mr. Sauch spoke most touchingly and original to his method of presenting his thoughts, and held the attention of the audience throughout. The Sunday evening was a pleasure of the evening was rendered by the rendition of Mendelssohn's beautiful trio "Consort," by Miss Wise, Miss Hattie Richmond and Mr. Sauch, which was highly appreciated and by all.

...Mr. Sauch has been engaged as the choir leader for the ensuing year.

...Miss Bertha Mosher, of Green street, is at home for the holidays.

...Miss Bertha Warman, of Green street, is spending the holidays at home.

...J. Calder Mathews, a member of the Four, is confined to his home by illness.

...Miss Lottie Mills, of Farmington, N. Y., is visiting Mrs. R. B. Rogers, of Madison avenue.

...Mr. and Mrs. Harry Brokaw, of North Plainfield, spent Christmas with H. T. Oppelt, of Somerville.

...G. E. Mason, chief clerk at the Crescent avenue depot, left Saturday for a hunting trip to Warrington, N. C.

...Samuel K. Doty, who served through the late war, is seventy-one at his home in Bridgewater township, Somerset county.

...Whitney Irving and Miss Estie Higginson, both of this city, were married by the Rev. Cornelius Schenck on December 24.

...Mrs. Margaret Van Syckel, mother of Mrs. Leonard Cole of 76 Dunr street, died at 6:25 on Friday after a week's illness of pneumonia.

...The marriage of Miss Susie Gilbert, one of the Plainfield public school corps of teachers, to Mr. Taylor, a Newark teacher, took place Dec. 23. They will make their home in the latter city.

...Miss Sadie Grant, assistant secretary of the U. L. S. C., at Buffalo, has been spending Christmas at the home of her father, Captain of Police Grant. This is her first visit since last May.

...As the home of the bride's parents, their friend street, on Christmas Eve, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck united in marriage Miss Leora L. Burdick and Charles O. Gaskill, both of this city.

...The Westfield Standard says that "Architect Oscar S. Teale, President of the Plainfield Camera Club, has made several visits to the Westfield exhibition, and speaks highly of the work."

...Ground has been broken for the handsome home that Architect Smith is to build for A. T. Stanton at the corner of Church street and Second place. John P. Emmons has been awarded the masonry contract.

...Peter Meyers of Plainfield and Miss Nina Hunter of Dunellen were married recently. They will reside in Plainfield on their return from their wedding trip. We extend congratulations.—Somerville Journal.

...Mr. and Mrs. Abram L. Cadmus, of this city, with their son-in-law and daughter, the Rev. and Mrs. Karner, of Asbury, attended the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Cadmus' parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Dunn, of that city.

...Captain Coombs has just purchased through the real estate agency of E. G. Mulford, the house and lot he has been living in on Westervelt avenue, formerly Bay street, this city. The former owner was Edward Loudin.

...Louis C. Miller, formerly employed in the job department of THE PRESS office, has secured a lucrative position in the Chicago office of the Associated Press, and will consult of an old English play and one American farce. Cards of admission can be obtained only of the following persons:

Mrs. Abbe J Cox Mrs. M E Higgins
" Alexander Gilbert " M W Tyler
" J Evarts Tracy " O T Waring
" Dexter Tolfrey " W B Wakefield
" W E Stevens " J E Myers
" D. VanVleck " C W McCutchen
" Rowland Cox " Morgan Taylor
" Geo VanBrunt " Howard Fleming
" W H Starling " D W Ford
" H D Lowe " G H Goddard
" R S Clark " Carl Huntington
" Robby Talmadge " James Clark
" F G Herring " F Edgar Collins
" Hugh Hastings " H M Hawkins
" H S Pitkin " C de Meritte
" Charles Hyde " VanNest Talmage
" G F Mellus " C J Fisk

New Officers of Anchor Lodge.

At the annual communication of Anchor Lodge, F. and A. M., of this city, held on Dec. 29, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Worshipful Master—F. M. Frank O. Herring.
District Deputy of the Grand Lodge of New Jersey.
Senior Warden—Henry S. Lowrie.
Junior Warden—Thomas G. Pollock.
Treasurer—Jay and Scott.
Secretary—James A. Demarest.
Trustee—William A. Freeman, Orville T. Waring, Benjamin O. Bowers.
Representatives to the Masonic Association—William A. Freeman, Orville T. Waring, James E. Torrill.
Proxy to Grand Lodge—William S. Cock.

New Elizabeth now the Game.

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

Those men from Plainfield are bowlers without a doubt. For a club to put up a total of 1,650 is an evidence that they have bowled before. When the second team of the Elizabeth Athletic Club went to up to Plainfield and were beaten last week, it was, after the game, thought an easy matter for the Elizabeth men to do up the Plainfield at this place. There was quite an aggregation of onlookers from both of the contesting clubs present at the E. A. C. Monday evening. The Plainfield men especially made the air hideous with their shouting. On the first frame the men from up the road took the lead and held it during the entire contest. On the last frame each man made a strong spurt, putting up 184, but Plainfield had attained such a lead in the early part of the game that they had a good lead on the game. Dills rolled a total of 311, having but one break. His best Price, of the E. A. C., was highest on his own side, he rolling 304.

Has the Crescent League Received Company With the Champion Amateurs.

The only two match games yet rolled this season by the bowling team of the Plainfield Cricquet League, have been those against the Elizabeths, and both were victories by scores of 1,583 and 1,650 an average of 1,608. This, as will be seen by the following scores already made in the Amateur Bowling Association, in way shows all the other teams except the Elizabeths, who beat it but a point. These are the championship scores of this season:

Ottawa — 1,539; 1,510; 1,545; 1,526. Average—1,525.
Staten Island — 1,469; 1,470; 1,475. Average—1,472.
Palma — 1,398; 1,491; 1,379; 1,621. Average—1,472.
Jersey City — 1,518; 1,533; 1,525; 1,527. Average—1,541.
New Jersey — 1,500; 1,502; 1,500; 1,476. Average—1,494.
Riverside — 1,472; 1,460; 1,502; 1,470. Average—1,511.
Elizabeth — 1,583; 1,620; 1,533; 1,533. Average—1,567.

Newer dates until 30-minute what should be attended to by-morrow. A night session of the Council is called, when Dr. Quill's Cough Syrup will cure it.

The residence of our publication are now in the new building on Park place, and the Post Office is also located there.

THE ROMANCE AND THE FACT.

What was not Said Will Not Be Printed in a Pamphlet "Legal."

The arrest of George W. Bilyeu at the North avenue railway station, December 29, furnished the New York World with opportunity for the following lurid story:

STRUGGLED HARD TO DIE.

A MAD ARTIST THROWS HIMSELF BEFORE A COMING TRAIN.

HE FOUGHT AND CLUNG TO THE RAILS, DETERMINED TO END HIS LIFE.

A THRILLING SCENE AT A RAILWAY STATION WITNESSED—A CROWD OF PEOPLE WITNESS A STRUGGLE WITH A MURDEROUS INTENTION—PUSHED MEN BEAD HIM TO A POINT OF SAFETY AND BIND HIM.

PLAINFIELD, Dec 29.—Great excitement was caused at the North avenue station of the Jersey Central this evening by the attempted suicide of George W. Bilyeu, an artist of local reputation. The young man met death with such desperation, and for some time has spent days and nights brooding over financial troubles. Of late from morbid fancy he took a grudge against all who saw him he has been especially despondent, and brought to a fit of madness he rushed from his studio crying.

"I must die! I must die!"

The platforms of the North avenue station were crowded with people waiting for the 5:o'clock he dashed up the flight of the full way entrance and threw himself prostrate on the tracks, moaning and twisting his fingers in his long locks till the hair seemed torn by the roots. For an instant the people thought the actions those of a man intoxicated and smelled pitiphobia, but most seemed they were spellbound with horror, for one of the lightning express trains of the blue imperial Washington service was rushing towards the station threatening a frightful death for the man on the track.

Seconds that seemed interminable passed before any one moved. Baggagemaster Gardenson and Express Agent Staats, together with one of Bilyeu's brothers, who had followed him from his home, sprang forward and went to drag the artist from the fast approaching train. At first Bilyeu clung firmly to the rails and pleaded to be allowed to die. Then he held wild revolved and he fought desperately with hands, feet and teeth.

The crowd witnessing the terrific life and death struggle groaned in an agony of suspense. Bilyeu's struggles ceased and he seemed fainted at the sight, for it seemed as if all hope must surely be ground to pieces by the relentless wheels of the coming train.

The madman was sufficiently the master of the others to keep them within the danger zone and was enabling the gloating horribly over the thought that they would all perish together, when Policeman Moore came on the platform. The four men succeeded in tearing Bilyeu from the track just as the train, its engineer applying the brakes, shot swiftly by.

Before the station could be secured Bilyeu manacled he made an unsuccessful effort to break loose an hurl himself before a train on another track, but he was so quickly as possible bound hand and foot and taken to the police station. He will be sent to an asylum to-morrow.

The fact of the matter is that Bilyeu was under the influence of liquor, and that policemen McGee after vainly endeavoring to get him to go home was compelled to place him under arrest. When the prisoner tried to throw himself under the wheels of a moving train, but with the assistance of one or two citizens and by the use of hand-cuffs, McGee was able to handle him, and soon had him in the lock-up. December 24 Judge Codington imposed on Bilyeu a fine of $5, which was paid, and gave him some good advice. This was the young man's first offense, he has promised his family, who are greatly distressed over the affair, that it shall be his last.

A Gate Post for a Bee Hive.

One of the big gate posts at the entrance to James Martine's place on Broadway, blew down Dec. 31, and after resisting fifty pounds of luscious honey, deposited there last Summer by industrious bees, were extricated.

Why Not a Princeton Club?

Since the members of the Plainfield Yale Club always have a splendid time at their annual dinner, and since there are quite a number of Princeton men less than there are Yale, it seems somewhat strange that the Jersey alumni don't "get together" in a similar way and perpetuate their love for their alma mater.

"It Broke a Man's Jaw Down."

The English stable man who had his colored fellow-workman arrested for "choking 'im so that 'e could 'ardly get 'is wind again" was very vituperative against the prisoner in court December 24, and as Judge Codington would not find out who had been most to blame in the quarrel he dismissed them both with a warning to behave themselves in the future. The Englishman said that the colored man would just as lief kill a man as look at him, and threw out mysterious hints that the darkey's ghost haunted Hartford; and the colored man laughed sardonically. "I'll wants to keep hawny eye on 'im," he said.—"I'll 'ave to watch my step, 'e break a man's jaw down in 'Artford, and his proud hoof is."

Yarrest Postal Packages.

The confidence that is displayed these days, either in the protective potency of the postage stamp or in the integrity of the American people, is touching. Yesterday there was a mail box, in this time of holiday gifts, that is not piled on the top with packages of all kinds, from the heaviest imaginable by the mysterious Christmas bundle, waiting for the postman to come and collect them. The display of confidence comes from the fact that the postmaster is promised to carry all postal laws of the United States for packages of mail of any kind, delivered outside the proper receptacles. Sometimes there is more of ignorance in many cases than there is confidence. Many persons labor under the impression that a package addressed to a friend staying in just at once under the protection of the Government. This is not true, not even true of a letter. No postal matter can be delivered properly until it has been put into—not on—the box provided by the postal service. Matter deposited anywhere else is virtually abandoned, and can be had only by asking some one might as well be left on the doorstep for the purchaser. Owing either to ignorance or carelessness of their rights to carry off such parcels, or to native honesty, this vagrant and unprotected mail matter usually does reach its destination, and is put together in a matter of good fortune, if it does.

John have you seen that woman lately?

"John, do you mean phaking? What woman I have seen that woman lately? Vhat woman? Vhat woman? Just now I have seen no woman. I have seen the best woman in the world. The best woman in the world is my wife. The best woman in the world is my wife. The best woman in the world is my wife

THE CONSTITUTION ALIST, JANUARY 1, 1891.

KING OF ALL TRAMPS.

How Wilson Becker Earned This Questionable Title.

Traveling From Boston to San Francisco and Back in Luxury—Actually Made Money Without Spending a Single Cent for Food or Fare.

[Written for This Paper.]

Wilson Becker, alias "Sailor Ed," the acknowledged king of the tramps, has just completed a tour of the world with a perpetual claim on the throne of Amateurdom, regnant. In May, 1889, a man whose proud boast is that he "never does a lick of work" in his life, and who has subsisted as a vagrant at Boston, His backer bet a large sum that the "Sailor Kid" would travel from one to the Golden Gate and return on the space of twenty-one days without spending a cent for railway fare or food. The feat was accomplished, and the smart who risked his money on the tramp presented him, the other evening, with $1,000 of his winnings, says the Baltimore Herald.

His majesty now offers to venture this sum on a second trip around the world in his life—on the proposition that he can beat his way around the world under the same conditions as those of his transcontinental trip, in 100 days. Meanwhile he basks in the homage of his two-legged subjects and the "dear king can't be dowsed by any man not worse der road."

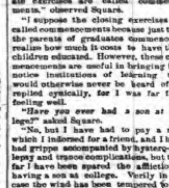
It may be interesting to note how this lad, not yet twenty years old, has solved

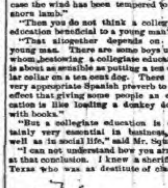
HIS MAJESTY, WILSON THE FIRST.

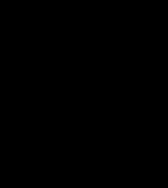
the problem of living without labor and gained the names by which he is known. He was born in Bensaras, British Guiana, and was christened Wilson Becker. At the age of nine he ran away. Working on the sympathy of sailors by romantic but untruthful tales of woe, he made voyages to California, Hongkong, Honolulu and England.

After an absence of eighteen months he returned home. But the fever of traveling was in his veins, and he next essayed land journeys, throughout the United States with a scenario that has no interruption up to the present time. In 1887 young Becker was, because of his nautical experience, was known to the fraternity as "Sailor Kid," attended a big exposition of swamps at the Nantucket (Pa.) coal breaker. It was decided at this convention to choose a king. The convention declared the candidature of about equal strength — Patsy Bolivar and "Sailor Kid." Each was popular and had a large following. After several unsatisfactory ballots, numerous fights and the consumption of oceans of beer, the contending parties made a compromise. It was agreed that the crown should grace the brow of the candidate who made the quickest trip from New York to San Francisco and back, via New Orleans. Becker won with hands down.

While en route he chanced to learn that the railroads allowed free rides on passes crossing the Western prairies, and while "Patsy" Bolivar "plugged along" slowly on freight cars in his







COLLEGE EDUCATION.

Alex. S Sweet Gives His Views on the Subject.

A Discussion with Mr. Madison Square—Should the New York Boulevard Be Sent to College—A Training School for Actors.

[Written for This Paper.]

NEday not long ago I met Mr. Madison Square, whom I am personally acquainted. My friend Mr. Square is a very remarkable fee any thing unless it is the peculiar way with which he speaks of his friends for advice. In asking for advice Mr. Square always mentions that it is the candid opinion of his friend that he needs. That is the only kind of advice that he can use in his business. [Do of opinions are synonyms of Mr. Square for candid opinions is that occasionally he gets a mouthful of advice that has not been asked for and which he can beat his way around the world under the same conditions as those of his transcontinental trip, in 100 days. Meanwhile he basks in the homage of his two-legged subjects and the "dear king can't be dowsed by any man not worse der road."

It may be interesting to note how this lad, not yet twenty years old, has solved

HIS MAJESTY, WILSON THE FIRST.

the problem of living without labor and gained the names by which he is known. He was born in Bensaras, British Guiana, and was christened Wilson Becker. At the age of nine he ran away. Working on the sympathy of sailors by romantic but untruthful tales of woe, he made voyages to California, Hongkong, Honolulu and England.

After an absence of eighteen months he returned home. But the fever of traveling was in his veins, and he next essayed land journeys throughout the United States with a scenario that has no interruption up to the present time. In 1887 young Becker was, because of his nautical experience, was known to the fraternity as "Sailor Kid," attended a big exposition of swamps at the Nanticoke (Pa.) coal breaker. It was decided at this convention to choose a king. The convention declared the candidature of about equal strength — Patsy Bolivar and "Sailor Kid." Each was popular and had a large following. After several unsatisfactory ballots, numerous fights and the consumption of oceans of beer, the contending parties made a compromise. It was agreed that the crown should grace the brow of the candidate who made the quickest trip from New York to San Francisco and back, via New Orleans. Becker won with hands down.

While en route he chanced to learn that the railroads allowed free rides on passes crossing the Western prairies, and while "Patsy" Bolivar "plugged along" slowly on freight cars in his pulling: Kas, ess, kiss, kissassus, you, you, yap, ip-ba-bus, or words to that effect, it dawned on me that a good old training school that would be for an ambitious youth you wanted to star in the world as an actor.

"But my dear sir," said Madison Square, excitedly, "a knowledge of Latin and Greek is indispensible in intercourse of gentlemen of culture and refinement."

"They are, eh? How much Latin and Greek does a man remember after he begins to work for a living? It don't take him six months to forget all he's learned here in two years. I went through Dexter's Commentaries, and all I can remember of it are the words of the first chapter, which are Omnia Gallia, meaning of course, how contrary it is to the friends have of the world, all the same is a perfect blank."

"You may say what you please, but it is knowledge of foreign languages is indispensible in polite society."

"That may be so, but society is no need of speaking several years and all the money there is in the family going to college to acquire a little knowledge of opinions as 'parvenu,' 'faux pas,' 'nom de plume,' 'bon ton,' 'de shoddyness,' 'non chalant' and other such other colleguial terms are easily acquired."

"I was thinking of sending my boy Tommy to college in a few years."

"Now my friend, you must excuse me, but your talk has discouraged me somewhat. However, I will you, knowing something of the boy, would give me your candid opinion if you do not think he would make an exception to the rule."

"I didn't know that you proposed sending him to college, but I am not surprised. That's a way you have of evening our things." I replied, with decided candor.

"What do you mean by that?"

"You see, Madison, whenever nature endows a man with sufficient brains and energy to make a fortune, at the same time in your case, she also gives him a speechdrift gob, who will see that the old man's luck is in a long circulation. I once knew a man who was so close that he was afraid to buy a postage stamp because he never could feel sure that the lead ran all the way through. It acquired a large fortune and a son who has to do logs. That young man came home fresh from college, fresher if possible than when he started, and he thought so much of his diploma that he disturbed the whole neighborhood cackling over it like an hysterical hen that had just laid an initial egg. If you are so dropsical with wealth that you be happy, why don't you start in with a few thousands into the slot of the Grant monument fund just to see if it is in working order and what sort of a show it would play, but do not squander any money on Tommy. I don't think that under any circumstances he will be able to drive life's nails without smashing the thumb of egotism with the hammer of conceit. If you send him to college, while you have been frugal all your life, he will acquire the poker habit and think that a pair of sevens is worth $10,007 to find out that the queen, king, ace, deuce, and trey of hearts will not beat a full. All I said, that's one of nature's playful little ways of preventing too much money accumulating in one family."

"Then you would not advise me to send Tommy to Harvard?"

"You might send him there, of course, but you ought to go along with him and help him to study, otherwise, while you will at least have something for the outgoing cash. Students, my dear fellow, are very much like other people as relation is like loafing a lonely down with books."

"But a collegiate education is certainly very essential in business, as well as in social life," said Mr. Square.

"I can not understand how you arrive at that conclusion. I knew a sheriff in Texas who was as destitute of classic

MADE A MISTAKE.

One Instance in Which Professor Woodrow's Theories Failed.

"Madam," said the jump, suavely, as the woman at the door, "I will have no objections, I hope, to my remaining on your back porch a few moments in order to inhale the delicious odor of that delicious young pullet chickens you are cooking?"

"Why, I—I don't know. I'm a young pullet chickens myself," she demanded.

"Why, I—"

"How do you know it isn't quail, or venison, or Rocky mountain sheep?"

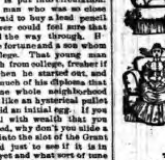
"Madam, I assure you—"

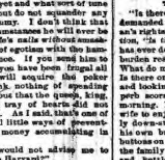
"How do you know it isn't canvas back duck, or Carolina rice birds, or blue winged teal, or diamond-backed terrapin?"

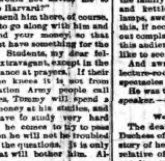
"I smells good enough to be any of them, I am sure, madam."

"If you next time you smells," he said savagely to himself as he trudged on, "I'll ask 'em for some of it."—Chicago Tribune.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.







—Life.

The Man Was There.

"Is there a man in all this audience," demanded the female lecturer on women's rights, with withering scorn in her inflection, "is there, I say, a man here that has ever done any thing to lighten the labor resting on his wife's shoulders? What do men know of woman's work? Is there one man here (folding her arms in her knitting in her wife's absence with perfect scorn) that ever got up in the morning, leaving his wife, and with such an energy as her slumbers, went quietly down-stairs, made the fire, cooked his own breakfast, and fixed the missing buttons on the children's clothes, darned the family stockings, scoured the pots and kettles, cleaned and filled the lamps, swept the kitchen, and done all this, if necessary, day after day without complaining? Is there one man who this audience let him rise. I should like to see him."

There was a lank in the rear of the lecture-room a mild looking man in spectacles timidly arose.

He was the husband of the eloquent speaker.—Chicago Globe.

Was a Title By Her Wit.

The death of Marchale Polladre, Duchess of Malakoff, recalls the pretty story of her betrothal. She was a near relative of the Empress Eugenie, and one day, when the Emperor was in a jocose, she met the gallant Marechal, who asked the beautiful girl for a kiss she had to refuse.

"What would you do with a rose? You like only flavorell," the girl answered, blow him the flower.

The reply captured the Marechal, who said to the Empress later: "I thought it would be difficult to conquer, but in this case Malakoff has surrendered at the first fire."—Le Figaro Illustre.

Personality Condensed.

Boston Girl—Didn't you enjoy London?

Chicago Girl—Not half as much as Paris.

Boston Girl—But weren't you interested in the Tower of London?

Chicago Girl—Stupid! It's nothing to the Eiffel Tower.—Life.

An Exposé of the Police Comm.

Policeman X—Your name, please?

De Pell—Charles Henderson Hicks Schumacher de Pell.

Policeman X—Ah?

De Pell—Twenty-two.

Policeman X—Good!

De Pell—I'm a dude.—Mussey's Weekly.

Positive Proof.

Little Miss—Mamma, that new neighbor's little girl is awfully vulgar. I met her in the street to-day, and after we passed she turned her head and stared back at me.

Mamma—Are you sure?

Little Miss—Yes, indeed; I saw her with my own eyes.—Good News.

A Little Mistake.

Rev. Dr. Primrose—Even though you were a very bad boy, I was glad to hear you tell the teacher you were sorry. It showed you felt repentant.

Little Johnnie—Naw. It showed I wanted to get off.—Epoch.

The Correct Thing.

"I wish I knew how to light the flame of love in her heart."

"Why not strike a matrimonial match?"—Boston Herald.

Cold Weather Presents.

Gus—My girl is knitting a fine scarf for me.

Charley (sadly)—I got a stiffen from mine.—Boston Herald.

HE TASTED THE WINE.

How a Childish Inquisitor Cornered His Mother.

I was visiting a few days at a time, says a writer, a very dear friend, whose little son had not yet dropped his lisping accent. The parents were the most devoted of wives, and dining with us, and the little boy, a remarkably well-behaved child, was allowed to sit at the table. The flow of conversation passed without interruption, and not a word was spoken by the child, who quietly observed, and after the reverberations of the closing crash had ceased he spoke:

"As I listened to her whistle thunderous appeals of my friend Judge Sloan," he said, addressing his fair lady in drawling tone, "I recalled a fable which I heard in my youth. You will remember, gentlemen, how a wise old man of the set entered into a covenant to slay the beasts of the field and divide the flesh. They divided the wealth. One man was to go into the thickest and deep and frighten the animals out, while the lion was to lie in ambush and kill the fugitives as fast as they appeared. Well the man sought the darkest part of the jungle, and lifting up his voice he yelled, shouted and braved and brayed. There never was heard such an infernal din. The lion was quite interested, and with his ears upright, and thought he'd peruse and see what the lion thought of it. With a light heart he went, but he found only the lion looking doubtfully about him, pale in the face and trembling in every limb.

"'What do you think of that for braggy?' said the exultant ass. 'Don't you think I'm some?'

"'Some two!' repeated the lion, in an agitated tone. 'Why! you're more an if I didn't know you were a jackass.'"

"Now, my boy, I'm glad to see you laugh at the effort of the lion to be funny, but you are visibly weakened. He lost the case."—Kansas City Star.

How He Proceeded It.

Maud (to her brother, just returned from the Academy Dramatic Society)—Mr. Footlite seems to have entirely recovered from his illness. I was afraid he would have to resign his part.

Brother—Oh, he didn't resign. He proceeded it.—Epoch.

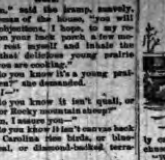
Professional Attention.

Dr. Kilcure—A man must be at least at the head of his calling to succeed.

Dr. Cureaone—Well, as soon as my income exceeds my debts next year, you are at liberty to consider me at the head.—Good News.

Helpful Cyclones.

One of Our Home Voices Presents a Theory.



"Don't you live in perpetual dread of the devastating cyclone?" asked the Massachusetts guest.

"Not a bit. I'm terrible fond of the stories of the angry cyclone," replied the Kansan, genially.

"Well, not to any great extent," answered the passenger from Sedgwick County. "You see we all have a cyclone cellar in the back-yard, and when the storm clouds look a little too manifesting for comfort we take to kiver till the show's over. You don't mind cyclones a great deal after you've lived right among 'em for awhile, and, besides, back here you only hear about 'em in story. Cyclones, especially Kansas cyclones, have their good freaks as well as bad. They ain't the best on destruction, but when the is a man a big favor when he's in a tight place. Why, last summer, when Bill Hankins, the mortgage fiend, was short of help, at harvest time, a cyclone came prancing along just as he finished cutting his five hundred acres of wheat, gathered every sheaf up clean and stacked it round his threshing-machine. Pretticed it was, too. There were some in Sedgwick County, too, people come thing miles to see it."

"I remember one of a favors cyclone did for me in the spring of '79," said the Quakeress, with a reminiscent air. "Bill river, on rented land, which wasn't worth very much, anyhow, and I had my mind one morning to move down to Sumner County and take up a quarter section. I talked it over with my wife, and before long we had our traps together, ready to start. Well, that night a frolicsome but gentle and obliging cyclone went on its merry rounds and picked us out, and set you down safe and sound almost before you could say 'scat' on the best unoccupied land for sixty acres in Sumner.

LIFTED FROM THE TRACK.

"Swept up the old ranch clean; didn't leave a thing that was worth bringing away, and didn't shake a brick out of the chimney. Found me and wife world-pile right by the back door, too, as usual."

"Why, we move the well?" asked the consumptive passenger.

"Well, no," answered the passenger from Sumner County, "no one, at least, belonged to the man who owned the ground."

"I remember that cyclone," said the editor of the Wakarusa Bird of Freedom. "But I have in mind another cyclone that was a blessing to many miscreants, and which saved many valuable lives, including my own.

"I was running from Dodge City, where I had been attending, as a delegate, a State temperance convention. I had a little bit weak of Prohibition, the engineer spied a 'wild' freight coming round a curve toward us, with the throttle open.

"Some of the passengers, who were looking out of the windows, saw the approaching danger, and became wild with the excitement, and their cheeks blanched, you might believe, when the crash seemed to be almost crash, and, though probably it was not more than five seconds, it seemed to be a year before I could draw another breath. Then somebody looked out of the rear door, swung his hat and gave a joyful cheers. The freight train, which a moment before had seemed to be coming down on us like the wolf on the fold, was now speeding away behind us toward the setting sun.

"A bob-tailed cyclone, which had been hovering in our rear for half an hour or so, had saved us.

"At the very moment our destruction had seemed inevitable the cyclone had caught up with us, our train had been lifted from the track, while the 'wild' freight had passed under us, and we had been set down again on the rails so softly that not even my pocket flask was broken. Then the cyclone had gone on its way rejoicing.

"Of course the engineer stuck to his post, as engineers never [illegible] on the Santa Fe route, and we pulled into Florence on time. Conductor Brady [illegible], the cyclone should have lifted the freight and allowed our train to pass under; but you may believe, we were all mighty glad the thing turned out as well as it did, and none of us carried home any hard feelings against the bob-tailed cyclone."—Scott Way, in Puck.

Quite Friendly.

De Garry—Is that girl across the street who plays the piano familiar with Gounod?

Gilks—She must think so, she takes such liberties with him.—Life.

Used Two Chairs.

Jack—You don't think I'm a close fellow, do you?

Nellie—I never saw any evidence of it.—Boston Herald.

A Safe Treasure.

Lil—Lou, if I were you I would not taste that catsup Mrs. Linkseye sent around. She dislikes you, and she might poison you.

Lou (horrified)—To what? To poison it?

Lil (impressively)—My dear, the woman is jealous, and—well—I think you'd better not taste it. Give it to father and the boys!—Puck.

Would Be All the Same.

Temperance Crank—I see your sign says: "Whisky 5 cents; water, 10 cents." Is water so scarce as that?

Oklahoma Bartender (laconically)—Yes, sir.

"Alas! my son, I can not deny you this luxury. You shall have the rich, sparkling water, while I will drink the base wine, and that I should suffer."—Drake's Magazine.

The Reward of Virtue.

Visitor—I understand that you are going to stop publishing the Sunday edition of your paper on purely religious grounds?

Clerk—Yes, sir, we are.

Visitor—Can I see the editor or the business manager?

Clerk—No, sir, they have just stepped out to get measured for babies.—Judge.

He Was Mistaken.

Old Gentleman—Louise, I heard some one being kissed once or twice in the hall last night. Was it you?

Louise (blushing)—Once or twice, did you say, papa?

Old Gentleman—Yes.

Louise—Then it wasn't I.—Harper's Bazar.

A Servant in Earnestness.

"You color pot my nose out of joint," said the teapot to the strainer. "It's a shame to treat me so."

"Better be mashed," returned the strainer, "than have any thing else to not good sense out of your mouth!"—Puck.

Somewhat Disconcerting.

Father (sternly)—I called at your house last night, Worthington, and yet you were not at home. It was after eleven o'clock.

Son—So I was out. You'd be, too, if you played poker with Tom Tattler.—Munsey's Weekly.

Mamie.

A writeria a Philadelphia journal has studied the various types of female pulchritude by different classes of people.

He tells us that the first type with round-pointed fingers belongs to characters with perception quite sensitive, to very plain people, to contemplative people, to all poets and artists who have a tendency as a prominent trait.

Another type—those that have spatulashaped fingers—belongs to people whose interests and instincts are mostly material, people who have a right appreciation of every thing that pertains to bodily use and comfort.

We have not yet reached the subject much study, but we think many other kinds of hands might have been considered, for instance, the hand that let drives, where the heart can never be, and the hand the Congressman holds when he expects to scoop the jack-pot.—Texas Siftings.

Unbreakable, Unfortunately.

Newsboy—Last edition of the World! One cent!

Citizen—Boy, if you'll guarantee that it will be positively the last edition of the World I'll give you a dollar for it.—Life.

A Fashionable Sort.

Clerk—Two? Yes, ma'am. What kind will you have?

Mrs. Tangle—I think I'll take some of the pink tea that is so fashionable now.—West Shore.

LEGAL NOTICES

NOTICE is hereby given that the partnership heretofore existing between Philip Heisler and John J. Heisleloff, under the firm of P. & J. Heisler, is dissolved by mutual consent this seventh day of September last, by mutual consent. All debts owing to the said partnership are to be received by the said John J. Heisleloff, and all demands against the same will be presented to him or payment.

Dated October 1st, 1890.

P. HEISLER,
J. J. HEISLELOFF.
10 1 6s

NOTICE. ORDER No. 2,980.

Estate of Peter Dunn, Deceased.

Pursuant to the order of George T. Parrot, Surrogate of the county of Union, this day made, on the application of the undersigned, as administrator of said deceased, notice is hereby given to the creditors of said deceased to present to the subscriber, at the office of Rowland M. Hyvet, No. 1 Clinton street, in the city of Newark, their claims and demands against the estate of said deceased, within nine months from this date, or they will be forever barred from any action at law or recovering the same against the subscriber.

ROWLAND M. HYVET,
Administrator.
Dated October 11th, 1890. 10 16 6t

WHEREAS, George A. Phillips, late of the city of Plainfield, Union county, New Jersey, died on or about the 15th day of August, A. D. 1890, intestate, unmarried, for the sum to my certain that he was entitled to the lands and tenements hereinafter described, and having applied for letting out and being in the city of Plainfield, in the county of Union, and State of New Jersey, and standing at a point in the centre line of George Dunham, in line of land of Mrs. Phillips, thence running in a northwesterly direction through the line of said George Dunham, and at right angles to George street one hundred and fifty feet to the place of beginning, and being the same premises conveyed by Mary Ann Phillips to said George A. Phillips, by deed dated the 15th day of August, A. D. 1890, and recorded in the Union county clerk's office, on the 20th day of August, A. D. 1890, in book of deeds No. 1, for the said county of Union, on page 1, &c., and whereas, I, the undersigned, have been appointed administrator of the said deceased, according to law.

Dated October 11th, 1890.

EDWARD P. THORN,
10 16 6t

Railroads.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD
THE STANDARD RAILWAY OF AMERICA
Interlocking Switch and Block Signal System.

TRAINS FOR THE WEST.

On and After Oct. 26, 1890, Trains leave Market Street Station, Newark:

8.30 A. M. FAST LINE, with Pullman Vestibule Buffet Parlor Car to Chicago, Pullman Parlor Car to Pittsburg, Columbus, Cleveland, and St. Louis, Pullman Sleeping Car to Cincinnati, Indianapolis, and St. Louis, daily except Saturday, for Pittsburg and the West.

9.00 A. M. WESTERN EXPRESS, with Pullman Vestibule sleeping cars, dining car to Pittsburg, Pullman Sleeping Car to Cincinnati, Indianapolis, and St. Louis, daily except Saturday, for Pittsburg and the West.

12.00 P. M. PACIFIC EXPRESS, with Pullman Vestibule Buffet Parlor Car to Chicago, Pullman Sleeping Car to Chicago, daily except Saturday, for Pittsburg and the West.

4.30 P. M. ACCOMMODATION, for Pittsburg, daily except Sunday, for Pittsburg and the West.

7.00, 7.00 A. M., 12.00 and 7.00 P. M. (Limited) for Philadelphia, 7.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00, 4.30, 7.00, 11.45 P. M. Sunday, 7.00, 11.00 A. M., 4.30, 7.00 P. M. For Atlantic City, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 P. M. Sunday, 11.00 A. M.

FOR ATLANTIC CITY.

1.30 P. M. (Through Car Line) week-days. For Ocean City, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, 1.30 P. M. week-days.

For Trenton—1.30, 1.37, 7.10, 7.20, 9.00, 11.01 A. M., 12.02, 2.40, 4.30, 5.05, 7.00, 9.00, 10.45 P. M. Sundays, 1.37 A. M. and 4.30 P. M.

For Lambertville, Phillipsburg and Belvidere via Trenton—1.37, 7.10, 9.00 A. M., 4.30 P. M.

For Lambertville and Phillipsburg only, 1.30 P. M.

For Bordentown—1.37, 7.10, 9.00 A. M., 4.30 P. M.

For Bristol—1.37, 7.10, 9.00 A. M., 4.30 P. M.

For Morrisville—1.37, 7.10, 9.00 A. M., 4.30 P. M.

A full line of tickets over sea route, and sleep at reasonable rates, can be obtained at the office of agent at Elizabeth.

For further information, see time tables to be had at the ticket offices.

CHARLES E. PUGH, General Manager.
J. R. WOOD, Gen. Pass. Agent.

Central Railroad of New Jersey

Station in New York, foot of Liberty Street. Time Table in effect, Dec. 28, 1890.

PLAINFIELD AND NEW YORK.

Leave Plainfield at 6.40, 7.35, 8.25 (9.00, Limited), 7.58 P. M., 7.00, 8, 9.15, 9.25, 9.57, 10.35, 11.05, 11.30 A. M., 12.00 M., 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 4.30, 5.00, 5.30, 6.00, 6.30, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.15, 11.30 P. M. Sundays—8.00, 9.00, 10.15, 11.30 P. M., 12.00 M., 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.15, 11.30 P. M.

Leave New York (foot of Liberty street, Jersey City), at 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 M., 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 4.30, 5.00, 5.30, 6.00, 6.30, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 P. M., 12.00 Night. Sundays—8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 M., 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 P. M., 12.00 Night.

Leave Newark 8.15, 7.15, 7.50, 8.40, 10.15, 10.50 A. M., 1.00, 1.30, 2.30, 3.30, 4.30, 5.30, 6.15, 6.45, 7.15, 7.50, 8.30, 9.30, 10.30, 11.30 P. M. Sundays—7.50, 8.30, 9.30, 10.30, 11.30 P. M., 12.30, 1.30, 2.30, 3.30, 4.30, 5.30, 6.30, 7.30, 8.30, 9.30, 10.30 P. M.

Accommodations for Newark change cars at Elizabeth.

PLAINFIELD AND SOMERVILLE.

Leave Plainfield 6.40, 7.35, 9.00, 11.30 A. M., 1.00, 3.00, 4.30, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 9.00, 10.15, 11.30 P. M. Sundays—9.00, 10.15, 11.30 P. M., 12.00 M., 1.00, 3.00, 4.30, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 9.00, 10.15, 11.30 P. M.

Leave Somerville 7.15, 8.15, 10.00 A. M., 12.00 M., 1.00, 3.00, 4.30, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.15, 11.30 P. M. Sundays—8.00, 9.00, 10.15, 11.30 P. M., 12.00 M., 1.00, 3.00, 4.30, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.15, 11.30 P. M.

PLAINFIELD AND BOUND BROOK.

Leave Plainfield 9.40 A. M., 5.30 P. M.

WESTWARD CONNECTIONS.

LEAVE PLAINFIELD.

8.25 A. M. for Elizabethtown, Bonding, Rahway, Metuchen, Perth Amboy, Monroe Junction, Jamesburg, Freehold, Manasquan, Sea Girt, Point Pleasant, Bay Head Junction and Lakewood.

9.00 A. M. for High Bridge Branch and Flemington.

9.40 A. M. for Bound Brook, Somerville, Millstone, Kingston, Princeton Junction, Trenton, Lambertville, Flemington, High Bridge Branch, Long Branch, Ocean Grove, Asbury Park, Bradley Beach, Point Pleasant, Bay Head Junction, Lakewood, Jamesburg, Monroe Junction, Perth Amboy, Metuchen, Rahway, Elizabethtown

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
B. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, JANUARY 8, 1891. No. 2.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well in its limitations as in its authorities."—MADISON.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Solicitors of Bonds, Mortgages, &c.
Office: Front St., North Plainfield, N. J.

W. V. STELLE,
Counsellor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner,
Office, PARK AND NORTH AVES. 4-26-90

GEORGE V. OAT,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box 116. Office at residence, corner Somerset and Grove streets, Somerville.

DR. CHARLES E. TRESH,
Dentist,
In West Front street. A first rate dentist can be advertised for nothing without pain. Gold filling a specialty.—[1y32

H. HARD,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 21, South Plainfield, N. J. Orders left at E. J. Corey's, Plainfield, or at Dr. Hard's, West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
241 Broadway, New York city, Room 36 and 37. (Lawyers' and Trust Co. Building.) Residence, Plainfield, N. J.—[1y47

J. E. FRESTER,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office No. 6, N. Sumner's livery stable, corner Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Day and night calls promptly attended to. Residence at No. 10, Unexpected on discovery of all the usual ailments. Residence, 21 East Front street, corner Elm street.—[1y37

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
residence and shop No. 36 East 2d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 9247

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
Successors to
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds,
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON.
NO. 24 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
L. A. HUMMER.
A. LUTKINS. 10-17

Plainfield District Telegraph and Fire Alarm Co.
Prompt Messenger Service Furnished.
Baltimore & Ohio Telegraph Co.
LOW RATES. QUICK SERVICE. MONEY TRANSFERRED BY TELEGRAPH. CONSULTATION, STAMPS FOR SALE.
OFFICE, 24 PARK AVENUE.
W. S. SLITER, Manager.

TO THE PUBLIC!

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of
LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.
It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice.
A. D. COOK & BRO.
3m8y

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR N. Y. STATION.)
JAS. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat. First-class furnishing.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-25-tf

SOMERSET HOTEL,
1st Somerset & Main Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. HOYER, Proprietor.
Commodious and Transient Rooms, at Interstate.
First-class Tables and Meals attended.
Meals at all reasonable hours. 10-25

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WRIGHT, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER, "
ELIAS R. POPE, Treasurer.

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS, SENT IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE. 4-30-tf

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C.E. & J.W. BROWN,
[Successors to O. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.]
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tiles, Anaglypta, Hand, Leather Relief Flock Papers, &c. Burlaps for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
L. D. WOOLSTON. J. F. BUCKLE
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 20 NORTH AVENUE
9-25-tf

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables

Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Large carriages of all descriptions for pleasure parties.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or business drives. Special attention given to horses by the day, week or month.—[1y13
TELEPHONE CALL, NO. 24.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will be pleased to call and exhibit to users of horses his facilities for turn-out in both style and safety. Horses boarded by the day, week or month. Carriages for weddings or funerals a specialty. 9-25-tf

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor
Office—Vanderbeck's Restaurant, Park's place
The Accommodation Express will attend to the transferring business of the city, delivering goods or Baggage to and from the Depot, Steamboat or Residence. Having 2 Parties, Parties will be furnished with careful and Prompt attending from 10 Odors

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The undersigned are now prepared to grant policies of insurance against loss or damage by fire on
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's. of the City of New York, as per printed advertisements. Also agent for the old and reliable Home Insurance Co. of New York. Office in corner occupied as a banking office by the late Jonathan Drake.
NATHAN HARPER.

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represent other first-class Fire Insurance Companies. Agents of the Texas & Pacific Line. Drafts on Ireland for sale. First and Chestnut Sts., North Plainfield.

BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale. OFFICE:
21 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
ELIAS R. POPE.

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
Corner Second and Somerset streets, North Plainfield.
Telephone Call, 3. 11-14

EDUCATIONAL.

Mr. EDWARD E. HOWE,
OF NEW YORK CITY,
Will take advanced pupils on the PIANO THURSDAYS OF EACH WEEK.
With Mrs. Howe at the Rev. Wm. R. Huntington's, 122 East Front street, address as the case may be. 11-6-90

Mr. FEININGER,
Has resumed
His Lessons in Plainfield.
For terms, address
61 FEININGER,
Amherst Hall, N. Y.
11-6-90

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The Kindergarten will include Modeling, Drawing and Cooking. 9 11 tf

DODWORTH'S
CLASSES FOR
Dancing & Deportment,
Seminary Hall, Plainfield, N. J.,
Commencing Wednesday, Oct. 29, 1890.
From 2½ to 5½ P. M.
For particulars inquire of E. R. KENYON, Seminary Hall, or ENOS J. DODWORTH, Residence, 1,351 Fulton Ave., N. Y. City. 10 9-tf

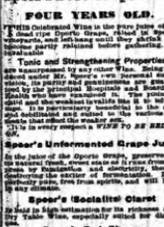
PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass,
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
8-23

L. D. WOOLSTON. J. F. BUCKLE
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 20 NORTH AVENUE
9-25-tf

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Carey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—N. W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges Reasonable. P. O. Box 228. Orders received a specialty. 11-6-tf

SPIEKERIA'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weekly persons and the Aged.


Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
In the juice of the Oporto Grape, preserved in its natural state, by the use of Pure Grape Must which is made by fermentation and absolutely, thereby retaining all the nutritive qualities of the fruit, perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep indefinitely.
Speer's Sociable Claret
Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Table Wine. Unsurpassed for Claret.
Speer's P. J. Sherry
Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands first in the list of pure brandies for medicinal use. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the Cognac from which it is distilled.
See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 9-18-tf

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR,
The excellent quality of the filler and wrapper of this Cigar, apparently permeates out to the character. The old fashioned way of wearing the weeds has caused imitations to be put over the region of the heart, has gone entirely out of date. And with it should have gone the custom which prevailed in some households of dressing children in perfect and with the same degree of black as their parents, but makes up after her words, bringing out, perhaps, with her reappearance, a black bonnet with a long crape veil set over and the ribbon that ties the neck of her smoke gown.

Fashion has decreed that the old-fashioned watch has been through this experience. And from very elegant of it to the cheapest grade of time-keeper, mounted something new. Then came the chatelaine watches, traveling to great thickness. Next, the fan, pursued and rolling her lily watches in the same fashion does not always carry either fan, parasol or riding whip. Something had to be declared that would be visible and appropriate for summer's heat, winter's cold, an afternoon drive or a horse-car ride.

QUAINT AND PRETTY.

The question was asked: "Where, oh, where shall the timepiece find room?" The answer was forthcoming for us. I am the missing link."

These chain bracelets with stem-winding watches can be bought all the way from thirteen dollars, to as many hundred. A favorite one, costing twenty-five hundred dollars, has a watch set with brilliants inserted in a dazzling band in the back of the watch. The position in watch bracelets is found in one that adjusts itself to the size of any wrist, right, reaching from the elbow to the wrist and turns not second, though the wearer may put her hands and arms through the most awkward gyrations. Just how practice in the Delsarte school of style expressed.

The newest pins show a tendency to represent a series of figures flying after the manner of wild geese. They are supplied from the mouth of a cornucopia. A flight of swallows, five in number, are set in gold and studded with brilliants. A long, slender gold wire connects the birdies. Underneath the body of each is a small pin to detach it in the way that its wearer wishes it to go.

Charming little cherubim with moonstone faces and diamond wings are fastened upon a golden rod. The face is mostly covered between the flashing wings until the last of the series is reached when two flight from the long darting acts of cheeks, lips and eyes, nestle lovingly against each other.

A few inches of all diamond swallows are to be found in the possession of some of our wealthiest queens of oil wells.

Lizards with green gold bodies and emerald eyes are also connected in this way and made to form the border of a full dress bodice where is outlines the neck.

It was only one season ago that all heads were clamoring for small bonnets for concert, opera and carriage use. And now the small bonnet has been supplied but in such infinitesimal form that it is not to be wondered at but that will protect the head from the pneumonia, bronchial and catarrhal troubles that are the fashion's victims. The fashionable bonnet is no protection at all, but it is light, dainty, pretty and becoming to some faces.

NEW SWALLOW BROOCH AND BRACELET WATCH.

A dotted one of black felt is trimmed at front and back with orange velvet bows and a cluster of black tips. The strings are soft ruffles of the brim and stand high in the back. A large velvet bow and strings that are secured under the back bunches of feathers.

A gray felt bonnet shaped like a platter is vandyked and turned with a gray beaver edge and a row of steel spangles. Under the front of the brim and at the back are turquoise blue velvet fittings.

No kind of ornamentation is so becoming to the face as the feather trimmings. It is always in harmony with complexion, style of wearing the hair and brought around the neck and fastened with a diamond pin. It is a pretty setting for laces at neck and bosom. Long, fine ostrich feathers and collars on loose dresses are edged with the long fluffy feathers. Some of it is curled and the edge of the fan is cut and brought around the neck and fastened with a diamond pin. Tiny ostrich shaped feather tips and mosses are in the height of fashion, these having a great liking for the most expensive.

Long fluffy tips for the new Directoire in "Dupuis Letters," have a velvet pelisse that has not fallen much below the knee, with a deep fur trimming, the most gorgeous hues. Gold and brown are most predominate, and the fur is of the same color as the

WHATEVER form of printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings,
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memoranda,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Public or Private Circulation.
Everything

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST,
DAILY PRESS
(Chautauqua Building)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING,
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc., Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above business in a neat, workmanlike and satisfactory manner. Having received Patent from the United States Government for my Portable Furnace, I am prepared to put them in any house or building in the country. Also, Agent for the Celebrated Richmond Stove, which is unsurpassed for economy in fuel and durability. Also, Agent for the Celebrated Richmond Stove, which is unsurpassed for economy in fuel and durability. Also, Agent for the Celebrated Richmond Stove, which is unsurpassed for economy in fuel and durability.
A. W. LITTELL,
No. 9 NORTH AVE. (NEAR PARK) PLAINFIELD, N. J.

MICHAEL UHDAL,
CONTRACTOR
AND LANDSCAPE GARDENER,
Residence:
NETHERWOOD, NEW JERSEY.
P. O. BOX 707, PLAINFIELD.
P. O. Box 9, Netherwood, N. J. 9-11-tf

FASHION'S REALM.

Bracelet Watches a Permanent Thing in Fancy Jewelry.

Women Hadn't Worked Out Their Salvation When Bonnets Were Small.

Directoire Time Are Small, Too Long Pelisses.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890, BY J. S. OGILVIE.]

Fashion has decreed that a wasting place, apparently permanent, in the bracelet. The old fashion of wearing the watch inside the sleeve has been put over the region of the heart has gone entirely out of date. And with it should have gone the custom which prevailed in some households of dressing children in perfect and with the same degree of black as their parents, but makes up after her words, bringing out, perhaps, with her reappearance, a black bonnet with a long crape veil set over and the ribbon that ties the neck of her smoke gown.

Fashion has decreed that the old-fashioned watch has been through this experience. And from very elegant of it to the cheapest grade of time-keeper, mounted something new. Then came the chatelaine watches, traveling to great thickness. Next, the fan, parasol and riding whip watches. But the fan does not always carry either fan, parasol or riding whip. Something had to be declared that would be visible and appropriate for summer's heat, winter's cold, an afternoon drive or a horse-car ride.

QUAINT AND PRETTY.

The question was asked: "Where, oh, where shall the timepiece find room?" The answer was forthcoming for us. I am the missing link."

These chain bracelets with stem-winding watches can be bought all the way from thirteen dollars, to as many hundred. A favorite one, costing twenty-five hundred dollars, has a watch set with brilliants inserted in a dazzling band in the back of the watch. The position in watch bracelets is found in one that adjusts itself to the size of any wrist, right, reaching from the elbow to the wrist and turns not second, though the wearer may put her hands and arms through the most awkward gyrations. Just how practice in the Delsarte school of style expressed.

The newest pins show a tendency to represent a series of figures flying after the manner of wild geese. They are supplied from the mouth of a cornucopia. A flight of swallows, five in number, are set in gold and studded with brilliants. A long, slender gold wire connects the birdies. Underneath the body of each is a small pin to detach it in the way that its wearer wishes it to go.

Charming little cherubim with moonstone faces and diamond wings are fastened upon a golden rod. The face is mostly covered between the flashing wings until the last of the series is reached when two flight from the long darting acts of cheeks, lips and eyes, nestle lovingly against each other.

A few inches of all diamond swallows are to be found in the possession of some of our wealthiest queens of oil wells.

Lizards with green gold bodies and emerald eyes are also connected in this way and made to form the border of a full dress bodice where is outlines the neck.

It was only one season ago that all heads were clamoring for small bonnets for concert, opera and carriage use. And now the small bonnet has been supplied but in such infinitesimal form that it is not to be wondered at but that will protect the head from the pneumonia, bronchial and catarrhal troubles that are the fashion's victims. The fashionable bonnet is no protection at all, but it is light, dainty, pretty and becoming to some faces.

NEW SWALLOW BROOCH AND BRACELET WATCH.

A dotted one of black felt is trimmed at front and back with orange velvet bows and a cluster of black tips. The strings are soft ruffles of the brim and stand high in the back. A large velvet bow and strings that are secured under the back bunches of feathers.

A gray felt bonnet shaped like a platter is vandyked and turned with a gray beaver edge and a row of steel spangles. Under the front of the brim and at the back are turquoise blue velvet fittings.

No kind of ornamentation is so becoming to the face as the feather trimmings. It is always in harmony with complexion, style of wearing the hair and brought around the neck and fastened with a diamond pin. It is a pretty setting for laces at neck and bosom. Long, fine ostrich feathers and collars on loose dresses are edged with the long fluffy feathers. Some of it is curled and the edge of the fan is cut and brought around the neck and fastened with a diamond pin. Tiny ostrich shaped feather tips and mosses are in the height of fashion, these having a great liking for the most expensive.

Long fluffy tips for the new Directoire in "Dupuis Letters," have a velvet pelisse that has not fallen much below the knee, with a deep fur trimming, the most gorgeous hues. Gold and brown are most predominate, and the fur is of the same color as the

THE HOUSEHOLD.

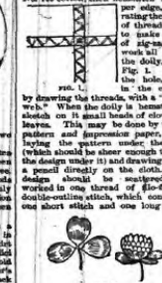
PRETTY WEDDING GIFT.

Dainty Articles that Can Be Made at a Trifling Expense.

Dainty articles of embroidered fine linen always form a pleasing addition to the array of brie-a-brac, glass and silver which finds its way to the conspicuous bride. An inexpensive but beautiful present can be easily made by one who has a all skilled in the use of the needle. It is a set, consisting of a dozen doilies, a half dozen, if preferred—finger bowl doilies, three cracker-plate doilies, and a tray-cloth.

For all these yard a beautiful quality of sheer linen, 32 inches wide, may be purchased, three-fourths of a yard for each doily, and a yard and a half for the tray-cloth. Cut, the material by a thread in pieces six and one-half inches square, then fold and a quarter from the edge, draw threads, going toward the center, on the four sides. The space of drawn threads should be a little over one-eighth of an inch. Turn down the narrow hem that makes along the lower edge of the drawn threads, taking care to get the corners very even.

Hemstitch along the inner edge with No. 100 cotton; then hemstitch the upper edge, separating three of threads, so as to make a row of eyelet-holes, as shown in Fig. 1. Fill the hole, made by drawing the threads, with a "spider-web." When the doily is hemstitched, stretch on a small frame and press. Finish with lace, three-quarters of a yard for each doily, and one long stitch.



SEEN OF OPERA BELLES.

a magnificent Egyptian scarabæi two thousand years old.

An exceedingly quaint and pretty tea gown direct from Worth is a sea-green pongee quilted over pale pink flannel. A Medici collar, revers and pagoda sleeves are edged with gold cord. Only a fair blonde with exquisite complexion is equal to the wearing of the green thus tryingly combined.

A French afternoon gown has a Princess back and pointed bodice in black velvet; revers and front of skirt in dark-red brocade. A gold Medici collar high enough to keep the cold blasts from the back of the wearer's neck is edged with black and a black lace waist front and lace edgings where the bengaline front combines with the velvet back put the finishing touches to a charming French combination. With this goes a red beaver bonnet lined with black velvet and trimmed with bunches of black, red and gold ostrich tips. Dull red gloves heavily stitched with black are worn with this.

Tramped at Last.

The English traveler stood on the slippery dock at New York, ready to step on the steamer for home. An American friend shook him warmly by the hand and said heartily:

"Be careful in going up the gangway," said the latter. "It is icy. For the matter of that, everywhere. I will be 'gin see all around you for the next six or seven days."

The Englishman, with a sad, dreamy, preoccupied look on his face, went aboard the ship.

Years passed. The American, now a gray-haired old man, was sitting down to breakfast one day when a cablegram, just received, was handed to him. It was from his English friend and contained these words:

"Ha! Ha!"

It had bored its way through his trust at last.—Chicago Tribune.

His Reward.

Generous Tax Merchant—You have been with me forty years to-day, Mr. Bardwell.

His Old Book-keeper—Yes sir.

Generous Tax Merchant—I'm going to show you substantially that I appreciate your services. You're getting old and feeble and can't move around very quickly, so I'm going to put a fire-escape put on the counting-room window.—Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

MORAL COURAGE.

The Story of a Girl Brave Enough to Acknowledge Her Mistakes.

"I'll never speak to her again," declared Stella Holmes, angrily.

"Never is a long time," said Stella's mother, warningly.

"It makes no difference," rejoined Stella. "After a girl deliberately insults me as Helen Nordeck has done, I will never forgive her."

"What has she done?" asked Mrs. Holmes.

"She gives a birthday party to-night and never invites me."

"Perhaps the messenger—"

"There was no messenger. The invitations were sent by mail, and I certainly would have received one had it been sent."

"Don't be what your Uncle George calls 'a violent inference,'" said Mrs. Holmes—"Mistakes are always liable to happen, and I can imagine many reasons why you did not receive an invitation. Did you inquire at the post office? Or perhaps Moses forgot to deliver it."

Moses was the man who lived in the tenant house, who generally called for the mail on his way home from the village. Stella had entirely forgotten Moses' carelessness.

"No, I haven't," answered Stella, sharply. "I'm sure it was a snub, and I let Helen know it this morning. I will not be treated like dirt."

Mrs. Holmes looked grieved, but said nothing more until the evening, and then she laid a letter on Stella's plate and remarked, quietly:

"As I conjectured, Moses forgot this. He says he had no idea it was important."

Stella flushed to the temples. "Oh, dear!" she exclaimed, "what shall I do?"

"Go to the party, of course," replied her mother.

"After what I did to Helen this morning?" cried Stella, in dismay. "Oh, mother, I never could look her in the face."

Mrs. Holmes laid her hand gently on her daughter's shoulder.

"My dear," she said, tenderly, "the only way to be established in acknowledging a wrong. You were wrong in acting hastily, and now you must show your better nature by trying to avoid its consequences. You surely cannot intend to sacrifice your future friendship with Helen because you took pains to acknowledge a mistake?"

"Mother," pleaded the big fat gardon, said Stella, humbly.

"Not necessarily," answered Mrs. Holmes. "If I were you I would distinctly tell her that you did not receive the invitation until the very last moment, and that you would be pleased to have her forget the whole affair. Then reach out, and there, if I am not much mistaken, Helen will understand your motive and meet you without further explanation."

"But if she should feel resentful?" suggested Stella, anxiously.

"Then you would apologize, and she will love you all the more."

It was with a rueful face that Stella dressed and went to the birthday party, but she came back about eleven o'clock all aglow with happiness.

"Helen said Miss Holmes, smilingly, 'it was delightful!' exclaimed Stella, joyously. "Do you know, mother, she had hardly spoken before I took an absolute pleasure in letting Stella know how sorry I was. And I actually believe that we are now better friends than ever."—Golden Days.

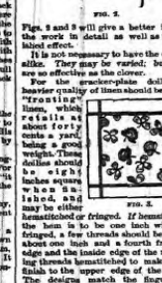


FIG. 1.

by drawing the threads, with a "spider-web." When the doily is hemstitched, stretch on a small frame and press. Finish with lace, three-quarters of a yard for each doily, and one long stitch.

Hemstitch along the inner edge with No. 100 cotton; then hemstitch the upper edge, separating three of threads, so as to make a row of eyelet-holes, as shown in Fig. 1. Fill the hole, made by drawing the threads, with a "spider-web." When the doily is hemstitched, stretch on a small frame and press. Finish with lace, three-quarters of a yard for each doily, and one long stitch.

FIG. 1.

FIG. 2.

Figs. 2 and 3 will give a better idea of the work in detail as well as the finished effect.

It is not necessary to have the designs alike. They may be varied, but some are so effective as the clover.

For the cracker-plate doilies, a heavier quality of linen should be used—"ironing" linen, which retails at about forty cents a yard, being a good weight. These doilies should be eight inches square when finished, and may be either hemstitched or fringed. If hemstitched, the hem is to be one inch wide. If fringed, a few threads should be drawn about one inch and a fourth from the edge and the inside edge of the remaining material, was handled to him. He was from his English friend and contained these words:

"Ha! Ha!"

It had bored its way through his trust at last.—Chicago Tribune.

FIG. 3.

His Reward.

Generous Tax Merchant—You have been with me forty years to-day, Mr. Bardwell.

His Old Book-keeper—Yes sir.

Generous Tax Merchant—I'm going to show you substantially that I appreciate your services. You're getting old and feeble and can't move around very quickly, so I'm going to put a fire-escape put on the counting-room window.—Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

MORAL COURAGE.

The Story of a Girl Brave Enough to Acknowledge Her Mistakes.

"I'll never speak to her again," declared Stella Holmes, angrily.

"Never is a long time," said Stella's mother, warningly.

"It makes no difference," rejoined Stella. "After a girl deliberately insults me as Helen Nordeck has done, I will never forgive her."

"What has she done?" asked Mrs. Holmes.

"She gives a birthday party to-night and never invites me."

"Perhaps the messenger—"

"There was no messenger. The invitations were sent by mail, and I certainly would have received one had it been sent."

"Don't be what your Uncle George calls 'a violent inference,'" said Mrs. Holmes—"Mistakes are always liable to happen, and I can imagine many reasons why you did not receive an invitation. Did you inquire at the post office? Or perhaps Moses forgot to deliver it."

Moses was the man who lived in the tenant house, who generally called for the mail on his way home from the village. Stella had entirely forgotten Moses' carelessness.

"No, I haven't," answered Stella, sharply. "I'm sure it was a snub, and I let Helen know it this morning. I will not be treated like dirt."

Mrs. Holmes looked grieved, but said nothing more until the evening, and then she laid a letter on Stella's plate and remarked, quietly:

"As I conjectured, Moses forgot this. He says he had no idea it was important."

Stella flushed to the temples. "Oh, dear!" she exclaimed, "what shall I do?"

"Go to the party, of course," replied her mother.

"After what I did to Helen this morning?" cried Stella, in dismay. "Oh, mother, I never could look her in the face."

Mrs. Holmes laid her hand gently on her daughter's shoulder.

"My dear," she said, tenderly, "the only way to be established in acknowledging a wrong. You were wrong in acting hastily, and now you must show your better nature by trying to avoid its consequences. You surely cannot intend to sacrifice your future friendship with Helen because you took pains to acknowledge a mistake?"

"Mother," pleaded the big fat gardon, said Stella, humbly.

"Not necessarily," answered Mrs. Holmes. "If I were you I would distinctly tell her that you did not receive the invitation until the very last moment, and that you would be pleased to have her forget the whole affair. Then reach out, and there, if I am not much mistaken, Helen will understand your motive and meet you without further explanation."

"But if she should feel resentful?" suggested Stella, anxiously.

"Then you would apologize, and she will love you all the more."

It was with a rueful face that Stella dressed and went to the birthday party, but she came back about eleven o'clock all aglow with happiness.

"Helen said Miss Holmes, smilingly, 'it was delightful!' exclaimed Stella, joyously. "Do you know, mother, she had hardly spoken before I took an absolute pleasure in letting Stella know how sorry I was. And I actually believe that we are now better friends than ever."—Golden Days.

FIG. 4.

and a half inches wide; and when completed the cloth should be thirty inches long by eighteen inches wide.

The clover design is the most effective in this case as well, and should be arranged in the corners, with as little stiffness as possible.

Fig. 4 will give a suggestion as to arrangement. The materials for the centre set may be purchased by the dollar, and when finished they make an exquisitely dainty and acceptable addition to a young housekeeper's linen closet.—Belle Farnum, in Good Housekeeping.

A Million-Dollar Cage.

There are a vast number of fine dresses from all parts of the world in the National Museum, and the most extraordinary article of this kind is the $1,000,000 feather cape. This comes from the Sandwich Islands, and is made up of red and yellow feathers so fastened together that they overlap each other and form a beautiful design. These feathers shine like the finest of floss silk, and the red feathers are for the most part the yellow ones. All the yellow feathers, however, that are expensive. They are found on but one bird, and are worth in the country in which they are found 50 cents apiece. They were in times past taken for taxes by the Hawaiian kings. They are taken from a little bird known as the o-o, which is very rare and which has but very difficult to capture. Each bird has two of these yellow feathers under its wing, and all of which would not fill a vase and the feathers are pulled out and they are then freed. There is a letter in the museum from the queen of the Sandwich Islands, who states that it took more than 100 years to make this cape, and the authorities of the place seem say that it is worth more than the finest diamonds in the English regalia.—Boston Journal of Commerce.

Dad's Name Him.

"Oh, dear! dear!"

"What's the matter?"

"Why, dear, I looked at that man a great few into my eye, and I had to wink."

"Well?"

"Well, he winked, too."—West Shore.

When Asked Him.

Sambo—What did de doctah say afied yer mouty, Bill?

Bill—He 'vised dat I had a contagious ole ob dampers. Fust ob de mawnin' I'se gwine to take a dram ob whiskey, an' makes a horrible liver; 'cose I'm liable to go out'n my senses.—Texas Siftings.

Not Prospector of It.

"Sir," said the man, "I can't give nothin'. Charity begins to home, you know."

"It will be a long time before your charity is truly enough to home," replied the gallowsy tramp.

The man who declaims against railroads and says they ought to be seized by the government forgets that a free ride on a train is often a welcome relief.

NOW DAYS.

Now days Joseph's acting strange. He Wears his shirt collar same as other men. Got some boots with patent leather On 'em; you bet your life he does. Bought a hat that cost a dollar; Wears one standing on his ears. Rushes out a state-ap notice, What's the matter? Nancy Hanks.

Now days Joseph's mustache sweet move Lively; goes in hear the sparkling Every time he passes a looking glass Smiles and sights around the church door. Joined the choral union, when he Never joined before, I guess. Says thing; I guess, not guess! Chaser of Nancy Hanks.

Now days Joseph's got a new style Single-rastus; has no partner Up and swears things. And he blushes Let her come within a mile. Don't see much as stand the mention Of Elisha Poole—he paid Commission like a little mission. Nancy Hanks.

Now days Joseph's lookin' round and Private Secretary and porter Tinker and the like, and styling Himself about the place of Hanks.

Now days Joseph's right in clover; Thinks his interest was made For they tell me, He's inhaling ever Now days, and sure doing well. —A. Opper, in Judge.

TOLD BY A THIEF.

"Mollie Matches" Relates What He Knows of Picking Pockets.

I once knew a pickpocket who would, on occasion, unbosom himself as to his work.

"I can," he said, "get a thousand pocket-books before I am detected once, and the discovery will occur through the clumsiness of one of my 'mates.' Yes, it would seem as though my business would pay, but you must recall the fact that most pocket-books do not contain much money. We open them frequently and find no money at all—nothing but receipts and other papers. Then, again, there is a large class of many readers that the money made in pocket-picking is not as great as one might think. Then, the expenses are heavy. It takes at least three men to do the work, and four are better. A stool pigeon is usually necessary up the line. The Duke and station-Beaser, who were both diminutive men and therefore fond of talk, soon got into conversation. While the Marquis—a tall, powerful man—kept his eye on a subject, until he found his friend the Duke up to his ears in conversation, when he himself entered, addressing most of his conversation to the stranger.

Altogether the train arrived at B——and the Marquis bade a hearty farewell to the Duke, and with a kindly adieu and a shake of the hand from the stranger, Mr. Marquis quitted the carriage, while his dispatch-box and wraps were secured by the surprise of the station-master, by a tall, powerful footman and the train soon glided again out of sight. Silence was not, however, long maintained, the station-master breaking out with the question: "I wonder if that is the Duke of Norfolk?" "That's replied his companion, "was the Marquis of Duke." The answer seemed to dumbfound the station-master for a time. Subsequently he exclaimed: "So that were a Marquis was he? Well, now, I do think it's kind of 'mean' of him to run off sneaky little chaps as us, don't you?" The good fellow's position was not a bad one, however. When the train drew up again his prize was safely inside his compartment, and he was not long in making his escape from each carriage as soon as he lived.

MEN DELICATE DISH.

The Pocket Men Who Know All About the Feminines.

A party of men sat at a table in a Broadway restaurant sipping a cognac after lunch. A number of ladies on the sidewalk entered shyly and took her seat at a table near by. The girl's figure was perfect, her jewels were beautiful, her eyes were blue and snappy, her glasses from her small white hands, and held the bill of fare daintily before her. She was evidently a shopping maiden of rose leaves and honey dew.

"Two to one she orders lobster salad," said one of the men, watching the sweet maid.

"Done," responded another. "Salad is too much for her. She'll have cold consomme."

"Well, now, you just listen for her to order 'a la mode souffles," said a third. "I never saw a girl out shopping in my life that didn't run in at noontime and get an omelet souffle. They are so fluffy and sugary that they just hit feminine taste."

"That girl will order a chocolate eclaire and a cup of tea," said a fourth man in the party.

In the meantime the waiter was standing at the elbow of the dainty shopper, awaiting her order. She studied the card long and carefully, and then she ordered.

"I don't think you have what I want."

"We have most every thing," said the waiter.

"Oh, no," said the girl, "but I came in here on purpose for one thing, and I don't see it on the menu."

"What is it, miss?" asked the waiter.

"Frankfurter sausages and sauerkraut," replied the maiden.—N. Y. Sun.

A Particular Customer.

Particular Customer—Have an oyster stew and I don't want the oysters and liquors and milk all mixed in a mess and mouldy bread. I want the milk carefully boiled first, then the oysters added, next the liquor and finally, after it is taken off, the seasoning. Take particular about the milk. It must be sweet and pure. Have all things, and be careful to get good butter. Only the best and freshest gilt-edged dairy butter. Do with fix right, and mind, I want the very finest to be obtained anywhere; no common mud oysters for me. Now start in.

Waiter—Yes, sah. Do you wish the oysters with or without, sah?

Customer—Without what?

Waiter—Pearls, sah.—N. Y. Weekly.

A Rabid Socialist.

Mr. Goodfellow (waiting for Miss Beastly to appear)—Wasn't Mr. Van None here last evening?

Miss B.'s Little Brother—Yep.

"Do you know he is a Socialist?"

"Yep. You just ought to see how social he is with sister when he gets her alone. Yessir!"—N. Y. Weekly.

He Was Surprised.

Managing Editor—Why, you have published Yale yesterday's game as a ten-inning game. Yesterday was a championship of the foot-ball year.

Managing Editor—But what can you do to a newspaper editor?

Applicant—I can kick poets downstairs.—Brooklyn Life.

OVERCOMING A DIFFICULTY.

Brownrig, who has to use both hands in riding, invents a measure of police.

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 W	2 W	3 M	6 M	1 Y
1 in.	$1.00	$1.50	$2.50	$4.00	$7.00
2 in.	1.50	2.50	4.00	7.00	12.00
3 in.	2.00	3.00	5.00	9.00	15.00
4 in.	2.50	3.50	6.00	11.00	18.00
5 in.	3.00	4.00	7.00	12.00	20.00
6 in.	3.50	4.50	8.00	13.00	22.00
7 in.	4.00	5.00	9.00	14.00	24.00
8 in.	4.50	5.50	10.00	15.00	26

The Constitutionalist.
W. L. FORCE, } A. L. FORCE
Editor and Proprietor. } Editor and Proprietor.

CONSTITUTIONAL DEMOCRACY.

The distinguished Senator Carlisle, of Kentucky, recently, and well remarked—"It is the duty of the Government to administer public affairs, and the duty of the people to manage their own private affairs."

That thoroughly expresses a fundamental principle of the Democratic party, against which partisan opponents, under various pretexts, have waged warfare both open and disguised.

The legitimate duty of free representative government is plain and simple. The preamble to the organic law of our country proclaims its true character in the following words:

"We, the People in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

That is the Constitution.

That is Popular Sovereignty.

That has been the guiding star of Democracy for over a hundred years.

To keep within the clearly defined limits of duty as above quoted is safety and prosperity, to madly pass beyond them is to endanger the "blessings of liberty."

To establish justice"—

Is to break all the people, not any privileged portion, so just to justly enacted and impartially administered laws.

"To insure domestic tranquillity"—

Is to lawfully ignore sectional animosity and to cultivate the spirit of mutual respect and good will

"To provide for the common defence"—

Is not to lavishly appropriate money for improper legislative purposes or political jobbery, but only to an extent absolutely needed for the protection of national honor and the security of the governed.

"To promote the general welfare"—

Is not to enrich special interests at the expense of others, but to levy taxation, both direct and indirect, with rigid equity, honesty and economy, and to let it find its way down to every individual, high or humble, to reap the full reward of industry and enterprise.

When the Government ceases to be run for the benefit of unprincipled politicians, and the people possess the unmolested right of managing their own private affairs, brighter will the sun of universal prosperity shine.

Where Was the Corporation Counsel?

The city of Elizabeth apparently had everything arranged to secure the abolishment of the grade crossing nuisance and the railroads were anxious to begin work to that end; but the action of the Common Council is to be corticounted to the Supreme Court by interested property owners on the ground that it requires eighteen votes to pass the resolution ratifying the agreement with the railroad companies, instead of twenty-two, as we were cost for it, a three-fourth vote being required. What was the matter with the City Attorney or Corporation Counsel to expost the city authorities on this legal requirement? Is Plainfield the only city in the State that gets the legal advice it pays for?

"Professional Testimony" in the Keys Case.

[From the Warren County Item.]

The Somerset contested election case displays the usual specimens of purchased testimony and convenient forgetfulness. The case was evidently set up with great care for trial before a Committee of Elections, of which Senators Gardner and Rice should be members. But Rice will not be in it from the start, and Gardner will only play but a very small part in the inquiry, so that the testimony which is now being taken will appear in its proper character as evider ce only, instead of in accordance with no longer exists. But the Supreme Court Commissioners before whom the testimony is being taken ought to see that some attempt is made for indictments for perjury and subordin tion of perjury.

Phillipsburg's Experience.

[From The Warren County Item and]

The Plainfield Reform Club is threatened with the presence of the Rev. Dr. Crosby next Sunday, and Monday evening.—Exchange.

If the Club wish to meet the purpose of advancing the cause of temperance, and the meetings are conducted in a quiet, religious manner, we fail to see any objection to them being held on Sunday. Similar meetings were formerly held in Phillipsburg on Sundays, and were generally addressed by some one of our clergymen. The only wonder is no cause for objection no longer exists.

Slaughtered a Million Steers.

The Swift Company, of which M. A. Haven, is the representative in this city, are the largest slaughterers in the World. During the year 1890 they killed, dressed and shipped over 900,000 cattle and calves. This meat was handled through their commission houses which number 102 and are located in all the principal cities. The Plainfield and Somerville people nearly all get trade in this city and adjoining towns.

Where the Boxes Are.

The official list of fire-alarm box locations is as follows:

Box 11—Corner of Front and Somerset streets.

Box 12—Park avenue and North avenue.

Box 14—Front and Richmond.

Box 25—Broadway, near Seventh street.

Box 27—Broadway, corner Kenilworth avenue.

Box 28—South avenue, corner Wood-lawn avenue.

Box 32—Seventh street, corner Central avenue.

Box 34—Fifth street, corner Liberty street.

Box 37—Seventh street, corner Spooner avenue.

Box 42—Front street, corner Grove street.

Box 43—Front street, corner Plainfield avenue.

Box 45—West Second street and Muhlenberg place.

Box 46—West Second street, in front of Pond Machine Tool Works.

BOARD OF ENGINEERS.

Chief—Thaddeus O. Doane, 40 West Fifth street. Residence 72.

1st A st.—J. Erwin Waters.

2d Asst.—James A. Martin.

COMMITTEE ON FIRE AND BUILDINGS.

Walter S. Hufford, Arthur T. Gallup, Daniel S. Robbins.

A New Yorker Put Beaution Pretty.

The Rev. G. W. Calvert, pastor of the Knox Memorial Methodist Episcopal church, was given a donation sociable at the parsonage New Year's Eve. During the evening innocent games, vocal and instrumental music and supper were enjoyed; and at midnight, during the passing of the old year and the coming of the new, all sang the long meter doxology. The clock struck twelve while the hymn "Tarie, fade, each earthly joy; Jesus is mine" was sung. The doxology followed. Then came the hearty greetings of the new year, after which other games were indulged in. Either the home of the pastor with unusual spirit. He was not most generous of the day that the usual quiet none reigned within the parsonage walls.

A parishioner writes of this pastor: "Since he came to us he has preached the Gospel with power, always presenting without notes. He has accomplished great good in the community. He is able to send the word home to the heart and conscience of his hearers. He is a good visitor, and goes to the home and conditions of his people. He is a good pastor, and appreciated by his people. This is all furnished in his wife, calling, everywhere. Indeed it is known to the city that the wife is "Beautiful for Situation" The architect adorns it as the "poetess" room in the house. To the left are the large used rooms, with card tables and chess boards conveniently placed for the guests. The tables are of oak, with the colors olive green cloth. In each corner as in the other rooms are have learned to love, not only in the home in time, and although we must follow him with our prayers, we can but pray that God will give him a long and useful life in the ministry of Christ."

MAYOR WALROD'S REPORT.

The Good People That Have Remembered the Sick and Suffering and the Generous Donations.

The following list of donations to Muhlenberg Hospital from July 1 to Dec. 31, 1890, has been awaiting room for insertion in these columns, since early last week:

Mrs. Lindsey, flower plants; Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, one pair pillowcases; Miss Haviland, three pictures; Miss C. B. Webster, two pillowcases; Miss Mary Cox, tea oranges; Mrs. Weber, one sheet; Mrs. Wortmann, basket vegetables; Miss C. R. Webster, tea scones; Mrs. M. Hutchinson, one pillowcases; Mrs. Chas. Hyde, ten pairs pillowcases; Mrs. S. Cox, one pair pillowcases; Mrs. Charles R. Cobleigh, five pairs pillowcases; Mrs. M. Edgerton, three quarts ice-cream; Mrs. Henry Talmage, tea oranges; Mrs. M. Edgerton, basket crab apples; Mrs. Frost, tea pears; Mrs. Colburn, basket grapes; Mrs. H. Talmage and children, two baskets grapes and bag of lemons; unknown, folding bed, steamer chair; First Presbyterian church, Sunday school gift; Miss L. Widdock, toilet set for bedroom, basket of grapes.

Mrs. R. Cox, iced cream, 2 and 3 quarts respectively; Mrs. Dr. Ridgley, 2 qts ice-cream; Mrs. O. H. Babcock, iced cream freezer; Mrs. R. Cox, 1½ dozen oranges; Mrs. Wortman, tea grapes; Miss E. Schipper, 1 dozen bottles mineral water; Miss Nellie Haviland, 2 pair pillow cases; from Benevolent Band King's Daughters, 2 dozen napkins, 6 wash cloths; Mrs. Dr. Ridgley, 2 dozen oranges; Mrs. Farmer, 2 dozen oranges, 2 pounds grapes; Miss Helen Talmage and Elise Burke, 2 baskets grapes, 1 bag lemons; Mrs. R. L. Livingston, 5 pounds lemons; unknown; Miss Emberg, 2 baskets grapes; Miss Helen Talmage and Elise Bowen, 1 dozen oranges, flower plant; Benevolent Band King's Daughters, 1 dozen napkins, 6 wash cloths; Mrs. Chisman, 150 pounds granulated sugar, 2 bunches onions, 3 dozen eggs, 2 pounds cranberries; Miss E. Schipper, 1 dozen oranges, 2 pounds grapes; Miss Helen Talmage and Elise Burke, 2 baskets grapes, 1 bag lemons; Mrs. R. L. Livingston, 5 pounds lemons; unknown; Miss Emberg, 2 baskets grapes; Miss Helen Talmage and Elise Bowen, 1 dozen oranges, flower plant; Benevolent Band King's Daughters, 1 dozen napkins, 6 wash cloths; Mrs. Chisman, 150 pounds granulated sugar, 2 bunches onions, 3 dozen eggs, 2 pounds cranberries; Miss E. Schipper, 1 dozen oranges, 2 pounds grapes; Miss Helen Talmage and Elise Burke, 2 baskets grapes, 1 bag oranges, bag bananas; Mrs. E. Tracy, a turkey; Mrs. F. H. Wells, a turkey.

Mr. L. A. Smith, cream; Mrs. Mrs. J. T. Scott, 6 glasses jelly, bunch celery; Miss E. Schipper, 2 bottles wine; Mrs. Chas. A. Bull, bag oranges; Mrs. R. G. Hamlin, a turkey; Mrs. R. Hodgson, bag crackers; Mrs. S. Huntington, white grapes; Miss B. ker, 1 dozen bana as, 2 dozen oranges; Miss Bowers, 2 glasses jelly; Mrs. A. D. Billings, bag bananas; Mrs. A. Andrews, bag oranges; Mrs. Edwards, wearing apparel; Mr. Woltman, 6 boxes mineral water; Father Stafford, $10; Mrs. Lowe, boys' clothing; Mrs. Wills, crate oranges; Mrs. Schipper, 3 bottles wine; Mrs. Wm. Thompson, 4 dozen oranges; Mrs. E. Tracy, 4 pillows; Mr. E. Lowe, crate oranges; Mrs. A. C. Baldwin, 2 jars currant jelly, a bag oranges; Benevolent Band King's Daughters, quilt, 2 pillowcases, 1 bed tidy; Mrs. D. M. Demerest, 6 towels; Mrs. Kingslow, 1 dozen oranges; Warren Mission Sunday school, ice-cream; A. M. Herman, 1 bag, 1 box C. R. Co. Webster, bag sugar, bag cranberries; White and VanArsdale, 10 yards muslin, Capt. Oakrum, sent buds and bouquets; Mrs. Smith, assorted package magazines and papers have been sent in by different ones. Papers been given during the last year by Tom Hall, Central Times, Christian Register and Philanthropist.

Slaughtered a Million Steers.

The Swift Company, of which M. A. Haven, is the representative in this city, are the largest slaughterers in the World. During the year 1890 they killed, dressed and shipped over 900,000 cattle and calves. This meat was handled through their commission houses which number 102 and are located in all the principal cities. The Plainfield and Somerville people nearly all get trade in this city and adjoining towns.

Where the Boxes Are.

The official list of fire-alarm box locations is as follows:

Box 11—Corner of Front and Somerset streets.

Box 12—Park avenue and North avenue.

Box 14—Front and Richmond.

Box 25—Broadway, near Seventh street.

Box 27—Broadway, corner Kenilworth avenue.

Box 28—South avenue, corner Woodlawn avenue.

Box 32—Seventh street, corner Central avenue.

Box 34—Fifth street, corner Liberty street.

Box 37—Seventh street, corner Spooner avenue.

Box 42—Front street, corner Grove street.

Box 43—Front street, corner Plainfield avenue.

Box 45—West Second street and Muhlenberg place.

Box 46—West Second street, in front of Pond Machine Tool Works.

BOARD OF ENGINEERS.

Chief—Thaddeus O. Doane, 40 West Fifth street. Residence 72.

1st A st.—J. Erwin Waters.

2d Asst.—James A. Martin.

COMMITTEE ON FIRE AND BUILDINGS.

Walter S. Hufford, Arthur T. Gallup, Daniel S. Robbins.

A New Yorker Put Beaution Pretty.

The Rev. G. W. Calvert, pastor of the Knox Memorial Methodist Episcopal church, was given a donation sociable at the parsonage New Year's Eve. During the evening innocent games, vocal and instrumental music and supper were enjoyed; and at midnight, during the passing of the old year and the coming of the new, all sang the long meter doxology. The clock struck twelve while the hymn "Tarie, fade, each earthly joy; Jesus is mine" was sung. The doxology followed. Then came the hearty greetings of the new year, after which other games were indulged in. Either the home of the pastor with unusual spirit. He was not most generous of the day that the usual quiet none reigned within the parsonage walls.

A parishioner writes of this pastor: "Since he came to us he has preached the Gospel with power, always presenting without notes. He has accomplished great good in the community. He is able to send the word home to the heart and conscience of his hearers. He is a good visitor, and goes to the home and conditions of his people. He is a good pastor, and appreciated by his people. This is all furnished in his wife, calling, everywhere. Indeed it is known to the city that the wife is "Beautiful for Situation" The architect adorns it as the "poetess" room in the house. To the left are the large used rooms, with card tables and chess boards conveniently placed for the guests. The tables are of oak, with the colors olive green cloth. In each corner as in the other rooms are have learned to love, not only in the home in time, and although we must follow him with our prayers, we can but pray that God will give him a long and useful life in the ministry of Christ."

THE COUNTRY CLUB AT HOME

AUSPICIOUS DEDICATION, AND NEW YEAR'S EVE RECEPTION.

Members and Friends Received Through the Medal Structure of the State—Speeches by Messrs. Cox, Gilbert and Stockton—Elaborate Banquet and Ball.

The members and friends of the Union County Country Club had their first view of the completed interior of the handsome new clubhouse on New Year's Eve, when the doors of that model society home were thrown open and the structure was inspected by an admiring assemblage. The general public had of course only the merest glimpse of the festivities within, and had to satisfy itself with the vision of elegance suggested by the attractive exterior of the building, the windows flashing forth brilliant lights, the shadows of the people flitting about indoors; but the favored guests of the club's house-warming was one of the most charming social events they had ever known.

The formal dedicatory exercises were begun in The Casino at nine o'clock, when Rowland Cox, representing the Building Committee, delivered to Mr. Frank Cox, who bloodcoated the keys of the architectural fabric, and made a speech so neat and appropriate that his auditors could not repress a frequent inclination to applaud their appreciative. The response for the Club was made by Alexander Gilbert, Mayor-elect of Plainfield, in a very happy vein, and the keys were immediately taken by Messrs. Cox and Gilbert, Chairman of the House Committee. The formalities were soon at an end, and at 10 o'clock Mr. Stockton announced that the club-house was open to the guests. The assemblage then passed into the main club building and were cordially received by the officers of the Club and the members of the House Committee, who were fathered in the main hall. Reception greetings over, the neophytes were courted their friends through the model club-house. An elaborate banquet and ball followed. The supper was furnished by caterer Hall, and the ball was attended at Holmes, whose excellence as a provider ding genius of such an institution is evidenced in the fact that for years he was connected at the Lincoln League Club in Philadelphia, from which city were imported all the table supplies for the present occasion. The feast of good things was served by the corps of Club Servants, and all things always will be under the management of such an institution. The ball furnished opportunity for the society dancers to express themselves in terms of ecstasy. The music was conducted by Elliott, and consisted of eight pieces. The strains were finely toned down in rarest harmony from the balcony of The Casino to the throng on the floor below; and as enlivening polka, dreamy waltz, fascinating schottische, maintenance of the culinary department is provided. Large store rooms, well supplied with necessaries, connect. Also in the basement are the gentlemen's coat room, dressing-room, toilet room and bath-room. The bath-room, besides the tubs, contains excellent shower-bath appurtenas, with spray and needles and all other accompaniments of the kind. The one could desire has been omitted. The building throughout is heated by steam, effectually ventilated, and completely and conducted as the most genteel and fastidious club man could wish. Every want of a refined taste is supplied, and an absolutely perfect club-house is the result.

A CORNER OF THE SUPPER ROOM.

The four bowling alleys in the basement are of the truest model. A ball sent spinning down their length will have no flaws to cause deviation from the path destined by the hand that impelled it. An adjoining store-room holds spare scenery for the stage of The Casino.

The library and the verandas overlook three tennis courts on the grounds. The front and rear verandas are twelve feet wide. The long one at the rear was inclosed, the opening night, as a supper room, and the Casino porch as a cost room. The latter stage is every night, on evening in the garden scene, and was exceedingly decorated with plants and flowers. During the dedicatory exercises the latter apartment was given up to the Governors, the House Committee, and the Building Committee. These are as follows:

Board of Governors—Harry G. Buckle, President; Will am Bloodgood, Vice President; Wm. T. Eaubman, Secretary; Hiley Fisk, Treasurer; Charles J. Fisk, DeWitt Clinton Fisk, William Palmer Smith, W. S. Post, Charles S. Brooks, Henry S. Haines, Alexander Gilbert, Frank Stockton.

House Committee—H. M. Stockton, Chairman; Joseph F. Mason, Secretary; Charles J. Fisk, E. C. Perkins, Geo. C. Brooks.

Building Committee—Piller Fisk, Rowland Cox, D. C. Irvine, W. F. Smith, W. Bloodgood, H. M. Stockton, R. J. Talmadge.

Messrs. H. G. Buckle, Charles J. Fisk and Hiley Fisk were still in mourning for recent deaths in their families, and were the only absentees from the list of club members and friends, unable to attend the auspicious opening. Vice President *Bloodgood consequently acted in Presi*dent Buckle's stead, and Mr. Cox in place of Chairman Fisk of the Building Committee.

IN THE CASINO.

dignified quadrille or graceful lancers succeeded one another, the ladies, gliding with their partners, over the floor of the ball-room in the State, enthusiastically declared the event a "dream of loveliness." And thus the pleasant hours flew by, and the old year died, and the new year was ushered in, with Mirth and Gaiety and Happiness on the throne.

The Union County Country Club is now snugly quartered in the midst of surpassing comforts and luxuriousness. The architectural excellence has been greatly enhanced by delicate taste and refined decorations, and sumptuous furnishings. The reception hall, twenty-three feet long by fifte n feet wide, is finished in oak, with panels of Spanish leather. The ceiling is heavily beamed, and the walls are draped with Turkish and plush hangings. The furniture is of mahogany, upholstered in red plush. The library, fifteen feet square, leading out of the reception hall, is very pretty and cosy. Its furniture is of antique oak and mahogany. Its chairs are wonderfully comfortable.

To the right of the hall is the gentlemen's dining-room, carpeted, curtained and papered to suit him, and finished in oak. All of the seats are arm-chairs. The paper-hangings are very appropriate, being adorned with all kinds of fruits. Opposite the dining-room, on the left, is the gentlemen's dining-room is a similar apartment for the ladies. This is also furnished in oak, but is rather lighter, and very fetching is the "blue room." The curtains are light, and the carpet is of a light brick color. This is a very handsome parlor. Everything in exactly suited to dainty feminine taste.

Opposite the main entrance to the club-house is a beautifully executed piece of spindle work, separating the hall from the staircase. The stairs lead to a remarkably cosy parlor, finished in oak. The walls are hung window furni-hed with comfortable seats and flanked with flowers. The curtains have an air of coquettishness, and are hung with much artistic effect. The illumination at night is furni hed by a cluster of electric lamps arranged in a handsome bulb-pot.

On the second floor, at the front room to the right from the landing, is the large billiard-room, with the most correct tables and pool tables in the State. The wood-work of the tables is of oak. The room is well lighted by seven windows. Everything that the player could desire in appointments is to be found in every part of the house everything is spick and span new. The apartment is a first-class billiard-room in every respect. Opposite the main landing is the ladies' parlor, a cosy and inviting apartment, finished in oak. This is all furnished in blue-walls, ceiling, everything, indeed is known to the club-house beautiful. "Beautiful for Situation" is the architect adorns it as the "poetess" room in the house. To the left are the large used rooms, with card tables and chess boards conveniently placed for the guests. The tables are of oak, with the colors olive green cloth. In each corner as in the other rooms are have learned to love, not only in the home in time, and although we must follow him with our prayers, we can but pray that God will give him a long and useful life in the ministry of Christ.

ASSEMBLY THE SECOND.

One Hundred Couple Enjoy the Dance at The Casino.

The second of the season's assemblies took place at The Casino, last Thursday, and was one of the most brilliant affairs of its kind in every way that was ever given in this city. The display of new dresses and jewels eclipsed all past efforts.

The managers who received the guests, were Mrs. R. L. Barnett, Mrs. Wm. Y. Eastman, Mrs. C. B. Brooks, Mrs. Wm. Bloodgood. The dance began about 9:30, and after a short cotillion led by Mr. C. B. Brooks and Mr. Harry Borden, supper was served at 11:30.

Another three pronsent were Gen. and Mrs. W. S. Rogley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Read, Mr. and Mrs. Foster Stillman, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. J. Wm. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bloodgood, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Brooks, Major and Mrs. R. L. Barnett, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Murray, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Tracy, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Murray, Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Erickson, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. H. Pollion, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Y. Eastman, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Boone, Mr. and Mrs. F. Raymond, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Howard and Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Pollock.

Among the guests were Misses Minnie Murray, Nellie Shepard, Marion Dupont, Elsie Stewart, Gussie Murray, Jean Erickson, Fannie Stewart, Miss Minnie Tracy, the Misses Yates, the Misses Van Nostrand, the Misses Fairbairn, Draper, Stroull, Boston, Hawley, Hart, Corbett, Allen, Simpson, Miss Hart of Somerville, Miss Sterling of Brooklyn, Miss Ayres of New York, Miss Hoskins of Orange, and Miss Anthony of Netherwood.

Gentlemen—Squires, Kirk, Wotherspoon, Fairbairn, Watson, Borden, Stroull, Morgan, Munn, Munger, Sayrall, Lonor, Raymond, Tilton, Tracy, Wise, Stockton, Hawley, Price, Bowler, Mathews and Endicott; Messrs. Moore, Anthony and Holly of Netherwood, Worth of Westfield, VanWagner, Adams and Hoffman of New York, Ewell of Elizabeth and Dr. Bond of Orange.

Union Hose Co. at Their Annual Ball.

We come here at an unseasonable hour to sing badly, and wondered what ailed him. At 2 o'clock we retired. Give a dozen men or more doctors, who don't happen to be in the house, a chance to feel your pulse and they will tell you when your feed don't digest. Give the same men a chance to look at your tongue and they will tell you what you had for dinner. Give them a chance to look at your eyes and they will tell you how you feel. Give them a chance to look at your nails and they will tell you what you had for breakfast. Give them a chance to look at your hair and they will tell you what you had for supper. Give them a chance to look at your teeth and they will tell you what you had for lunch. Give them a chance to look at your feet and they will tell you what you had for dessert. Give them a chance to look at your ears

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, . . . City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—The first thing the new year did was to spoil the sledding of the old.

—Jos. A. Blats opened his new hotel, corner Warren and Somerset street, on Wednesday morning.

—The Tees have begun to harvest the excess of crop of ice, chosen inches thick, for next Summer's use.

—Services appropriate to the Week of Prayer will be held every evening this week in the Liberty Reformed church.

—Services for the Week of Prayer will be held in the Crescent Avenue chapel every evening but Saturday at 8 o'clock.

—Friday morning was so dark that the electric light current was kept on until after nine o'clock. This is the latest record.

—Judge John H. Jackson has the facetious blues in town. His ticket was the easily one named shared at Foote's confectionery.

—The women of the Crescent Avenue church have set the misdemeanor in Hebraike, who has been entrusted with his family to their care, a high-grade Columbia safety bicycle.

—Charles Brown of Newark, driver for a dried-meat peddling concern, has been arrested by Marshal Rutledge and locked up in the Borough lock-up for trial on the charge of peddling without a license.

—The employes of Garrett Q. Parker, no t of whom have been with him since his beginning, at the corner of Park avenue and Somerset street, last Friday presented him with an elegant gold-headed umbrella inscribed with their appreciation.

—An inquisitive person is desirous of knowing whether all men would be willing to accept deeds for property based on the line they draw when shoveling snow, but of course the query is not put to those Plainfield parties who never shovel snow.

—John H. Frech, agent and despatcher for the Central Railroad of New Jersey at Bound Brook, has resigned to accept employment with the Philadelphia and Reading. J. B. W. Best, formerly night yardmaster at Jersey City, will succeed him.

—A lecture will be given by the Rev. J. W. Chadwick, under the auspices of the Monday Afternoon Club, at the Casino, on Monday afternoon of next week at three o'clock. Subject, "Salem Witchcraft in Art." Tickets may be obtained of Mrs. J. Kirtland Myers.

—The Rockaway Valley Railroad, otherwise called the Charters' railroad, will be pushed forward from Prospect to Mendham, in Morris county. The proprietors of this thrifling little road are going to make a strong effort to get through to Morristown during the coming year.

—The necessity of keeping gutters as well as sidewalks free from snow and slush, and the law requiring the same, is evident Friday, when the rain collected in great pools at the slush-covered street crossings and the snow arranged itself into dams and prevented the rain from running off.

—The new club house of the New Jersey Athletic Club at Bergen Point is fapidly nearing completion. Charles Smith, of this city, and the Building Committee, Messrs. Booth, Arnot, Grant, Newman and Hall, do not appreciate a word of all the members for their efforts. It will probably be finished about April 1.

—The first grand invitation masquerade ball of the Orient Circle was held at Amphion Hall, Wednesday evening, (New Year's Eve). There was a large number of young people present from this city, North Plainfield, Elizabeth, Newark and Brooklyn. The costumes were very handsome. The music was furnished by Prof. G. Bogert.

—The contract between the representatives of the city of Elizabeth and the Pennsylvania and Central Railroad Company officials relative to the abolition of the grade crossings has been signed, but this will not prevent the certiorari proceedings in the Supreme Court relative to the alleged illegal action of the City Council in the matter.

OBITUARY.

John Simpson.

The death of John Simpson, which occurred at half-past ten o'clock Wednesday, removed from the roll of Plainfield citizenship the name of one who well perhaps be best remembered by all the honorable title of Veteran Councilman of the city. He had been in office a short time, having been attacked with a severe form of indigestion only Tuesday. His death was attributed to heart failure. Twenty-four hours before he breathed his last he was to all appearances the same hale and hearty man whom Plainfielders have known and loved so long, and walked sturdily about the streets attending to business matters and chatting with friends as sturdily and cheerfully as has been his wont these many years.

John Simpson was born in Ellis, Scotland, in 1808. He was brought to this country by his parents in 1810, landing at Amboy. After spending his boyhood on a farm on which his parents settled, in this vicinity, he began an apprenticeship under Andrew Randolph, one of the famous old-time hatters, and who was the father of ex-City Clerk Oliver B. and Editor William J. Leonard. Having learned every detail of the hatter's trade, young Simpson went into the hatter's business for himself, and was so industrious, energetic and economical that at the end of twenty years he was able to retire with a competency. The thrifty Scotchman husbanded his wealth, and at his death he was a fortune estimated at at least $100,000. He was a man of most kindly spirit, and led a calm, peaceful life. He had never a taste for money, but was beloved wherever known. Among the present generation he has always had the sobriquet of "Uncle John."

In an official capacity Mr. Simpson served the city faithfully for thirteen years. He was elected a member of the first Common Council in 1857, and he had, that of 1863, on the Democratic ticket, and was frequently re elected, serving through the years of 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1875, 1876, 1879, 1880, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886 and 1887.

He was one of the oldest Directors of the First National Bank of Plainfield, and of the Mutual Fire Assurance Company, and held office in other similar concerns. He was also a member of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. His years of office in the Common Council were more numerous than those of any other member, and he was the oldest Councilman then in the year 1887, serving even after reaching the advanced age of eighty years. He was known especially during his last term of office as the Veteran.

Mr. Simpson's only child was a daughter, Maggie, now Mrs. Cadman of Philadelphia. Thursday a brother of his, Robert, died at his home in Mt. Bethel only two or three weeks ago, leaving a large and valuably stocked farm to an only son.

Funeral services over the remains of John Simpson will be held from the late residence of the deceased, 107 Somerset street, Saturday afternoon at two o'clock.

PERSONALS.

Col. C. K. Moore is very ill at his home in Fanwood.

Ex-Dean Rodman is suffering from a severe cold that has settled in his eye.

Col. Henry Wells, of Big Stone Gap, Va., has been visiting friends at Fanwood.

Miss Flora Miller of West Third street, is visiting friends and relatives in Harrisburg, Pa.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Randolph have been visiting in Charles Compton at Metuchen.

Miss Linda Milligan, of Brooklyn, is visiting her friends the Misses Spencer, at Watchung avenue.

Mrs. Seymour G. Smith, who has been quite ill since New Year's Day, is still confined to her room.

The engagement of Miss Roman, of West Fifth street, to Samuel Clark, Jr., of Westfield, is announced.

Miss Emma V. Whitlock, formerly of North Plainfield, and Harry B. Taylor were married in Jersey City yesterday.

A. L. Force and Miss Force, who are taking a tour of the South, left Wilmington, N. C., Tuesday, en route for Florida.

George C. Morrison, a member of the Second Class of the Warren United Mission, was presented with a life-size crayon portrait of himself, by his class, last Sunday.

Edward B. Schooley, of the New York Custom House, with his wife and family spent New Year's Day at the home of Mr. Vanilous, Dunellen street, North Plainfield.

Mrs Edgerton left town on Tuesday to spend the Winter in New York City. She will make her home at the Grand Hotel, Thirty-first street and Broadway.

The Congregational church received into its communion twenty-eight new members Sunday; twenty-six on confession of faith and two by letter. Thirteen were baptized.

Mr. and Mrs. John Whitehead and daughter, and John Schofield, of Plainfield, were guests at an English New Year's Eve party at Wm. G. Clelland's, Broadway, Flushing.

Mr. and Mrs. George Wotherspoon, who arrived on the "Umbria," last week, after a trip around the World, are visiting Mr. Wotherspoon's mother at her home on the East Front street.

The marriage of Miss Emma Prentice McGee, and James Richard Joy, of this city, took place at the Methodist Episcopal church, Tuesday evening, the 30th inst., at seven o'clock.

The Elizabeth Glee Club will give an entertainment in the Casino Feb. 5, under the patronage of some of Plainfield's best known society women, who will make the occasion a notable society event.

The Rev. Dr. L. D. Hosier, of this city, as founder and president of the Epworth League in the United States preached a special sermon at the Cheltenham Methodist Episcopal church, Sunday evening.

The Rev. W. C Stinson, pastor of the Dunellen Presbyterian church, has accepted a call to the church at Milwaukee, Wis., one of the suburbs of Milwaukee. He expects to leave Dunellen the latter part of January.

The Leader of Southport, N. C., on New Year's day, said: "We enjoyed a pleasant visit last evening from Mr. A. L. Force, of the Plainfield, N. J., Daily Press, who was with his daughter, is on a Southern trip of pleasure and sight seeing."

Sheriff Hiech announced his first Grand Jury in the Court House at Elizabeth on Tuesday. The jurors from Plainfield are Rowland M. Stover, Edwin W. Conklin, Joseph B. Miller and Elias M. Van Wye. C. C. Stanbury is the juror from Fanwood.

Charles P. Titsworth, of Rochester, formerly a jeweler of this city, and a son of the late Dr. Titsworth of Madison avenue, while sitting in a corridor of the Hotel Gilmore, Springfield, Mass., about three o'clock of Thursday morning, fell back in his chair dead.

Funeral services over the remains of the late Chas. P. Titsworth took place from the residence of his brother-in-law, the deceased on Madison avenue on Saturday. The body was brought from Springfield, Mass., Friday, and was interred in Hillside Cemetery.

Councilman D. S. Roberts was made happy Thursday by a visit to his home on North avenue, of his eldest son, A. K. Roberts, and family, who reside in Brooklyn, N. Y., and who came to make a New Year's call on "Uncle Dan." Mr. Roberts is a popular engineer on the Brooklyn elevated railway.

The New Market Seventh-Day Baptist Sabbath school has elected the following officers: Superintendent—Wesley Vanderveer; Assistant—E. T. Titsworth; Secretary—Maud Titsworth; Treasurer—A. W. Vars; Chorister—A. H. Burdick; Assistant—Grace Stillman; Librarian—Lewis Librarian—Charles T. Rogers.

Julian Scott is home from Montana, Arizona and Indian Territory. He has been engaged in securing sketches and photographic views of the Indians at home, and has some five hundred excellent photographs, besides numberless sketches, to develop into paintings. The United States Government will have Mr. Scott arrange some of the pictures of Indian life in proper form for a permanent exhibition at Washington, to remind the American people, when the red men are no more, of the noble race now fast passing away from the country. During his long absence Mr. Scott enjoyed fine sport at hunting. Among the things he reports as dead by the Indians are bears, foxes and fifteen deer. The tribe of Indians to which he gave special attention, and of whom splendid views were procured, are the Navajoes, a people who are exceedingly picturesque, and of whom but little is generally known. The artist expects to devote his time to the task to give a faithful representation of the character of the race and the mode of living. It will be of great popular interest and historic value.

Where the Fire-Alarm Signal Comes From.

When the number of the box has been sounded by the whistle, all fire-extinguishing apparatus shall immediately proceed by the nearest route to the box. The number of the box is indicated on the steam whistle and on all house gongs as follows: If the alarm is sounded from box 5, No. 1, box 5 will be struck on the whistle, followed by a pause of about five seconds; then two consecutive blows. The complete call sounds thus: 1——5—1. After an interval of about two seconds the will be repeated three consecutive times.

One blow of the whistle will mean time, or break; two blows, "recall—fire is out;" four blows, fire in North Plainfield, West of Somerset street, No. 2 engine and Hook and Ladder company shall proceed; five, fire in North Plainfield, East of Somerset street, No. 1 engine and Alert Hose company shall respond; six, followed by the box number, will be a special call for Hose and Ladder company No. 1. 6-6 will be a special call for Warren engine company No. 1.

By order of the Board of Engineers,

T. O. DUANE, Chief.

John have you seen that woman lately? Yes, I passed a pleasant hour at her house. The woman picking grapes for her own wine. That will be a good one to send to the comic paper. I have seen and heard of it before. Well, I'll send it to the Weekly Press. Don't do it. Health is large cities and leading physicians recommend the use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a preventive of malarial disorders.

MENDELSSOHN'S "ELIJAH."

ITS RENDITION AT THE FIRST PRIVATE CONCERT OF THE PLAINFIELD CHORAL SOCIETY.

Success Exemplified in Every Particular—The Work of the Chorus Was Glorious, and the Soloists Were Most Satisfactory.

Of the thousand choirs in Mendelssohn's "Elijah," not two score were unaccounted Tuesday night, when a large gathering, which may be called "the people," has never been known before upon just such an occasion in this city, and there was ever a more unqualified demand for music. Thus is the financial success of the Plainfield Choral Society made assured.

The rendition of Elijah, as rendered by the Choral society above night, was with a few slight defects, as nearly a perfect performance as possible. It was well adapted to that style of music, and, although the exceedingly heavy atmosphere affected the individual singers, the chorus was in good condition. Mrs. Charles Tyler Dutton possesses a fine voice full of timbre. She threw herself into her part and sang with great expression the solo, "What have I to do with thee?" and "Hear ye, Israel!" Mrs. Anderson sang in her usual satisfactory manner "Woe unto them." She was especially enjoyable; and "O, rest in the Lord," had its usual soothing effect. Wm. H. Rieger, possesses a full tenor voice of sympathetic compass, his high notes are remarkably rich. "Then shall the righteous shine," was rendered in a finished manner, and "It is with all pain" was delightfully less pleasing. Dr. Carl Mayer sang dramatically and gave great pleasure in his solos "Lord God of Abraham," "Is not his word like a fire" and "It is enough"—the accompaniment to the latter being especially beautiful. The quartette "O! come every one that thirsteth" was especially fine composition and was well sung.

The chorus was in excellent condition and was supported by the Orchestra. The intonation and modulation were good. The attacks were decided, the fugue passages were well accomplished, with the exception of one chorus, and the voices finished together all of which, by the way, goes far toward impressing an audience with the success of an entertainment. Nothing will detract one more quickly than weak attacks. The opening chorus; "The Harvest now is ripe;" the duett and chorus, "Lord! Hear Thine Ear;" "Yet doth the Lord see it not," "Blessed are the men," the "Baal" choruses, and "Thanks be to God," of the first part, were highly appreciated by all; two, "He not afraid," "He's watching over Israel," and "Then shall your light," and the concluding chorus, "Lift thine eyes," Dutton, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Anderson and Miss Dunn in the quartette is especially worthy of mention. The orchestration was very good though a little loud at times.

Much has been conjectured concerning the relative merits of the Melopeia and the Choral Society. Comparisons can only be made on equal ground. The Choral Society has an advantage over the Melopeia in that it has been longer and more together and under the same leader for years, while the Melopeia is an entirely new society; but the Melopeia has had an advantage in being able to spend months in refining a few part songs, while at the same time the other society was struggling through the intricacies of some of the solos, choruses and oratorical portions. Each has its strong and its weak points, and it is only by a careful regard to mention modulation. It is plainly apparent that never have the rehearsals been better attended, and never has the Choral Society been more faithful to give the subscribing members the best music in its power.

At the close of the concert the New York soloists were joined by the members of the orchestra in overwhelming Conductor Pittsburgh with sincere congratulations, and by showering glowing compliments upon the Society. Not one of the professionals had heard better chorus work, and each was eager to say so within hearing of everybody. It was probably Plainfield's greatest musical success.

Following are the Board of Managers and members of this season's society:

President—Wm. Wallace Rowland.
Vice President—Charles W. McCutchen
Secretary—H. A. Barron.
Treasurer—R. Otis Norman.
Librarian—Robert T. Hull.
Accompanists—Miss Jessie K. Utter.

Music Committee—Henry A. McGee, Daniel E. Davis, Charles W. McCutchen.

LIST OF ACTIVE MEMBERS.

Soprani—Mrs. E. J. Waring, Mrs. H. A. McGee, Mrs. Asa Collier, Mrs. B. A. Munn, Mrs. D. E. Davis, Mrs. Nelson Runyon, Mrs. G. E. Hillman, Mrs. D. B. Ayer; Assistant, Mrs. W. L. Saunders, Mrs. R. T. Barnes, Mrs. C. H. Denham, Mrs. H. N. King, Mrs. W. R. Richards, the Misses Anna Collier, Mary Collier, Nancy Green, Lillian Bowman, Alice O. Smith, Anna O. Marsh, Carrie F. Fisher, Kate E. Bigiow, E. M. Waters, M. Josephine Potts, Adelia Runyon, Susie F. Anderson, Laura E. Runyon, Emily S. Thompson, Katharine D. Glen, Florence A. Wilcox, Helen R. Runyon, Mrs. C. B. Mitchell, Miss Anna H. Gilbert, Miss Elizabeth N. Hasbrouck, Mrs. Isabel R. Milne, Miss Bessie E. Bixler, Miss Isabel Scougall.

Alto—Mrs. E. B. Bird, Mrs. F. A. Dunham, Mrs. Nelson Y. Hull, Mrs. L. H. Bigiow, Jr., Mrs. Robert Gorton, Mrs. L. M. Frost, Mrs. Charles Sedgfield, the Misses Beth M. Thompson, Gussie Runyon, Julia J. Ketcham, Emma P. McGee, Charlie C. Bird, Mrs. Thomas Runyon, Eleanor Demarest, E. B. Gunn, Clara O. Dunn, Mary W. Ketcham, M. Lillian Newman, Mary E. Berg, Margaret J. Purvis, Jessie M. Utter, C. F. Davis, Minnie M. Powlison, Frances E. Mattison, Annie G. Hasbrouck, Mrs. Wilfred Powell, Miss Florence G. Bather, Miss Nancy Pedrick, Miss Ida W. Perry, Mrs. C. F. Abbott, Miss E. O. Katline, Miss L. B. Harvey.

Tenors—Messrs. W. R. Cock, D. E. Davis, C. W. McCutchen, S. St. J. McCutchen, J. O. Stevens, L. H. Bigiow, Jr., T. E. Hazell, G. E. Horne, John Z. Duckworth, J. F. Berg, Harry C. Runyon, Nelson Runyon, E. B. Ryder, Geo. T. Rogers, I. T. Rogers, John E. Douglas, James Mercer, Jr., Frank Lawson, Stanton Smith, John P. Thompson.

Basses—Messrs. Henry A. McGee, H. O. Newman, B. T. Barnes, W. W. Howell, Jr., H. A. Barron, Wm. Wallace Rowland, Robert C. Runyon, F. S. Runyon, Fred. B. Newman, Robert Gorton, Franklin S. Smith, D. A. Bowman, Nelson Y. Hull, John L. B. Smith, Arthur H. Bonnell, Jr., W. R. Richards, J. B. Bonnell, G. W. Conley, E. S. Hunt, W. E. McClymont, Walter C. Pitman, Fred. S. Cutler.

Come, Lose and Insurance Fixtures.

The barn of Clinton Bandolph, half way between New Market and New Brunswick, was burned Tuesday night with the contents, including hay, grain, farm machinery, horses and cows. There was no insurance. Loss, about $3,000.

The fire broke out about six o'clock, but the cause is unknown. Mr. Randolph had just hitched up a team that was standing in the barn when he went to do his supper. These horses were consequently saved and one other. Everything else was a total loss. The barn is owned by the heirs of Isaac Runyon, deceased.

Position is obtained by merit as the best and safest. Hires' Rough Cure, whenever tried, has always taken the first position in the family. Ask your druggist for it.

THE CASE OF FRED CLARK.

Sketched by His Friends, Signed by the Plaintiffs, Filed With Strong Belief, and Found Too Late for Issue.

Members of the Woman's Temperance Aid Society who signed Fred Clark at the Muhlenberg Hospital Tuesday find no improvement in his condition. His sister from Elizabeth has been summoned to his bedside at his own request, and every effort is made to make his last days comfortable. He has but few conscious moments, and those who are eager to talk to him to help him to prepare for death find no opportunity. Clark is dying very fast. Several weeks before his death he received the knowledge of the charitable people of the Aid Society. He was found lying on a miserable pallet in his father's little shop at the corner of Front and Somerset streets. He had received no care whatever, and suffered considerable from exposure. Saturday night he had been wandering around in a pitiable condition, barefoot, on the frosty stone pavements. It is less than a month since another man died from the effects of exposure and suffering at the Clark corner. Fred Clark's original disease was bronchitis, but Dr. Parmly Paine has since stated he is now in the last stages of typhoid pneumonia. It is stated that Clark's physical suffering has not been relieved by his being constantly plied with liquor by his companions. One of the Hospital staff is quoted as saying that a typhoid-pneumonia patient takes all kinds of getting well the instant he touches strong drink, and if he has been an habitual drunkard it is all the more reason why he is in danger.

The death of Fred Clark occurred at three o'clock Wednesday afternoon, at Muhlenberg Hospital.

Another Large Attendance.

At the First Presbyterian church, the last Communion Sunday, nineteen persons, ranging in age from twelve to forty years, were received into membership. The examination of the candidates on Wednesday demonstrated that while many were moved by the Mills meetings in Plainfield it was the personal hand-to-hand work of pastor or teacher which lead to the final decision.

Supposed to be Incendiary.

The Central Railroad Company, referring to the recent burning of Clinton F. Randolph's barns, a mile and a quarter from the Landing Bridge, on the road from New Market to New Brunswick, "Lend an Ear;" "Yet doth the Lord see it not," "Blessed are the men," the "Baal" choruses, and "Thanks be to God," of the first part, were highly appreciated by all; two, "He not afraid," "He's watching over Israel," and "Then shall your light," and the concluding chorus, "Lift thine eyes," Dutton, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Anderson and Miss Dunn in the quartette is especially worthy of mention. The orchestration was very good though a little loud at times.

Much has been conjectured concerning the relative merits of the Melopeia and the Choral Society. Comparisons can only be made on equal ground. The Choral Society has an advantage over the Melopeia in that it has been longer and more together and under the same leader for years, while the Melopeia is an entirely new society; but the Melopeia has had an advantage in being able to spend months in refining a few part songs, while at the same time the other society was struggling through the intricacies of some of the solos, choruses and oratorical portions. Each has its strong and its weak points, and it is only by a careful regard to mention modulation. It is plainly apparent that never have the rehearsals been better attended, and never has the Choral Society been more faithful to give the subscribing members the best music in its power.

At the close of the concert the New York soloists were joined by the members of the orchestra in overwhelming Conductor Pittsburgh with sincere congratulations, and by showering glowing compliments upon the Society. Not one of the professionals had heard better chorus work, and each was eager to say so within hearing of everybody. It was probably Plainfield's greatest musical success.

Following are the Board of Managers and members of this season's society:

President—Wm. Wallace Rowland.
Vice President—Charles W. McCutchen
Secretary—H. A. Barron.
Treasurer—R. Otis Norman.
Librarian—Robert T. Hull.
Accompanists—Miss Jessie K. Utter.

Music Committee—Henry A. McGee, Daniel E. Davis, Charles W. McCutchen.

LIST OF ACTIVE MEMBERS.

Soprani—Mrs. E. J. Waring, Mrs. H. A. McGee, Mrs. Asa Collier, Mrs. B. A. Munn, Mrs. D. E. Davis, Mrs. Nelson Runyon, Mrs. G. E. Hillman, Mrs. D. B. Ayer; Assistant, Mrs. W. L. Saunders, Mrs. R. T. Barnes, Mrs. C. H. Denham, Mrs. H. N. King, Mrs. W. R. Richards, the Misses Anna Collier, Mary Collier, Nancy Green, Lillian Bowman, Alice O. Smith, Anna O. Marsh, Carrie F. Fisher, Kate E. Bigiow, E. M. Waters, M. Josephine Potts, Adelia Runyon, Susie F. Anderson, Laura E. Runyon, Emily S. Thompson, Katharine D. Glen, Florence A. Wilcox, Helen R. Runyon, Mrs. C. B. Mitchell, Miss Anna H. Gilbert, Miss Elizabeth N. Hasbrouck, Mrs. Isabel R. Milne, Miss Bessie E. Bixler, Miss Isabel Scougall.

Alto—Mrs. E. B. Bird, Mrs. F. A. Dunham, Mrs. Nelson Y. Hull, Mrs. L. H. Bigiow, Jr., Mrs. Robert Gorton, Mrs. L. M. Frost, Mrs. Charles Sedgfield, the Misses Beth M. Thompson, Gussie Runyon, Julia J. Ketcham, Emma P. McGee, Charlie C. Bird, Mrs. Thomas Runyon, Eleanor Demarest, E. B. Gunn, Clara O. Dunn, Mary W. Ketcham, M. Lillian Newman, Mary E. Berg, Margaret J. Purvis, Jessie M. Utter, C. F. Davis, Minnie M. Powlison, Frances E. Mattison, Annie G. Hasbrouck, Mrs. Wilfred Powell, Miss Florence G. Bather, Miss Nancy Pedrick, Miss Ida W. Perry, Mrs. C. F. Abbott, Miss E. O. Katline, Miss L. B. Harvey.

Tenors—Messrs. W. R. Cock, D. E. Davis, C. W. McCutchen, S. St. J. McCutchen, J. O. Stevens, L. H. Bigiow, Jr., T. E. Hazell, G. E. Horne, John Z. Duckworth, J. F. Berg, Harry C. Runyon, Nelson Runyon, E. B. Ryder, Geo. T. Rogers, I. T. Rogers, John E. Douglas, James Mercer, Jr., Frank Lawson, Stanton Smith, John P. Thompson.

Basses—Messrs. Henry A. McGee, H. O. Newman, B. T. Barnes, W. W. Howell, Jr., H. A. Barron, Wm. Wallace Rowland, Robert C. Runyon, F. S. Runyon, Fred. B. Newman, Robert Gorton, Franklin S. Smith, D. A. Bowman, Nelson Y. Hull, John L. B. Smith, Arthur H. Bonnell, G. W. R. Richards, J. B. Bonnell, G. W. Conley, E. S. Hunt, W. E. McClymont, Walter C. Pitman, Fred. S. Cutler.

Come, Lose and Insurance Fixtures.

The barn of Clinton Randolph, half way between New Market and New Brunswick, was burned Tuesday night with the contents, including hay, grain, farm machinery, horses and cows. There was no insurance. Loss, about $3,000.

The fire broke out about six o'clock, but the cause is unknown. Mr. Randolph had just hitched up a team that was standing in the barn when he went to do his supper. These horses were consequently saved and one other. Everything else was a total loss. The barn is owned by the heirs of Isaac Runyon, deceased.

Position is obtained by merit as the best and safest. Hires' Rough Cure, whenever tried, has always taken the first position in the family. Ask your druggist for it.

HARMONIOUSLY ORGANIZED.

THE PLAINFIELD COMMON COUNCIL SETTLES DOWN TO BUSINESS FOR 1891.

Mayor G. Smith Elected President Over A. A. Gunn—J. S. Coward City Clerk—Fire Committee Republican, Fire Department Democratic—Republicans Given Full Control of Finance—The Power and "Power" the City's Official Papers.

The dead-lock which some had expected would arise, at Monday's meeting of the Plainfield Common Council, to interfere with the transaction of public business, and thereby delay, and harmonious organization for 1891 was effected, when Seymour G. Smith President and Joseph B. Coward City Clerk.

When Mr. Coward, as Clerk of last year, called the meeting to order, all of the members of the new Council were present Councilmen Ackerman, Gallup, Gunn, Hetfield, Johnson, Moffett, Roberts, Rushmore, See, Smith and Spangenberg.

The nomination of Seymour G. Smith for President of the Council was made by Mr. Roberts, and seconded by Mr. Moffett.

In opposition, Mr. Johnson, seconded by Mr. Ackerman, nominated Stephen A. Gunn.

On motion of Mr. Hetfield the nominations were closed.

The Clerk then announced Messrs. Johnson and Hetfield tellers, and the balloting proceeded. The result of the first ballot was announced by the Clerk:

For Mr. Smith—6 votes.
For Mr. Gunn—4 votes.
Blank—1.

Mr. Smith was promptly declared Mr. Smith the choice of the Council for President, and Messrs. Moffett and Rushmore escorted the new President to the chair, Mr. Moffett on the left of the body.

Mr. Smith thanked the Councilmen for the honor conferred on him, and assured them that he would strive to rule impartially and render decisions of fairness to all. He said that he hoped all would work in harmony for the city's interests and bring the year's work to a close with as good a record as that left by the Council of 1890.

The appointment of a City Clerk followed, Mr. Coward receiving the election by acclamation, on the nomination of Mr. See.

"Our worthy janitor", William V. Mundy, was on motion of Mr. Hetfield re-elected for another year by acclamation.

On motion of Mr. Rushmore the rules of Order of 1890 were continued in force for 1891.

Mr. Moffett moved that THE DAILY PRESS and THE WEEKLY PRESS be designated as the city's official papers for 1891.

Mr. Johnson moved to amend by adding THE EVENING NEWS to the list. Mr. Rushmore seconded the amendment.

President Smith announced that he would have the Council vote on all three papers at once. Mr. Ackerman objected and asked that Mr. Johnson's amendment be first put, which was done. Upon the preliminary roll-call, President Smith said that he had decided Mr. Ackerman's motion out of order, and insisted that the rotation vote be had upon the motion.

The voting resulted as follows:

For THE DAILY PRESS—Councilmen Ackerman, Gallup, Gunn, Hetfield, Johnson, Moffett, Roberts, Rushmore, See, Smith, Spangenberg—11, unanimous.

For The Central New Jersey Times—11, unanimous.

For The Evening News—Councilmen Ackerman, Gunn, Johnson, Rushmore, See—5.

Against The Evening News—Councilmen Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts, Smith, Spangenberg—6.

The Daily and Weekly Times were therefore declared the official papers of the city.

Mayor Gilbert's first message was presented and read. It is published in full in another column.

Pre-Ident Smith announced the following standing committees, to serve through the year:

Finance—Johnson, See, Rushmore.
Auditing—See, Rushmore, Johnson.
Fire and Water—Gallup, Gunn, Gallup.
Fire and Buildings—Hetfield, Gallup, Roberts.
Laws and Ordinances—Rushmore, Ackerman, Gunn.
Licenses—Gunn, Johnson, See.
Police, Watches and Electricians—Roberts, Hetfield, Moffett.
Public Lights—Spangenberg, Ackerman, Moffett.
Printing—Gallup, Spangenberg, Roberts.
Water, Printing and Stationery—Moffett, Hetfield, Spangenberg.

The Council adjourned till Monday evening, January 12.

The Conference Against the Women.

The vote in the Newark Conference on the question of admitting women as delegates to the General Conference is reported as follows: Newark district For, 525; against, 531. Elizabeth [Plainfield's] district—For, 515; against, 740. Plainfield was gallant and generous enough to give a vote in the women's favor.

Presentation to Past Master Henry S. Rose.

After the installation Tuesday night of Worshipful Master Ford and other new officers of Jerusalem Lodge, F. & A. M., of this city, a flat of which has already been published in THE PRESS, Past Master Henry S. Rose, on behalf of the friends of the retiring Master, H. S. Mason, presented him with an elegant jewel and P. M. apron. The latter subsequently tendered those friends a reception and supper at the City Hotel.

Gifts to a Popular Fireman.

W. F. Lincoln, until recently foreman of the foundry department of the Fond Machine Tool Works, was the recipient, which was highly appreciated, of valuable gifts—a gold headed cane and a diamond horse-shoe scarf pin. The occasion was a surprise party, the object of the bounty, among whom Mr. Lincoln is very popular. The presentation speech was made by Frank Marsh. The committee who made the purchases for the gift-makers consisted of Jas. D. Anderson, F. March, D. J. Crowley, E. Cofey and J. F. McCauley. The affair took place in Jr. O. U. A. M. Hall.

Official Inspection and Test To-Morrow.

The Committee on Fire and Buildings from the Plainfield Common Council, together with the Board of Engineers of the Plainfield Fire Department, will make an official inspection and test of the new fire alarm system this afternoon at two o'clock, when it is expected that the apparatus will be found in perfect working order. The Gamewell Fire-Alarm Telegraph Company have turned the system over to the city, who on finding it in satisfactory condition will accept it and consummate it ready for service.

Officers of Rebekah Degree.

Charles Tallman, Deputy Grand Master, installed on Tuesday the following newly-elected officers of Plainfield Odd Fellow's Daughter, Rebekah Degree, No. 4, I. O. O. F.:

N. G.—Addie Sadine.
V. G.—Mrs. Ginny Earsden.
R. S.—Lilly Kingore.
F. S.—Lizzie Hoffman.
Treas.—Mary Sheppard.
R. S. N. G.—Susan Cherry.
L. S. N. G.—Elizabeth Kelsey.
R. S. V. G.—Nora Kingore.
L. S. V. G.—Mrs. Anna Keisering.
O.—John Kelsey.
C.—Mrs. Belle Sargeant.
Chaplain—Mrs. Ginny Earsden.
Guard—E. L. Yetter.

Tom, Dick and Harry appear again with their grandfather's reliable remedy for coughs, colds, etc., Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is the favorite Prescription.

THE ALBION.

Messrs. Miller & Pullen Chosen a Sure Thing for the Concentrated Park Hotel.

Even the old Gibbs of the Park Hotel is to go, and a handsome, modern, up-to-date hotel building is to be known in the future as The Albion. Messrs. Miller & Pullen, the new hotelmen, have got the lease, but in February, as first announced by THE PRESS, will open no pains to make the place a superior hotel for the public. They are expending $10,000 to see that the house may be comfortable, handsomely, luxuriously furnished, throughout; and the owners are spending $20,000 in what is virtually a rebuilding of the house itself. The Albion will be an attractive and desirable a home as it is to be expected from such experienced hotelmen as Messrs. Miller and Pullen, and its opening will be a boon to merchants and to the town. The people, and especially the business people, will undoubtedly greatly pleased at the good news of resumption of business at the house on so large a scale. The Albion is already booking guests.

The Jury of Other Cities.
(From The Trenton Times.)

The Plainfield Common Council has made a good record. The Council re-fires without leaving a dollar of indebtedness to be provided for by the incoming Council.

New Officers of the Auxiliary.

The young men's auxiliary of the Young Men's Christian Association was elected for the ensuing six months the following officers:

President—George Fuller.
Vice President—Francis Frost.
Secretary—Arthur J. Spicer.
Treasurer—Warren Rice.

A Threatened Church Fire Promptly Quelled.

Though the emergency will which this alter of St. Mary's church was decorated for the holidays caught fire from a candle during services Sunday morning, but before the flames could amount to anything serious two of the worshipers stepped quietly forward, tore down with their hands the flaming greens, and quelled the incipient fire. No one left the services, and the services were not even interfered.

Some Doubt About Annie Oakley's Death.

A Boston paper says there seems to be some chance of the report of the death of Miss Annie Oakley, the famous rifle shot, proving untrue. A gentleman of that city has received a letter dated East, England, Dec. 20, 1890, and written by the lady's husband, which makes no mention of her being ill. On the contrary, it says she was then doing some particularly fine shooting. If she is in Egypt, as Mr. Ayres, the paper asks, how did she get there?

Large Accession of Church Membership.

Thirteen years ago this same month, there were received into the Crescent Avenue church 100 persons, nearly all profession of faith. It was a result of the Earle revival. Sunday exactly the same number were received as a result of the work of Evangelist Mills. Twenty-five of the sixty-five Sunday, were received, and eleven besides joined by letter. To this number of 76 will be added the 45 that joined the church recently through the Hope Mission, and those who will join next Sunday through Bethel.

Automatic Couplings on the Reading.

The Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company has taken another important step toward the application of automatic couplers to over five thousand new cars, contracts to build which have been made. It is said that the cars will also be equipped with air-brake appliances. The cost to fit the cars out, it is estimated, will be over $125,000. A more important consideration, said, than such a large expenditure of money is the fact that many brakemen and others who are constantly required to make a coupling with their hands will be saved the liability of receiving permanent injury by the new application. The order calls for 3,000 coal-cars, 1,000 gondolas, 500 caboose cars, 50 stock cars, and they will be delivered between now and next Fall. This rolling stock will cost the company not less $2,600,000 and $3,000,000.

The Site Formally Accepted.

Chairman Mason Tyler, Secretary Nelson Runyon, Treasurer Stewart and Messrs. Serrell, Glass, Clark, Olsen, Moore and Tracy, of the Soldiers' Monument Committee, met last night, and presented at a meeting called for Saturday evening.

Mr. Glass read a report setting forth what had already been exclusively published in THE PRESS, that the Trustees of the Crescent Avenue church had been authorized by a unanimous vote at their congregation to grant permission for a soldiers' and sailors' monument on the triangular plot of ground where the junction of Park avenue, Watchung and Crescent avenues and Seventh street. The report was received and the site was formally accepted by the Committee. Chairman Tyler stated for information that the cost of the proposed monument would be $13,250 with the figures in granite, and $12,000 with the figures in bronze. E. B. Clark considered it would be worth the additional expense to adopt the latter material. The Committee appointed last evening at the Council meeting, when plans of subscription and methods of solicitation will be considered and reported on. The work of raising the money will be begun at once.

Absentee Good Speaking.

*The meeting in Reform Hall last Sat*urday evening which was attended and proved to be a very interesting and instructive occasion. The speakers were Rev. Dr. Rodgers, Mr. Hubbard, Frechesi, a missionary among boatmen, and the Rev. Edward Love. A gentleman from England also made a few remarks, and from the latter's address it appears that there is no substantial growth of temperance sentiment within his own country.

Doctor Rodman is an impressive manner and at length from the recently published book of General Booth, of the Salvation Army, entitled "In Darkest England," thereby vividly portraying the awful misery and degradation caused by liquor drinking and the liquor traffic among the working people. He was followed in the same strain by Hubbard, and next day he did it."

That's singular. I would have supposed that he would have decided against you."

"So he would if I had not taken the precaution to sign my opponent's name to the offer to bribe the judge."—Texas Siftings.

Notes and Queries.

Antiquarian—The custom of throwing the slipper after a bride comes down from the remotest antiquity. Before the Christian era, a defeated chief would take off his shoe and hand it to the victor, to show that the honor of the shoes yielded up all authority. Even now in Scotland the father of the family of a bride throws slippers after her; they mean that they no longer have an authority over her. Do you understand?

Half-

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

WHAT BOYS CAN MAKE.

Useful Presents for the Holidays and Pastimes for Every Day.

"Bridges wants a new broom-handle, father. Will you buy one at once?"

Here, surely, is something easy enough to begin with. Nothing is needed but a smooth, well-seasoned board, an inch thick, twelve inches wide and eighteen inches long.

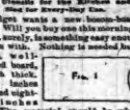

FIG. 1

The material should be white pine. It is better without end pieces. It should not be rounded, and it is sometimes done, but should have square corners; though our Mary says that if it could be cut out a little at one end, as shown in the cut, it would fit better around the neck. Let it be planed smooth, and finished with sand-paper.

Not much more difficult is the bean-board, which is a sort of great-uncle to the broom-board. Use pine again, and make the board of the shape shown in Fig. 2, five feet long, twelve inches wide at the narrower end, and eighteen inches at the other.

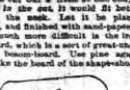

FIG. 2

This board will be right for all ordinary purposes; but if you have any little brothers or sisters you will fill Bridget's heart with delight if you make another board of the same length, but tapering from twelve inches at the widest end to only two inches at the other. The ends of this board are rounded.

Before you get through with it, you will find that the kitchen will furnish a large number of jobs, and that your ability is once demonstrated. But for the present, we will consider only one more kitchen article suited to your undeveloped skill. This is a contrivance for holding the "scouring-brick." The accompanying cut appears in Fig. 3, and needs no further explanation than that there is a strip of leather fastened on the board to scour the knives upon.

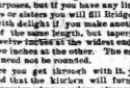

FIG. 3.

Coming into the living-room, we find another badly at work with her needle. This reminds me that Harry Doty—he was my first partner in the carpenter business—and I used to give very good satisfaction, and earn a little spending-money, by our manufacture of "lap-boards."

A lap-board is a broad, light, and strong board which a woman holds in her lap when she is sewing or cutting out, and upon which she spreads her work. We used for our material white wood or else very clear pine, half an inch in thickness. We cut two strips, each a foot wide and three feet long, and fastened them together with glue, and by strips across the ends attached by long brads. We have rounded all the corners carefully, cut a curved opening at one side to fit around the waist, and made the whole as very smooth with sand-paper. I give a sketch, Fig. 4.

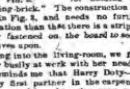

FIG. 4

We used to take particular pride, I remember, in making the joining of the two boards so nice that it would be hard to detect it By the eye.

Another article, for which we found steady demand among our neighbors was the snow-shovel. For a time we had poor success with these shovels, but at last hit upon the following plan, which proved reasonably successful. For the handle we bought hoe-handles. We made the blade of the shovel of half-inch white wood, in size to suit the purchasers. The ends of the blade were planed off to an edge, and protected by a piece of sheet iron folded over it and firmly riveted.

At the back of the blade we fastened a piece of inch stuff with screws from beneath, and bored a hole obliquely through it to admit the handle. Then we sawed off the lower end of the handle at the proper angle, and fastened it through the hole in the inch board, attached it to the blade of the shovel by two staples, which passed over it and were clinched beneath. The result is shown in Fig. 5. We used to put a screw down into the handle from above, and passed through the board at the back, and another between the staples.

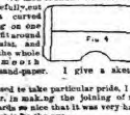

FIG. 5.

Speaking of rivets reminds me of sleds; and as boys can not confine their labors exclusively to merely useful manufactures, I will be well consider next how a boy can make a sled. This is more difficult than any thing heretofore described—particularly as the pieces are needed, and partly because we shall have to use hard wood, at least for the runners.

Cherry or oak will do very well. Borrow the sled you like best for a pattern, and improve its lines a little if you can. Do not be afraid of making the runners too long for speed; three-quarters of an inch in thickness and one and one-half wide will hardly want your sled more than six or eight inches high.

The two runners or side-pieces must be firmly joined by cross-pieces, and if is better to cut out the holes for those to pass through, rather than completely shaving the runners, so as to avoid danger of splitting.

FIG 6

Fig. 6 represents a runner "blocked out" on the board ready to cut. The dotted lines show the final shape. At a and b you will cut holes through the runner, two inches long and one inch wide. When you have finished, as explained, take care to have the upper edge of the holes just one-half inch from the upper edge of the runner.

Now bore two holes with your inch bit side by side within the oblong space marked out, and finish with the jack-saw. The cross-bars should next be made, and may be fourteen inches long if you prefer a narrower sled, or sixteen inches long if you prefer a wide one. If you like to have the ends of these cross-pieces project beyond the runners, so much the better for that. They should be two and one-half inches wide, and this width of the shoulders a quarter of an inch on each side of the tenon, a, in Fig. 7.

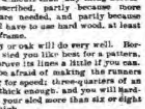

FIG 7

You will fasten the bars in their places by strong wooden pins set in from the upper edge of the runner. (Fig. 6, c, c.)

Having finished the frame by making holes in the sides for your hands (Fig. 6, e), and holes in the front and for the rope (Fig. 8, c), you will fit the top board of half-inch white-wood, and finish the whole with coats and coats of oil paint and varnish, according to your taste. The shoes should be of hard-wrought steel, and should be made and fitted by a competent blacksmith or wagon-maker.

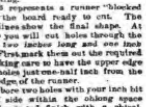

FIG.8.

In our little shop-book we once made the large entry: "Scoured for one sixty-cents (black walnut), and for but unless my recollection of the ineffectual joinings and exceedingly crude finish of the rickety old thing would, at first, the table would have been dear at half that cost. It was too difficult an undertaking for my skill.

There is no end to the things that a boy can make, because the more he makes the more he can not make. These are clothes-frames, and tinsel-border work-baskets, and book-racks, and plant-stands; chicken-coops and brellers, and hideous scaredians and warden cones; wood-boxes, saw-horses and cabinets.

But, after all, half the fun lies in finding out for yourself what you can make, and in devising the best means of making it; so that if in the list that I have given shall only start you pleasantly with your delightful work with fingers, tools, and brain, I shall be glad, and indeed you to make all your joints honest and all your finishing true. Then you can become better service than if I were to give detailed directions for making every thing that can be made.—Harlan H. Ballard, in Youth's Companion.

THE SWEDISH PRINCES.

Two Bright Little Fellows Who Are Sweden's Hope.

Princes Oscar and Prince Karl of Sweden are very loving brothers.

Royal children have generally long names. And the elder of the two is really Oscar Frederick William Olaf Gustavus Adolphus.

There have been nine famous Kings of Sweden named Gustavus, so the Swedish people love the name; and if this little Prince ever becomes King, he will be known as Gustavus Adolphus VI.

He is to be a soldier; he will not be a play-soldier, but he will have the hard work that soldiers have to do. He was born November 11, 1882, so he is but eight years old.

The younger Prince is Karl William Ludwig; he is to be a sailor. The two boys live much of the time near the seaside in the Castle of Tullgarn. There they go for sailing and bathing, and the elder has learned to swim. Little Princes and Princesses have a great many things to do, and they must begin their work early. Prince Oscar has for some time been able to read and write well.

THE ROYAL CHILDREN.

Like all other children, they like to "go to grandfather's visiting." Their grandfather is King Oscar of Sweden. He is very fond of the children, and when they go to see him, he takes great pleasure in giving them the military drill. They go through their exercises in the great hall of the palace, and the neighborhood can stand outside and watch them. When they are through, he tells them to "march around" to the people.—Pamela McArthur Cole, in Little Men and Women.

How to Walk Gracefully.

Correct dress sustains an important relation to correct carriage. If the dress be loose, light and healthful, the shoes easy fitting and with low heels, muscular activity is allowed, and correct carriage is not to be attained without symmetrical muscular development. For instance, if a person has a weak spine and the muscles of the shoulder are weak, it can be readily seen that he will fall into the habit of bowing down and slightly stooping. One with weak muscles in the sides of the body will grow crooked with a swaying gait. To walk well the abdominal muscles must also be exercised. Bad bodily carriage is to be corrected by developing the muscles of the whole body and by systematic training in walking and standing.—From a lecture by Dr. Kellogg.

MEXICAN PULQUE.

A Liquor That Requires Three Days to Get in Its Perfect Work.

General George A. Sheridan gives his experience with Mexican pulque, as reported in the New York Press:

"In the Hoffman House one day a couple of us were talking, and a party of gentlemen were discussing the national beverages of various countries, when one of them asked: 'Have you ever tried Mexican pulque?' The word has the sound of 'pulky,' and there is no accent on any syllable, until General George A. Sheridan, the politician, orator, lecturer and wit, replied: 'Well, you can just bet your sweet life that I have tried pulque, and I don't want any more of it in mine. The second night in this strain.' I tried that tipp in his native lair in the City of Mexico when I was there five years ago. Of course I had numerous American acquaintances there, and they wanted to be kind to me, and took me to some of their places of resort, and I was duly asked what I would have, with the suggestion that I should try pulque. It is the common Mexican beverage, as they told me, and very good, and so I tried it. The taste was not pleasant on the first round, but the effect was delightful, and I took a second drink to surprise the effect was just the same. That is to say, I felt not the slightest degree greater exhilaration or elevation than after I had taken the first drink of it. I separated from those friends and went to my hotel, and to bed with the same consideration and kindness. I took more pulque. But it did not seem to intoxicate me or raise me above a certain even degree of stimulation, and I said to myself, this is the most marvelous beverage I have ever run across. When I met other friends I tried more pulque, and by midnight, I think I tested ten or twelve glasses of the Mexican beverage. When I went to bed I did not feel any intoxication, but was in the slightest degree intoxicated. I woke up about three o'clock the next day, and I pledge you my word that if I know any thing about my condition I was as tight as a club man after a spree. I didn't know what I was or what I was doing. It was three days before I recovered my senses enough to know that I was drunk. I have had my share of drinking, but never in my life before have I had the slightest degree intoxicated. I never had such a headache, with the sensation that I should die. I never had such a headache, with the sensation that I should die. I never had such a headache, with the sensation that I should die

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY,
M. L. FINCE & A. L. FINCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, JANUARY 15, 1891. No. 8.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well as its limitations as to its authorities."—Hamilton.

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 Week	2 Weeks	3 Weeks	1 Month	2 Months	3 Months	6 Months	1 Year
1 in.	$1.00	$1.50	$2.00	$3.00	$4.00	$5.00	$8.00	$15.00
2 in.	1.50	2.00	2.50	4.00	5.00	6.00	10.00	18.00
3 in.	2.00	2.50	3.00	5.00	6.00	7.00	12.00	20.00
4 in.	2.50	3.00	3.50	6.00	7.00	8.00	14.00	25.00
5 in.	3.00	3.50	4.00	7.00	8.00	9.00	16.00	30.00
6 in.	3.50	4.00	4.50	8.00	9.00	10.00	18.00	35.00
7 in.	4.00	4.50	5.00	9.00	10.00	11.00	20.00	40.00
8 in.	4.50	5.00	5.50	10.00	11.00	12.00	22.00	45.00

All Doctor's must be sold cents.
"Table of Everything" column, 5 cts. per line.
Double rate, 50 per ct. advance of above rates.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & COBINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Masters-in-Chancery, Notaries Public, Solicitors Notaries of Title Attorneys and Counsel at Court.
OFFICE, PARK AVE. AND NORTH AVE. 4-30-90

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property conducted. P.O. Box 722, Dunellen, N. J., or Middlesex Co. Bank, New Brunswick, N. J. Terms reasonable.

DR. CHARLES H. SKERIS,
Dentist,
No West Front street. A new local anesthetic by which I can extract or fill teeth without pain. Gold filling a specialty.—9-6-90

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 71, Station Plainfield, N. J. Is now out at P. J. Curtis's carriage factory, West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive personal attention. 9-27-90

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
317 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 36 and 37, (Up-stairs) Tribune Building. Residence, Plainfield, N. J. Office in Plainfield, at No. 19, Consultation on afternoons of 1st Monday and 3d Tuesday in each month, Baltimore, 19 East Fifth Street.—9-6-90

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VAN ARSDALE,
PIANO TUNER.
Is permanently at 21 Borough street, Somerville, N. J. Pianos and Organs for sale and tuned. Orders left at Peck's, 37 East 23d st. and at Wm. Moon's Music Store, No. 6 Park avenue will receive prompt attention. Pianos tuned by contract, $3 per year. Former New Street.—9-27-90

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
Successors to
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds,
PROMPTNESS AND FAIR DEALING.
No. 36 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey. Goods delivered to all parts of the city.
L. A. LUTKINS. L. A. HUMMER.

G. W. FORCE,
11 West Front street.
Opening of
FALL AND WINTER STOCK
Boots and Shoes at Low Prices
A FINE GRADE OF GOODS TO SELECT FROM.
11 West Front street.
G. W. FORCE.
Leader

TO THE PUBLIC!

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.

It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Dimensioned Lumber and Mason's Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
Insurance.

J. Hervey Doane,

6 PARK AVENUE.
[Previously, Clark's.]

Watches, Clocks And Jewelry!

repairing neatly and promptly done.

Steam Marble Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones,
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Rhode Materials.
Largest variety of Granite Monuments

all work executed in the most skilful manner and at as reasonable rates as any establishment in the State. Orders left at PLAINFIELD POST OFFICE will receive prompt attention. Factory on Factory, next to N. E. Ch., PLAINFIELD, N. J. Monuments erected in Greenwood Cemetery, N. Y.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No. 5 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of fashionable goods direct from manufacturers, at Low Prices.

BUILDING LOTS
And Other Most Estate for sale.
OFFICE:
6 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POTTS. ELIAS P. POTTS

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of Smith, Day & Moore Bros.)
Is now the sole proprietor of the old established oil station at
NO. 14 NORTH AVENUE.
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the finest grades of Fresh and Salt Meats. Fish of all kinds, Oysters, Clams, Game, Poultry, etc., in the season. Market prices. Anything not exactly kept in stock furnished to order. Goods delivered to all parts of the city.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (Near D. R. Station),
JAS. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Rooms Heated. Firstclass Furnishing.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-31-87

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Valley Sts. North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. DOYCE, Proprietor.
Furnished and Transient Board, at Reasonable Rates.
First-class Stabling and Boats attached.
Musical attendance daily hours. 1ya37

Clinton Savings Institution

OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President,
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice " NATHAN BARTON, "
ELIAS S. POPE, Treasurer. 9-27-90

DODWORTH'S
CLASSES FOR
Dancing & Deportment
Sensary Hall, Plainfield, N. J.,
Commencing Wednesday, Oct. 29, 1890.
From 3½ to 5½ P. M.
For particulars inquire of E. E. Kenyon, Sensary Hall, or Thos. J. Dodworth, Residence, 1,103 Fulton Ave., N. Y. City. 9-27-90

PAINTERS & PAINTERS SUPPLIES

Paints, Varnishes, Glass,
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
9-27-90

L. B. NORTON. J. P. BUNKER
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES, 20 NORTH AVENUE
9-27-90

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Carey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—34 W. FRONT ST.
Ladies Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 329. All favors merited a specialty. 12ly37

EDUCATIONAL.

Mr. EDWARD E. ROWE
OF NEW YORK CITY,
Will take additional pupils on the PIANO
THURSDAYS OF EACH WEEK.
With kind consent of the Rev. Wm. R. Richards, Old East Front street, address 9 A. M. 1 y 36

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue.
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling, Drawing and Sewing. 9-13-90

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR,
The best 5c. cigar sold in the State, and made entirely from the Choicest Havana Filler and Sumatra Wrapper.
CIGAR HAVANA BRANDS A SPECIALTY.
A large assortment of the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars, Cigarettes and Tobaccos always on hand.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety
1ya37

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in Havana & Domestic
SEGARS!!
6 PARK AVE. (NEAR CORNER) SECOND ST.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials, of every description.
Discount to the Trade. Smoking Tobacco without any substance to injure the throat. 4ly37

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
[Successor to E. D. Maynard.]
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 26 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting done at short notice and in the latest style. Shampooing, Singeing, Dyeing, Manicuring and Facial Manipulations performed by an experienced lady attendant. 6ly37

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent,
SALESROOM—Madison Avenue cor. Front St.
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Goods received for consignment.

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Best Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods,
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 9-13-90

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
28 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.
8ct90ly

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables
Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for hire.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Quiet, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure parties. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day, week or month.—octl5y3
TELEPHONE CALL, No. 98.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoins Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will still maintain the Livery Stables at 127 & 129 East Second street, where horses can be left for boarding or hire. Telephone No. 6 from the Hotel is a specialty.

Accommodation Express.
PETER SICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderveer's Meat Market, Park Avenue.
The Accommodation Express will attend to the delivery of packages to all parts of the city, connecting also at Bonnycastle's and from the Depot, at Force's or Place's store. Moving of Furniture, Pianos etc., at the usual rates. Prompt attention given to Orders 9-13-90

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
That's the way to obtain the best protection against loss by fire.
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York, as presented by reliable, responsible, financially established companies affords applicants for insurance the utmost security. Rates as low as the utmost consistent with safety. Losses promptly adjusted and paid.
NATHAN HARPER.
1ya37

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.
Warning

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represents other first-class First and Second-class companies. Agents of the Texas Brahma Line. Drafts on Ireland for sale. First and Only National Bank Stock Bought and Sold. 1ya37

BUILDING LOTS
N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
No. 10 NORTH AVENUE, NORTH PLAINFIELD.
Orders called for and delivered. A share of the public patronage is solicited. 11-1-1

POPULAR SCIENCE.

CONTINUOUS RAILS.

How They Are United and Divided Together—Their Advantages.

At a recent meeting of the Engineers' Club of Philadelphia, the secretary presented, for the use of the library, a description of continuous rails for railways, which are carried upon ordinary cross-ties, and are held in place by a covering of earth, gravel or stone so that they can not easily move. The joints are made by fish-plates, the edges of an inch so that undulations may take place in the rail without disturbing the adjustment of the wheels. In repairing renewing turnouts are put in of steel rails, and at the foot of heavy grades, for the purpose of admitting of longitudinal motion.

The author explains how the rails are united so as to make them continuous for the use of trains. The ends were riveted together with fish plates. He says that while the riveting was in progress the rail was given a fixed temperature, but since it has been completed there has not been the slightest bending or appreciable pulling in the curves. The ties are covered with red clay contining some lime, but the finer dust, part of the track was turfed and grass has been over the remainder, and now he says, "instead of a wrench, the watchman pushes a mower, and the smallest daisies in pretty green bays with two metal ribbons laid across it."

Speaking of the doubts which had been expressed as to the safety of this arrangement, the author says that it is a fact that "there is in Virginia a section of track laid with this fastening, and that it has been in service since June, 1890, that it has not been surfaced or lined, and that since the first day experience of maintaining it has been the watchman, that engines weighing 104,000 pounds, passing over it at a speed of fifty miles per hour, that it is simply ballasted with gravel, and that I shall take pleasure in showing it to any who care to investigate."—Scientific American.

A MARINE TRICYCLE.

An Unique Machine That Will Navigate Both Land and Water.

At the exposition at Marseilles is a nautico-terrestrial velocipede, which is attracting much attention. "The figure indicates the machine as at present. Each of the three wheels is made of two bi-concave lenses sealed together, with a tube of rubber along the opposite line, which beside being used as a binder, also serves as a tire for the wheel during land travel. By means of more little wing-like paddles on either side of each wheel served to propel the machine, the feet being used for the power to a set of triple cog wheels on the inside of the fore wheel. The mechanism is nothing more than an ordinary velocipede such as is used in this country, the whole being inclosed by the two shell-like convex lenses of sheet iron on which are welded the life-saving life-jacket. The power of sailing or the water would hardly prove a match in point of speed for Monsieur le Frenchman, nor would the latter need quite the amount of faith that failed the fisherman of old.

MARINE TRICYCLE.

PROGRESS IN SCIENCE.

If a tuning fork, when vibrating, is made to touch any part of a spider's web or the twigs or leaves by which the web is supported, the trembling of the web completely destroys the spider, so that after rapidly fluding which radial line is most disturbed, she runs along this one and attempts to secure the tuning fork, and struggles in vain to find a soft spot in the centre of her web.

As a lighthouse illuminant, gas has been found to possess the following advantages over oil: Its facility for increasing the power on the sudden occurrence of a fog, absence of the necessity of trimming, and power to use instantaneous transitions from light to darkness, and the converse.

M. Vieille, pioneer in the invention of smokeless powder, by means of a delicate process of registration finds that the pressure at the moment of burning the powder do not shed themselves uniformly over the gun throughout its length, but that the wave of pressure starts at the seat of the powder and transmits itself.

It is said that the torpedo boat Bathurst, that recently made a mean speed of 20 knots per hour, represents the last refinement of mechanical engineering and that it hardly seems possible to improve upon her as long as steel remains the chief material of construction.

COSTS IN THE CASE.

The Action Was Good, But It Cost the Plaintiff Dearly.

An amusing scene was recently enacted in a court-room in a small country town. The magistrate, a high, pompous official, with a voice like a foghorn, took it upon himself to examine a witness—a little withered, old man, whose face was as red and wrinkled as a smoked herring.

"What is your name?" asked the justice.

"Why, squire," said the astonished witness, "you know my name as well as I know yours."

"Never you mind what I know or what I don't know," was the caution, given with a flourish of the hand, "I'll ask the questions in my official capacity, and you're bound to answer it under oath."

With a contemptuous snort, the witness gave his name, and the question-ing proceeded.

"Where do you live?"

"Well, I declare," ejaculated the old man, turning to the spectators and appealing to the laughing listeners, "I've lived in this town all my life, and so's he," pointing to the justice, "an' to hear him go on you'd think—"

"Silence," thundered the irate magistrate, "I'll not have you quarrel or I'll fine you for contempt of court."

Alarmed by the threat, the witness resumed the line of residence, and the examination went on.

"What is your occupation?"

"Hush!"

"What do you do for a living?"

"Oh, you mean, how do I live as if you don't know that I tend gardens in the summer season an' sell coal in the winter."

"Are private citizen I do know it, but as the court I know nothing about you, and shall therefore proceed with the examination."

"Well, squire," remarked the puzzled witness, "if you know somethin' outside the court-room, why don't you tell what is in it, you'd better get out an' let somebody try this case that's got some sense."

The advice may have been well meant, but it cost the litigious fire dollars.—Farm and Fireside.

RIDING THE PILLION.

Revival of an Old and Picturesque Custom.

The Very Quintessence of Sentiment Has Just Arrived There With Wives and Sweethearts.

Do any one of our readers recall the articles printed some time ago on the much-vexed question as to whether women should ride astride or sideways? Those who did follow that interesting discussion were doubtless divided into two camps—horsemen and horsewomen in the new school of riding. To the horsemen either the ancient style of pillion riding has been revived will prove extremely welcome. For with pillion riding no excuse will be left for quintessence of modesty in riding. It is a mode of carriage that flourished when the dress of a woman was a seeded astride of a horse would have been considered heathenish and grossly immoral. In those days husband and wife or brother and sister rode together, as shown in our sketch, and the effect was very charming. Pillions are all the rage on the same principle—a cushion covered with buckram and quilted, with a handle at the back, which can be put up or down, working with a hinge, the whole having attached a cover with large flaps made of drab-kersymere to keep the lady's dress from the horse's side. The cover is also often quilted and bound with ornamental braid. There is, besides, a small footboard suspended by leather straps. One large stirrup for the left foot is all the interesting outlines of the pillion, might give the impression that the old method of riding was not altogether safe. But the seeming contretemps only displays the result of unfamiliarity with the pillion. As a present Mr. E. S. Wilson, an English gentleman, is the only person who has carried the arrangement as far as practical experiment, and, of course, his labors alone could not make good pillion riders. It will only be when the idea has been widely taken hold of that it will be worked out with perfect success. Writing from Mr. Wilson's country place, a correspondent says:

PILLION RIDING IN THE OLD DAYS.

"Mr. Wilson was as anxious to exhibit as I was to witness pillion riding, and a young cart horse was especially caught for the service. There were plenty of girls about ready to mount the pillion, and a young farmer turned up who at once volunteered to mount the horse. The young farmer duly donned an old cocked hat and buckled on the belt. He was soon in the saddle and rode away to the "upping-stone," where a young lady mounted behind him in the usual fashion. It was a picturesque sight and made one's imagination wander to bygone times. The young cart horse did not stepped many paces when he began to plunge and kick, but the young farmer stuck to his work. The young lady screamed, but held tight by the handle of the pillion with her left hand, while her right clutched the belt round the young farmer's waist. The horse soon quieted down and was put through his paces."

THE PILLION.

How it would accommodate the appearance of Fifth avenue or some of the parks in Central Park if our riders were to sally forth mounted on stout horses with their daughters snugly ensconced upon pillions!

TRICYCLE COACHES.

An Idea of What Those Qualint Convey-ances Are Coming to.

The coming introduction of tricycle coaches upon the streets of our city has met with the hearty approval of a long-suffering public, whose hopes are now raised that the new conveyance will be some relief from the present sky-scraping street cars. The organization of the new company will in all likelihood be completed within a day or two. A man ager for the new company has been already selected and every thing is progressing in a quiet, rapid and successful manner toward the inauguration of the Tricycle Coach Company. The promoters of the new enterprise have been making a sample of the new coaches for several weeks with a view to testing its adaptation to the requirements of travel. The coaches which are to be used here, however, will be twice the size of this one, and will carry sixteen passengers while this one carries but eight.—Detroit Free Press.

THE TRICYCLE COACH.

An Advocate of Reciprocity.

George—If you don't care for him why did you let him take your hand as I saw him do last night?

Mabel—Well, George, I couldn't very well help it—he had let me take his as often, you know.—Munsey's Weekly.

A SUMMER'S TALE.

Recipe for a First-Class Love Story—Time—Tried and Tested.

Take a handful of fair maiden shaded by fine maple trees, and set it "nestin in a peaceful valley 'neath the shadow of the grand old Rocky Mountains. In this cottage, writes J. L. Ford in Puck, place the widow Perkins, or Lee, or Osgood, or Sampson. They will be all right. Then take a handful of wealthy young man, who is a typical one; it began raising April showers in November and kept it up almost night and day until after Christmas. When it began raining the natives began grinning and the newspapers began making naughty remarks, and the longer it rained the larger the grins grew and the more naughty the remarks were tainted with sulphur. But presently the tenderfoot finds that were is no rain for long spells of the year and country would become a howling wilderness and cease to howl.

The first of January spring began. The grass began sprouting, some of them from the East. Every flower in the garden began to bloom and every bird began to build nests. The roads and hillsides were also dotted with the tents of the prospectors. The years and hillsides were also dotted with the tents of the prospectors. The years and hillsides were also dotted with the tents of the prospectors. The years

The Constitutionalist.
W. L. FORCE. A. L. FORCE
Editors and Proprietors.

JACKSONIAN.

January 8, 1815, seventy-six years ago the boastful conqueror of Napoleon thoroughly equipped and led by the English generals gave battle to our country's defenders on the plain of New Orleans and met overwhelming defeat. The fearless American commander, General Andrew Jackson, thereby justly won the historic title of the "Hero of New Orleans, and subsequently, as a distinguished Democratic President of the United States, added to military renown the grand civic honor of being a resolute champion of the rights of the people.

The anniversary of New Orleans, fitly termed "Jackson's Day," has been regularly observed by Democrats throughout the land, and this year with apparently increased zeal. Among the numerous patriotic addresses delivered that of ex-President Cleveland at the Philadelphia banquet gave the genuine Democratic ring, as the following partial extracts will attest:

He said:

"When illusions are dispelled, when misconceptions are rectified, and when those who guide are consecrated to truth and duty, the ark of the people's safety will still be discovered in the keeping of those who hold fast to the principles of true Democracy."

"The great President and intrepid Democratic leader whom we especially honor to-night, who never relaxed his strict adherence to the Democratic faith, nor faltered in his defence of the rights of the people against all offenders, was a true inspiration and guidance in three attempts."

"Parties have come and parties have gone. The tore of the leaders of the party which faces in opposition the Democratic host listen for the footsteps of that death which destroys parties false to their trusts."

"But there has never been a time from Jefferson's day to the present hour when our party did not exist, active and aggressive and prepared for heroic conflict."

"We may well be proud of our party membership, but we cannot escape the duty which such membership imposes upon us, to urge constantly upon our fellow citizens of this day and generation the sufficiency of the principles of true Democracy for the protection of all equal rights and the promotion of their welfare and happiness, in all their present diverse conditions and surroundings."

"Then, indeed, we see the functions of government used to enrich a favored few at the expense of the many, and see also its inevitable result in the pinching privation of the many and the profligate extravagance of the rich, and when we see in operation an unjust tariff which banishes from many a humble home the comforts of life in order that in the palaces of wealth luxury may more abound, we turn to our creed and find that it enjoins equal and even justice to all men."

The Democracy of Jackson was sound to the core and so is that of Cleveland.

For President,
GROVER CLEVELAND.

NEW JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

The Democratic Legislature of New Jersey organized on Tuesday, with harmony and dispatch, the indications being that the session will be a short one. The Governor's message is a very lengthy one and an able document. Upon all the subjects treated, the Governor is candid and explicit, and evidences the thoroughness in which they have been considered by him. The extreme length of the message precludes our giving it in full in this issue.

Our brothers of the Plainfield Constitutionalist are quietly celebrating their twenty-third anniversary of that paper. It is one of our best exchanges, always bright and sparkling—Modesto Engle.

The Plainfield Constitutionalist has entered upon the twenty-fourth year of its existence. During this period, it has proved itself a true friend and able and conscientious conservator, and has given its numerous patrons a journal of which they ought to be proud. May its future be still more successful, and may its exchequer be filled with journalistic gold.—Philipsburg Democrat.

To Fix a Rate for Plainfield.

Represent three of all the fire insurance companies having agencies in this city, met at 11 o'clock yesterday in the office of J. C. Pope & Co. The German American was represented by John W. Murray, cr.

Plainfield vs. Bayonne.

Van Emburgh, Rogers, Toal, Raven, Van Winkle, Thiers, Reed, Pellet reau, Lowry and Otis are the ten men of the Crescent League who will be found among the Newark Bay Boat Club, of Bayonne, this evening.

The most brilliant occur in the Olympic alleys, Sycamore street, where visitors are always welcome. The Bayonne have only lost three games this season, but the Crescents propose to make it four.

New Jersey a Healthful State.

[From The Camden Press.]

People living outside of the State should not be in a hurry in coming to conclusion, founded on the report of the vital statistics, that New Jersey is an unhealthy State to live in. The fact that Cape May to Sandy Hook is lined with health resorts, to which persons with all sorts of ailments repair in the hope that they will recover, is taken as a proof that nearly all stanches unfortunately does not result as they expect. This increases the desirable rate considerably, and makes it appear to the outside world as if New Jersey was a good State to stay away from. The truth is that this is one of the healthiest States in the Union. Both Atlantic City have done that reputation so long as it is made the "dumping ground," so to speak, of the sick and infirm from States far and near.

Union County Assemblymen.

The two new Assemblymen from Union county who will join in the organization of the Legislature at Trenton to-night are Thomas F. Lane and George Kyte. In The World to-day their personality is given as follows:

Thomas F. Lane is editor of the Summit Record. He is a bright newspaper man and an enthusiastic Democrat. He resides being young and handsome. Mr. Lane intends to introduce a bill to have notice given of all applications for parties. His theory is this is the best cure for the pardoning evil.

George Kyte was the only Republican elected last November in Union county. He is a member of the Board of Chosen Freeholders and has held a number of local offices. Mr. Kyte was born in South America in 1850. Two years later he came to this country. He was fond of adventure, and in 1863 he ran away from home and joined the army, where he spent a considerable period. He has lived in Rahway about three years.

—Round Brook thinks of a street rail way.

WOMEN IN THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

A Big Majority in Favor of the Proposition to Put Methodist Districts.

Returns from 368 districts of the Methodist Episcopal church of the vote on the proposition to submit to the annual conferences as to admit women as representatives to the General Conference have been received at the office of the Christian Advocate. The total vote of these 368 districts is 314,809, of which 196,929 were cast in favor and 117,874 against the proposition, a majority of 79,055 in favor of the change. The districts heard from comprise about three-fifths of the districts in the United States.

THOSE JEWELS AGAIN.

The Housekeeping Nursing Failed to Produce Them. A Lawsuit Will Be Tried.

Mrs. Ada Aguirre, the dashing blonde who horsewhipped Dr. William Gale, a benedict bachelor, in Westfield, a month ago, because he wouldn't surrender several hundred dollars' worth of jewelry which she claimed he had stolen from her, has made a formal demand, through a New York lawyer, on the doctor for the jewels; and because Gale now admits that he has them, he claims that they were stolen she threatens to take the case into the courts. She doesn't seem to believe the physician's story of his alleged robbery.

Mrs. Aguirre is the divorced wife of Dr. Carlos Aguirre, a well-known Cuban dentist of New York. She is a daughter of the late Rev. Dr. T. W. Wright, a prominent Methodist clergyman of Elizabeth, and is a sister of Dr. Gale's wife, between whom and herself the Rev. Dr. Wright divided his property. She is considered for her beauty and accomplishment throughout New Jersey and New York city, where she achieved fame under the stage name of Miss Ada Wright.

BETTER WAGES FOR LIFE SAVERS.

Plainfield's Congressman Joins the Rev. Mr. Young in an Effort to Accomplish Brave Men's Deserts.

The Rev. S. Edward Young, the pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian church, Asbury Park, is endeavoring to secure larger wages for the surfmen and Captains of all the life-saving stations in the United States. His idea is to increase the salaries of the surfmen to $500 a year and those of the Captains to $800; also to provide permanent pensions for the families of those who are lost while assisting a wrecked vessel. At present the wages that the men do now satisfactorily be will have a new bill framed.

Congressman Jacob A. Geissenhainer, the representative of the district in which Asbury and Ocean City are situated, at Washington, has introduced a bill to raise the wages of the life savers to $600 and those of the Captains to $800.

A New Dye Stuff Company.

The New Brunswick Home News states that on Monday morning a certificate of incorporation was filed in the County Clerk's office for the Frank A. Morrison Dye Company of Dunellen, which is capitalized at $15,000, at $100 per share, and commenced business on Saturday. The incorporators are Frank A. Morrison, 100 shares; Emma Ransom, 1 share; Mary A. Brown, 1 share, all of Dunellen; George C. Wellbrock, Brooklyn, 1 share, and E. J. Tandy, Metuchen, 1 share.

Foreman.

The Grand Jury Cases Heard For His Rebuke, Which Was Administered by Judge Bros. since Tunis J. Carey before Justice Nash for $25 for the balance due on a check given for piano and $100 in money. Upon the instruments had by Carey, judgment was taken against him. Carey appealed the case to the Court of Common Pleas. On the day on which the case was set down for a hearing, Mr. McClure appeared for the Miller Bros., but neither Carey nor his counsel was present. Mr. McClure moved for and obtained a decision in the case. Subsequently notice was served on Mr. McClure, based on affidavits of Carey and his counsel, who represented him in the court below, of a motion to be made before the court to reinstate the case. At the hearing of the motion, Mr. McClure appeared for the Millers, and Judge Cross for Mr. Carey, and after an argument heard the court reserved an opinion. Saturday the opinion was handed down, and it reads as follows: "The decision that Carey has been guilty of no laches in the premises."

Counselor Marsh Wins Two in One Day.

In giving the results of the suits of Architect Clark against Mayor Male, and Mrs. Schneider against her daughter Elizabeth Gamble—published exclusively in Saturday's PRESS—the names of the counsel engaged were omitted from the dispatches. Counselor Craig A. Marsh won both cases. In the first named suit he had to defend his client against the combined efforts of a New York lawyer and a New Jersey lawyer. In the latter instance Counselor Marsh handled the plaintiff without the slightest consideration or respect, and stigmatized him severely.

In the case of Schneider against Geisner, Counselor Marsh was opposed by Jackson & Coddington and R. V. Lindabury. The case was given to the jury on the plaintiff on every ballot, and were ordered locked up for the night. The constable had started down the stairs for their supplies when he was called back on the obstinate one, seeing no chance to get home otherwise, voted unanimously with the others for the full amount of the claim.

Prominent Roadway on the Borough.

Dr. P. W. Brakeley, President of the Borough of Dunellen, writes to the Bound Brook Chronicle on the borough question as follows:

"Dunellen has been a borough five years, and during that time has made considerable progress in municipal matters. Enough amount, has caused all the principal sidewalks to be flagged, concreted or covered with crushed stone, has stone crossings laid in many places, has materially improved the sanitary condition of the town by preventing all causes of disease from being left exposed anywhere in the borough, has put in electric lights and gas to have electric lights and a lock-up—all at a cost so trifling that its citizens do not feel that they have been assessed for the improvements or manifest to all. A borough government is the best and most complete government for a growing town. Under it the town keeps its own affairs independent of the township, and the president or mayor has power to enforce all ordinances and has equal power with a justice of the peace in punishing misdemeanors."

"Let 'Em Rake Their Leaves."

The Adams Express Company has issued a unique card of greeting to the new year. It is a picture of a fat, jolly old gentleman, with a pipe in his mouth, a heavy frosted in ornate black type on the polished surface of a transparent, ivory-like panel. On the other side of the panel is printed in red ink, in a neat style, the following card for a mantelpiece, printed to red ink, in a neat representing suggestion by a mythological messenger seated on a pile of packages, holding a cigar in a small, with three tortoise rising, each with a pair of goods upon its back. At the top is the legend: "Let 'em walk;" while at the bottom is the legend: "Diligence and patience."

JUSTICE REACHES HIM AT LAST.

Final Cost to Him of the Trial Represented by the Grand Jury of Union County, and Wrapped Up in Bills of Indictment.

Yesterday morning by the unanimous vote of the Grand Jury of Union county, composed of respectable men of both parties selected for their general judgment and intelligence by Judge Young, Morrison B. Morrison of this city was presented in the Court at Elizabeth, Friday morning, for the good and sufficient reasons set forth in the verdict below.

Because of the same course of vindictive journalism pursued week after week when the private character and reputation of the citizens of another town was assailed, and the public service of one appointed office after another systematically and unjustifiably lied about—the Common Council last Monday evening, cast out the soon as an official paper of the city. Both action was unanimous, and it had to be in the cause of justice and decency. For the twenty-one years that Plainfield has been a city, not its papers have been otherwise than clean and decent, and it was still so handled but the one that's disgraced. The Grand Jury, following in the footsteps of the Council, announce to the world this verdict in the same case:

The first glimpse of this new mischief-breeder was visible when Chairman Nathan Barton, the acting Grand Jury, announced that he had in his hands the written declination of James McGee of the election to the Presidency of the Club, and that Edward Lowrie had been elected to collect a President in his place.

The Rev. W. E. Honeyman, the Club's Chaplain, protested against another election, and moved that the resignation of Mr. McGee be not accepted. Judge Harper held that as Mr. McGee had not yet been installed as President he could only decline to accept, and so ruled. Mr. Lowrie on the ground that Mr. McGee's communication was not a resignation but a declination he ruled that Mr. Honeyman's motion was out of order. This ruling was signal for vociferous applause from John Goodwin and a party of cronies in one corner of the room. Mr. Honeyman appealed to his feet as though to demand an appeal, but "seemed to reconsider his thought, and sat down again.

J. D. Spicer, the Club's Treasurer, then arose with the resignation of H. Newton Spencer for President. He said that to his mind the presiding officer of such an institution should be a reformed man, and as Mr. Spencer was one, and had for seven years served the Club earnestly and faithfully, he ought to have the position.

"Best man you ever had!"—shouted Ab Cook from the corner, and laughter and applause were given.

Then George P. Opdyke struggled to his feet. At the last meeting—he said—the question of continuing the Sunday night meetings was put to a vote, and was settled that the vote of the members at that meeting, despite the ruling, was against continuing the Sunday meetings. In consideration of the circumstances at that meeting, however, Mr. McGee had declined to serve as President. Still, believing that as President Mr. McGee could settle the prevailing feeling of discontent, he would re-nominate Mr. McGee for the office.

A motion that the nominations be closed was carried, and the Chairman appointed Messrs. Baancsachs and Burnett to act as tellers.

At this point Alexander Tilesworth arose to inquire if members who had violated their pledge were going to be allowed to vote. Judge Harper stated that all those who had signed the pledge had not been stricken off the roll. Frazee Lowrie—a former member—wanted to know if the pledge violators could vote. Judge Harper ruled that any member who violates his pledge thereby forfeits his membership. Frazee Lowrie retorted that while that was true the Constitution also provided that all pledge-violators had to be called before the Executive Committee, and allowed a hearing before their names off the roll, and that only after charges had been proved. All men were innocent till proved guilty.

Mr. McGee declared that he was opposed to any election until the question of policy as to the Sunday night meetings was settled, and offered to withdraw his letter of declination if the vote of Mr. McGee be accepted, and which would leave him still President-elect, and give the Club a chance to decide the Sunday night question. Or, he suggested, the question of business could be suspended and the question of policy could be taken up that way. That way would not run in an election against such a good and faithful member as Newton Spencer.

As only the hoarse whisper, "He's afraid to!" from the John Goodwin cohorts—went echoing through the room, and Judge Harper ordered that the election proceed. A vote of confidence was put in a protest, but, the Chairman thundered forth the order "Proceed with the election of President!"

But no! Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut took the floor. "The fetter plan"—said he—"is to settle first the question of policy, and I therefore move that the order of business be suspended."

"You are out of order!" retorted Chairman Barton.

"Out of order!" echoed the astonished clergyman; "out of order to suspend the order of business?"

"I declare you out of order"—was the answer.

"Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair"—cried Mr. McGee.

A standing vote on the appeal was at once taken, and a very unfair vote it seemed to us. Chairman Barton, in declaring the vote, was made by the tellers to distinguish between those who were Club members and those who were not. Members who had been suspended for non-dues had to stand in their dues or for some other reason felt that they were now outsiders were conscientious enough not to vote on all, though they were in sympathy with the leading movement; while some others who did vote, and whose refreshing to vote would have materially changed the result, but only had never been Club members but were under the influence of liquor when they came to the front and were refused. By these spectators who wanted to see an honest vote this seemed very unjust. However, the tellers announced a vote of 69 in favor of sustaining the ruling of the chair, and Mr. McGee promptly withdrew his name from the contest, and John Goodwin jumped up and moved that Newton Spencer be unanimously chosen President.

Scarcely had Mr. French rescued his seat when Secretary Hargrave declared forth, with a heavenly glance toward the ex-President, that in his opinion anyone having anything to do with the working of the Club, or having any voice in its deliberations, ought to be a sober man. If men who are not sober are going to have a voice in the affairs of the Club, it wasn't anything to do with the Club.

The Chair again ordered the election to proceed; and, behind being taken, it resulted in the election of Newton Spencer by a vote of 69 to 68. Mr. Spencer received 61 votes and James McGee 8 while 3 were blank. This made a total of 69 votes, and the last time every Club member present had voted. The standing vote was taken to show the strength of the opposition, and the vote thereon stood 69 to 68. The announcement that Mr. Spencer was the choice of the Club for President was received and applauded, and one of the Club's most active election workers exclaimed:

"Now we've got a President that we can be proud of!"

Mr. Spencer was thereupon escorted to the platform, and, with Secretary J. D. Hargrave on his right and Treasurer J. D. Spicer on his left, First Marshal William Reed and Second Marshal Wm. C. Smith, selected to Messrs. Frazee Lowrie and Alexander Tilesworth, First Vice President George P. Opdyke, and Third Vice President Francis G. Bonnell, declined to serve, and resigned the offices to which they had been elected.

The women waited their heartbreaking ex-President Spencer as he took the chair, and Secretary Hargrave read the call. He then requested a renewal of the consideration of the Sunday night question. Mr. French retorted that that matter was in the hands of Rev. T. J. Gillies recommended the motion, but before he did so Mr. McGee had gathered recognition from the Chair and read a letter declining to vote on the Sunday meeting question he takes, so that the sense of the Club in the matter could be referred to the Executive Committee for action.

Then John Goodwin thundered forth. "You heard me!"—he shouted.—"I moved to adjourn. You heard me, Mr. Chairman!"

"I put the floor before any seconding was done"—insisted Mr. McGee.

Peace-loving Mr. Vanderbeek arose. "I move that Mr. McGee be given the floor"—he said.

Mr. McGee's eyes flashed, and he proclaimed in his sternest voice: "Mr. McGee has the floor, and Mr. McGee the floor will be held his head."

A half-suppressed murmur of approbation arose, then there was the stillness of solitude, and Mr. McGee proceeded in a calm, controlled, plain-spoken speech.

With a great deal of patience and forbearance—he said—I have sat here these two months and listened to and submitted to the most preposterous rulings I have ever heard from any presiding officer. [Cries of "That's so!" were uttered.] It has come to the point where I propose to sustain that method of ruling those in the minority will of course be governed accordingly. Decisions have been rendered from the Chair against all judgment, all knowledge, all common-sense. At the last meeting a majority of at least three and perhaps five were opposed to the motion to continue the Sunday night meetings, but the Chair decided the vote a tie. The same thing is undertaken here to-night. The high-handed ruling I never heard of has been enforced. Even a motion to suspend the order of business has been ruled out of order.

Now, as the Sunday night meetings ought to be abolished—he continued —I have this to say: A very large number of men have come here to-night who are not Club men, but who have come to their dues. They have no interest in the true work of the Club. But because it suits their purpose to have the meetings continued they have come here to express their purpose against the good judgment of the people who originated and who perpetuate the Club and who constitute the money to keep it flourishing. The Sunday night meetings ought to be closed because their sentiment is repugnant to Christian principles. The people who actually support the Club ask that the meetings be stopped—not because they are opposed to temperance meetings, because of the evil spirit that long has predominated. If by continuing its Sunday meetings the Club could save each man who is now in the high-handed ruling of the Chair, it would be cheap. Everything worked to the entire satisfaction of the city's officials, and met with their approval.

As hot after hot was rung the test became a most severe one, and one that the system will never be called upon to stand after the present one. After the vote had been struck continuously for 368 times, of course the sliding valve became greatly overheated and expanded so that it could not shut itself. This was the only break in the perfect success of the test.

For Lack of Fortunes Opportunity Kyte Will Be Setting.

The New York World has been asking the members of the new Senate and Assembly of New Jersey what new bills they propose presenting to the Legislature. The reply of Assemblyman George T. Kyte, of Fanwood, the Republican member from this district, is given in a series of spirited interviews with him. He says:

"The Republicans are in a hopeless minority this time, and we have no chance to pass any bills which we may introduce. You know it is my first legislative experience; and my position, therefore, is that of a watchfulness and doing what I can to oppose any vicious legislation which may try to enact for Union county."

Calls for Vigilance and a Gun.

Depredations in New Market and vicinity by chicken thieves — remarks the Bound Brook Democratic-republican — and call for eternal vigilance and a gun. Recent losses foot up as follows: Ephraim Suydam, Bridge Burly; Mrs. Laura Hansen, 50 chickens; Geo. W. Nevius, 15 chickens; Nelson Runyon, (Vail farm), 40 chickens; Freeholder Henry Garretson, 60 chickens.

Malicious Mischief-Makers.

T. O. Downe, Chief Engineer of the Plainfield Fire Department, found the key-hole of one of the fire-alarm boxes plugged with a piece of corn, Tuesday, and several minutes were wasted in cutting the kernel out. In case of actual fire this bit of maliciousness might have caused serious delay.

Some young fellow Thursday night stole two tin signs bearing the legend "Unitarian Church 8:30" and hung them on the lamp-post at the corner of Second so that the feet pointed to the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church building.

Installation.

At a regular convocation of Jerusalem Chapter, No. 24, R. A. M., held in their rooms this city Tuesday last week, the following officers were installed for the ensuing year:

High Priest—R. P. Crittell.
King—Henry Woodruff.
Scribe—C. E. Sagg.
C. of H.—Rev. W. Miller.
Prin. soj.—Rev. Dan. C. Adams.
Capt. of Host—Chas. P. Leggett.
1 Sent'l—Chas. Tilesworth.
2 Sent'l—John M. Cass.
Treas.—Ed. J. Odell.
Treasurer—Alex. Tilesworth.
Secretary—Henry S. Mason.
Guard—Wm. Van Winkle.
Sentinel—I. D. Van Pelt.

Rev. Schuyler Wins Her Case and Mayor Male the Other.

Two cases of interest to the readers of this PRESS were tried at Elizabeth, Friday, and it was after half-past 6 o'clock in the evening that the two juries agreed.

One case was that of Elizabeth Schneider, of this city, against Elizabeth Geisner, her daughter. The plaintiff sued for $250, loaned on a promissory note to pay for a building lot. The second case was a suit of Mr. W. S. Clark, a real estate ex-Mayor John Male of this city, for money he claims is due him for plans for an addition to a ball, which were ordered by the ex-Mayor when in office.

The jury in the first case found for the plaintiff, and the jury in the second case found for the defendant.

The Good Speakers.

The value of personal purity to young men was forcibly emphasized by the strong, helpful words spoken by the Hon. Elkanah Dukes at the young men's Good Men's Christian association Men's Sunday afternoon. The audience was large, in spite of the inclemency of the weather.

Next Sunday afternoon, at the same time and place, an address will be delivered by Robert P. Whitney, one of the original members of the Young Men's Christian Missionary Movement, who will describe what has been termed the college uprising. Mr. Whitney, by his eloquence and broad knowledge of human nature, has thrilled the blood of college men all over this land, and the young men of this city are looking forward to being privileged to hear him speak.

Stop coughing at once by the immediate use of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup; 25c a bottle.

Have a clear head, clear eyes, clear complexion, clear breath, clear skin, clear appetite, clear tongue, clear bowels, clear kidneys, clear liver, clear blood, clear nerves, clear muscles, clear bones, clear flesh, clear weight, clear health, clear spirits, clear everything, by using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Do not forget to try it this season.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CHARITY.

Public Aims and Private Charity Commented in the Annual Association.

The annual meeting and election of the Union County Branch of the State Charities Aid Association was held at Ellis Island, New York, on Friday. Dr. Alfred Mayer, M. D., of Orange, N. J., presided, and the Rev. F. M. McAllister, Mrs. Ward, Mrs. Mary A. Marsh, Mrs. J. Cohn, Mr. and Mrs. D. Peterson, Mrs. and Mrs. D. Patterson, Samuel C. Blackwell, J. Aug. Dix, the Rev. Dr. Teal, Mrs. G. D. Stone, Mrs. Douglass G. Moore, Mrs. H. Trimble, and others, were present.

Reports were read from various committees, showing a large amount of work carried on by the Association. The public interest, and increased interest in its prosperity. Early last Spring, at the instance of the Association, the Elizabeth City Council appointed a committee to examine into and report on the subject of out-door relief. That committee has been and is now at work and important results are expected from its labors. The Union House committee have continued the Sunday services at that institution for the poor, and report improvements to the comfort and welfare of those in the place. The local committees from Plainfield reported that they had examined the whole system of administering public relief in that city, and were investigating much labor, and it appeared that many of the people of Plainfield were actively interested in the Association and took part in its work. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

President—The Rev. Edward Y. Kempshall; Vice Presidents—The Rev. F. M. McAllister; Secretary—Howard Richards; Treasurer—Mrs. J. K. Myers of Plainfield; Executive Committee — Mrs. Elizabeth Ward, Mrs. Joseph Gales, Mrs. Charles H. Langdon, Victor Mravlag, M. D., and E. B. Clark of Plainfield.

The Salvation Army in Town.

Five women and one man from the Salvation Army in New York held the first of a series of meetings for the month in Reform Hall Sunday night. The audience numbered five persons. The speeches of the Army people were interesting, and their singing was very good. The Army will hold meetings every night except Thursday, for four weeks, beginning at eight o'clock.

In Explanation and Congratulation.

[From the Westfield Leader.]

Mr. Seymour G. Smith, the brother of our townsman, Mr. Chester M. Smith, has been appointed Fire Alarm Electrician of the Common Council of Plainfield. Our office can get around among our type last week, and made Mr. Smith a candidate for the office of Mayor of the Queen City. Council, a mistake for which we here tender our sincere honorable. It is evident we were not mistaken in the character of the man, for Mr. Smith's office, and so, consequently, is the office.

The Success of the New Fire-Alarm System.

Chairman Redfield, of the Fire Committee, Chief Donnelly, Charles Wann, representing the contractors, and others, made a formal test, Thursday, of the new fire-alarm system the Gamewell company has recently completed in most of the city. Everything worked to the entire satisfaction of the city's officials, and met with their approval.

As hot after hot was rung the test became a most severe one, and one that the system will never be called upon to stand after the present one. After the vote had been struck continuously for 368 times, of course the sliding valve became greatly overheated and expanded so that it could not shut itself. This was the only break in the perfect success of the test.

THE NEW HOUSE.

The officers of the new Hall installed in Jerusalem Lodge, F. and A. M., Tuesday evening are:

Worshipful Master—W. J. Ford.
Senior Warden—E. B. Sage.
Junior Warden—J. C. Stanford.
Treasurer—Ed. J. Odell.
Secretary—D. S. Weaver.
Chaplain—R. P. Crittell.
Senior Deacon—R. P. Crittell.
Junior Deacon—E. L. Odell.
Senior S. of C.—Chas. Tilesworth.
Junior S. of C.—Geo. P. Runyon.
Stewards—F. Reed, E. Weber.
Marshal—J. Clerk, F. M.
Organist—D. W. Jones.
Tyler—E. Bodell.
Finance Committee—I. D. Woolman, J. C. Odell, E. H. Robinson.

The officers installed Worshipful Master received numerous congratulations, and a supper was subsequently served in the banquet-room of the Lodge.

Would Have Some Gas, Turn the Last.

One of the most conspicuous figures on the streets of Plainfield the past few days has been a tramp. He says his home is in Dunellen, but who has been there to love this city so well as to visit it constantly. He calls himself the veteran paper-seller, and is the latest to appear in Plainfield, and rejoices that his friends are a multitude, from Canada to the city of Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He speaks English, German, Italian and Spanish, and was a schoolmate of Chauncey M. Depew. He used to play foot-ball with Gen. Grant; was a ship-of California; and never had occasion to be a doctor's client in his life. He is "the fellow well met," and says he loves the poor better than the rich. His greeting to all is: "Good! How sure you are!" which he translates from Chinese into English, "How are you! Drink tea!"

Spoiled a Wasted Load of Groceries.

John Bickbell, foreman of J. P. Boman's blacksmith shop, is one of the most unfortunate men in town. He started out with a fine horse, from his country residence every morning to business. Henry Wine, the resident dairy at P. M. Demarest's, is a frequent visitor at the shop in the just pride of such a trotter, so when Wine's horse was taken sick he naturally went to John for the loan of his animal. John promptly acquie-osed, the only stipulation being that the horse should be tied while the driver was delivering his greeting to all his friends. After leaving a large load of groceries in his wagon, Wine started for North Plainfield, and drove to Dver street, to a friend's home. A few hours later he came out and expecting to be back instantly, he neglected to tie the horse. A milk wagon driven by a boy attracted a desire for home in the heart of the animal, which had been impressed into the grocery service, and satisfied the impulse of the moment. Down Dover street to Green Brook road and up that street to Somerset, in the direction of home, where he was fortunately caught. The only damage was the spoiling of some of the numerous packages of groceries which the wagon contained.

Ministerial Relief Among the Presbyterians.

The offering yesterday morning in the Crescent avenue church was for the Board of Ministerial Relief.

The meeting, ending April 1, 1890, the number of families upon the roll of the Board was 842, of whom 18 were at the Ministers' House, Perth Amboy, N. J., where they are cared for. Appropriations were sent in money, as recommended by the Presbyteries to which they belong. The number of persons who stain in behalf under the 189 Presbyteries, though large was widely distributed among the church are these homes of "suffering brethren."

But the amount sent to each family is small. The largest annual appropriation is $200. The average has never reached $200. When it is remembered that ministerial families, the majority of pastors, in the Presbyterian church, are paid salaries barely enough for the support of their families from year to year, it is not hard to imagine the straits, sometimes, to which they are reduced in their old age without money, and without the ability to earn it. Many others in the midst of poverty and sickness struggle to the same condition by the same means. Others, called from their labors in the midst of usefulness, leave widows and young children to be left to the tender mercies of the world.

Last year's total contributions to the cause reached $106,309.

Do not run any risks in experimenting with untried remedies if you have consumption, when Piso's Cure for Consumption is sure. It is always reliable. Do not forget to try it this season. 25 cents.

TAX ASSESSORS' EXCUSES.

Don't Complain Unless You Have Been Stinted Out of Town.

[From The New York World.]

Nothing exciting took place at Monday night's meeting of the Plainfield Common Council. The business transacted was almost entirely of a routine character. All of the members were present except Councilman Johnson. Bills to the amount of $1,000 were passed upon. Thomas H. Dunham was made a member of Alert Hose Company, No. 1. The bond of City Collector John Johnson, for $25,000, with Peter Lott, Jr., Peter Lott and Albert Love and John Rose as sureties, was accepted and ordered recorded, as were also the bonds of Constables Isaac Moffett, W. R. Mack, Jacob Ickley, Oscar H. Bockelhoff and Chas. A. Westerfield, in $1,000 each. The Finance Committee reported that warrants of 1890 for $2,324 were outstanding and could not be paid until the money in the funds on which they were drawn was exhausted. The sum of $2,000 was borrowed temporarily from Fire Department fund, to meet a note due Jan. 16.

An ordinance to change the grade of a portion of Plainfield avenue, and one to establish a street on West Fourth street from Plainfield avenue to Grant avenue, were referred to a joint meeting of the Street Committee and the Street Commissioner. Fifty hundred postal cards for use in calling committee meetings were ordered.

Councilman Hetfield moved that a committee of three be appointed to secure from the Legislature such amendment to the act permitting cities to contract with companies for the construction of public buildings as will make it applicable to a case like the installation of Plainfield's Common Council last year. The one bad feature was the clause requiring the taxpayers to petition. Therefore, if the property owners of a city must be obtained requesting sewerage-construction before the council of that city could vote to have it done, the petition method—the Councilman thought—was long, tedious, and entirely unnecessary, being productive of so much delay that new forms of petitioning would have to begin proceedings hampered by such a clause. It was an idea Judge Ulrich had had in his head, and had insisted on having carried out. Then, though the committee from the Plainfield Council had been opposed to it.

The committee had become disgusted at the delay in the passage of the measure, and had dropped the entire affair. Now it was desired to have the objectionable feature stricken out, so that no such long delay should be met with in the future in contract with water-works and a sewerage system in Plainfield this year. No one seemed opposed to Mr. Hetfield's motion, and it was carried without a dissenting voice. President Smith appointed Councilmen Moffett, Hetfield and Spangenberg as the committee.

Councilmen Roberts, Sherman and Ginna seemed inclined to doubt that the appointment of the city's official papers and the City Collector's bond should then be made in a strict parliamentary way, so Mr. Hetfield hastened to set their minds at rest. He presented two motions. The first was that the Plainfield Evening News and Central New Jersey Times be made the official papers of the city. Mr. Ackerman moved to amend by including The Evening News in the list. A vote on previous meeting, the votes of Councilmen Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts, Smith and Spangenberg rejected the Somerset street sheet. Councilmen Ginna and Sherman voted for it. See voted for it. The PRESS and Times were again made the official papers by unanimous vote, and the matter was settled. Hooray for all doubt.

Mr. Hetfield's second motion was to elect J. B. Coward City Clerk. The election followed in the regular way, and was unanimous, as at the previous meeting.

Mr. Moffett then asked, in a tone of sarcasm, if the Chair thought that everything was all right with the City Collector, for instance, that the President had been elected in strict legal form?

"Well,"—responded Mr. Smith—"the Chairman holds that he is." This sally caused a merry peal of laughter from all.

During the evening the advice of Corporation Counsel Marsh was twice asked for, and was rendered in his usual lucid and helpful style.

PUBLIC SCHOOL IMPROVEMENTS.

More Rooms at the Bryant—New Science and Sewing Classes—Appointments of a Faithful Officer—Committees for the Year.

At a special meeting of the Board of Education, Tuesday evening, a highly-colored story of the imaginable bombardment and demolition of New York, Washington and every other "important point on the coast" by a foreign power, an alarmist author has New York so completely under the thumb of the British that the Metropolis expects to see the Union Jack flying in a few days, was given a hearing by the Plainfield, N. J., to find a secluded and impregnable spot where they may publish their daily issues unmolested.

With a Vote of Thanks.

Unwritten Stories.

There are stories that never can be written. No man has ever seen or heard one of them. No editor has ever had one offered him for publication. The real incidents of them have been told. Children only, have devoured them. Every mother has one exclusive story for her little circle that nobody else knows. She has told it through round eyes and open mouth and tense ears. It is some wonderful fairy tale, or thrilling adventure of her own or her own. But it is forgotten as the child grows up and the mother old. Do you remember the one your mother told to you in the twilight long ago?—Echoes of the Week.

Annual Order of United Workmen Officers.

Central Lodge, No. 48, A. O. U. W., at their regular meeting, Tuesday last week, installed their newly elected officers as follows, under the supervision of P. G. M. W., J. W. Diefendorf, and P. M. W., Officer of the day:

Past Master Workman—Samuel C. Baker.
Master Workman—Wm. A. Westphal.
Foreman—Edward Hetfield.
Overseer—Thad. C. Smith.
Recorder—Louis B. Blackford.
Financier—Benjamin Cox.
Receiver—W. H. Brokaw.
Guide—Wm. Van Winkle.
Inside Watchman—David A. Ryno.
Outside Watchman—Geo. W. Cook.
Trustee—3 year—Jacob Ritter. 2 year—A. T. Oakley.

Lawyer Hall's Tin Cup Again.

[From The New York Telegram.]

There is no instrument too trifling for Satan's use when he wishes to make good men fall out and to disturb the harmony of the righteous. A tin cup has been produced discord into a happy club of Jersey commuters, just as an apple brought sorrow into Eden. The cup is the property of a member in the Fanwood Club's house. Neither intoxicants nor games of chance are allowed in this car. This discovery of the cup moved a member to say, the other day, a joke got into a local paper—"and there you are." Accusations and counteraccusations are heaped up and all is discord. Some say the cup is a joke, others say it is a serious matter. It is a warning against the pernicious practice of carrying tin cups.

John have you seen that woman lately? John is contemplating. What reason? Why, she's a contemplative woman. Ah, that's true. Just see her in contemplation, and read about it; the wives are joined by the best in the world. The Rev. Dr. Talmage, Mrs. Lucy Stone, Mrs. Livermore and others have adopted their use when they can get it.

SETTLING DISPUTED ELECTIONS.

Old Business Re-Enacted, and New Work Done, by the City Common Council.

Nothing exciting took place at Monday night's meeting of the Plainfield Common Council. The business transacted was almost entirely of a routine character. All of the members were present except Councilman Johnson. Bills to the amount of $1,000 were passed upon. Thomas H. Dunham was made a member of Alert Hose Company, No. 1. The bond of City Collector John Johnson, for $25,000, with Peter Lott, Jr., Peter Lott and Albert Love and John Rose as sureties, was accepted and ordered recorded, as were also the bonds of Constables Isaac Moffett, W. R. Mack, Jacob Ickley, Oscar H. Bockelhoff and Chas. A. Westerfield, in $1,000 each.

An ordinance to change the grade of a portion of Plainfield avenue, and one to establish a street on West Fourth street from Plainfield avenue to Grant avenue, were referred to a joint meeting of the Street Committee and the Street Commissioner. Fifty hundred postal cards for use in calling committee meetings were ordered.

Councilman Hetfield moved that a committee of three be appointed to secure from the Legislature such amendment to the act permitting cities to contract with companies for the construction of public buildings as will make it applicable to a case like the installation of Plainfield's Common Council last year. The one bad feature was the clause requiring the taxpayers to petition. Therefore, if the property owners of a city must be obtained requesting sewerage-construction before the council of that city could vote to have it done, the petition method—the Councilman thought—was long, tedious, and entirely unnecessary, being productive of so much delay that new forms of petitioning would have to begin proceedings hampered by such a clause. It was an idea Judge Ulrich had had in his head, and had insisted on having carried out. Then, though the committee from the Plainfield Council had been opposed to it.

The committee had become disgusted at the delay in the passage of the measure, and had dropped the entire affair. Now it was desired to have the objectionable feature stricken out, so that no such long delay should be met with in the future in contract with water-works and a sewerage system in Plainfield this year. No one seemed opposed to Mr. Hetfield's motion

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY.

J. A. DEMAREST, City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—Easter this year comes on March 29.

—One of Plainfield's fire dealers has reduced his retail price from 30 to 25 cents a hundred pounds.

—It is estimated that Union county will be $20,000 richer when the floods of the last few days have all been paid.

—Through Reuelah Hand, auctioneer, the brick house at 106 East Front street, was sold on Friday to Benj. H. Force for $2,564.

—The Crescent League only rents the Olympia alleys during three nights of the week. At all other times the alleys are open to the public.

—A public installation of officers of Wesompka Lodge, 3401, Knights of Honor, will take place in the lodge rooms on Thursday evening.

—There will be a big ball in The Crescent, Thursday evening, Feb. 5, by the Exempt Firemen's Association for the enlargement of its Benefit Fund.

—The Firemen's Herald copies from The Press the annual report of Chief Engineer T. O. Donne as the commendable showing of a model fire department.

—Two well-known machinists intend to settle their differences in a prize fight on Friday noon. A ring was formed over the brook, and a lively set-to resulted.

—The Treasurer of Muhlenberg Hospital acknowledges the receipt of the St. Mary's church, in addition to other amounts already stated in these columns.

—The Prudential Insurance Company, of Newark, paid to John R. Clark Saturday $500 in full for his policy on the life of his son, John S. King is the Plainfield agent of the company.

—A red lamp should be substituted for the white one which now stands at the point nearest each fire-alarm box. Then anyone at night would be guided at once to the right spot to send an alarm.

—A silver tea was given on Saturday at the home of George Feller, Pearl street. A carpet and a door casing were burned, Mrs. Storr had her hand severely burned while assisting in putting out the flames.

—A Hillputian baby has been born to Mrs. Nathan Stamets, of Fattenburg. On New Year's Day it was one week old, and it then weighed two pounds and three quarters. From head to heel its inches number twelve.

—When the snow and ice stay long, it is an indication of rich and abundant fruitage in the following seasons. This is the old adage, and will probably hold good for the next crop this year, as well as for all the others.

—The big fair the Crescent League is getting up to be held in its new clubhouse about Feb. 1, will surpass everything of the kind ever held in the entertainment every night, and a number of new ideas never before seen in this city.

—The City Court was treated to the novelty of a prisoner in the dock. His name was Robert Mariner, and he had been roaming bare-headed about the streets, and committing other acts of indiscretion, due to intoxication. He was fined $5.

—The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company will not, as has been announced be able to open the cut-off to Bound Brook Junction field to Newark in January. It will be late in February, or perhaps early in March, before the road will be in readiness for passenger trains.

—Secretary Dye, of the State Board of Agriculture, says that the annual cost for the repair and improvement of roads, exclusive of new roads, bridges, ripsaw-ing, etc., is $940,000 every year in New Jersey. If this sum were spent each year in building telford roads the State would soon have the best highways in the country.

—A joke-loving conductor on a Somerville way-train set onlobed the passengers to his amusing car one evening recently by informing them of a terrible "wash-out" at Dunellen. All rushed to the side of the car indicated and craned their necks to see it, only to find that the Dunellen station had a good sized wash out on the line, and the conductor hasn't since been forgiven.

—The Park House, Plainfield, which, as heretofore reported in these columns, is being remodeled preparatory to being reopened next month by Messrs. Miller & Pudney, will in future be known as the Albion. The Albion, under such management as that of the new lessees, cannot fail to fill a want in Plainfield which can only be described as "long felt."—The Hotel Mail

—The borough government movement in Bound Brook is receiving public favor and will probably go into effect. More than the required number of property-holders have signed the application, and a printed notice is in circulation, saying that the matter will be presented to the Court of Common Pleas, at Somerville, Tuesday, Jan. 20, at 10:30 a. m. If the application be granted the Court will also fix a day for the special election to be held.

—About six months ago Master Stanley Brampton had the misfortune to hurt his ankle, since which time he has been obliged to go about on crutches. Dr. Field, of Plainfield, has examined the injured member, and last week, in consultation with Drs. Hancock and Compton, it was decided to place the ankle in a plaster paris cast, there to remain for a period of three weeks or more, and if that does not bring about the desired results an operation will be necessary.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

—The churches of Westfield may well congratulate themselves on securing the services of Rev. B. Fay Mills, who began a brief, but fruitful series of meetings in March. Mr. Mills is just the man for such a community as this, wise in all his methods, cultured, and himself a total consecration, understanding the heartz of practical business men, and in his preaching appealing to the conscience and reason rather than to the feelings. He was also used to do a work here such as has been accomplished in Plainfield, New Brunswick, Jersey City, Montclair, Newark, and at each wherever he has gone.—Westfield Standard.

Some Ages.

Governor Leon Abbett will be 55 next October.

Attorney-General Stockton, father of John P., Jr., of Seventh street, was born in Princeton, and has lived there all his life, which is 84 years.

Chapman, State School Superintendent, was born on All Fools' Day, and has seen 49 of them, and has acquired much wisdom in the interval.

Bad News in the Valley.

The Washington bound dogs belonging, one to Jas. Hall and the other to Jas. Bell, showed unmistakable signs of rabies, Tuesday, at Washingtonville. Mr. Clark's dog was the worst, though both were finally killed. It snapped at every "stationary object," and in their paroxysms spattering the length of their chains at any one who came in sight. Both were subsequently shot. Mr. Clark's dog never even bites by a strange dog a short time ago that acted strangely. Other dogs in the neighborhood are being watched with the hope that it is known if they, too, are bitten.

Personalia.

Mrs. Henry T. Smith, of Broadway, is very ill with bronchitis and pneumonia.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills will begin a series of evangelistic meetings in Westfield in March, similar to those held recently in Plainfield.

Wednesday of last week by Rev. Octavius Brown, Norman F. Dunn and Miss Emma C. Duncan both of this city, were married.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills expects to begin a series of evangelistic meetings in Rockford, Ill., June 21 to 28. His visit to Westfield will be in March.

Miss Florence Hand and Clinton V. Lance of this city, were married at the residence of the bride's parents, on Friday, by the Rev. J. R. Peete, D. D.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Bray, of West Third street, took part in the installation ceremonies of the Judson Kilpatrick Post, G. A. R., at Elizabeth, Thursday night.

E. P. Thorn and Ellis A. Campbell started Wednesday for a two weeks' visit with Mr. Campbell's son Harry, who has a fine orange grove at Concord City, Florida.

The Albion will open on Saturday, Feb. 21. Frank Bowman, who during last season of 1890 managed the Albion in the fitness and popularity, will represent the proprietors in the office.

The Knights of Pythias of this district had a meeting at Elizabeth, Thursday evening, which was attended by 200 men including Vice Grand Chancellor Urich and Brothers Polhemus, Pingrey, Carney and others of this city.

The Rev. T. R. Talbot, the present pastor, and the Rev. Dr. J. C. Bliss, a former pastor, of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, conducted funeral services over the remains of the late John Simpson, Saturday. The house was filled with mourners.

The Rev Dr. Lewis will deliver a lecture on "Fifty Years of Interesting Facts in Social Purity," at the regular meeting to be held at Reform Hall, Thursday evening, 15th inst. The Rev. Cornelius Bedford is also invited and it is hoped he will be present. Good music will be rendered. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

W. T. Smith, the celebrated rug and carpet manufacturer of Philadelphia, has a host of friends in Plainfield, some of whom entertained him in a pooper manner, on the occasion of a flying visit to this city last evening. Mr. Smith's visit was well pleased with his reception as to miss a pressing engagement elsewhere.

Mrs. Hockridge, a bright new chip from the old block, who does such good service for Arnold, Constable & Co., is on the road as assistant to Lorenzo Dugean, of T. E. Wood & Co. With such a coach as this, young Hockridge should graduate an expert traveler in no time. Hockridge, Sr., is one of Plainfield's most popular citizens.

Uncle Peter Wooden of North Plainfield, who will be 91 years old on the 24th of next May, has been reported dead for the second time. He was told on last Friday morning by a friend who said, "Why Uncle Peter, I thought you were dead." The old gentleman replied with fervor, "Well, that is so? Why I aint heard anything about it."

Mary Downs, wife of Charles S. A. Davis, died at her home, 176 Broadway, Jan. 7, in the eighty-first year of her age. Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Among the children of Mrs. Davis, besides two daughters who live with their father, is a son, Capt. Chas. E. L. B. Davis, a graduate of West Point, and an officer of the United States Army.

H. E. Searing, J. C. Martin, B. W. Schlereth, and E. M. Southard, of this city, comprising the Eclipse Quartette, will sing at Bethlehem Hall, Somerville, for the benefit of Lincoln Division, No. 27, Sons of Temperance, at Library Hall, Elizabeth, Thursday evening, January 15. One of the other features will be a recital by James A. Oakley, formerly a Plainfielder.

In spite of all rumors to the contrary, Miss Dot Parkhurst will positively appear with the Gilbert Dramatic Company in "Mixed Pickles," at Music Hall, Jan. 20, under the auspices of Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum. She was only with Monroe & Rice's company at the Brooklyn Academy, while their leading lady was sick. Miss Parkhurst, although an amateur, was sought out because of her ability to fill the place.

A Memorial to John Simpson.

At a regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the First Mutual Bank of this city, Tuesday, the following memorial was adopted.

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Almighty to remove from us by death, John Simpson, for many years one of the Directors of this Bank, therefore

Resolved, That we have learned of the death of our fellow-director with unfeigned sorrow, and do hereby tender to the afflicted family of the deceased our sincere and heartfelt sympathy in this their great bereavement.

Resolved, That in the death of John Simpson we realize that in bank has lost one of its most active and faithful directors, and this city one of its sterling and reliable citizens, and one whose place in the various walks of life it will be most difficult to fill.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered at length on the minutes of our meeting, and that the family of the deceased and also published in the local papers.

M. McCORD BETZ,
WM. M. STILLMAN,
Committee.

Mr. Wilder Next Sunday.

Robert P. Wilder, one of the originators of the Student Volunteer Missionary Movement, will speak at the young men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. rooms next Sunday at 4:15 p. m. Mr. Wilder, who is the son of a missionary, has spent two years in visiting the colleges of the country in the interests of foreign missions, and has been a favorite speaker for the past three years at the College Students' Conference for Bible Study at Mr. Moody's Home at Northfield. The men of the city are most earnestly invited to hear this eloquent young speaker.

Under a Wrong Impression, as Was Also Mayor Main.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In looking over the report of the Board of Commissioners of Public Charities of $250 To Be Paid Out Monthly.

saying done on streets. I have always been under the impression, and I think others have been under the same, that Mr. Meeker was appointed the salary of the Commissioners was immediately raised; and that some of the Council objected to the raise, and cut it down to $600 per year, $1,500, and Mr. Meeker's backers, who urged his appointment, said that he would do all the surveying for the city free of cost. I think that is the impression that the people got at the time. THE PRESS so stated and it generally got the correct idea of things. If I am wrong will THE PRESS please correct me?

TAXPAYER.

If you are wrong, friend, and have come to the right shop for correction. The impression you received was not from anything THE PRESS said, because it knew better. It knew that Mr. Meeker did not have the time to do the city surveying, so he employed Mr. Hosmer to do it, and neglected his duties on the streets, and THE PRESS knew Mr. Meeker would never do that.

Mr. Meeker never said that if the salary was raised he would do the city surveying free of cost; and THE PRESS does not believe he ever made any such statement, whatever you may say—said so.

However, you are not alone, Mr. Taxpayer, in your "impression." Many people have the same idea. In fact it is generally supposed that Mr. Meeker is to do the surveying free of charge.

A SUNDAY MORNING BRAWL.

Woman Scratch Man and Pull Hair Over the Possession of Some Furniture—Second Row in Court.

Before Justice Hart, Jr., at 10 the Man Had Taken Leave of His Senses.

Mrs. McCready, who lives on East Front street, near Washington, complained to Police Captain Grant, Saturday night, that her husband had deserted her and their children and was unlawfully withholding her support. She also accused him, with her sons, of frequenting a house of questionable repute, and asked that the police be guarded. Mr. Grant advised that the woman first make a formal complaint, accompanied by affidavits, and then get arrested for non-support, as he then could secure them thoroughly into the merits of the case. Instead of adopting this course, however, Mrs. McCready made a raid on the house in question, after midnight of Saturday, and made things lively and interesting for the tenants.

The women in whose apartments Mrs. McCready had accused her husband of taking shelter were Mrs. Prentice, who had a two-armed husband, and Mrs. Wilson, who had also a husband. Mrs. Mrs. McCready first saw Mrs. Prentice, and pulled her hair and scratched her face before her heart's content. Mrs. Wilson rushed for reserves, and in the row, and in rushing about made a misstep on the landing and fell headlong down the steep flight of stairs. The scrimmage then Wilson and Mrs. Horace VanNoss and Mrs. Estelle M. Jackson out of their rooms in the house, and the accident put an end to hostilities for the time being. Mrs. Wilson, with her sober husband home, while Policeman Cooney and Kiely, who heard the racket and rushed in, sent for a physician. Dr. Hubbard came and found that Mrs. Wilson had sprained an ankle very seriously. Several other men who were in the house interfered, and there was a free fight among the women began, and escaped the arrest they might otherwise have had to undergo.

The house is one of the tenements back of French's Mill on Somerset street, near Front. The landlord was warned by Captain Grant three weeks ago that the place was a disorderly one, and that the disreputable people who were in the habit of visiting it, and advised that the tenants be put out and a respectable class be substituted.

ITS OFFICERS AND PATRONS.

Plainfield's Very Best Interested in Private Thankfeasts for the Benefit of the City's Charities.

As already first stated exclusively in THE PRESS, a dramatic club called the "Pyramus and Thisbe" has been formed among the leading young upper circles who will soon make their debut in the first of a series of private theatrical entertainments for the benefit of the city's three general charities. The officers of the club are:

PRESIDENT—C. J. Fisk.
VICE PRESIDENT—Mrs. G. Wharton Edwards.
TREASURER—J. Parker Mason.
SECRETARY—Miss Katheryn Yates.
STAGE MANAGER—George Wharton Edwards.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE—Mrs. C. E. Brooks, Mrs. Pliny Fisk, Mrs. V. B. Hart, Mrs. Perla Tracy, Rowland Cox, R. C. Perkins.

The first performance will be given at The Casino on Thursday evening of next week, and will consist of an original play and a new American farce. Cards of admission can be obtained only of the following patrons:

Mrs. Alexander Gilbert	Mrs. M. E Edgerton
" Frank Tracy	" M W Tyler
" Dexter Tiffany	" O T Wood
" W E Steward	" W B Wadsworth
" C F Hart	" J K Myers
" Rowland Cox	" C W McCutchen
" John VanBenschoten	" Morgan Taylor
" Wm Sutphen	" Howard Fleming
" W E Lowe	" D W Prentice
" Wm Cox	" G H Goddard
" E S Mathias	" Saml Huntington
" Henry Talmadge	" James Clark
" F W Sterling	" J Edgar Ostlere
" Rush Sloane	" R B Cox
" E L Watt	" C de Mecina
" Charles Hyde	" VanNoss Jackson
" C F Mallett	" C J Fisk

A Talk That All Ought to Hear.

The Rev. Dr. J. H. Lewis will give a talk at Reform Hall Thursday evening on the subject—"The relation of intemperance to social purity."

After the Scalps of the Baysnake Band.

The Crescent League team of ten men will visit Elizabeth on Saturday to bowl Newark Bay Boat Club, or Bayonne, this Thursday evening. The latter are a strong team, having lost but three games in 51 season, and in both first team defeated them only by 20 pins.

He'll Have Somebody Revive His Absent Remembrth.

In copying the Grand Jury presentment published in THE PRESS of Saturday, the following item in italics was omitted: "And they therefore deem it their duty to present the said Thomas W. Morrison, editor and publisher as aforesaid, for the scurrilous articles aforesaid, and demand that henceforth the said Morrison refrain from attacking the integrity," etc.

A "Pound Party" at Holy Cross.

A "pound party" was given in Holy Cross Sunday school building, Monday night, and was attended by a large number of persons. The many pound packages were auctioned by Harry Bartling and some of them brought very high prices, considering the articles sold. The result of the sale were most gratifying, and the proceeds are to be expended in the purchase of additional seats to accommodate the rapidly growing Sunday school.

Ice Men's Labor Thrown Away.

The ice dealers of the neighborhood lost hundreds of dollars through Monday's rainstorm, besides being forced to wait for another opportunity of gathering an ice crop. The ponds had been frozen for two weeks or more, and the ice was from twelve to fifteen inches thick, and beautifully clear. Many of the harvesters last week planted the surface and marked out the lots for cutting, which was expected would begin Monday. The labor which was thrown away because of the rain of the crop by Sunday's storm, was expensive.

Washington Park to Have Its Club.

William J. Koone, William L. Saunders and Foster Milliken, a committee on organization, have announced a meeting of the subscribers to the bonds of the proposed Club in Washington Park, to be held Tuesday next in the Sunday school room of Holy Cross church, at 8 P. M.

The success of the project is already assured, yet additional subscriptions are being received every day. Those subscribing up to the date mentioned above, will take part in the Organization. It will not be a "County Country Club," they say.

Installation of Royal Arcanum Officers.

At a regular meeting of Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, held Monday night in the rooms, the following officers were installed:

Regent—Louis M. Stover; Vice Regent—Jas. Wm. Eichmeier; Orator—C. W. Kellogg; Secretary—H. A. Thorne (re-elected); Collector—H. W. Stover; Treasurer—Thos. Cone; Chaplain—Wm. H. Rennels; Guide—John De Bay; Warden—A. Benton Bentley—A. W. Bandi; Organist—Robt. H. Lowe; Trustees—A. Benton, R. M. Stover and Thos. Cone; Past Regent—Chas. Hyde. In addition to Grand Lodge—C. W. Kellogg; Alternate—Wm. F. Leonard.

ICE FIELDS BROKEN UP.

A Heavy Rainstorm Floods the Ponds and Breaks Up the Skating.

A deluge of rain fell throughout Monday, and Sunday night. The most serious freshets were threatened. The ice in many of the ponds and streams was broken up, and each of the ponds and streams was flooded down the banks of the mountain notches were caught in either, on reaching the lowlands, and spread themselves into formidable lakes that set some of the villagers in the valleys of the Watchung Mountains were seriously flooded. Along the course of Plainfield's brooks and streams there was entirely no serious damage done.

George Bennett, a New York business man, occupying a country seat almost Gardner's Basin, three miles from here, fell into the foaming torrent while trying to break an ice-dam which was receding its waters. He was carried swiftly along a distance of several hundred feet. An overhanging tree branch caught and held him till help came. He was nearly drowned, and was severely hurt by heavy blows from floating cakes of ice.

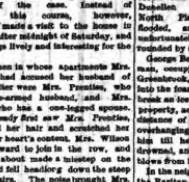
In the neighborhood of Round Brook the Raritan River overflowed its banks, and the meadows and some of the lowlying roads were submerged. It was feared that the ice would cause a jam in one of the sharp bends of the river, and pass through the long bridge there, but all the afternoon keeping the cakes in motion. They remained on duty until after dark, and guarded against the threatened danger, but the storm abated, the swollen waters ceased rising, and the ice began to pass safely out. The lower floors of the houses in the flooded district were occupied by the poor people of Round Brook and Bloomington, were in some cases several feet under water, and considerable furniture was damaged by the rain. Many of the poor people are now without homes, while Policeman Cooney and Kiely, who heard the racket and rushed in, sent for a physician. Dr. Hubbard came and found that Mrs. Wilson had sprained an ankle very seriously. Several other men who were in the house interfered, and there was a free fight among the women began, and escaped the arrest they might otherwise have had to undergo.

The house is one of the tenements back of French's Mill on Somerset street, near Front. The landlord was warned by Captain Grant three weeks ago that the place was a disorderly one, and that the disreputable people who were in the habit of visiting it, and advised that the tenants be put out and a respectable class be substituted.

DELIGHTS UNKNOWN TO THE CITY.

A Society Organized in Dutchtown Known as Applied Equality in Plainfield.

The following interesting article from the pen of John Habberton, well-known to the world in general as the author of "Helen's Babies," "Brown's Bayou," and other delightful stories, and also as newspaper world as a tireless and successful worker, has so much in it that applies especially to Plainfield that it would be a shame to keep it unpublished. We had that charming city of homes in mind when we committed it to paper. Additional color is lent to this idea by the fact that Mr. Habberton has recently been entertained by Plainfielders, and was only recently, just previous to the writing of this article, a guest at one of the city's finest residences.



A FEATURE OF THE COUNTRY CHURCH SOCIABLE.

During the past twenty years—Mr. Habberton goes on to say—my home has been "in the country," as the suburbs of New York are called in town, and the fact that my Winters as well as Summers were spent there has greatly surprised some city acquaintances. Every one understands why people want to hurry from town when the heat, dust and smells of Summer begin, but that any one should prefer to live in the suburbs when the city with all of its attractions is so near, passes the comprehension of many persons otherwise intelligent. Hundreds of times I have had to answer such questions as "Isn't it dreadfully muddy? Don't you have trouble in getting about? How do you exist without society? You can't expect to retain servants in Winter, I suppose? Of course you don't have any amusements, so how do you spend your evenings and other leisure time?"

From such questions it would appear that many people have the suburbs only through railway-car windows, or through having themselves originally come to the city from farms, or from country villages which differ from the long-farming district only in having more houses and most to the acre.

It may quiet the wonderings in such people to be told that in many of the hundreds of villages within an hour, by rail, of New York or any other large city, the difference between city and country are almost all in favor of the country. Places with many paved roads and flagged sidewalks, streets lighted by gas or electricity, sufficient water-supply, and drainage facilities, fire and police service, good churches, schools and shops, are not hard to find. These places have been developed by the better portion of the city's overflow. The head of a family of residents is almost sure to be in business in the city; he wants all city conveniences in his home; he votes for them and votes the taxes which are to pay for them.

School principals are as well paid in the suburbs as many in the city, and the average pay of ministers is very good. The interest and diversion are largely those of the city; plays and operas cannot be had for the asking, perhaps, but all city places of amusement are within easy reach by rail, and are visited probably quite as often by people from the suburbs as by city residents. Indeed, all the railroads keep the theatre-goer in mind while making up time tables.

There are some special features of life in the suburbs which make the Winter season more pleasant than it can be in the city. One of these is plenty of light in the houses. The city residence, unless on a corner, must obtain all its light from front and rear; the suburban house is lighted by windows upon all sides, and the difference is quickly and gratefully recognized by the city visitors who bathe life or are. The suburbanite is better ventilated, too, than the city residence; sometimes faulty construction makes the ventilation altogether too free for comfort, but there never is any necessity for breathing the "dead air" which is unavoidable in most city houses in Winter.

A SUBURBAN LABOR OF LOVE.

The difference between city and country in Winter in point of health is marked. Many suburban towns contain men and women who a few years ago were ill from fever and ague, but who now are enjoying good health; the superiority of country air is quickly noticed by all city people who breathe it, and the difference strengthens immediately its own; a quarter of a million of residence chimneys, assisted by thousands of factory chimneys and locomotive and steamboats, all in an area of twenty-five square miles, discharge into the air an immense quantity of carbonic acid gas and other matters highly conducive to health, and the sewers add emanations grievous to the lungs. Rivers form an immense catch-basin for these gases, and the Hudson is no exception to the current of the Hudson, for example, has scarcely any force; and of the ebb of a tide is arrested and its direction changed before it can empty into the bay.

As for society, the majority of people in suburban towns are intelligent and in comfortable circumstances; they are quite as sociable as their city cousins, and enjoy the same recreations. Parties, receptions, dinners, dances and card-parties are frequently enjoyed in country houses, and are enjoyed by those who like them, in towns of 5,000 inhabitants, and even smaller towns in the suburbs than in the city. Young people who attempt to accept all invitations soon become quite as exhausted during a Winter in some suburban town which can be reached by a dozen city trains as the denizens named, the suburbs offer in Winter some outdoor sports which cannot be enjoyed by city people except at great expense of time and money. Skating and sleighing are constantly developing in this city.

A Political Generator of Gas.

In league with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy starts in the head, or the stomach bronchial tubes, or lungs diseases, and frees them of all that's foul.

WORK OF THE WOMEN'S UNION.

A Wide-Awake Circle for Young Girls Organized—Pitiful Cases of Misery—A Little Child's Clothing Pawned for Rent—A County Committee and Other Matters.

At the regular business meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, held in their rooms, the usual reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were given, after which followed very interesting accounts of the different branches of work, selections from each department, as follows:

Literature—478 pages of Gospel Temperance reading distributed; 13 numbers of The Union Signal subscriptions for 1891. Others who wish to take this paper of Club rates, should report without delay to the Superintendent, Mrs. Yates.

Kitchen Garden—Classes filling up, and a new department organized recently, to be called The Wide-Awake Circle, consisting of young girls over twelve years who are to meet weekly; ladies of the Union have volunteered as hour's instruction in various branches of practical art work, such as darning, mending, and dressmaking. Meetings will be open free of charge for lessons, and every young girl in Plainfield will be welcome. During the hour's instruction to have recitations or music, and, in fact, to make the afternoon one of a very helpful character. On the day of organization Mrs. Tomlinson, the President of the W. C. T. U., will lecture on Europe and showed pictures of people and Places. A Secretary, Edith Vail, one of the Circle's number, was chosen for three months. The meeting will be held every Tuesday at four o'clock in the W. C. T. U. rooms. Mrs. Wm. Griffin, the artist, has charge of the next week's lesson, and all are invited to bring their work,

HUMAN SOAP GOURDS.

Quaint Characters Found in the Wilderness of Florida.

IT WAS a tall, lank individual, with homespun shirt, open at the throat, and pantaloons, stuffed in his boots, and a broad-brim slouch hat, a gun across his shoulder and a specimen of the queerest complexion of any mortal I ever saw. He was the color of a tree-box, with wrinkles and his skin was as wrinkled and varnished-looking as a piece of russet leather that had lain in the rain for many weeks.

I met him down in the flatwoods of Florida, on the road between Tallahassee and Crawfordville. I afterwards saw dozens of his cast, more or less colored, but that fellow's image remains with me still. Seeing how intently I was regarding his queer character, my traveling companion asked:

"Well, what do you think of him?"

"What is he?" I asked.

"Why, my friend, that is nothing more nor less than an animated soap gourd."

"A what?"

"You don't mean to say that he is a soap eater?"

"No, exactly that, but he eats the ingredients and the soap is made in his stomach."

"You don't say. Explain!"

"Well, you see, this section is underlaid by a wonderful strata of lime rock. As a matter of course the soil is thoroughly impregnated with potter lime, and it is the only drinking water the people have about here. It is different from the pure water among the clay hills of our Tallahassee."

"What kind of soap is it?"

"Hold on! I haven't make the connection yet. These people eat very fat hog meat, their food is made up of fats, by using great quantities of carbonate of soda, and when they get all this mess in their stomachs the work of soap-making begins. Lime water, alkali of the soda, grease of the hog meat, heat of the stomach. See?"

"WHERE ARE THE OLD FOLKS?"

"Ugh! I don't wonder at their having such yellow complexions like skins."

On our way back we stopped at Tom's house for dinner, so that I might see that operation of soap-making carried on.

As we rode up to the door of the log cabin a pack of some dozen or more curs, of every conceivable color and size, came rushing snarling and snapping at our horses' heels. A tow-headed girl of about four summers peeped out from around the corner of the hut and yelled:

"What you want?"

"Call off your dogs, Sallie. We are going to stay to dinner," said my companion.

"Well, why don't yer light? Yer know them purns won't bite. Yer've bin here before, Dick. Whoa! thet chap!"

"He's all right, Sallie; he wants your dad to tell him about the hauling in these parts."

We hitched our horses to pine saplings and entered the cabin, which was when a swarm of half-naked, half-clothed, frowsy-headed urchins surrounded us. Miss Sallie had come from the corner and was waiting to receive us, cordially inviting us to enter.

"Where are the old folks?" asked my friend.

"Mam, she's a-cookin' out 'mong the vines, and dad, he's a-huntin'. They'll be yere arter while. Sit down."

Sallie then went to the hatchet door, and, placing a log closer to her lips, blew several loud blasts.

"That'll fetch 'em," she said, as she came back into the room.

In a few minutes the old lady, with her two-year-old infant on her hip, and attired around her waist with a string, came in, her rough hands full of sand and a pine knot in her other arm.

"Howdy, Dick, and you too, stranger?"

The dinner I tied hard to eat, but with shrimps of human soap factories fitted before my agonized mental eyes and I could not swallow to save me. However, the others all ate with seeming relish.

The spread consisted of great gobs o' fat pork, boiled sweet potatoes, boiled long-leaf collards, syrup, black coffee without sugar and corn bread.

As we rode through the woods to Tallahassee my friend told me that little Sallie and her mother did all the work about the place, raising the crops, they could, and that Tom never did any thing but hunt and drink corn-juice whisky.—N. Y. World.

WAYS OF WILD BEASTS.

How an Arab Killed a Rhinoceros with a Sword.

The Full Mall Gazette gives the account of Sir Samuel Baker's latest wild beast stories as follows: Having once made a good shot at a rhinoceros it fell to the ground and died. We now observed a fine young animal which was standing on the opposite side of the carcass, and I suggested to my famous Hamran hunters that we should call upon the example and attempt to secure it alive, with our good supply of ropes. The camels were brought and the ropes arranged. Several hunters agreed, and I suggested that we should attempt to mob the young one and then secure its legs. But the Arab chief declared that they rightly declared that the ground was unfavorable, owing to the number of large rocks which would prevent him from getting out of harm's way should the rhinoceros charge. All the natives agreed that Taher Noor, my head Arab, was to lead me his sword, and that I was to get on his back as they would follow with the ropes and nooses to endeavor to trip up the calf should it charge me. Taher Bey was delighted.

This was a beautiful blade that had belonged to his family, and had been handed from father to son for several generations; the cross hilt and stirrup of the handle were of silver, also the knob. Although strength which the tongue was riveted. He cautioned me to beware of stretching a hand incautiously parted with regret from his familiar weapon.

"The calf was about three and one-half feet high, and was standing by the body of its mother, evidently ignorant of her death. I was delighted at the prospect there was not much time for reflection, for the young lerrar gave an angry shake of his ugly head, and charged the usual three sharp whiffs and charged at me as fast as it could gallop.

I jumped nimbly to one side, and by a large rock, and it passed within three feet of me, immediately halted, turned and continued, so far as the spot where the Arabs were in waiting with the ropes. It now turned around, and, as I expected, it repeated its charge in reverse, as here as it could go. I again jumped back, but as I did so I slipped and fell heavily, and down and out with Taher Noor's favorite sword. The young rhinoceros fell mortally wounded, and the two Arabs ran to the spot. Taher Noor took the sword carefully from my hand, and, polishing it up very lengthy, he sheathed it, and, having let them wiped the blade upon the body of the rhinoceros, and to prove the perfection of the weapon, he cut off the tail of his arm; then exclaimed, with a deep sigh of pleasure and astonishment, "Bismillah!" and resumed his seat on the ground.

INTELLIGENT ANIMALS.

Instances of Reasoning Power in Elephants.

The Careful Manner in Which They Guard Children in Their Native Country—A Peculiar Fruit of the Water.

"Every one knows that the elephant can be trained to do all kinds of work," said Thomas W. Knox in his new book on "Home Life and Stories of Other Animals." "While I have no hesitation about relating instances of reasoning power displayed by the wild or carnivorous which indicate no actual reasoning power in the animal.

"I was in one of the settlements to water the cattle from large wooden buckets filled with water pulled from a well. The plan was to have the men drink the water of the reservoir, which is stagnant and unwholesome. Only the men attending the buffalo got early morning by one of the elephants, the work taking nearly an hour. Accustomed to the task, he does not wish to be confused, and every morning an hour before sunrise, he is at his labor with the precision of a living clockwork.

"I was staying one of Tricklinspoly, at the house of a friend of mine, a merchant, who owned a grand villa a few leagues outside the city. The sun was rising, and my servant had just awakened me for my bath. Peering through the yard I saw a large white elephant with gilt pins and pegs. Stood his eyes aglitz, and was apparently trying to turn his thoughts from his overnome condition. He agitated my servant a joyful shaping of his ears, for during the two days since my arrival I had given him many delicacies, and he did not doubt from his work, which had to be finished.

"I was straining him with my hand in passing, when I noticed that two of the two planks which supported the bucket at their side had slipped out. It thus happened that the bucket being upheld on one side only, spilled its contents, without anything of being filled.

"The elephant did not think that his work was ended because one side of the bucket was filled; nor did he attempt the impossible feat of trying to fill the other until both sides were even. In a few minutes the water commenced to run from the lower side of the bucket, and the animal began to show signs of uneasiness; nevertheless, he continued his work. Soon, however, he dropped the handle, and drew nearer to observe the cause of the trouble. He remarked the two pieces of wood lying time coming back to examine the bucket. I awaited the end of this strange scene with unflagging interest. All at once a waving of the ears seemed to indicate that an idea had occurred to him.

"He came over to the spot where he had fallen away, and for a moment I thought that he intended to put it back in its place under the lower side of the bucket. But he was not troubled about the lower side, which was already filled with water; it was the other side which annoyed him. Lifting the bucket carefully, he supported it for a moment with one of his great feet, while with his trunk he pulled out the second plank and placed the basket on solid earth, thus making it even on all sides. This done, the labor of filling it was easy.

"The elephant is much attached to the women and children in the villages, and I would be dangerous for a stranger to make even an unfriendly gesture in the presence of his animal.

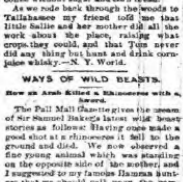
"It is remarkable to see him guard his master's children in their promenades; he watches every thing; sees a serpent, hurl pieces of bamboo, in fact, any danger which may be imagined is overcome by his presence. His feet is surrounded by each of the children, and he attends them, gathering flowers, fruit from the trees and sugar canes; at a motion from one of his mahouts, with a free branch if one desires to make a present to a friend. At the bidding of which he does not understand, if he sees a jackal or hyena in the distant thicket, he immediately pursues him, seizes him in his trunk, commences to roar with rage, and any thing, lion, tiger or man, which threatens harm to his charges, is in danger of being dashed to the ground.

"In the lowlands of the Ganges, a swampy country covered with jungles and rice fields, the royal Bengal tiger is found of great size and ferocity. The combats between this terrible beast and the elephant, guarding the cattle, servants or children of his master, are of frequent occurrence. The royal Bengal tiger is so fleecy that he never refuses to fight his adversary, although the end of the combat is generally that his brain crushed to death under the foot of his terrible enemy. In spite of the fact that the elephant is fighting for his friends with the tiger, bear or rhinoceros, he never makes the smallest offensive animals. No matter what power a keeper may have over him, it is impossible to make him crush an insect.

"There is a little insect which children in the France hall the Devil Dieu. The same insect is found in India, but growing to a size as large as in France. I have often seen one of these little creatures placed on a level surface, in the troughs of a yard, for instance. I have seen the elephant ordered to crush the insect, but never, for master ordinary, would he lift his foot above it a few, he will pick it up and relieve the opportunity to do harm. If, on the contrary, he is commanded to bring it to him, he will pick it up gently with his trunk and place it in your hands without bruising its wings.

THE ELEPHANT.

A Dangerous Man to Have Around When Your Wife Is Away.



THE ELEPHANT.

A well-known woman in this city who wishes she had attended to her own affairs and neither interested nor offended. The wife of a popular railroad man, who occupies rooms and boarded in her house were left in charge of a servant, and left him alone. Being of a social disposition he invited a number of his friends—two or three ruffians—to call and pass the evening with him, and proceeded to have an evening of it, in a manly hilarious way.

About the small hours the musician entertained them with some amusing and very original songs, and the remainders. In the brought forth peals of laughter and was loudly applauded.

Now it happened that the lady of the house received her boarder with a brow that was not wreathed in smiles, and an apologize for the noisy demonstrations of the previous evening, but was frowned upon by her husband, who left the lady indignant and met him with an icy frost, that he knew the full measure of his offending.

"I didn't suppose—I couldn't have believed it," she said, incoherently, "that you would be so cruel."

"Rats, my dear! What do you mean? Why these remarks?"

"The cad" was about three and one-half feet high, and was standing by the body of its mother, evidently ignorant of her death. I was delighted at the prospect there was not much time for reflection, for the young lerrar gave an angry shake of his ugly head, charged the usual three sharp whiffs and charged at me as fast as it could gallop.

I jumped nimbly to one side, and by a large rock, and it passed within three feet of me, immediately halted, turned and continued, so far as the spot where the Arabs were in waiting with the ropes. It now turned around, and, as I expected, it repeated its charge in reverse, as here as it could go. I again jumped back, but as I did so I slipped and fell heavily, and down and out with Taher Noor's favorite sword. The young rhinoceros fell mortally wounded, and the two Arabs ran to the spot. Taher Noor took the sword carefully from my hand, and, polishing it up very lengthy, he sheathed it, and, having let them wiped the blade upon the body of the rhinoceros, and to prove the perfection of the weapon, he cut off the tail of his arm; then exclaimed, with a deep sigh of pleasure and astonishment, "Bismillah!" and resumed his seat on the ground.

A CELESTIAL CONTRACTION.

Customer—But I sent you six collars, and here are only three.

Laundryman—Gentleman before berry poor color. Shrinker in wagon. His color come off. Shrinker in washtub, three collee when come out.—Judy.

Better Than a Stove.

Mrs. Hashly—You say you haven't put a stove in Mr. Prettiboy's room. How does he keep from freezing?

Mrs. Tartly—I put a couple of mirrors in his room.

Mrs. Hashly—But they won't compensate him for the lack of a stove.

Mrs. Tartly—Perhaps not, but he keeps himself warm by constantly walking from one mirror to the other to look at himself.—Harper's Bazar.

A Smart Postmaster.

It is hard to get the better of a postmaster. Recently the postmaster of a Western town came across a letter on which were written these three words:

Bill
Jones,
Man.

Did he send it to the Dead Letter Office? By no means; in fifteen minutes he "got" to the little joke of the sender and decided that it was meant for John Underhill, Andover, Mass.—N. Y. Tribune.

An Impossibility.

Cholly sings:

"Oh, would that I might fly away
And be forgot or want a day—"

Miss Bowers (interrupting)—Impossible, Mr. Budd.

Cholly—Couldn't you possibly forget me?

Miss Bowers—Oh, I referred to the flying part.—Society Notes.

Society Notes.

She—You must come and see us. Come any time.

He—When do you dine?

She—Always at six, and we are through by eight. We shall be delighted to see you at eight. Don't forget the hour.—Texas Siftings.

Sympathy.

"What's become of Ebenezer Medd?"

"He's in New York doing literary work. He is making quite a name for himself."

"Well, I don't blame him. The one his father gave him is enough."—Harper's Bazar.

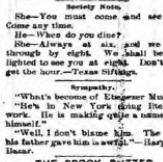
THE SPOOK BUZZER.

Its a Very Simple Contrivance, but It Works as Effectively as Anything.

Residents of that section of the city known as "Shiawanopolis," in the Twenty-eighth ward, have been greatly annoyed during the past week, says the Philadelphia Record, by a series of unearthly screeches at midnight. Some thought that a wag had been pulling the rope on Dipper's bell pull, while others declared that it was the ghost of a man who had been murdered. No bird could make such a shriek as went up like this:

"Wow-o-o-o-o! Wow-o-o-o-up! Wow-o-o-o-up! Kool Kool Slip!"

This was commonly repeated three times, with blood-congealing intensity



THE SPOOK BUZZER.

then it would die away in the distance, only to be heard later in another quarter.

Finally Special Officer Ulrich was put on the case, and he worked for three or four days, when on last Saturday he caught the man who was making the mystery. The youngsters confessed, that they were responsible for the hideous noises. They had a spook, hidden away with about two yards of twine tied to the ferule end from the other extremity of the twine dangled a piece of wood, shaved down very thin, oval shaped and about nine inches long. The holders, they explained, were produced by lashing the twine through the air. The harder the wind blew the more unearthly the sounds became. They had had lots of fun, and after a reprimand by Lieutenant Wolf they promised to destroy the things. The boys said that the affair was a spook buzzer, and that it was the best thing out.

When properly made and deftly wielded it will produce a volume of sound in the open air that is almost, if not quite, indescribable.

The Game of Bean-Bags.

The board for playing bean-bags shown in the picture can be made of oak or of pine, stained to imitate cherry or walnut. It should be eighteen inches wide and thirty long. The opening is five and a half inches square. The piece which elevates one end and keeps the board in position when in use is eighteen inches long and nine wide. It is attached to the board with small hinges, and kept in position with hooks and eyes when ready for playing. The bags, which should be all in number, are made of scarlet and blue serving material, five and a half inches square; or rather five are that size, and the sixth, called "Jumbo," is twice the length of the others. The bags are filled with beans, each holding half a pint. The number to be played may be set by the players. They stand eight or ten feet away and try to toss the bags through the hole. Each successful throw counts ten; if the bag lodges on the board, five; if it falls outside it takes away five counts. If Jumbo goes through it counts twenty. Each player takes all five bags and Jumbo at once, and throws them in a group. The game is scored by an umpire. When it is played as an outdoor game, throw the bags through a suspended hoop. Wound with bright colors.—American Agriculturist.

BOARD FOR BEAN-BAG GAME.

Not Surprising.

Scribbler—Are you managing to make a living out of writing poetry?

Scrawley—Oh, yes, such as it is. The terms have been kept very quiet though. I notice that a plumber has won the last Oxford prize for poetry.

Scribbler—Indeed! Ah, ah! Oh, well, a plumber ought to be a good hand at water at all events.—American.

Not a Place to Stir Fancy.

"Why, Mr. Washington, how do you do?"

"How do you do?"

"Your face is familiar to me, but I don't remember—"

"I am Dr. Bumbleton, who made you and Mrs. Flamington one call."

"Oh, you are, are you? Well, you go home yourself."—Jury.

Weird, Would Be Awful.

"They say that drowning is the easiest and most painless way to die," remarked Bleeker.

"It depends on the field used," replied Chumley.—Life.—Kinsley—Mooney's Weekly.

FESTIVE FIGAROS.

Hair-Dressing in View of the Public for Prizes.

The Wild Scene Witnessed at a Tonsorial Exhibition in Paris—A Tremendous Excitement Created by the Low-Lying Competitors.

Before twenty-seven looking-glasses sat twenty-seven disheveled maidens, the glories of their tresses called by the barbarous expression of shock to the dresser's saloon, surrounded by hairpins, bandeaux, and such like engines of the coiffeur's art. Why they expose the subjects we forbear to say, but we say that all was there necessary to the erection of a fashionable coiffure. Behind each sat a Figaro, important, tall, comb in hand, his merry shirt-front and resplendent studs carefully protected by a silken apron. The competitors had reached the preliminary strains of the band, now combing the tresses before them with a accompaniment to the wild scene, says a Paris letter in the New York Sun, was at the bell of the Society of Pompiers de Paris, ending, as it was the outset of a performance. The signal is given. With lightning fingers the operators proceed to work. In a true Bridges that lately hung dank and straight around a pasty countenance. The spectator can not fail to note the careful powdering of the model's face, for the electric light is trying, and observe how speedily a twist here, a curl there, and half a dozen skillfully placed pins add to the intine charms. It is all very serious. The subjects are models of gravity. Jeanne, Lucie, and Augusta and Augusta and Hippolyte indulge only in the facial contortions peculiar to their trade. Meanwhile, the friends and admirers of friends solemnly promenade to the music and await results with palpitating hearts.

"Gentlemen, the combs to the pockets," cries the president.

And then, in fact, a final flinging of the frizzes, and a farewell adjustment of feathers and flowers, the competitors whisk off the wrappers and the twenty-seven ball-gowned young ladies are revealed to us in all the glory of their skilfully-arranged coiffures.

"Gentlemen of the jury, will you do your duty?" is the stentorian command as it sounds as if they were trying a murder case. Ah! the solemnity of the moment! There is no conversation, the most supreme, the excitement of the competitive Figaro is alone manifested under elevated eyebrows, spiffled shoulders and fantastic mustaches, worthy the title the antenna of the lobster. The prize is only to him who shall obtain seven votes. But, as shall no one guess the number. No. 23 gets six. No. 1 gets three; the remaining four are frittered away between other competitors. Again and again the gentlemen of the jury "do your duty" and at twenty-three o'clock we have grasped the golden crown of honor a wild crowd seizes hold of a bewildered, black-haired individual, with a tall-comb protruding from his pocket, uplift him shoulder high, and then it is realized, is after all, the lucky man.

Then a tremendous row ensues. The second prize has been handed out, but, with flashing eyes and a face whiter than shaving lather, he dashes it tragically to the floor, and with half-formed red yell, like a tiger balked of its prey, rushes at the unfortunate lady, whose tresses have served him in such good stead, and in another moment reduces the coiffure he has erected to the confused mass of hairpins, "switches," marticaux curls, and an osprey alone remains of what was once a hair-pin. To a man the fierce fingers pursue the baffled barber round the saloon, with pretense and intense anger him from the scene. The house of the establishment has been outraged. A compensation and fellow-feelings has made a sad exhibition of jealous rage and disappointment, and insulted the society.

Meanwhile, hairpins and looking-glasses have been swept away, the floor is swept and the Café de la dresser certainly does not take his pleasures sadly, for in the refreshment-room before bottled champagne seems to appear to be most in request, the friends of luckless No. 23 and the successful No. 1 exhaust their choicest epithets and arguments, while the paucity of the funereal black-edged programmes lasting many into exhibitions of fury which frequently threaten to develop into pugilistic interviews. As the writer departs a procession of ladies, who have been brought with hair already dressed in various fashionable and fantastic styles, is in course of formation, and suggests the idea that the revolving doors on doubles have swept from the various hairdressers' windows to take part in the revels. But the last impression of the "formal Parisian life, nationale and Ball" is of a haggard, ghastly apparition, hugging a brush and comb, a card-board box and a striped wrapper, and peering through the swing doors with wild eyes at the revels of the ball. It was the fallen angel hovering around the gates of Paradise, the hapless No. 23.

An Humbled Vizier.

A traveler in Morocco tells in "The Land of the African Sultan," the following story: "The Sultan, not long ago, discovered that one of his viziers was becoming too powerful. He therefore summoned him to tea, and complimented him on his great wealth. Not only becoming vain, boasted of the number of his houses, horses, wives, and slaves, and the sultan, pretending to be amazed that he was too rich and thought too much about his wealth. To show the man exactly how he was worth, the Majesty had him taken by soldiers to the slave-market, where he was put up for sale, and bidding was opened. No one would offer more than taken back to the Sultan, who said to him: 'Now you know your value—eighteen pence. Go home and ponder over it.' When the man reached home, however, he found that all his property had been taken away by order of the Sultan. Only one small residence was left to his home, and one slave had been left him."

IT FAILED TO WORK.

A Little Boy's Experience at Catching Birds with Salt.

"Oh! oh! oh!"

It was coming but a yellow-bird, a pretty bit of black and gold flying in and out among the trees. Evidently he couldn't see or looked any more precious to Benny if it had been pure gold and jet. For Benny was a little boy, and ten-year-old ten years old had never spent a summer in the country before, and this was his first day of it.

"Oh! if I could catch that beautiful bird!"

"You can," said Uncle Amos, who sat in the doorway smoking, "if you can get near enough to her to put some salt on her tail."

From that day on, Benny kept trying to see how near he could get to birds with salt in his hand, always a little too soon.

One day when he was looking for the first ripe currants in the garden, he found the yellow-bird's nest, right on a low-hanging bough. Mother and father bent at the little mother on her eggs. Benny could have put his hand right on her, but he only thought of salt. Like a flash he shot into the house.

"Oh! Aunt Jane! I want some salt, quick!"

Aunt Jane poured some into his hand, and he was off, almost as quick as a bird herself.

Carefully he crept up to the spot, and raising his hand sprinkled the salt on the yellow tail, then away flew the bird! And Benny sat down in the grass and cried.

"Uncle Amos," said Benny that night, "it isn't so about catching birds with salt, for I tried it to-day."

"Why, what happened?" asked Uncle Amos, looking over his paper.

"Why, she flewded—I mean flewded—and left me alone."

"Well, I'm sorry," exclaimed the husband suddenly, as he remembered that night. Then he sat down and laughed until he had to wipe his eyes.

"Why—why, I'm gagged, "that wasn't so funny as all that, as a matter of fact, was installing quite a queer singer he had ever heard, and would sound! It was so funny.

"The landlady told me—"

"The landlady be hanged!" said Hooper, severely. "I don't see how he likes to meddle with other people's affairs."

A hollow voice was passed up all you had better not try to sing any more, quite soprano when his wife is absent.—Detroit Free Press.

NEAT BUTTON BOX.

The Illustration Shows It to Be a Very Handy One for Useful Articles.

The foundation is a common pasteboard box about four inches in height, two and one-half inches wide and three inches long. The cover removes from the center of the box and is covered in our illustration with silk, but satin or silk can be used. Cut out with a knife places in the top for the ribbon and the buttons to pass through, then cover the top, neatly gluing it down around the edges, then cover the sides and the upper edge of material and glue lower edge underneath the cover. This illustration shows a spray of wild roses painted on the side of the box cover after it is covered, and the words "Drop a button in the slot" are lettered on top of the cover. The lower part of the box has a band of plush glued around it. Then in the edges neatly, and before gluing attach the ribbon (which is about half a yard long) by gluing it to the box underneath the plush band, pass the end through the slit in one side of the cover up through and down through slit on opposite side and fasten under plush on that side. This arrangement allows the cover to partially slip off to take out the buttons. It is a very pretty thing, and is much easier to make than it seems from the description.—House.

DROP A BUTTON IN THE SLOT.

USEFUL SPONGE BAG.

A Dainty and Convenient Article for Every Lady's Chamber.

The materials needed are two pieces of stout white linen sixteen inches long and nine wide, two pieces of white rubber cloth eight inches wide and ten long, two yards of white linen tape half an inch wide, and enough of embroidery cotton or fine white linen floss.

Commence by embroidering with the linen floss in outline stitch on one piece of linen the design given in the accompanying illustration, or any other pattern suggestive of water; and on the other piece, placed salant, the word Sponge.

Next stitch the rubber cloth together, leaving five cut in it to match the linen pieces. This can be done best by laying the linen on the rubber, and cutting it to fit exactly. Stitch both sides of the bottom firmly, leaving the top open.

Then, measuring from the top a space six inches long, hem both sides of the linen, making the very narrowest turning that is possible. Finish both tops with a hem three inches wide; then half an inch above the hem, put a row of stitching. This forms the casing for the strings.

Now lay both pieces of linen together as evenly as possible, keeping the embroidered sides outside, and commencing at the hem, baste the sides and bottom neatly together. Turn in the raw end of the linen tape, fold it through the middle, baste it over the rough seam, and stitch, with long-machine, close to the edges of the tape.

Turn the rubber bag inside out, so that the smooth side of the rubber will be inside; slip it into the linen bag, which it will fit exactly; turn the raw top of the rubber bag in to the hem of the linen, and hem it neatly down. Cut the tape left from the binding into two pieces. Commencing at the left of the bag, run it through the casing on both sides, and tie in a hard knot with ends an inch long. Proceed in the same way with the other piece, only begin to run it in on the right side of the bag.—Harper's Young People.

SOME GOOD RECIPES.

Delicacies Which Are Easy to Make and Quite Economical.

Spanish Cream.—One quarter of an ounce of isinglass, soak one hour in one quarter of a pint of milk; heat whites of three eggs to a stiff froth; put one pint of cold milk in a pail; beat the yellks with sugar to the taste, and when the milk is just ready to boil stir into it the yolks of the eggs and the gelatine; let it thicken as for a custard, and after taking from the fire fold in the whites of the eggs, beating it all the while; flavor with vanilla and pour into molds.

Chocolate Caramels.—Two coffee cups of molasses, one and a half cups of butter, one half a cake of chocolate, one tumbler of milk; stir the chocolate in the milk, then mix all and boil, add a piece of butter the size of a chestnut when nearly done. Try like molasses candy. When done pour into pans, and when partly cool mark off into squares with the back of a knife. One-half this quantity makes two pans full.

Mayor Pudding.—Half an ounce of gelatine, pour over it a pint of boiling water, when dissolved add the juice of a lemon and one cupful sugar; let it stir; then add the beaten whites of two eggs and beat the mixture until it is stiff and white. Serve with custard made with the yellks of the eggs and a very little corn starch.

Corn Muffins.—Two cups of wheat flour, two heaping cupsful white meal, two of sweet milk, one egg, one heaping butter, size of a butternut, one pint of milk, two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar, one of soda.

The Queen's Little Joke.

"Your Majesty does not seem to be enjoying Punch," quoth the Prime Minister.

"No," quoth the Queen. "It awakens too many memories of my happy youth."—Punch.

Could Prove It.

Guest—You say that this is oyster soup. How do you know?

Waiter—Yes, it is, boss. If you'll wait a minute, sah, I'll bring you the oyster we made it from.—Jury.

Mystery Explained.

Mrs. Talkermaid married my husband when he was almost blind.

Mrs. Longwed—Now I understand now how you came to marry him at all.—Spirit.

A Proposition.

He—This is a lovely afternoon. Let's do something.

She—All right. What do you propose?

He—Let's get engaged.—Puck.

Charitable.

Tramp—I say, ma'am, can't ye gimme a bite of something cold to eat?

Mrs. Pancake—Why, yes, poor fellow! Go and take one of those loaves off the fence.—Judge.

Quantitative Company.

Mother (to young hopeful)—I wonder what that vagabond you were running around all last night?

Young Hopeful—With pa.—Texas Siftings.

Must Have Been Sore.

"What a nonsensical sentence this is: 'Pests are born,'" remarked Gibbs.

"Why of course they must have been born or they would not have been."—Boston Herald.

Able to Choose.

Visitor (to Boston parrot) — Polly want a cracker?

Polly (contemptuously)—I'll thank you for a biscuit.—Puck.

An Inappropriate Place.

"What was the matter with you this morning, John?" asked the minister of the church, as he met over when you stopped into the police."

"It was only an attack of stage fright," said John, modestly.—Life.

TELEPHONE COMPANY!

SPEAKING CONDUITS WITH OTHER TELEPHONE SUBSCRIBERS—PROTECTION FROM FIRE AND BURGLARY—PLAINFIELD, N. J.

General Office now Open at 108 and 110 Park Street.

Subscribers.	Address.
Adams Express Co.	North ave
Adams, C. J.	Somerset.
Anthony, Alice B.	Netherwood.
Arent, Otto	Park avenue.
Ayrault Hose Co.	Somerset st.
Ackerman, Wm. J. B.	21 West 7th street
Babcock, Geo. F.	27 Grove st
Baxter, F. H.	20 Somerset st.
Bedgood, Wm.	Hillside ave.
Bennett, Chas. E.	Somerset and Front sts.
Barnabe & Dunn	18 North ave.
Bauer, W. C. & Bro.	Cor. Front & Central Av.
Bedford, John	Somerset st. and 4th av.
Bowman, F. H.	Park ave. and 3d st
Berg, Jos. F. M.	20 and 22 Park st
Board of Education	8th st. bet. Union and Watchung ave.
Clark, H. S.	6th & Liberty, 6th & Somerset
Children's Home	West Front street.
Cannon, James T.	Richmond and Front sts.
Cemetery Association	Cor. Somerset & Park ave.
Cook, A. D. & Bro.	Park ave and RR.
Conway, Jos. C.	Madison and Watchung ave.
Coe, Rowland	Berkeley ave.
Chapman, Mrs. F. A.	2 Third Place
Drinkhouse, E. S.	120 Central Avenue
Dawson, J. N. M. D.	49 Somerset st
Dunn, F. F. M.	Somerset st.
Daily Press	9 North ave.
Depew, Wm. E. H.	26 Grescent ave.
Dunn, Wm.	9 and 11 Fourth st.
Davis, Dr. T. S.	One 30th st & Park av
Day, B. W.	Somerville ave
Demarest, J. M.	Somerset st.
Dumont, John R.	10 Crescent ave.
Day, Benjamin	Somerset st.
Decker, T.—pay station	Somerset st.
Dalrymple, James	22 E 2d st
Dumont, D. C.—Chief F. D.	20 E 2d st
Dollner, S. L.	Madison, av
Eastwood, E.	6th ave. and 4th st.
Evening News, T. W. Harrison,	Somerset st.
Engine No 1	West 3d st.
Engine No 2	Somerset st.
Engine No 3	Somerset st.
Estate of D. J. Baker	Park ave. & Railroad.
Fish, Chas.	27 West Front st.
Force, W. L. & Son	3 North ave.
Fitzgerald, Jas.	33 RR. Depot.
French, F. M. & Son	Somerset st.
Fritz, Dr. J. F.	13 Park ave.
Field, Dr. C. M.	Somerset and 5th streets
Fleming, Howard	36 Park avenue
Fish, Wm.	6 W 7th st
French, G. Frank	8 Somerset st
Grant, Geo W., Chief of Police	38 W 6th st
Godwin, G. M.	21 West Front.
Griffin, A. M.	11 E Front st.
Gaston, M. D., W. F.	3 Spooner ave
Gravell & Hardy	6 and 8 Somerset st.
Gaylord, L.	62 & 80 Somerset street.
Gaylord, Wm.	62 & 80 Somerset street.
Hedges, Dr. Ellis W.	87 East Front st.
Hyon, Chas.	141 Front street.
Hedden, Alfred	63 st. near Park ave.
Higgins, M. A.	Number 18
Hatfield Bros.	208 Madison st.
Harder, Francis C.	122 Madison st.
Jacobus, Samuel H.	115 East Front street
Jacobus, Jas. O.	5 and 7 Park ave.
Jones, Evan	13 Kensington st
Kirkner, J.	38 and 40 Somerset st.
Kaufman, W.	6 W 7th st
Kline & Co.	Grant av and Front st
Lovell, Rev. Robert	Rahway ave and 4th st.
Lotell, L. N.	Crescent ave
Lord, Wm. A.	Belvidere av
Lovell & Co.	72a 74 and 76 Park av.
Mortimer, John	Putnam avenue
Midwood, H.	9th st.
Mellon, Henry A.	Willow st.
Meine, James	Willow ave.
Miller, J. G.	11 E Front st.
Moore, Geo. A.	30 North ave
Manly, Benj.	Cor. 2nd st. and Park ave.
Muhlenberg Hospital	Somerset st.
Murray, Dr. Wm. H.	37 Passaic street.
Mayo, Wm.	72a 74 and 76 Park av.
Miller, Frank, Prop.	Netherwood.
Matthews, Chas.	49 Grove st
Martin, Jas. & Co.	27 and 29 Somerset st.
Millikin, E. F.	120 Central av
Millikin, E. F.	8 W 7th st
Morrison, T. W.	7 Somerset st
May Pharmacy Co., The	Park av & 4th st
Netherwood Hotel	35 Locust st.
Newhall, Henry B.	16 E 7th st.
Oppenheimer, Jos.	Farragut road
Osborne, E. C.	Somerset st.
Peabody, Jr., Thos B.	Rockview ave
Peterson, Joseph C.	41 West Front street
Plainfield Gaslight Co.	49 East Fourth st.
Plainfield Dirt Tel. & Fire Alarm Co.	3 E Front st.
Plainfield Electric Light Co.	Robinson avenue
Pay Station	Park av and Somerset st.
Pay Station	Park ave and Watchung ave.
Police Station—Chief's office	Front st.
Police Station	Park ave and RR.
Potter, C. F.	Somerset st.
Potter Press Works	North ave
Perrine, Edward C.	Central ave and 7th st.
Perrine, Edward C.	Central ave and 7th st.
Pope & Co., J.	6 East Front st.
Quinby, Stanton	Somerset st.
Rand Mach Tool Co.	Boulevard bet. Grant av and Randolph, Benj'n W.	Broadway
Rinehart, C. E.	Somerset st.
Ray, Isaac H.	Park and North ave.
Reynolds, H. P.	Somerset st.
Roberts, D. B.	11 North avenue.
Rockafellow, Wm. W.	Park and North ave.
Rogers & Co.	7th ave. and Somerset st.
Rogers, A. M. & Son	Park ave.
Rogers, Jr., Wm.	Somerset st.
Rogers, Mrs. J.	Park ave. near 10th st.
Rogers, Mrs. J.	Cor. Sarah & Sycamore ave
Rogers, Wm.	Somerset st.
Runion, Chas W., Mgr	24 E 2d st
Runyon, S. W.	7th ave. and Liberty and Dorr sts
Randolph, L. W.	Front st
Rogers, S. W.	Somerset st.
Sanford, Jr., Wm.	27 West Front st.
Sanitary store	76 Somerset st.
Stein, S. M.	Park ave. and Front st.
Stein, S. M.	Park ave. and Front st.
Smith, S. E. (Jay Station)	Park ave and Front sts
Sayre, A. P.	Prospect ave
Smith, Wm.	Belvidere av. and Front st.
Sargent, A. D.	8 E Front st.
Sanford, Jr., Wm.	27 West Front st.
Terrill & Cole	16 E 8th st.
Thompson, A. E.	20 and 30 7th st
Thompson, Mrs. F. Fisher	Somerset st.
Thrasher, Jno. A.	Madison av
Tomlinson, Jr., T. H.	28 N 2d st
Tomlinson, H. T.	28 N 2d st
Tobin & Randolph	31 North st
Thorn, Alex.	Somerset st.
Thorn, Alex.	Nine ter
Tweedy, H.	37 Crescent avenue
Tomlinson, Jr., T. H.	28 N 2d st
United States Express Co.	3 North ave
Van Arsdale, Jr., Wm.	7 and 9 Park ave.
Wellman, C.	West Seventh street
Wadsworth, G.	5th and Liberty ste
Western Union Telegraph Co.	Somerset st.
Weichers, J. F.	106 cor. 6th and Grant av
Wooten, E. A.	6 and 8 West Washington

TELEPHONE TOLL RATES.

FOR FIVE MINUTES CONVERSATION:

PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY

Asbury Park, N. J.	Hempstead, N. Y.
Babylon, N. Y.	Hunter's Point, N. Y.
Bath, N. Y.	Jamaica, N. Y.
Bayside, N. Y.	Islip, N. Y.
Bay Shore, N. Y.	Jericho, N.

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, JANUARY 22, 1891. No. 4.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well in its restrictions as in its authorities."—MADISON.

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 WEEK	2	3	1 MONTH	2	3	6	12
1 in.	$1.00	2.00	2.50	$3.00	5.00	6.00	10.00	18.00
2 in.	2.00	3.00	4.00	5.00	8.00	10.00	15.00	25.00
3 in.	3.00	4.00	5.00	6.00	10.00	12.00	18.00	30.00
¼ col.	4.00	5.00	6.00	8.00	12.00	15.00	20.00	35.00
½ col.	6.00	8.00	10.00	12.00	18.00	20.00	30.00	50.00
1 col.	10.00	15.00	18.00	20.00	30.00	35.00	50.00	80.00

All Editor's must be sold cash.

"Little of Everything" column, 50 cts. per line.

Double rate, 50 per cent, advance of above rates.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

J. ACKSON & DODGSON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Supreme Court of New York, Commissioners of Deeds, Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, Notaries Public and Conveyancers, Office, 256 Broadway, New York.

W. V. STEELE,
Counselor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
Cor. PARK AND NORTH AVE. 4-30-tfm

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property conducted. P. O. Box 181, Dunellen, N. J., or address at office of Constitutionalist, Plainfield, N. J.

DR. CHARLES H. TURNER,
Dentist,
96 West Front Street. A new local anesthetic applied to the teeth and gums without pain. Gold filling a specialty.—tf

H. HAND,
Architect,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 6, Plainfield, N. J. Orders left at N. J. Cherry's stationery store, 46 West Front Street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—1y

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
247 Broadway, New York. Rooms 32 and 33. (Important Land Surveyors' Real Building.) Associate, Wm. Wheeler, Jr.

J. H. PROTHERO,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office in A. J. Sanford's livery stable, corner Main and Somerset streets, Plainfield, N. J. Day calls promptly attended to. Residence, 1 Mile Circle, Somerville, N. J. Night calls promptly attended to on Somerset or Main st. Telephone connection.—tf

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VanArsdale,
PIANO TUNER.
Instruments put in thorough order. Terms reasonable. Pianos and Organs for sale and to let. Pianos, by special, P. O. Box 169 or left at Wheeler & Wilson Office, No. 5 Park Place, will receive prompt attention. Residence, 21 Randolph street; Orders' Hill street.—tf1169

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER.
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
residence and Shop No. 36 East 3d St. Jobbing promptly attended to. apr

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce
Meats of all Kinds,
FRUIT and VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON.
NO. 34 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
A. LUTKINS. L. A. HUMMER.

G. W. FORCE,
11 West Front street.
Opening of
FALL AND WINTER STOCK
Boots and Shoes at Low Prices
A FINE GRADE OF GOODS TO SELECT FROM.
11 West Front street,
G. W. FORCE.
1m1891

TO THE PUBLIC

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.

It is under cover and will protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it with dispatch and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Laundry and Hookers' Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
1m1

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
(Formerly Derr's.)
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry,
repairing neatly and promptly done.

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones.
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments

All work executed in the most artistic manner at a strictly reasonable price. Designs furnished on application.
I. HARDING,
Proprietor, address M. S. Dr., Plainfield, N. J.
Monuments erected in Evergreen Cemetery.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No. 2 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of Gentlemen's goods always on hand. Repairing done to order. Prices reasonable.

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
Is now the sole proprietor of the old established
NO. 14 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will be pleased to supply patrons with Groceries, Provisions, Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
at the lowest possible prices consistent with first class goods. Orders solicited and delivered promptly to all parts of the city. Telephone connection.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (DEPOT R. R. STATION)
JAS. M. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat, Hot and Cold Baths, Elevator, &c. Rates reasonable. 1 4 93

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Somerset adjoin Sta., North Plainfield N. J.
RICHARD L. BOYCE, Proprietor.
Formerly owned and Thousand Board, at Interstate. First-class Stables and Sheds attached. Meals at all reasonable hours. jan27

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN F. HUBBARD, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER, "
ELIAS R. POPE, Treasurer.
ap91

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS.
SENT IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE.
ap91

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
[Successors to G. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.]
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER,
English Tiles, Anaglypta, Stand, Centre-Rosset Floor Papers, &c. Borings for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
5-13-91

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables
Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Light carriages at all seasons for pleasure.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or business. Special attention given to boarded horses by the day, week or month.—ot1891
TELEPHONE CALL, No. 36.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will continue to furnish stylish and able teams for driving parties, and solicited into some horse or a shopper are requested to call at the stables. Horses taken to board at reasonable rates.

Accommodation Express.
FOSTER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderhoef's Confectionery, Park Avenue.
The Accommodation Express will attend to the prompt delivery to Stations of N. Y. & P. R. R. Co. of goods or baggage to and from the Depot, or from any part of Plainfield, North Plainfield or Dunellen, with care and safety. Prompt attention to orders left at the office.

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The undersigned having been appointed agents for the
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York,
are prepared to take risks at reasonable rates. Personal attention to the interests of insured. Office at residence, No. 5 Somerset street, Plainfield, N. J.
NATHAN HARPER.

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represents other first-class Fire insurance Companies. Agents for the Inman Steamship Line. Drafts on Ireland for sale. First and only National Bank Stock Bought and Sold. tf

BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale.
OFFICE:
E. R. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS R. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
SOMERSET STREET, NORTH PLAINFIELD.
Delivery called for and delivered. Share of the public patronage is solicited. 1m

EDUCATIONAL.

Mr. EDWARD E. HOWE,
OF NEW YORK CITY,
Will take advanced pupils on the PIANO THURSDAYS OF EACH WEEK.
With kind consent of the Rev. Wm. R. Richards, 101 East Front street, address to 5th inst. 1 4 93

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
27 LaGrande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling, Drawing and Sewing.

DODWORTH'S
CLASSES FOR
Dancing & Deportment,
Seminary Hall, Plainfield, N. J.,
Commencing Wednesday, Oct. 15th, 1890.
From 3½ to 5½ P. M.
For particulars inquire of E. E. KENYON, Seminary Hall, or THOS. J. DODWORTH, Residence, 3,190 Fulton Ave., N. Y. City.

PAINTERS & PAINTERS SUPPLIES

Paints, Varnishes, Glass.
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
ap90

L. B. WOOLSTON. J. F. BUCKLE
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTERS' SUPPLIES. 36 NORTH AVENUE
ap1891

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Carey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—24 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 828. Piano moving a specialty. 1y

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for invalids, weakly persons and the aged.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THE Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the finest vine Sparta Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and is made and bottled on the premises partly rainwood before gathering. Is invaluable are endorsed by all physicians. Pronounced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision. Its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health of the United States. The Medical profession and the weakest invalid can use it with confidence. Recommended to the aged and debilitated and adapted to the Parlor as well as the Cellar. Sold by druggists and grocers at five dollars per dozen.
Tonic and Strengthening Properties

SPEER'S SACRAMENTAL WINE

Is in the highest degree pure and unfermented. Prepared in accordance with Jewish rites, and made as it was from the days of the Apostles. Recommended by clergymen and physicians, thereby preserving the sanctity of communion. It is especially adapted to invalids, as it will keep in any climate.

Speer's Socialitic Claret
Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivaled in this country for medicinal purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grape from which it is distilled.

See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is upon the neck of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 1-15-y

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The finest cigar made in the State, and made only from the best tobacco.
CLEAR HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
Also manufacturer of the Choicest Domestic and Foreign and Domestic Cigars, Cigarettes and Tobacco.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety.
Trade solicited.

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMESTIC
—SEGARS!—
No. 18 PARK AVENUE, (Under Journal Office) PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials,
of every description.
The celebrated "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, without exception, the finest cut tobacco in the market. 52ap91

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
[Successor to E. B. Maynard.]
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 26 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting done at their residence, if desired. Shaving, Shampooing, &c., all tastefully performed. 12tf

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Madison avenue, cor. Park Place, Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Heat Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 5-13-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
24 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J. mch1891

WHATEVER form of printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings,
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memorials,
Lists of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Public or Private Circulation.
Everything.

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST.

DAILY PRESS

(Chautauqua Building).

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING,
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc. Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above business in a strictly first-class, sanitary and workmanship manner.
Having associated myself with Mr. Henry Hoffman, late of New York City, I am now prepared to do all kinds of Plumbing, Gas Fitting, Tin Roofing, &c., in the most approved manner. Orders left at my residence, No. 5 SOUTH AVE. (corner Plainfield, N. J.

D. W. LITTELL.
No. 5 SOUTH AVE. (corner Plainfield, N. J.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

THE delay is said to have been so named because "so many days ago," opens its eyes in the morning of the sun, and closing them at his setting. This is true of the longest days only—though not of the larger kinds.

The daisy comes early. There is an old English saying that "It is not spring until you can put your foot on twelve daisies."

It is a simple little flower, but it has been beloved by poets, and admired by kings and queens.

The French call daisy is Marguerite; and Marguerite is also the French form of the name Margaret; so it is that many Margarets have taken the daisy for their crown.

Marguerite of Anjou, the wife of Henry VI. of England, when she was a young and beautiful girl, chose the daisy as her flower, and the nobles of her court wore it in her honor.

Another Marguerite, and a far happier one than Marguerite of Anjou, was the sister of the French King, Francis I. She, too, loved the daisy, and it was worn in her honor. Her husband, the duke of Alençon, called her his "Marguerite of Marguerites," which means either the "pearl of pearls," or "queen of pearls," which you please, for Marguerite also means a "pearl."

We read of her in history as a truly "great and noble woman."

Francis I. had a daughter named for this beloved sister. At the time of the marriage of this daughter Marguerite some one presented her with a basket of daisies, and a bit of French verse which may be translated thus: "All flowers have their months, but in all months and flowers present themselves to my choice I should choose the Marguerite."

Another Marguerite, the wife of the French King, Louis IX. He had a daisy and a lily engraved on his ring! She also was

"Good as the daisy is,
For his wife; the lily was the Lily of France."

The English Margarets of Richmond chose three daisies on a green turf for her device. And she was the mother of Henry VII. of England, and a child she lies in the beautiful chapel he built at Westminster. She was not a queen, but was a right royal woman.

THE DAISY.

There is a Marguerite of our day in whom some may like to see a future queen, Queen of Italy. She has always been greatly beloved by the people of Italy, and on the day of her late marriage with King Humbert, they wore wreaths and bouquets of her flower. She, too, is a "great and noble woman."

Margarita, "margarites" Greek her, I believe, by King Victor Emmanuel, King Humbert's father.

So this pure little flower, the "wee crimson tipped daisy" of Burns' song, has won and kept a high place for itself, and has long been known as "The Daisy in Our Little Men and Women."

SIGNIFICANT WORDS.

The Inscription on a Sun-Dial Famed in History.

Two hundred years ago, in the first quadrangle at All-Souls' College, Oxford, a grand sun-dial was reared to the top story, the largest and highest in the all England or in the entire Kingdom. It was placed in the face of the quadrangle, and over the long polished brass plate which stands perpendicular to the sun's rays, and which is called the gnomon, was inscribed in letters of gold these words, "Pereunt et imputantur," which is for to be hours, meaning literally: "They perish, and are set down to our account," or we may amplify it into something like: "Hours are lost while they are wasted, and are added to our debt."

Wonderfully significant these words, and wonderfully have they influenced men since the day they were inscribed there on the dial. The law by Cardinal Newman is said never to have looked at them without a feeling of awe and reverence. Keble and Pusey acknowledged the power which these memories words exercised over their lives, for it is a law of our nature that what impresses us in youth is most influential in shaping our lives. These men passed through Oxford, and those who can tell how much these three Latin words had to do in making their lives pure and noble? The missionary Patterson, who was slain by the savages on the island of Tanna, while in the act of a deed of duty, confessed that the frequent sight of these words assisted largely in confirming him in his resolution to devote his life to the conversion of men and the glory of God. Well were those three words written in letters of gold!

It is told that an English merchant, who went to Oxford on a visit to his son, was so impressed by the dial and its mighty words that whenever afterward he was tempted to cheat a little in fulfilling the duties of his calling, or to spend a day in useless idleness, the words would rush into his mind: "Present et imputantur," and thus spur his laggard will up to its duty task.

In good actions we often begin better than we know, and accomplish more of good than we ever thought or dreamed, and the men of two hundred years ago who set in the quadrangle of a college this sun-dial inscribed with these significant words, that students might be reminded of the value and worth of time, did a work which has reached far beyond their own age, and even their own walls.—Estelle Cooke, in Harper's Young People.

ABOVE THEM ALL.

Boy—Is he the highest in school.
Ma—The highest in height.
Boy—The highest in height.—Golden Days.

Wanted Mine.

"You ought to enter a prize contest for the handsomest man," said a lawyer to the bobby of the police court yesterday, as he had before him a drunk and his nose skinned.

"That's exactly what I'm after," replied the man, "and I went into such a contest, got the prize, and four of the judges fainted away at the sight of me face and brought me to this."—Detroit Free Press.

PAGANINI'S WOODEN SHOE.

A Pretty Little Romance in which the Great Violinist Took Part.

It was in the autumn of 1839. In a villa at Paris, with several other invalids, besieged the renowned Italian violinist, who was dangerously ill. The most eminent was seldom seen; he would not, however, out of his solitude, but hardly saw any one but Nicette, a harmless, merry country girl, who brought him his meals, and often cheered him up in hours of sadness.

One morning Nicette appeared with red eyes, and watched the great musician without saying a word. Paganini, who was carving a piece of ivory for the handle of a dagger, noticed this and said:

"What's the matter, child, has any misfortune happened to you?"

"Alas! yes, sir."

She was silent. Paganini fixed his eyes on the troubled countenance of the girl.

"You have a wish to," said he. "I see it all clearly enough. After he had made you a thousand promises he has forsaken you. Is it not so?"

"Alas! poor fellow! he has drawn a bad number in the conscription, and must go off for a soldier. I shall never see him again," sobbed the poor girl.

"But, can't you buy a substitute for him?"

"Monsieur is joking! How could I get such a large sum?"

"It is, then, so very much?"

"It is very high this year, for there is a report that a war will soon break out. Fifteen hundred francs is the lowest price."

The musician did not reply, but when Nicette left his room he took out his pocketbook and wrote in an empty leaf:

"Mem.: To think what can be done for poor Nicette."

In winter Paganini got much better, and every now and then passed his evenings in the saloon. He played on the violin, and sometimes, in a musical humor, he composed. Immediately after Nicette came in, and said that a box had just arrived addressed to Signor Paganini. The box appeared and he proceeded to open it. The first thing which the musician pulled out was a packet in a strong brown paper, sealed several times. The curious eyes of about twenty persons present beheld a gigantic wooden shoe, cut out of ash, and almost large enough to put a child inside of.

"A present, indeed," said Paganini, smiling. "I can not fancy from whom it comes. Some of these excellent ladies who to compare me to Orpheus, who always receives presents and never gives any. Ah! who knows but the heiress of this shoe may not earn its weight in gold!"

For three days nothing was seen of him.

"The most inquisitive only learned that from morning till evening he was busy working with carpenters' tools. And, in fact, during this time Paganini's accustomed visitors on hand had created a perfect, well-sounding instrument out of the "forsaken wooden shoe, which had stretched a few silver strings across it. The next day it was announced that Paganini would, on New Year's Eve, give a concert in the large room of the villa where he boarded. The great master gave notice that he would play ten piece—five on a violin and five on a wooden shoe. The tickets cost 20 francs. Only 100 were issued. They were instantly purchased by persons of the highest rank.

At last Paganini appeared smiling cheerfully; he bowed, and began to play more beautifully than ever, to the delight of his hearers, on his old violin. And now he took up the shoe, which he placed into a violin, and which itself had somewhat of its former shape, and began one of those fantasias which never failed to charm his whole audience. Is it music? Is it poetry? One seems to behold the departure of the recruit, to hear the sobs of his intended literally! "They perish, and are set down to our account," or we may amplify it into something like: "Hours are lost while they are wasted, and are added to our debt."

Wonderfully significant these words, and wonderfully have they influenced men since the day they were inscribed there on the dial. The law by Cardinal Newman is said never to have looked at them without a feeling of awe and reverence. Keble and Pusey acknowledged the power which these memories words exercised over their lives, for it is a law of our nature that what impresses us in youth is most influential in shaping our lives. These men passed through Oxford, and those who can tell how much these three Latin words had to do in making their lives pure and noble? The missionary Patterson, who was slain by the savages on the island of Tanna, while in the act of a deed of duty, confessed that the frequent sight of these words assisted largely in confirming him in his resolution to devote his life to the conversion of men and the glory of God. Well were those three words written in letters of gold!

It is told that an English merchant, who went to Oxford on a visit to his son, was so impressed by the dial and its mighty words that whenever afterward he was tempted to cheat a little in fulfilling the duties of his calling, or to spend a day in useless idleness, the words would rush into his mind: "Present et imputantur," and thus spur his laggard will up to its daily task.

In good actions we often begin better than we know, and accomplish more of good than we ever thought or dreamed, and the men of two hundred years ago who set in the quadrangle of a college this sun-dial inscribed with these significant words, that students might be reminded of the value and worth of time, did a work which has reached far beyond their own age, and even their own walls.—Estelle Cooke, in Harper's Young People.

Boy—Is he the highest in school.
Ma—The highest in height.
Boy—The highest in height.—Golden Days.

Wanted Mine.

"You ought to enter a prize contest for the handsomest man," said a lawyer to the bobby of the police court yesterday, as he had before him a drunk and his nose skinned.

"That's exactly what I'm after," replied the man, "and I went into such a contest, got the prize, and four of the judges fainted away at the sight of me face and brought me to this."—Detroit Free Press.

COFFEE SUBSTITUTE.

The Kola Nut Rising Rapidly as a Good Nutritious Article.

A well-known medical journal is recommending the kola nut as a substitute for tea and coffee. The nut, it is said, contains little tannin and not much more caffeine. It is claimed that it will soon take the place of tea and coffee entirely.

Mr. C. G. Loyd, the botanist, has made a special study of this nut and upon this point said to a reporter: "The kola nut is a native of the coast of Guinea. It has been introduced into and thrives well in the West Indies and Brazil. It grows upon a tree from 40 to 60 feet high, which produces pale yellow flowers spotted with purple. The leaves of the tree are 6 or eight inches long, and are pointed at both ends. The fruit consists of five long, slender pods, radiating from a common center. One of these pods, when broken open is found to contain several nuts, somewhat similar to hazelnuts and of about the same size. These nuts are solid, being slightly softer toward the center than on the outside.

THE KOLA NUT.

"The natives of the countries where the nuts grow use them for various purposes. They pass for money in Africa. They are also used as symbols of friendship and hate, the light-colored ones signifying the former and the dark the latter.

"They are supposed to aid digestion," added the botanist, "and it is the practice to chew a small bit before eating a meal. They allay thirst, and if a piece be chewed and held in the mouth while drinking the most bitter and stagnant water can be taken, and will taste sweet and harmless. If the quality of rendering stagnant water pure is possessed by the nuts, I rather think that the astringent taste in the mouth kills the gustatory nerves momentarily, and for that reason the water is not tasted."

Mr. Lloyd said that they are also supposed to allay hunger, but they do more than paralyze the nerves. They have a stimulative effect, and when going on long marches the natives chew bits of nuts continually and with about the same effect as if drinking large cups of tea had been used, though without the same bad results. Powdered kola nut is sprinkled in cuts and wounds and has a healing effect. A chemical analysis of the nuts shows them to contain twenty parts of caffeine and but a fraction of a part of tannin.

Uncle Sam's Crack Cruiser.

The Maine will be the largest vessel in the United States navy. She is 320 feet long, 57 feet in width, and of 8¼ feet draught. She will be of 6,648 tons displacement, and have engines of 8,200 horse-power. She will be known as a "protected" cruiser. The keel was laid on October 11, 1888, and the work of construction has continued without interruption until the present time, under direction of Constructor Mentoyne.

The armament will consist of four 10-inch rifles, two in each turret. Each will have a bore 810 inches in length and will throw a steel projectile nine miles with a charge of 250 pounds of powder. She will also have two 6-inch guns capable of throwing 100 pounds of steel five miles with a charge of fifty pounds of powder. In the secondary battery the Maine will have four rapid-fire guns of 43-inch bore, four of 1-inch bore, four Gatling guns and four revolving cannon. She will carry two torpedo boats and will have seven tubes from which she can discharge torpedoes when in close quarters.

THE CRUISER MAINE.

The Conquering Yankee Girl.

The German girls are beginning to complain that American and English girls sent to Germany for education are encroaching upon their matrimonial preserves. These foreign girls' not only learn the language quickly, but easily make a conquest of the heart of the susceptible German officer. The number of army officers in Germany with American and British wives is quite surprising, and the fad appears to be increasing. The German girls say that the American damsels are as expert as young widows in affairs of the heart.

A Widow's Peaceful Gains.

Widow Sarah Pitt died a few years ago when she married Colonel Albern Sarton in Missouri twenty years ago. She owned an entire capital estate from which her children by a former husband should become heirs to Mr. Sarton's estate in case no children were born to them. She died two years later without any children by her second husband, who died recently, leaving an estate valued at $1,000,000. The compact was contested, but the parties accepted $100,000 as a compromise, and the widow's children get the remainder.

GREEN OLD AGE.

—Life.

An Ovation.

Prisoner—Spangler has written a play. Secondus—Has it been produced?
Prisoner—Yes, last night.
Secondus—Full house?
Prisoner—Packed.
Secondus—Did the audience call for Spangler after the curtain fell?
Prisoner—Yes, and demanded their money back.—Jury.

Family Trees to Order.

Mr. Forelon—What's the matter, Sophronia? You seem annoyed.
Mrs. Forelon—Oh, nothing. I should think so. I've been to call on Mrs. Bridgeport. She's making a fashionable ass of herself. She's always talking about her family tree.
Mr. Forelon—Well, dear, you just find out what kind of a tree it is, and we'll have half a dozen of 'em in the front parlor.—Judge.

A MAN OF MUSCLE.

How an Italian Samson Developed of Three Soldiers.

The following extraordinary description of a man of muscle is told by Salvini, himself a man of great strength: "A man named Luchini died a few years ago in Venice at an advanced age, but up to the last possessed much of his extraordinary strength. He was by trade a lemon, and in comfortable circumstances. His strength was allied to wonderful presence of mind and coolness. Once he was carrying out to a villa he was building, some miles from Venice, a large sum of money with which to pay off his workmen. He carried the money, which was in silver coin in a bag over his shoulder, though it would have taken two ordinary men even to lift it. At night he found himself some distance from his destination, and so was obliged to 'put up' at a small inn. He went to bed early, placing the bag of silver in the bottom drawer of a small chest of drawers in the bed-room.

"At midnight he was awakened by a rough shake of the shoulder, and, opening his eyes, saw by the light of a small oil lamp three of his own workmen, each of whom had in his hand a stiletto, the uncomfortably sharp points of which were pressed against either side of his throat. Luchini grasped the situation instantly, and saw that he was in a position where his enormous strength availed him but little, so he coolly said: 'What do you want?' 'The money,' was the answer; 'be here is it!' 'Take it,' said Luchini; 'it is in the drawer,' and he pointed to the chest of drawers. One of the ruffians then chained to guard the recumbent Luchini, while the other went to the drawer indicated and tried to open it. It would not budge. 'Give me the key,' he growled. 'It is not locked,' announced Luchini. 'Open it, then,' said the robber, and set all with the stiletto at his throat Luchini rose, and with one hand pulled open the drawer the other could not budge with all his strength. At the men's bidding he then pulled out the bag of money and threw it on the floor.

"One of the thieves began to fill his pockets with loose coin, so as to lighten somewhat the weight of the bag. At the sight of the glittering coin the other's avarice outstripped his prudence. Withdrawing his poniard from Luchini's throat, he bent down and burrowed his hands in the pile of money and began to follow his comrade's example. The looked-for opportunity had come for Luchini. He calmly stooped forward, grasped one of the robbers by the hair in either hand, and then, spreading out his arms and bringing them together again with incredible force, he crushed in the two men's skulls as if they had been egg-shells. They were dead without a groan. Hearing a noise at the window, Luchini then looked out and saw that a third accomplice was keeping watch outside. Taking up one of the dead men, he threw the body through the casement, and calling out, 'There's something for you!' he dashed the dead robber at the living one with such force that the man below was not only scared almost to death, but was seriously hurt, and limped off as fast as a fractured leg would allow him. Luchini went back to bed, and calmly slept till morning."—N. Y. Star.

MANKIND ADORES HER.

The Sort of Young Lady with Whom It is a Pleasure to Meet.

The agreeable girl!

She is sometimes rich, but seldom handsome, yet we all like to meet her in this work-a-day world of ours.

She meets one sensibly, does not rush up hysterically and, catching at one's hand or dress, blind one with her effusive inquiries for shell in the hipbone and best sense well herself.

She is always well dressed, not conspicuously, for that is more of vulgarity, but her dress is always in harmony with the time and place. Soiled gloves and tatters with a fringe of frayed that should have been renewed are never seen.

She never speaks of the last sensational divorce case in the woman who has been unfortunate in her domestic relations.

If one is ill and anybody calls no disagreeable subject is introduced that will jar on the sensitive nerves.

She is not necessarily brilliant, indeed seldom is, yet she always holds her own in society, not by storming at its doors, but by the keen sense of the fitness of things.

She understands the art of listening to others.

My lady always takes pleasure in introducing people with like interests, not in keeping them apart that she may monopolize each in turn; to see others happy adds to her enjoyment.

She is never late in the theater, church or home half way, and does not forget faces when she meets them two days later.

Her appointments are always met promptly. It impossible to meet the engagement she writes a note at once and explains, thereby saving much discomfort and annoyance.

She never addresses her gentlemen acquaintances by their first name; that familiarity is reserved for him who has a deeper claim than mere acquaintance.

She is well versed on the current topics of the day, and does not blunder through a conversation with statements of which she knows nothing.

She does not inform an artist what the standard works of art are. He is supposed to know.

She minds her own business, leaving others to look after theirs.—Toledo Blade.

A Tree in the Air.

On the plantation of John H. Roberts, near Kobertville, N. J., there is a tree, if not destroyed by the turpentine hands that does not touch the ground by six feet. A pine sapling, cut down in the period unknown to the oldest inhabitant, lodged on the stump of another tree. The growth of the tree and limb gradually closed around it until it became completely imbedded, and there its life from the tree it grows and presents a luxurious appearance. All trace of the stump from which it was cut has long since disappeared.—Chicago Times

How it Added In.

Loving wife—Now that we are ruined, Henry, I will disclose my secret. For years I have been saving up and now possess a shining heap of gold into his bat) this may tide you over.

Husband—Oh, my darling, how did you manage to do it?

Wife—Easy enough. Every time you said a mean thing to me I put ten cents in a box.—N. Y. Sun.

Hunting for a Home.

Mrs. Homeseeker—If these apartments are charming, and the price is certainly reasonable. Are you sure there are no nuisances connected with the building?

Agent—Well, mum, it has a janitor.—N. Y. Weekly.

A Critic of the Quadrigæ.

Maude—So you have read Mr. McAllister's book on society, have you?

Estelle—Yes.

Maude—How is it, style?

Estelle—Oh! it's the very latest.—Harper's Bazar.

His Wife Ought to Know It.

"Who is that?" asked McCorkle, indicating McCrackle's typewriter and secretary.

"That is my recording angel."—West Shore.

Practice Does Not Practice.

"What's the matter? Really supposed woman that you just stopped talking?"

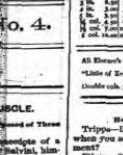
"That is Miss Pyke, editor of a fashion magazine."—Judge.

He Stops to Conquer.

Tripps—Do you always pick up a pin when you see one lying on the pavement?

Flipps—Oh no! Fact is, I don't mind telling you a secret. I didn't pick up a pin at all. You see we are right in front of Miss De Cash's house and her rich old father is watching me from the front window. I simply went through the motion of picking up a pin and putting it in the lapel of my coat in order to impress him with my regard for economy. He is very close, you know, and I'm planning to ask him for his daughter's hand in marriage.—Chicago Herald.

THE WEARING OF THE GREEN.



Pat (to parrot, who has just finished whistling "God Save the Queen")—Begorra, it's a dale o' thrubble I've got her green fifteen on yez, if yer was a canary, I'd twist yer head off yer wee.—Life.

Her Oldest Boarder.

A young Washington man boards at a house where the table is often (as happens) has secured fame through poverty. Recently he changed his quarters, taking up his residence in a room that had been occupied by a medical student. The landlady was showing it to him, when, opening the closet, a skeleton was disclosed. "Ah," said the young man as he grasped the bony hand, "I am glad to meet you. Doubtless you are one of the life-long boarders that Mrs. — so frequently refers to."—Washington Post.

Had Seen It.

Western Senator (enthusiastically)—Gen'l Greeley's report on the climate of Texas beats the Bible hollow. Simply tiptop. Glorious! He proves by official records that we enjoy one of the finest and most equable climates in the world, sir. Bound to boom this section, sir; can't help it. Have you seen the report?

Western Cowboy—Yes; I found a copy of it in the pockets of a stranger who froze to death last night.—N. Y. Weekly.

His Strong Point.

Hunter (to countryman)—What kind of a dog is the one you have?

Countryman—Why, he tried him at every thing but foxes, and he was no good at any of 'em. He'll be a no good at any of 'em. He'll be a no good at fox hunter, but he must be good for foxes."—Texas Siftings.

Cause for Worry.

Wife—What kept you so late to-night?

Cashier (Free, Easie & Co.)—I couldn't make my cash account balance.

Wife—What was the matter?

Cashier—Too little cash, of course. Do you suppose I'd have counted three over hours if there was too much, do you?—Good News.

No Arrests.

Indignant Citizen—Don't you see those two boys down there smoking cigarettes? Why don't you arrest them?

Policeman—Can't do it, Mr. Timmy, one of them is my son and the other is your son.

Citizen—I'm—er—very pleasant weather we're having.—Good News.

All Right for the Mask.

Crookphiz (who is going to a masquerade and is a little short of funds)—Can't you give me a good face to costume and a mask?

Costumer (after a survey of his customer)—I don't think it would do for a costume, but it will be all right for the mask.—America.

The Result of Silence.

Figgs—Why is it you're dressed up so? You were flying very low when I saw you last.

Biggs—Rich aunt died, and mentioned me handsomely.

Figgs—So you think you must put on a million airs, eh?—Harper's Weekly.

Commerce vs. Literature.

Caller—Your son has wonderful literary talent, and I think it a pity he should go to work in a store. Why don't you make a writer of him?

Hostess—If I were sure his uncle would make him his heir I would.—Good News.

COPYING THE MASTERS.

Stud

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE. | A. L. FORCE
Editors and Proprietors.

THE BANNER.

Equal and exact justice to all the people, regardless of class, creed or condition, remains to be the political corner stone of Democracy, and the very essence of the system of government established by the Constitution of the United States.

As unfaltering advocate of that grand bulwark of popular rights and freedom, Democracies have ever opposed the many and sinister connected schemes of partisan opponents to render the general public good secondary to mercenary greed.

That is the glorious and earnest purpose of the Democratic party.

Through the fierce political storms of a hundred years its banner inscribed "the rights of the people" has been heavenly borne aloft, despite of all efforts made to trail it in the dust.

Parties bearing various names, but animated by the common intent of destroying Democracy, have arisen, boastfully flourished for a time, and then dropped out of sight.

Yet the banner of Democracy is still upheld and now more triumphantly than ever.

And it will continue victorious, because the permanent welfare of the people, not a favored portion, is its conquering sign.

No party in this country can stem the tide of enmity to popular rights. It may have at the helm egotistic and adroit politicians, but, as sure as sunrise, the rocks or popular anger will eventually dash it into atoms.

Political, like all other branches of history, is wont to repeat itself.

OFFICES TO BE FILLED.

The Legislature which assembled last week will have a number of important offices to fill, either by appointment by the Governor and confirmation by the Senate or by joint meeting of the two Houses. The latter body will select the Comptroller and State Treasurer, Commissioners of the Sinking Fund and various Judicial Justices and Commissioners of *Deeds. The Governor will ap*point a successor to Henry J. Butler, Supervisor of the State Prison, who has held over since last year. The following appointments will also be at the disposal of the Governor during 1891: State Board of Health, Ezra M. Hunt, May 1; State Board of Charities, Isaac H. Dutcher, April 18; Board of Pharmacy, William R. Laird, June 1. The following offices he may make "with the advice and consent of the Senate": A Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals in place of Martin Cole, April 10; also a Judge to fill vacancy caused by the death of Hugh McGregor until 1892; a Clerk in Chancery in place of Allan L. McDermott, March 29; A Keeper of the New Jersey State Prison in place of John H. Patterson, April 22; three members of the State Board of Assessors in place of Alexander G. Cattell, May 1, Abraham J. Rowand, April 6 and Ferdinand H. Wisner, April 6; a Judge of the Jersey City District Court in place of Alfred E. Dayton, March 31. Visitors to Agricultural College—Wilson D. Haven, Abram T. Sergeant, Oliver Crane and William M. Force, April 15. The Comptroller and Treasurer's terms expire and March. The Comptroller, by virtue of his office, is also a member of the following Boards: Trust and Agency of the State Library, Public Schools, State Board of Education, Commissioners of the State Library, Commissioners of Railroad Taxation, Commissioners of Savings Banks, Commissioners of Agricultural College Fund and Board of Trustees for the State Institute for Deaf and Dumb.

NEW JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, Monday night, Senator Ege put introduced a bill to remedy the grave abuses that has been fostered in some of the weekly installment life insurance companies. The bill prohibits companies from issuing policies on children under ten years of age and for such violation imposes a fine of $600.

Senator Winton introduced several bills to give to municipalities governed by commissioners supreme police and judiciary powers, enabling an expenditure of $25,000 annually on roads if the voters approve.

Senator Wurts offered several game bills, including one to forbid trout fishing except from March 1 to July 15.

Senator Foster introduced a bill requiring farmers to pay a license fee of $10 a year before shipping products to be sold on commission.

President Abrahm put in a bill which, if passed, will mark an important departure in the criminal proceedings of the State. It permits county law judges to sit by mutual agreement. At present Supreme Court Justices preside.

In the House Speaker Berger appointed his Committees which are of the usual unsatisfactory. Both branches will get down to solid business at once.

Gov. David B. Hill, of New York has been elected for United States Senator. A splendid choice.

With such able representatives as Robert Adrian for President of the Senate and James L. Bergen Speaker of the House, the Democratic Legislature of New Jersey ought to make a proud record.

Democratic Victory Parade.

The Somerset Bowling Club visited Fanwood Monday night and hooted the second game of their series with the Fanwood alleys. The Fanwoods evidently were over-confident, bowling on their own alleys, so put up a team apparently by guesswork. The score:

Somerset.	Fanwood.
Vanderbeek 172	Bell 99
Hamblin 160	Hamlin 93
Voorhees 160	Hamlin 93
Wagner 160	Wagner 93
Kinney 160	Kinney 93
Hamblin 160	Hamlin 93
Van Winkle 160	Hamlin 93
Total 1,172	Total 558

"The laws of New Jersey were made for the protection of the people." The moral of this observation is in the application of it.

BRANDED AGAIN IN OPEN COURT.

THOMAS W. MORRISON AS VIEWED FROM A LEGAL STAND-POINT.

Counselor Hoyle Makes a Scathing Denunciation of the "Journalist" for Trying to Shirk the Responsibility of the Libel—Morrison Described as a Traitor to His Friend, and Likened Unto a Thief—"Hardest of Injustice", "What Art to Boss, to Lay"; Some of the Terms Applied—Let Mr. Ross Hill Claim Him as a Friend, and Mr. Lindabury Attempt a Defense.

The Most Remarkable Letter Ever Up to the Evidence in the Suit Against Robert W. Rice.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., January 17.—Great would have been the disappointment to the spectators at the Court House, yesterday morning, if they had not got what the famous libel case to a court died; yet not only curtailment but absolute extinction of the highly interesting event was threatened. When the evidence had all been rendered and the case was declared closed, the Court announced that owing to the near approach of the hour when it was most important on the counselors a time-limit, and apportioned to them one hour each. Thereupon, after a vain effort to secure a postponement of the case, Counselor Hoyle arose and, with a voice that could be heard distinctly in every part of the room, addressed the jury as follows:

The literary at the bar is finished in mahogany and furnished with mahogany book cases built along the walls and filling the corners. The parlor is framed in very and gold, and the dining room is oak. The centre pieces in the rooms on the lower floor, from which hang the chandeliers, are of papier mache. The upper floors contain innumerable bedrooms, dressing rooms and large closets. From the bath room shutter forty soiled clothing is direct to the laundry. There is absolutely nothing wanting in the house from billiard room to butler's pantry. The piazzas are to be all finished with soapstone surfaces in pale tints.

Architect Smith has kept the cost of all this, within $15,000. It hardly seems possible to those who have seen the house outside and in, and many of those who have had to pay for hooked stuff for the upholstering of the house have found it. But it is so. Mr. Smith has just begun a house for Banker Clauson on Ninth street; has finished plans for a house for ex-Judge Stillman, is completing the House Alvah Clark's fine new residence at Somerville, and is also, just at present, building the Bergen Point club house, a large church at Watertown, N. Y., and a costly home for H. M. Flagler's private secretary, at Flatbush.

THE SHERIFF OFFERS THE CITY HOTEL HEMMED IN BY ROARING FLAMES.

An Entire Family Almost Burned to Death in Their Beds.

Special to THE PRESS.

WESTFIELD, N. J., Jan. 19.—At about 2:30 o'clock Sunday morning the dwelling house on the rear of the farm of A. A. Drake, on the Railway road, near Westfield, was discovered to be on fire. The flames had got under such headway that the roof was falling in when the inmates were aroused by the heavy smoke that became almost to suffocation. Max Kruchka, his wife and three children, succeeded in getting out of the burning building, but the escape of the children was slightly burned in the left side. Mr. Kruchka had his hair and whiskers nearly all burned from his head. He succeeded in saving one bed and a sewing machine, but lost all of his and his family's clothing. Mr. Kruchka had packed up his furniture preparatory to removing from the property. But the creditors' claims are getting so urgent, as to seriously retard the advancement of his projects.

Mr. Kruchka was very much popular, and successful lessee of the Hotel, has under consideration the leasing of the Sheridan House, Elizabeth. Mr. Kruchka is a most strongly loyal man, and in that city, where he himself-known and exceedingly well liked.

RESURRECTED THE BRIDAL BONNET.

Plainfield and Fanwood Society at a Merry Leiter Wedding Celebration.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Moore, of 371 Newark avenue, Elizabeth, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage Friday evening. Their spacious mansion was crowded from seven till ten, the hours of the reception. Mrs. Moore, wife of Col. James Moore, and mother of the groom, assisted in receiving. Many guests from New York, Philadelphia and Plainfield were noticed among the happy throng. The gifts were many and elaborate; the supper, under the personal direction of Rouse, was perfection every respect.

After the reception dancing was indulged in, to the strains of Kirsch's orchestra. The first number was led by Col. C. E. Moore of Fanwood, his sister, Miss Moore, who wore the bonnet which the bride wore to the altar twenty-five years ago.

A striking feature of the affair was the number of pretty ladies present. Particularly noticeable were Miss Stearns, Miss Bond, Miss Sherman, Miss Eliza Force, Mrs. Margaret Lewis of Philadelphia.

A WIFE SUES FOR DIVORCE.

Suit Her Relatives Are Questioned, and Legal Dissolution of the Unhappy Marriage Is Denied.

The trial of an interesting divorce suit, the principals of which are former Plainfield residents, was begun before Vice Chancellor VanFleet in the Chancery Court at Newark Monday.

Minnie M. Cornell, who resides in Baldwin street, brought suit to obtain a divorce from her husband, William G. Cornell, a photographer who is in business in South Amboy. Frank C. Wilcox, City Attorney of Newark, appeared for the plaintiff, and John Ulrich, of this city, for the defendant. Mrs. Cornell is an attractive woman of 30 years, and her beauty was heightened in nine years her senior.

The complainant said that they were married at Dunellen eleven years ago, and had resided at that place. Their married life for a time was a happy one, and then, either through scarcity of money or that he had tired of her, he left her, compelled to neglect. For weeks she had not given her enough to eat, she alleges, and when she asked for money she always refused to give it to her. In 1886, she was forced to leave him and go to the home of relatives in Newark. Several times since she left him he has called her to return.

The defendant denied every statement made by his wife, and said that she had left him because she had grown tired of him. He said that he had given her the best of everything, and he thought that some snake in the grass had lured her away.

Both counselor the complainant and defendant worked zealously in the interests of their clients; but the defendant, through the efforts of his attorney, counselor Ulrich, succeeded, and the divorce was denied.

"Nothing but nuts and bones."

In the language of the appropriate response of the Democratic Committee of Bedminster, following some of the Democratic victories in Somerset county. Democrats have been victorious of late, and they have been victorious in Bedminster, and they have been victorious in Somerset county, and they have been victorious in the State of New Jersey, and they have been victorious in the United States, and they have been victorious in the world, and they have been victorious in the universe, and they have been victorious in the solar system, and they have been victorious in the milky way, and they have been victorious in the constellations, and they have been victorious in the planetary system, and they have been victorious in the comets, and they have been victorious in the fixed stars, and they have been victorious in the nebulæ, and they have been victorious in the infinite, and they have been victorious in the eternal, and they have been victorious in the absolute, and they have been victorious in the unconditioned, and they have been victorious in the relative, and they have been victorious in the conditioned, and they have been victorious in the finite, and they have been victorious in the phenomenal, and they have been victorious in the noumenal, and they have been victorious in the ideal, and they have been victorious in the real, and they have been victorious in the positive, and they have been victorious in the negative, and they have been victorious in the subjective, and they have been victorious in the objective, and they have been victorious in the subject, and they have been victorious in the predicate, and they have been victorious in the copula, and they have been victorious in the major, and they have been victorious in the minor, and they have been victorious in the middle, and they have been victorious in the conclusion, and they have been victorious in the premises, and they have been victorious in the syllogism, and they have been victorious in the induction, and they have been victorious in the deduction, and they have been victorious in the analysis, and they have been victorious in the synthesis, and they have been victorious in the analogy, and they have been victorious in the hypothesis, and they have been victorious in the theory, and they have been victorious in the law, and they have been victorious in the fact, and they have been victorious in the experiment, and they have been victorious in the experience, and they have been victorious in the observation, and they have been victorious in the reason, and they have been victorious in the understanding, and they have been victorious in the sense, and they have been victorious in the perception, and they have been victorious in the consciousness, and they have been victorious in the unconscious, and they have been victorious in the subconscious, and they have been victorious in the mind, and they have been victorious in the soul, and they have been victorious in the spirit, and they have been victorious in the ego, and they have been victorious in the self, and they have been victorious in the non-ego, and they have been victorious in the matter, and they have been victorious in the force, and they have been victorious in the energy, and they have been victorious in the motion, and they have been victorious in the rest, and they have been victorious in the space, and they have been victorious in the time, and they have been victorious in the cause, and they have been victorious in the effect, and they have been victorious in the relation, and they have been victorious in the quantity, and they have been victorious in the quality, and they have been victorious in the modality, and they have been victorious in the category, and they have been victorious in the judgment, and they have been victorious in the reasoning, and they have been victorious in the concept, and they have been victorious in the percept, and they have been victorious in the sensation, and they have been victorious in the object, and they have been victorious in the subject, and they have been victorious in the absolute

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - City Editor.

—Oh, move the freight house!

—The Ester Index is boosting Leon Abbett for the Presidency of the United States.

—Hookman James Farley, who was so seriously ill with pneumonia, is out of the Hospital and is doing well.

—The annual meeting of the Grocers' Protective Association, of this city, which was to have been held Thursday, is adjourned until the 29th inst.

—Jas. Buckley succeeded and locked up in the jail at Elizabeth, Friday, by delinquent tax collector Nash of this city; for not paying his poll tax.

—When a man starts sliding down hill, everybody seems ready to help him on his descent. If you don't believe it, ask that disconsolate man from over the brook.

—It is reported by the White House Monitor that the Central New Jersey railway company dismissed 1,000 men last Monday for refusing to work on the Sabbath.

—The conductors of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad have begun to take vacations. A new order gives each man six days to himself without deducting his time.

—The Central New Jersey railway company is repainting its cars, and many new ones are being put in service. By spring the entire rolling stock is expected to be remodeled.

—George W. Rockefeller is the latest one to be taught the lesson of how foolish it is to expect to build up a business without advertising. His big branch store on Somerset street has been closed for want of patronage.

—At a meeting of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association Directors, held Monday night, Messrs. Wm. B. Cushing and B. Frank Coriell were appointed delegates to a convention called to meet in Trenton, Jan. 27th, for the purpose of organizing a State League.

—A year ago everybody was disconsolate, everybody was complaining, that there was no ice. Now there is an abundance of ice of the choicest kind, and everybody who needs ice is gathering it. But what is heard? Anything? No; poor man seems destined forever to have that way. Somehow, he thinks he is entitled to the earth and the fullness thereof; when he gets it he takes it as a matter of course, and when he cannot get it he complains. Such is man—poor man.

—The storm of Saturday caused considerable trouble by the breaking of the telegraph and telephone lines. The storm caused a great deal of trouble in all the telegraph offices, and for hours telegraphic communication between Plainfield and other cities was very uncertain. The telephone service was also very seriously interrupted by the almost constant ringing of the arrangement in favor of burying all wires under ground.

—Some people were opposed to the appointment of ex-Union county detective last year, because they could see no special advantage in having such an officer, and because it was naturally feared that the salary of a detective would be all he ever actually employed" would run up a big bill of expense for the county to pay. It was believed that from $1,000 to $1,200, including salary and expenses, would be the cost, and it is therefore gratifying to learn that Mr. Keron's bill for the first year, just closed, amounts to only $683.

—It is a well-known fact that the farmers' clubs and county boards of a circulars throughout the State are flourishing, as a rule, and taking a very active interest in everything agricultural. The State exchanges show, by the full and interesting reports they contain, that the farmers are becoming more interested in such publications and in the prices of their products or the cost of transportation. With deeper and broader knowledge of the fundamental principles of agriculture they unite a more intelligent perception of public policy which affects their interests. The farmers themselves are to be congratulated, and so is the State of New Jersey.

AMPHION HALL NO MORE.

Soon Its Name Will be Changed and It Will be Remodelled Into First-Class Billiard Rooms and Bowling Alleys, With Bar, Restaurant and Roof Accommodations.

Joseph B. Miller, of Miller's Hotel, has leased Amphion Hall, on West Second street, for a term of five years. He will take possession in two weeks and begin extensive alterations.

The "hall" will never be known as a ball again. It will be fitted up with first-class bowling alleys and billiard tables. There will be a bar, but it will be conducted as a resort for gentlemen. Rooms will be furnished for lodges up stairs. The store at the right of the entrance, opening on to Second street, will be made a cafe and restaurant.

The name will also be changed. It is not yet decided, but the title "Elkwood Hotel" has been favorably thought of. It will open on March 1.

Public Installation.

At a regular meeting of Norah Dove Encampment, No. 38, I. O. O. F., Thursday evening, the newly elected officers were installed by D. D., G. P., Wm. V. D. Rolfe and staff, of New Brunswick. The following are the officers for the ensuing term:

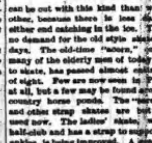
H. P.—Wm. L. Jacobus.
S. W.—John E. Williams.
J. W.—Abraham Woodruff.
R. Scribe—Lewis R. Bischoff.
F. Scribe—Chas. S. Finch.
J. W.—Levi C. Elliss.
Treasurer—Abraham Woodruff.

The Rev. Dr. Raymond Will Not Accept.

The New York Observer of Jan. 8, in its letter from Boston, has the following statement, which, however, is but partly so:

"The Central Church rejoices in the acceptance of the Rev. Andrew VanVranken Raymond, of the Fourth Presbyterian church of Albany, N. Y. He is the son of the Reformed pastor, the Rev. H. A. Raymond, who has been well-known in the ministry of Central New York for the past fifty years."

THE PRESS is authorized to state that Mr. Raymond has refused the call of the Central Church at Boston, and will remain in Albany.



FANCY FIGURES

can be cut with this kind than with any other, because there is less danger of either cutting or catching in the lace. There is no demand for the old style steels nowadays. The old-time "saucer," on which many of the elderly men of today learned to skate, has passed almost entirely out of sight. Few are now seen in Plainfield at all, but a few may be found around the country home ponds. The "swoop-back" and other steep styles are in favor. The graceful ability that indicates a knot of vital force. The "fancy figures" are the ones to cut. To do is often a dry, hard cough. Right bridge, no cutting; left bridge, one cut; grape vine and pair. What shall be done to ward off disease which is making such fearful inroads upon the human family? Let me tell you! Get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and use it in accordance with it. There is nothing like it to build up a broken down system, when troubled with indigestion and sleeplessness, or lingering

PERSONALS.

F. A. Denham and T. L. Lodtman, of this city, have gone on a trip West.

The ball of the Jeffersonian Club of North Plainfield Monday evening, was a grand success.

William E. Mosfett, son of Councilman and Mrs. Simeon D. Moffett, of this city, was married at Aberdeen, Pa., on Tuesday.

Mayor Corbett will give the next of a series of popular talks to Sunday school, at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, Thursday, February 12.

The Rev. Dr. Hanlon's case of the State vs. Hanlon for contempt in the raising of $25,000 for Pennington Seminary, of which he is President.

Three children, whose given names are Florence Grant, Grover Cleveland and Benjamin Harrison, were baptized last Sunday in the Methodist church at Belvidere.

At the Eighteenth Annual Meeting of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture, to be held at Trenton, next week, Chancellor P. Ripley, LL. D., will speak on "Agricultural Improvement."

—That knowledge is dear bought, which is paid for by experience." Not always. The experience which teaches THE DAILY PRESS is the best kind; newspaper reading only two cents.

Grand Chancellor John Ulrich and a staff of Grand Lodge officers, including brethren Flannery and Jones of this city, conferred the initiatory degree on Volunteer Lodge, Knights of Pythias, Elizabeth, Thursday night.

Arthur G. Carpenter, of this city, is taking a second teacher's course at the Grand Conservatorio at New York. Besides having a large class of pupils, Mr. Carpenter is the composer of several pieces for the piano and the organ.

A large gathering of friends assembled Jan. 14, at the funeral services of Lydia H. DuPuy. She was a patient, uncomplaining sufferer and the third member of the family who has entered into rest within the last fifteen months. "She is not dead, but sleepeth."

Mrs. Elizabeth Stevens, mother of Mrs. James Brand, of this city, died yesterday at the residence of C. J. Noel, Netherwood. She was in the 94th year of her age. Mrs. Brand commenced a visit Monday to the death bed of her brother, Gen. M. B. Hewson, at Washington, D.C.

The New York World has this to say of a young Plainfielder who has recently departed from us on a trip around the globe: "George Wotherspoon has just returned from Australia, where he spent a year and a half, managing Gillette Bros' Tramway." In that remote region of the earth. The play was successful. According to Mr. Wotherspoon, it made $2,500 a week in Australia."

The semi-annual convention of the retail merchants of New Jersey, including the local grocers' associations, was held at Trenton on Jan. 14. Gen. Jos. G. Miller, a fellow, of this city, was elected President for the ensuing year. The delegates from Plainfield were J. A. Smith, J. F. Mosher, Dr. Dunn, Dr. Dunn, Jr., and other candidates in the field for the office of President, but although Mr. Rockefeller declined the nomination, he was elected by a large majority.

The Standard, a weekly insurance paper published at Boston, in its report of a recent meeting of the New England Insurance Exchange, speaks of a fireman Plainfielder, C. M. Goddard, as follows: "The Executive Committee then reported the appointment of C. M. Goddard to be Secretary, succeeding Oliver P. Clarke, resigned. The appointment was ratified. Mr. Goddard has been electrical inspector of the Exchange for the past year; and such has proved himself a man of exceptionable ability, and has shown qualifications which seem to fit him for the important position devolving on the office of Secretary."

A DISTRICT COURT FOR PLAINFIELD

And a Bill to Abolish Justices of the Peace.

Senator Marsh, of Union county, it is said, about to introduce a bill in the Legislature doing away with the present system of District Courts for each county, and substituting instead District Courts, one for every city in the State of 6,000 inhabitants. This would establish District Courts in the cities of Elizabeth, Plainfield and Rahway in Union county. It is also proposed to abolish the office of justice of the peace, and transfer their powers to the District Courts. The expenses of the present District Court in Union county is by the city and county of Elizabeth, although the rest of the county furnishes a majority of the business transacted in it.

A Good Winter for Skaters.

All the hardware and sporting goods dealers who handle skates were glad to see the cold weather come. All the skates that could be raked up were in the city exhibition in windows and showcases. The demand has been lively. For three Winters past the skate market has been very dull, and accumulated until the demand died and almost out of style. There are no new style skates this season, but those of year before last and others have been brought to order. The Lapell blade they are within the reach of all. The American club skate seems to be in popular demand. The Acme and other makers of good ones are ready to fill the order of public favor. The American club, which sold for $8 when it first came out, several years ago, can be bought for $3 today. Skates which used to be manufactured on the other side of the water can be made here very much cheaper now. The patents on several of the best styles have expired, and other manufacturers are going in for making them. The double-ender skate, which was introduced last year, seems to be very popular. More

A Fearless Speech by Dr. Lewis.

The mid-week meeting under the auspices of the Reform Club, in Reform Hall, Thursday evening, was well attended. President H. Newton Spencer presided, Samuel A. Haines conducted the devotional exercises, and Horace Martin led the singing.

The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis delivered the address of the evening entitled "Social Purity and the Saloon in Relation to It." With his accustomed ability and great orderliness of mind he handled the subject thoroughly, minutely uncovering the outcrop of the underlying evil, picturing what starting effect the terrible havoc wrought by it on human kind. He earnestly appealed for increased and fervent prayer. His remarks commanded profound attention.

President Spencer followed with a few appropriate words in response to which several stepped to the Secretary's table and signed the pledge.

—Lehigh Valley and Jersey Central coal trains, in order to make schedule time, have been reduced 40 cars; and freight trains also have been made shorter.

—Jersey City has a Mclopolis, and spells it the same as Plainfield's is spelled.

—Mr. John Tier wants the public that standing on the pavement in front of his store is private property.

—Mr. Roger's Chapel.

A Pastor's Sacrifice.—Dr. Hugo Bilgram, of the village has been a victim, [illegible]

A THOROUGH SUCCESS.

Music Hall Crowded With Well Pleased People Upon the Occasion of the Boys' Association Entertainment.

There was never a more delightful entertainment than that which filled Music Hall, Tuesday evening. The complete success of the entertainment arranged by Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, in particular, and the public spirit of their friends and visiting councils. The grand officers of the State were present with their ladies, and also large delegations from Somerville, Elizabeth, Scotch Plains and Flemington.

The Gilbert Dramatic Society have every reason to feel flattered by the reception accorded their first appearance here. They rendered "Mixed Pickles" most creditably. James Gordon Darling is to be greatly admired as an actor. He has not his peer on the amateur stage, and but few equals among the professionals. Miss Ida Parkhurst was also excellent, and the other members of the cast filled their parts satisfactorily.

The play was well staged and costumed. The orchestral music rendered any that has been heard in Music Hall in years. The audience was unanimous in their praise of the whole affair, and it is safe to say that many years pass the Arcanum by name, at least, will be dear to the hearts of last night's gathering.

The Plainfield Orchestra instituted in Boston in 1877 with nine members and by careful, judicious management has grown until it now stands at the head of the Fraternal Orchestras of the organization in the country and is gaining in popularity every year. At present there are over thirteen hundred and forty Councils in the Order of Royal Arcanum, and when the Supreme Council meets in Boston in 1892 with nine and twelve thousand, and over fifteen million dollars has been paid to the widows and orphans of deceased members.

The fraternal principle of the Royal Arcanum is charity, and the constitution provides that, should any member in reduced circumstances, through no fault of his own so that he could not keep up his payments, the Council shall take care of his interests and protect those dependent upon him. The Plainfield Council has acted upon this, so that in case of his death at any time, no matter how long deferred, his family will receive what is due them.

Plainfield Council was organized in October, 1882, with twenty-five members, and its prosperity is due to the energy displayed by its officers and members. The spirit of true fraternity pervades throughout the Council, and a sick or needy brother is not without that friendly help which is so acceptable in the hour of distress.

The list of members of Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, includes the following: Wm. H. Cushing, Jr., Geo. W. Endicott, M. D., A. C. Vail, Seymour Marsh, Townsend S. Hann, Alexander Stewart, Jan. 14, Dr. Jos. G. Miller, Chas. C. Moore, W. S. Lowry, W. L. Titsworth, H. A. Thorne, E. W. Conklin, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, S. C. Baker, I. C. Dunham, Jr., Dr. W. T. Dunn, Dr. Jos. Jr., E. E. Anthony, D. E. Titsworth, J. Hallock Drake.

A. M. Griffen, A. T. Shotwell, F. L. Forbes, Rev. E. M. Rodman, Wm. J. Leonard, H. M. Stockton, S. F. Dunn, Robt. L. Livingston, J. M. Bellman, Benjamin Hann, Jr., S. Miller, Frank D. Titsworth, Harold Serrell, Benj. M. Day, C. A. Livezey, John E. Stewart, Peter A. Emmons, Edward L. Morris, Rowland M. Stewart, H. F. Cartell, Karl W. Polak, E. S. Lamberton, W. H. Drayton, John H. Ostlibert, Thos. R. Cone, L. F. Belcham, R. C. A. Wottmann, J. G. Staats, C. W. Cleveland, Rev. J. Reginbo, Rev. L. V. Raymond, David Boedeker, Wm. C. Burt, Wilbur Randolph, Jr., H. Sayre, Jr., Wm. S. Miller, R. B. Remsen, D. W. Littell, J. F. McDonald, Horace M. Sherwin, John Ulrich, Henry S. Mason, Geo. M. Griffin, Geo. E. Bannister, Chas. H. Sherrerd, W. A. Wynkoop, F. Buckle, Lemuel B. Woolston, Daniel S. Horton, H. M. Demarest, Herbert W. Stover, John S. French, Andrew W. Johnson, Samuel I. Mitchell, Charles Van Winkle, Charles B. Corwin, Albert L. Force, Emil Messersmith, F. C. Kirchhoff, Augus W. Kleinecke, W. H. Brokaw, Monroe H. Channing, Emil Drews, Harry B. Dunn, Rev. Edward Love, John F. Emmons, O. L. Jenkins, M. D., Frank Hall, Jr., Wm. Hafferr, J. J. Feytel, Geo. Studer, Peter B. Bennett, Robt. B. Lowry, Wm. P. Arnold, Francis H. Gardner, Jas. R. Phillips, John Leal, Fred. M. Potter, Garret Van Winkle, Jas. H. Van Winkle, John H. Tier, Jr., Wm. T. Banks, David N. Force, Joseph L. Moore, John Valtier, John Meriett, Jr., John L. Stackford, Ira F. Riker, Stewart A. Shann, Wm. J. Ford, Chas. W. Kellogg, Thos. H. Barthdale, Thos. L. Graham, Edward H. Ball, Jr., Rev. E. B. Coe, Jr., M. E. Wayton, Harrison Coddington, A. W. Winckler, E. E. Winckler, David A. Bowman, Daniel C. Adams, Thos. H. Hardy, Thos. E. Hazell, J. A. Demarest.

The Shotwell Verdict.

As was recorded exclusively in THE PRESS Monday, the jury in the suit of William H. Shotwell against Frederick Rice brought in a verdict, at quarter past four o'clock yesterday afternoon, finding Rice guilty of libel and assessing damages at $1 costs. Those versed in the law say that a verdict in which such small damages are awarded does not carry much in the sense of the Court, but that both Rice and Shotwell have to pay the costs of their own side of the case. This makes heavy damages for both plaintiff and defendant, but as Mr. Shotwell sought only a vindication, said as the verdict gives him that, he seems to be satisfied. The fact that the case was tried on paper is a boon to the world to publish promptly the news of the verdict emphasizes the statement that if you see it in THE PRESS you see it for the first time.

A Farewell Speech by Dr. Lewis.

The mid-week meeting under the auspices of the Reform Club, in Reform Hall, Thursday evening, was well attended. President H. Newton Spencer presided, Samuel A. Haines conducted the devotional exercises, and Horace Martin led the singing.

The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis delivered the address of the evening entitled "Social Purity and the Saloon in Relation to It." With his accustomed ability and great orderliness of mind he handled the subject thoroughly, minutely uncovering the outcrop of the underlying evil, picturing what starting effect the terrible havoc wrought by it on human kind. He earnestly appealed for increased and fervent prayer. His remarks commanded profound attention.

President Spencer followed with a few appropriate words in response to which several stepped to the Secretary's table and signed the pledge.

—Lehigh Valley and Jersey Central coal trains, in order to make schedule time, have been reduced 40 cars; and freight trains also have been made shorter.

—Jersey City has a Mclopolis, and spells it the same as Plainfield's is spelled.

—Mr. John Tier wants the public that standing on the pavement in front of his store is private property.

—Mr. Roger's Chapel.

A Pastor's Sacrifice.—Dr. Hugo Bilgram, of the village has been a victim, [illegible]

A DELIGHTFUL EVENING.

Everybody at the Fourth Private Social of the Season Pleased With the Entertainment and Dancing.

The fourth private social of the season was held at Crescent Hall, Wednesday evening, and was a most delightful affair.

Despite the inclemency of the weather the city is being favored with this season, the people still were assembled and have every reason to be grateful to the patronage bestowed upon Glee Club and Orchestra, which have come to learn how far to set the time in their life and give a concert in Plainfield's Gotham. These talented men first made a bow to the Plainfield public on Dec. 4, 1889, and have already established much of interest concerning them.

The Club is composed of twenty-one members and its concerts are among the principal musical events of the social life of Plainfield. The Club was organized in the Fall of 1887, and it has not given regular concerts since 1887. The Club's organization in Elizabeth is on the same basis as the Metropolis Club and the Choral Society of this city. There are no tickets sold and only the associate members receive any.

The conductor is Arthur H. Wooster who has led the Mendelssohn Glee Club for Winter while Mosenthal was in Europe. He is the conductor of the Montclair Vocal Society, the Glee Club of the Orange Athletic Club, the Crescent Athletic Club, the Glee Club and the choir that he has charge of in New York, as already stated in this Paper, is the highest paid in the country.

Tickets for the concert here can only be procured of the following Plainfield patronesses:

LIST OF PATRONESSES:

Mrs. James L. Lathbury, Mrs. DeWitte G. Trine
" Chas. B. Brooks " W. T. Eastman
" Robert H. Hubbard " F. L. Stevens
" Wm. Blodgett " Chas. Sawyer
" Daniel L. Dunn " Jos. G. Miller
" Irving R. Brown " T. Logan Murphy
" G. A. Chapman " J. P. Mann
" Edward Dalgleish " Chauncey Rainbow
" Martin I. Conley " Joseph P. Mason
" Norman Cox " G. N. Fowler
" George F. Dupee " E. C. Perkins
" M. B. Edgerton " D. W. Pond
" Wm. H. Sayre " W. L. Lewis
" Howard Fleming " Walter E. Stewart
" A. M. Runyon " W. W. Sterling
" S. A. Baines " H. M. Stockton
" S. A. Robertson, Jr. " George Thomas
" C. D. Edgerts " Jas. Van Cleaf
" Dan'l Runnington " C. D. Wadsworth
" Charles Hammond " Wm. Pitt Farnsworth
" F. O. Herring " O. T. Witherspoon

Mrs. C. T. Wells

HYMENEAL.

Joy—Hollon.

The marriage of James Richard Joy and Miss Emma Prentice Mellon took place in the Methodist Episcopal church Tuesday night at 7 o'clock. The church was thronged with invited guests, and the wedding was a brilliant society event. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Charles Bayard Mitchell, pastor of the church, assisted by the Rev. Herbert Heath, of Dunellen Station, N. Y. The bride was attired in a costume of white satin, with feathered trimmings, wore a long bridal veil, and carried a bouquet of bride's maids roses. She was escorted to the altar on the arm of her father, James McGee, and was attended by her bridesmaid, Miss Alice H. Joy, of Groton, Mass. Following her came the groom and the best man," Dr. Ellis W. Hodges, of this city. Preceding the bridal party were the ushers—Messrs. Frederic Joy, of Detroit; Clifford W. McGee, of Plainfield; George A. Sanderson, of Boston; Emil Schultze, of New York; Johnathan Barnes, of Springfield, Mass.; and James H. Hallock, of Plainfield.

Messrs. Sanderson, Schultze and Barnes are Yale classmates of the groom, class of '85.

The groom is well-known in journalistic circles, and is now in the editorial office of the New York Tribune. The bride's father is a former President of the New York Produce Exchange.

The bride was given away at the altar by her father. After the marriage ceremony the guests re-assembled at the home of the bride's parents, where a reception was held from half-past seven to ten.

The music at the marriage was rendered by Miss Jessie Utter, who, at the organ, played the wedding marches. The altar decorations were of calla lilies, and were very beautiful.

Present Scarcity and Erewhile Assemblyman.

(From The Wayfield Leader.)

Frank Banks, Plainfield has become an object of so much interest at Trenton since his late phenomenal run in Union county that his likeness is said to be found in almost every office in the State House.

Foster M. Voorhees, the able young lawyer and statesman of Elizabeth, earned his first fifty cents by dropping corn on a hill for Frank Banks, and he did it well, showed himself a master of his instrument. He played with a rich mellow tone, accompanied the singer with perfect and executed Nocturne, as an encore, was exquisitely played. Gustave D'Agoin was better in the selection from La Traviata, than in the bird song with Miss Howe. The tone of his flute was cloudy, and in the latter selection the two performers did not understand one another. Mr. Rudolph Hoffman, Emil Drews, Harry B. Dunn, Rev. Edward Love, John F. Emmons, O. L. Jenkins, M. D., Frank Hall, Jr., Wm. Hafferr, J. J. Feytel, Geo. Studer, Peter B. Bennett, Robt. B. Lowry, Wm. P. Arnold, Francis H. Gardner, Jas. R. Phillips, John Leal, Fred. M. Potter, Garret Van Winkle, Jas. H. Van Winkle, John H. Tier, Jr., Wm. T. Banks, David N. Force, Joseph L. Moore, John Valtier, John Meriett, Jr., John L. Stackford, Ira F. Riker, Stewart A. Shann, Wm. J. Ford, Chas. W. Kellogg, Thos. H. Barthdale, Thos. L. Graham, Edward H. Ball, Jr., Rev. E. B. Coe, Jr., M. E. Wayton, Harrison Coddington, A. W. Winckler, E. E. Winckler, David A. Bowman, Daniel C. Adams, Thos. H. Hardy, Thos. E. Hazell, J. A. Demarest.

Newfell—Smith.

As announced exclusively in THE PRESS of Thursday, a pretty home wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, on Watchung avenue, on Thursday, the contracting parties being their daughter, Lizzie T. Smith, and Mr. William R. Newfell, son of ex-President Elmore D. Moffett, of the Plainfield City Council. The bride-groom is an employe of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The bride is a daughter of the late John and Allegtown. After the ceremony a reception was held and then the couple started on an extended wedding trip.

Almost Turned to a Pillar of Ice.

A singular accident occurred on Madison avenue, yesterday morning, the result of which was extremely disagreeable, though not fatal. A prominent resident, who has a place of business in New York, was about to water his chickens before leaving for the city, when suddenly his foot slipped on the hose and he was thrown violently to the ground, bruising himself severely, and receiving the contents of the water pail from head to foot. His clothing was instantly frozen and have not yet been found, though a reward was immediately offered for their recovery. Unfortunately, the gentleman is absolutely without a change of clothing, and is standing in his garden calling for assistance, nearly frozen, and hoarse from shouting, until rescued by some charitable person and led into the house.

—Jersey City has a Mclopolis, and spells it the same as Plainfield's is spelled.

—Mr. John Tier wants the public that standing on the pavement in front of his store is private property.

—Mr. Roger's Chapel.

A Pastor's Sacrifice.—Dr. Hugo Bilgram, of the village has been a victim, [illegible]

PLAINFIELD VOCALLY UNSATISFIED YET.

A Second Concert Desired by Many Who Were Disappointed at the First.

Despite the inclemency of the weather the city is being favored with this season, the people still were assembled and have every reason to be grateful to the patronage bestowed upon Glee Club and Orchestra, which have come to learn how far to set the time in their life and give a concert in Plainfield's Gotham. These talented men first made a bow to the Plainfield public on Dec. 4, 1889, and have already established much of interest concerning them.

The Club is composed of twenty-one members and its concerts are among the principal musical events of the social life of Plainfield. The Club was organized in the Fall of 1887, and it has not given regular concerts since 1887. The Club's organization in Elizabeth is on the same basis as the Metropolis Club and the Choral Society of this city. There are no tickets sold and only the associate members receive any.

The conductor is Arthur H. Wooster who has led the Mendelssohn Glee Club for Winter while Mosenthal was in Europe. He is the conductor of the Montclair Vocal Society, the Glee Club of the Orange Athletic Club, the Crescent Athletic Club, the Glee Club and the choir that he has charge of in New York, as already stated in this Paper, is the highest paid in the country.

Tickets for the concert here can only be procured of the following Plainfield patronesses:

LIST OF PATRONESSES:

Mrs. James L. Lathbury Mrs. DeWitte G. Trine
" Chas. B. Brooks " W. T. Eastman
" Robert H. Hubbard " F. L. Stevens
" Wm. Blodgett " Chas. Sawyer
" Daniel L. Dunn " Jos. G. Miller
" Irving R. Brown " T. Logan Murphy
" G. A. Chapman " J. P. Mann
" Edward Dalgleish " Chauncey Rainbow
" Martin I. Conley " Joseph P. Mason
" Norman Cox " G. N. Fowler
" George F. Dupee " E. C. Perkins
" M. B. Edgerton " D. W. Pond
" Wm. H. Sayre " W. L. Lewis
" Howard Fleming " Walter E. Stewart
" A. M. Runyon " W. W. Sterling
" S. A. Baines " H. M. Stockton
" S. A. Robertson, Jr. " George Thomas
" C. D. Edgerts " Jas. Van Cleaf
" Dan'l Runnington " C. D. Wadsworth
" Charles Hammond " Wm. Pitt Farnsworth
" F. O. Herring " O. T. Witherspoon

Mrs. C. T. Wells

HYMENEAL.

Joy—Hollon.

The marriage of James Richard Joy and Miss Emma Prentice Mellon took place in the Methodist Episcopal church Tuesday night at 7 o'clock. The church was thronged with invited guests, and the wedding was a brilliant society event. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Charles Bayard Mitchell, pastor of the church, assisted by the Rev. Herbert Heath, of Dunellen Station, N. Y. The bride was attired in a costume of white satin, with feathered trimmings, wore a long bridal veil, and carried a bouquet of bride's maids roses. She was escorted to the altar on the arm of her father, James McGee, and was attended by her bridesmaid, Miss Alice H. Joy, of Groton, Mass. Following her came the groom and the best man," Dr. Ellis W. Hodges, of this city. Preceding the bridal party were the ushers—Messrs. Frederic Joy, of Detroit; Clifford W. McGee, of Plainfield; George A. Sanderson, of Boston; Emil Schultze, of New York; Johnathan Barnes, of Springfield, Mass.; and James H. Hallock, of Plainfield.

Messrs. Sanderson, Schultze and Barnes are Yale classmates of the groom, class of '85.

The groom is well-known in journalistic circles, and is now in the editorial office of the New York Tribune. The bride's father is a former President of the New York Produce Exchange.

The bride was given away at the altar by her father. After the marriage ceremony the guests re-assembled at the home of the bride's parents, where a reception was held from half-past seven to ten.

The music at the marriage was rendered by Miss Jessie Utter, who, at the organ, played the wedding marches. The altar decorations were of calla lilies, and were very beautiful.

Present Scarcity and Erewhile Assemblyman.

(From The Wayfield Leader.)

Frank Banks, Plainfield has become an object of so much interest at Trenton since his late phenomenal run in Union county that his likeness is said to be found in almost every office in the State House.

Foster M. Voorhees, the able young lawyer and statesman of Elizabeth, earned his first fifty cents by dropping corn on a hill for Frank Banks, and he did it well, showed himself a master of his instrument. He played with a rich mellow tone, accompanied the singer with perfect and executed Nocturne, as an encore, was exquisitely played. Gustave D'Agoin was better in the selection from La Traviata, than in the bird song with Miss Howe. The tone of his flute was cloudy, and in the latter selection the two performers did not understand one another. Mr. Rudolph Hoffman, Emil Drews, Harry B. Dunn, Rev. Edward Love, John F. Emmons, O. L. Jenkins, M. D., Frank Hall, Jr., Wm. Hafferr, J. J. Feytel, Geo. Studer, Peter B. Bennett, Robt. B. Lowry, Wm. P. Arnold, Francis H. Gardner, Jas. R. Phillips, John Leal, Fred. M. Potter, Garret Van Winkle, Jas. H. Van Winkle, John H. Tier, Jr., Wm. T. Banks, David N. Force, Joseph L. Moore, John Valtier, John Meriett, Jr., John L. Stackford, Ira F. Riker, Stewart A. Shann, Wm. J. Ford, Chas. W. Kellogg, Thos. H. Barthdale, Thos. L. Graham, Edward H. Ball, Jr., Rev. E. B. Coe, Jr., M. E. Wayton, Harrison Coddington, A. W. Winckler, E. E. Winckler, David A. Bowman, Daniel C. Adams, Thos. H. Hardy, Thos. E. Hazell, J. A. Demarest.

Newfell—Smith.

As announced exclusively in THE PRESS of Thursday, a pretty home wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, on Watchung avenue, on Thursday, the contracting parties being their daughter, Lizzie T. Smith, and Mr. William R. Newfell, son of ex-President Elmore D. Moffett, of the Plainfield City Council. The bride-groom is an employe of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The bride is a daughter of the late John and Allegtown. After the ceremony a reception was held and then the couple started on an extended wedding trip.

Almost Turned to a Pillar of Ice.

A singular accident occurred on Madison avenue, yesterday morning, the result of which was extremely disagreeable, though not fatal. A prominent resident, who has a place of business in New York, was about to water his chickens before leaving for the city, when suddenly his foot slipped on the hose and he was thrown violently to the ground, bruising himself severely, and receiving the contents of the water pail from head to foot. His clothing was instantly frozen and have not yet been found, though a reward was immediately offered for their recovery. Unfortunately, the gentleman is absolutely without a change of clothing, and is standing in his garden calling for assistance, nearly frozen, and hoarse from shouting, until rescued by some charitable person and led into the house.

—Jersey City has a Mclopolis, and spells it the same as Plainfield's is spelled.

—Mr. John Tier wants the public that standing on the pavement in front of his store is private property.

—Mr. Roger's Chapel.

A Pastor's Sacrifice.—Dr. Hugo Bilgram, of the village has been a victim, [illegible]

A SHORTER ROUTE TO NEW YORK.

Plainfield Soon to Be Connected by Rail With South Plainfield.

New Railway To Be Known Next Month.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company has secured the necessary franchises to run in Jersey City, Newark and Western Railway through Bayonne, as already reported in THE PRESS. The road will run from Newark Bay to West Sixtieth street, Bayonne, running along the western side of that street until it leaves the city. It will cross the Central Railroad of New Jersey, and after a few blocks will cross the Central Railroad of New Jersey overhead, terminating at the shores of New York Bay. From Newark Bay a bridge will be built upon a grade with some settlements for a roadbed. Without the passage of an ordinance just authorizing it to dispense the solemn grade, it would have been necessary to build a bridge across Newark Bay several feet higher than now will be required. Engraving will be great in the company.

A special train, containing Superintendent James Donnelly and other officers and members of the road, will go over the road, ran over the new route from South Plainfield to Newark, a distance of twenty-one miles, Wednesday. The train left South Plainfield at 10 a. m. and was completed. The new route will be opened for passenger service Feb. 2. It shortens the distance from South Plainfield to New York considerably.

BRADLEY WANTS TO SELL.

Willing to Dispose of the Beach Front at Asbury Park.

James A. Bradley, the founder of Asbury Park, has offered to sell to the borough the entire beach front from Ocean Grove to Deal, the village, the Avenues, and Sunset Lake, including St. John's Island. Mr. Bradley has for several years owned the riparian rights at the beach, having purchased them from the State. During an informal talk with the other members of the Town Board of Commissioners Mr. Bradley stated that his price for the property was $150,000, and never system would be less than 150,000.

Mr. Bradley stated that in case the terms accepted by the Board of Commissioners he would always enforced on the beach must be continued, and that there must be no "cheap John" shops or stands on the ocean front. The property is a most considerable favor, as many property owners have always claimed that the ocean front should belong to the people. The Board of Commissioners has appointed a committee to canvass the town, secure the views of the cottage owners, and see what Mr. Bradley's lowest price will be.

Last Summer Mr. Bradley posted placards on the beach stating that it cost him $5,000 annually to maintain the beach and board walk. The storms of last Fall damaged the board walk to the extent of $20,000.

A Multifarious Family.

How many Tottens are there in Somerset county? There is never a term of court that one does not bob up serenely as a juror, a plaintiff, a defendant, or a witness, and sometimes a half-dozen of them appear in a bunch. As the same one rarely shows himself twice there seems to be no end of them.

Jonness-Miller Industry for John H. Prentis.

Articles of incorporation were filed with County Clerk Cornell at Elizabeth, Wednesday, by the Jonness-Miller System and Pattern Company of Plainfield. The incorporators are Edward Miller, of Plainfield, and Annie Jonness-Miller and Herbert VanDyke, of New York city. The firm has a paid-up capital of $10,000.

Plainfield Literally for Tramps.

Three bold bad tramps who made themselves too free going about from house to house in Plainfield hold-up men, called at Mr. Cone's front door, yesterday, were promptly arrested and sent to jail for from twenty to forty days. One of them had served a term in State Prison for burglary at the North avenue railway station.

Assigned to His Son.

Helon R. Cone, wholesale dealer in groceries, canned goods, and fruits at 83 and 85 Park place, New York, made an assignment Thursday to Thomas R. Coue, of Plainfield, without preference. The assignee is one of the oldest dealers in the city, having been in business upward of fifty years, nearly all of which time he was at 16 Fulton street. He removed to large quarters in the present location a few years ago. He said yesterday that his assignment had been caused by inability to collect from persons who owed him money. The assignee's statement of his assets and liabilities if about $50,000, with nominal assets of $60,000, the actual value of which would probably be about $42,000.

New Jersey Church Statistics.

That Department of the Census Bureau conducted by Dr. E. T. Devine, of North Plainfield has issued its first bulletin containing statistics of churches in the United States. There appeared 150 of these communications, and the first bulletin contains statistics of only fourteen. Of these but five have members in the State of New Jersey. They are the Primitive Baptists, Swedenborgians, Salvation Army, Life and Union Adventists, and Seventh-Day Baptists. There are six Seventh-Day Baptist churches in the State, one in Essex county, four in Hudson and one in Passaic, with a total membership of 676. The Salvation Army has four barracks in the State, one in Mercer county, one in Middlesex, one in Monmouth and the other in Passaic, with 156 communicants. The Adventists have only three meeting houses in the State. It is situated in Monmouth county and has a membership of only fifty-six. The Seventh-Day Baptists have four organizations in the State, two in Cumberland county, one in Middlesex and one in Union, with a total membership of 745. There are also 43 Swedenborgian congregations in the state, one in Cumberland county, three in Essex, one in Hudson and one in Passaic, with a total membership of 923.

One Man Now Occupies the Two Most Valuable Business Corners in Plainfield.

The sale of the property at the corner of E. M. Stelle, the pharmacist, to H. F. Reynolds, was consummated Thursday and the new owner took possession at once. This transaction completes the removal of the latter to his old stand at the corner of Front street and Park avenue; there he carried on the drug business for many years prior to his being succeeded by Mr. Stelle and to his opening at the corner of Park and North avenue two years ago. Mr. Reynolds has been established as a pharmacist in Plainfield for twenty-three years, and undoubtedly possesses the confidence and patronage of the best people in town. He will open a more extensive, profitable, than any other in the city.

His old business will remain in charge of Kate Reynolds, a most efficient manager and affable gentleman. The new business will be contin

FOR LITTLE PEOPLE

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

What shall you do in the year that is new,
Little one?
What shall you make it a happy new year to you,
Little one?

Shall you keep your heart full of sunshine, dear,
Though skies be cloudy and days be drear?
Shall you help the mother and lighten her care?
Be ready to listen to take your share?
Shall you try to make little ones happy and glad?
Be cheery and hopeful when others are sad?
Shall you aim to have its hold a little less
For those whom sickness or want enchains?
Shall your nerves be strong to endure and
And to follow the Master with willing feet,
Little maid?

If the year you do in the year that is new,
'Twill be truly a happy new year to you,
Little maid.

—Emma C. Bowen, in One Year.

BESSIE'S CALLERS.

They Gladdened a Little Sick Child's Heart Without Knowing It.

"Happy New Year, Bessie darling."

Mamma came into the room and kissed her little girl. Then she put back the kiss, but sat still, looking very mournful indeed.

Mournful on New Year's Day!

Yes, it seems a strange thing to tell of a little girl in a pleasant room, with the New Year's sun shining and bright fire into it. But when I tell you how it was perhaps you will not wonder.

She was just getting over the scarlet fever. She was feeling quite well, but was not yet allowed to go out of the one room.

This was bad enough, she thought, but it was not the worst of it. She had only little girls and boys she knew were going to call on each other this New Year's Day. They had promised to visit, and settled it just before she was taken sick. Their mothers all said they might, and had promised to let them have some nice things to eat.

And now, you see, as poor Bessie had had the scarlet fever, none of her friends only obliged to stay in the house, but some of the other children could come to see her the best they might take it.

"It's so dreadfully lonely," said Bessie, looking out of the window with a very doleful face.

Mamma talked to her, and told her stories, but after awhile she grew tired of them.

"I wonder where Posey is," she said. "She used to stay with me and play with me; but now she stays away somewhere all the time."

"So she does," said mamma. "She just comes at meal-time and gets her drink of milk, and then she goes away."

"I wish Nora would go and find her for me."

"I'll go, too," said mamma. "Perhaps she is out in the barn watching for mice."

Mamma went, and was gone a long time. Bessie got very tired of waiting. Some of the children who were going calling went by.

They waved their hands to her, and she felt more doleful than ever because she could not go too.

"And I don't have one single call, either," she said, with tears in her eyes.

Just then mamma came in with a very bright smile on her face.

"Bessie," she said, "you are going to have some calls, after all."

Bessie jumped up and down exclaiming:

"Omnama! Who?"

"Mrs. Tabbykins is bringing her three children to see you."

"Oh—I'd rather have somebody I know," said Bessie, who had never heard of Mrs. Tabbykins before. "But I'll say, 'Happy New Year,' the moment you open the door. That's the way they all do."

"Here they are," said mamma.

She opened the door, and Bessie cried:

"Happy New Year!"

Her callers were very polite, for they answered her at once.

"Meow—meow!"

"Me-e-e-e-e!"

"Meee-e-e-e!"

"Meow-meow!"

Bessie gave a scream of delight. In walked Madam Puss with three little kittens.

"Kittens!" exclaimed Bessie. "Tiny, soft, fuzzy kittens. Oh, you darling little things! Where did you find them, mamma?"

"Nora found them in the hayloft," said mamma. "We had quite a hunt for them."

"A gray one, and a spotted black-and-white, and this dear little white one."

"No wonder Posey stayed away with three cunning babies to take care of," said mamma.

And when evening came Bessie said to her mother:

"I think I've had the nicest New Year calls in the world!"—Youth's Companion.

ISSIE'S FIRST PARTY.

A Little Girl Who Thought She Must be Quiet Like She Would at Church.

Issie's mamma was very busy about dinner one day when Cousin Stella ran in and asked if Issie could go to school with her that afternoon. "Marion Palmer is going to take her company, and I want to take some one," Stella said. Mamma was afraid Issie would make a disturbance, but Stella told her they had played school and Issie did not whisper once. So mamma was willing for her to go, after taking great pains to make her understand that she must not whisper or speak aloud. She said she would try and obeyed, and won much praise for her good behavior.

A day or two later Issie was invited to a party, and although she knew nothing about such affairs, she felt very big in one, and she chatted about it nearly all the time until the day arrived. Uncle Ned asked the privilege of taking her, as he was going to her father's office.

At last she started, and then we began to wish we had gone with Issie. Finally, we saw her coming with Uncle Ned, who had a queer, puzzled look on his face. We could not imagine what Issie gave a jump into her arms, crying out: "I was a good girl, mamma, better than anybody else, for I didn't whisper, nor talk out loud."

Then Uncle Ned sat down on the doorstep and laughed. When he could get his breath he said: "Well, I'm glad I know what's the matter; for that child hasn't opened her mouth to me all the way all the afternoon!"

Mamma did considerable explaining to have Issie see the difference between school and party, but it was not clear to her then.

A little later she went to school again with Stella. The next morning all her dolls were taken out and seated in a row on a sadden there came such a horrible noise from her corner that mamma was frightened, and ran to see what could be the trouble. There was Issie throwing her dolls around, and shrieking and screaming at the top of her voice.

"Why, Issie, what are you screaming so for?" mamma asked. "It's the reason you're dumb. If they have at school."

After the "dumb" was over, and the dolls were again in their seats, she sat quietly for a few moments and then got up and went to her mother, saying: "The school is over, and the party was recess, I guess!"

Uncle Ned thought she deserved a box of candy for thinking it out by herself, so he bought her one. But will soon in old enough to go to school and really understand those things better.—Edna Gwynn Warren, in American Agriculturist.

Business Man.

Wife—Dear, do you want to know how to save five dollars?

Husband—Yes.

Wife—Well, buy that lovely sealskin sacque of Mrs. Hankbury. It costs one hundred dollars and she will sell it to me for half that she paid.

Husband—I have recently bought it and exchanged it for a seventy-five dollar overcoat.—Once a Week.

A HANDKERCHIEF HAT.

The Queer Hair-Dressed Women Who Wander About With Paper Pins.

The half-breeds of the West Indies are called the finest mixed race of the Antilles. They are the result of a blending of three colored women and men imposes one by their dignity of carriage and graceful walk. They are tall, perhaps being the shoulders; the perfectly set torso makes the strain right, yet the step is a full stride, and that which weighs is poised spiritually on the very tip of the bare feet. All, or nearly all, are without shoes, and the tight grasp of a handful of naked foot makes a great whispering sound over the pavements.

A HALF-BREED WOMAN.

But what astonishes the most novel impression on the stranger is the singularity and brilliancy of the head-dress of the women. They have developed at least a hundred years ago by a curious sumptuary law, regulating the dress of the most selected people of free condition, a law which allowed considerable liberty in the head and stuck, prescribing only form. The coiffure especially is striking.

It is only as immense Madras handkerchief, which is folded about the head with admirable art, like a turban, one height and, pushed through at the top in front, being left sticking up like a plume.

Then this turban, always full of bright canary color, is fastened with great golden or silver brooches, one in front and one at either side. The remainder of the dress is an embroidered, low-cut chemise with sleeves; a skirt or jupe, quite short in front and very long behind, but caught up and fastened in front below the breasts so as to bring the hem everywhere to a level with the end of the long chemise; and finally a silken kerchief thrown over the shoulders.

A WOMAN OF RANK.

These kerchiefs, however, are bright crimson, bright yellow, bright blue, bright green, lilac, violet, rose, sometimes mingled together in plaidings, or checkerings, or stripings; black with orange, sky-blue with purple. To this display add the effect of nearly all curious jewelry, immense earrings, each pendant being formed of five gold cylinders joined together, the cylinders sometimes two inches long and one inch at least in circumference.

THE ADMIRAL DUPERRE.

A Great French Ship Heavily Armored and Well Armed.

A notable French armored ship of the first class is the Admiral Duperre, so named for M. Duperre, and differs materially from that country's other ships of the same class. She has a complete belt of very thick armor from stem to stern—greatest thickness twenty-two inches, tapering to the inches at the extremities, with a thick deck (see inches) at the top of the belt in the usual manner. But above this belt there is no armored coast-line, as there is in the other ships, the chief armament, of four forty-eight-ton guns, being carried in four elevated barbettes, two of which are well forward, and project through the forward bulwarks, so as to fire efficiently as bow-chasers and at the same time to command all round the forward hemisphere. The main deck is although without armor defense, is not without armament, as it carries fourteen five and a half-inch sixty-pounder rifled breech-loaders.

THE ADMIRAL DUPERRE.

The Boy with One Cog.

It is delightful to think how much fun a bright and healthy boy can get out of one cent. He bought a sled top. After awhile he remembered that he had seen in the toy shop some tops painted green, and he went back and exchanged the red top for a green one. Later he thought that he didn't want a top after all, and he carried back the green top to exchange it for a sled. But the man at the store refused to take another cent to be a waste of space to tell what he did with the canny, but it may be mentioned that he took the empty box and carried back to the toy shop and offered to exchange it for a full one. This, however, was a little too much for the man in the shop-keeper, who said: "We do every thing we can to please our customers, but we only give whistling for boxes."

FROM YOUTHFUL MINDS.

—"Hulla, Johnnie! How do you like living in a flat?" "Well, there are only the banisters, though."—Harper's Young People.

A School Boy—"I want a racer." Seminary Dealer—"Racer?" School Boy—"Yes, one of them rubber things to rub mistakes out with. Ma calls 'em teacher sees 'em."—N. Y. Good News.

—One night in August Jennie noticed for the first time the moon and the lesser world. She suddenly turned to her father, saying: "Papa, I never knew the stars sang before." "Indeed!" Comments.

—A couple of twin boys were taken into their mamma's room the other day and questioned with regard to the duties upon their new little brother with great earnestness for a time, and then inquired, with much anxiety: "But mamma, where is the other one?"—Boston Advertiser.

—Rita was riding one day on a very crooked road that went winding and twisting up hill and down hill in an eccentric fashion of its own. At last little Rita folded her small hands, with much resignation, saying: "Well, I never did saw such a curly road."—Courier-Journal.

—"Why, Issie, what are you screaming so for?" mamma asked. "It's the reason you're dumb, if they have at school."

After the "dumb" was over, and the dolls were again in their seats, she sat quietly for a few moments and then got up and went to her mother, saying: "The school is over, and the party was recess, I guess!"

Uncle Ned thought she deserved a box of candy for thinking it out by herself, so he bought her one. But will soon in old enough to go to school and really understand those things better.—Edna Gwynn Warren, in American Agriculturist.

Business Man.

Wife—Dear, do you want to know how to save five dollars?

Husband—Yes.

Wife—Well, buy that lovely sealskin sacque of Mrs. Hankbury. It costs one hundred dollars and she will sell it to me for half that she paid.

Husband—I have recently bought it and exchanged it for a seventy-five dollar overcoat.—Once a Week.

AN ALTRUISTIC CLUB.

It Embraces the Noblest Temperings of Mankind.

A Band of Public-Spirited Men Who Are Interested in the Problem of Life, and the Betterment of Social Conditions.

In the department of "Social Tendency" in the Cosmopolitan Edward Everett Hale tells of a Boston club to which I belong, and which has for its members, of which is expressed in this article of its constitution: "This club exists to find out other clubs." Mr. Hale, after describing the original plan, which was to have but twelve members, like the twelve, Mr. Hale tells how the club was finally brought into being.

"What we did," he says, "was to bring together a dozen men who had been made by accident, and then take our chances of adding other people. We were interested in Dr. Howe's work, and its social system—always glad if in making a good choice, as far as other qualities went, we got in a new occupation.

"But for the purpose of finding out some other plan, to which we could go, we went to see. That is, the first committee the club appointed, and it was a large one, was instructed to go. They sent a lot of young fellows down to quarantine to come up in an enlarged tug and see the ships and the sailors. In just the same lines, from that day to this, we have let men volunteer to form committees for the sake of seeing that we did not know any thing about.

"For instance, we had a committee on the Chinese and Worship in Boston. We had a committee on the Italian section, one on the Chinese section, one on the city's orphan asylums, one on all the hospitals, one on our Norwegian population. That one had a most interesting meeting than when an intelligent Norwegian gentleman came to read a paper. He had a wonderful collection of Scandinavian roses among us, being kind enough, as I remember, among other things, to bring us some of the biscuit and sardines which I think some of us had ever seen before.

"Now, you may say so far as this in indulging your curiosity without going further. If you are good for any thing you begin to find the same relationships that my ideal John, out in the territory of Franklin, forms as a matter of course with the human barrel-driver with the washer-woman. You not only know by sight the people with whom you are brought in, but you come into personal relationships with them.

"If there happens to be a bright boy living with a family in the side of your office, and you happen to make acquaintance with him one day, that acquaintanceship does not drop off. You and he get on a more cordial footing with each other; you have gained a friend and he has gained another.

"How clear it is that it is this sort of give-and-take which is necessary for the quickening of the public life, for making the circulation from organ to organ what it should be, for the health of the whole body politic. I do not want to be carried away by a metaphor, but really Manchester Agrippa's fable, with St. Paul borrowed to such advantage, afterward, tells perfectly. You have a healthy body if each part is in close and intimate relation with each other part, if the circulation is good and if the circulation is well oxygenated.

"The object of this present writing is to show people who are discouraged that their business is to bring in that public spirit into souls and organs where there is not enough of it, so that the life of that organism may be more active, cheerful and strong. Now, this is done, not easily by attacking a ward meeting once a year, but by genuine and cordial intimacy with all sorts of people.

"Exactly as everybody in a country village knows more or less of the ups and downs of forty or fifty households around him—exactly as the life of one person quickens or helps the life of another person, so in such a community it is the power of man or woman living in Chicago or New York to be in such relationship that he shall know about every social condition of life, enlarged, magnified, and, as Mr. Arnold says, penetrated by the intimacy.

"Just so soon as the Christian church or the ethical philosophers or any of the disciples of altruism bring about this state of things, so soon will this country take up again the line of march on which it began. This is the line of march which historically is called the Teutonic, German or English plan. In it every one pushes his own canoe, but is in friendly relations with the people on the bank. Every one has his own master, but is in friendly relations with people who know more than he does.

"And when the administrators of the government look for something to do with such a fleet they find that, on the whole, it is taking care of itself. People who doubt about such a state of things are invited to remember with how little apology the founders of this country fared while dear Garfield lay dying. Or, if their memories run back to the year '15, they are invited to remember how well the people of Kansas got on twelve months when they had no government that they would acknowledge."

Affiliate Bird.

Ex-Governor William G. Sterett of Dallas, Texas, and Mr. Louis Lange, Globe-Democrat: "While on a fishing and hunting expedition on the Atlantic coast in North Carolina, my attention was attracted by the shrill and frantic cries of a mocking bird. As I looked up I saw a bird resembling a hawk striking the gull under its claws, when down came a bird and the pirate bird after it. The fish had not gone from the mouth of the pirate bird had it in his stomach. Then he went for the mocking bird, displaying rapidity, and descending equally quick, struck the screaming gull on the back with such force that the contents of its stomach were forced out of its mouth and this pirate caught it in the air as it fell. This fight took place at the pirate with my shotgun and brought him down."

CONSCIENCELESS DEADHEADS.

Instances Which Put the Railroad Companies to Considerable Annoyance.

There is a class of "deadheads" which are imposed upon all railroad companies, and which, though it causes conductors, brakemen or other employes much trouble in watching for them, to see that every one of the kind gets passage does not run off with them, but cause much expense and trouble to the railroad officials, is rarely if ever mentioned. The expense of telegraphing and the extra labor of employes in connection with this class of "deadheads" is something enormous in the total for a year, and the railroads are already more annoyed than "thanks" from the thousands who inquire about them—provided that the particular road they are on has not removed their name from the list. Each railroad would probably pay him dreds of dollars into some charity fund which could be used for the relief of children in need, and stockholders would feel grateful for an extra dividend; but the evil will probably not be removed until humanity demands over into a more perfect form than it is to-day. The "deadheads" referred to are railroad passages, universities, parsons, head-bags and handsome dressed young ladies might be enumerated, that are left under the seats in the cars, or dropped upon the floor, and no one knows, whoever or whatever it may be, has ever questioned the honesty of railway conductors, brakemen, baggage-men, water-boy, porter or cleaners of cars, let him go to any station at the terminus of all railroads and see the vast number of people who come to obtain packages enclosed in letters by trains for them, and found by the conductors and then delivered at the central office "to be called for," by N. Y. Tribune.

Teacher—Do you read Aesop?
Teacher—Do you make that over to mean that you read it once in a while? Teacher—Why, no.
Teacher—Well, that's what he's called sometimes.

Tommy—Shakespeare says "All the world's a stage."
Teacher—Yes.
Tommy—Later supported the world.

Teacher—Mythology says so.
Tommy—Well, then (triumphantly), who held up the world?

ORATOR IN THE ROUGH.

An Evangelist to the Mountaineers of Virginia.

THE MAN WITH A MISSION.

His Originality of Expression and Fervent Belief Created Wonder Among a Rude Audience.

Rev. Joseph C. Wells, of Big Stone Gap, Va., is a Baptist preacher of great power, who exerts the principles of Christianity every where he goes, and is instrumental in the conversion of many souls. He has settled his life in their own dialect, for the people would not know that he knows no other. He is a man of great mental man in the group of which he consisted of his athletic proportions, and to make up, the mountains rather lend it, so that he is the Chief of the clan. He has a unique character. He can sway his hearers at will—can move them to tears or stir them to the highest pitch of enthusiasm; yet he himself can barely read and write and has confined his knowledge of the Bible and a few short religious books. He has never come in contact with the world outside of his own mountain home, has never visited even Bristol, the nearest town to where he lives, has never been in a railway train and has only seen until very recently when a new road was run close to his homestead. He has, however, gone all over Virginia and large crowds throng to hear him wherever he goes to preach. He has been asked to go to homes from place to place and never refuses to answer a call, whether it be to preach a couple who can ride or afford to give him a fee, to visit the sick, or to exhort sinners to repentance. He knows every road and every path in the mountain country and is familiar with the least frequented by-paths, as well as the principal roads which traverse the highlands. He does not follow the apostolic maxim that "those who preach the gospel should live of the gospel," for his scanty living is eked out by hard work on the little patch of ground which surrounds the one-roomed log cabin in which he and his family live. The largest amount of money he has received in any year for his services is $75 and his average yearly receipts are under $50. He loves his work, no when he met the prominent citizen in the road.

"YOU HAVE SHOWED GROSS LACK OF RESPECT."

"Why, mussy on me, this ain't you, Colonel?"

"Yes, I reckon it is," the Colonel answered.

"Why, when I left you was about dead."

"Yes," said the Colonel, "and if you hadn't left when you did, I should have been dead, sure."

"This here is mighty strange, I must say," said Beal.

"Yes, it is strange that you didn't kill me, but Gill got there just in time."

"Is you willing to swear to it?"

"Of course I am."

"All right; I'll want you in a day or two."

Several days later the Colonel was summoned to appear as a witness before the court, and when he entered was surprised to find that Dr. Gill had been arrested.

"What is this man charged with?" the Colonel asked.

"He is charged," said the justice, taking his seat and opening court, "with attempting to destroy the reputation of a man that has lived in this community for many years. I refer to Dr. Beal."

"Your honor" said the young doctor, "I have never said a word that would reflect upon the character of the gentleman, and I defy any one to prove that I have."

"Oh, you ain't said nothin'," old Beal broke in, "an' nobody says you have. It was Lord God that made ye 'n' God that you've scandalized all yo' shameful life! Yes, you'll tuhn then in yo' old age, when yo' days hev' been, 'n' yo' airthly frens hev left ye. But oh, my brethern, why don't ye tuhn anow—this day—the angel is nigh? Is'n' God God ? trust." Come anow while yo' children kin ye. Come anow while yo' wife is right a heah to stind teahs o' joy with yo'. Don't wait—don't put it off—fo' yo' next yeah will do. For the yeahs go by 'n the night cometh—h praps you'll wait too long, my brethern. Is'n' noth'n' befo' you but exhalstin' night."

Street Railway Mileage.

In street railway mileage increase during the last ten years Chicago heads the list with 104.31 miles; Boston a good second, with 100.86; and New York, third, with only 66.55. In percentage of increase Minneapolis comes first, Milwaukee second, Detroit third and Chicago fourth. In "Lord" Boston seventh and New York sixteenth on the list. In total mileage Philadelphia ranks first, with 338.47 miles; Boston second, with 309.86; Chicago third, with 184.78; and New York fourth, with 177.16. Ranked by cracklers, Boston stands first, with 268.61 miles; Chicago second, with 265.80; and Boston third, with 229.47.

"DOCK" BEAL.

How He Knocked Out a Professional Rival.

HAMILTON BEAL was an exceedingly wicked man in his youth. He lives in the Missouri River bottoms, and, having attained early in life the reputation of the swamp hog, decided to practice medicine, and for years he held uninterrupted sway in the community known as Popolo Cane, and was feared by all. He was finally "squashed" down into the belief that men of their principal aims in life was to be constantly surrounded by him. In his daily practice he did not discriminate between man and animal. He would order a dose of pills for sheep as readily as he would upon a township constable, but for this, we do not think that any one has blame.

Recently a new doctor made his appearance in the neighborhood, but of course met with no recognition. Old "Dock" Beal hooted at him and told the people that the new doctor didn't know as much as he should send for the fellow. One day a prominent man was taken violently ill, and Dock Beal was called to him, declared that he was beyond recovery.

The old "doc" was glad of this fatal illness, not that he had any thing against the prominent citizen, but he knew he might now have a chance to settle forever the prospects of the interloping young physician. Accordingly he advised the wife of the prominent man to send for Dr. Gill. The young doctor came, glad that he had at last found an opportunity to exercise his skill, and a few days later the prominent citizen was declared to be out of danger. Old Beal had been out of the neighborhood and was returning home for the money that is in it, but for the good he can do to his fellow men and women.

THE CHURCH IN THE MOUNTAINS.

This apostle of the mountains was born fifty-eight years ago almost on the spot where his little log cabin now stands. When he married the mother of his ten children, he being eighteen and she a few months younger, his father deeded him a slice of the old farm and he built with his own hands the log cabin which is still his home. Betsy was a Kentucky girl who came to Big Stone Gap on a visit to a married cousin and there met the young son of the mountains fell in love with heron sight. Her parents were sorely grieved at her choice. While her husband was away on his missionary work his sturdy wife attended to the farm work and kept the children near her in the fields.

Mr. Wells could neither read nor write until after he was eighteen, when he was converted by hearing a sermon which had a great effect upon him. His present wife was his teacher. He studied it in the fields during intervals of work and his mother heard his lessons by the log fire at night. Here is a specimen of his march which historically is called the Teutonic, German or English plan. In it every one pushes his own canoe, but is in friendly relations with the people on the bank. Every one has his own master, but is in friendly relations with people who know more than he does.

"And when the administrators of the government look for something to do with such a fleet they find that, on the whole, it is taking care of itself. People who doubt about such a state of things are invited to remember with how little apology the founders of this country fared while dear Garfield lay dying. Or, if their memories run back to the year '15, they are invited to remember how well the people of Kansas got on twelve months when they had no government that they would acknowledge."

Affiliate Bird.

Ex-Governor William G. Sterett of Dallas, Texas, and Mr. Louis Lange, Globe-Democrat: "While on a fishing and hunting expedition on the Atlantic coast in North Carolina, my attention was attracted by the shrill and frantic cries of a mocking bird. As I looked up I saw a bird resembling a hawk striking the gull under its claws, when down came a bird and the pirate bird after it. The fish had not gone from the mouth of the pirate bird had it in his stomach. Then he went for the mocking bird, displaying rapidity, and descending equally quick, struck the screaming gull on the back with such force that the contents of its stomach were forced out of its mouth and this pirate caught it in the air as it fell. This fight took place at the pirate with my shotgun and brought him down."

CONSCIENCELESS DEADHEADS.

Instances Which Put the Railroad Companies to Considerable Annoyance.

There is a class of "deadheads" which are imposed upon all railroad companies, and which, though it causes conductors, brakemen or other employes much trouble in watching for them, to see that every one of the kind gets passage does not run off with them, but cause much expense and trouble to the railroad officials, is rarely if ever mentioned. The expense of telegraphing and the extra labor of employes in connection with this class of "deadheads" is something enormous in the total for a year, and the railroads are already more annoyed than "thanks" from the thousands who inquire about them—provided that the particular road they are on has not removed their name from the list. Each railroad would probably pay him dreds of dollars into some charity fund which could be used for the relief of children in need, and stockholders would feel grateful for an extra dividend; but the evil will probably not be removed until humanity demands over into a more perfect form than it is to-day. The "deadheads" referred to are railroad passages, universities, parsons, head-bags and handsome dressed young ladies might be enumerated, that are left under the seats in the cars, or dropped upon the floor, and no one knows, whoever or whatever it may be, has ever questioned the honesty of railway conductors, brakemen, baggage-men, water-boy, porter or cleaners of cars, let him go to any station at the terminus of all railroads and see the vast number of people who come to obtain packages enclosed in letters by trains for them, and found by the conductors and then delivered at the central office "to be called for," by N. Y. Tribune.

Teacher—Do you read Aesop?
Teacher—Do you make that over to mean that you read it once in a while? Teacher—Why, no.
Teacher—Well, that's what he's called sometimes.

Tommy—Shakespeare says "All the world's a stage."
Teacher—Yes.
Tommy—Later supported the world.

Teacher—Mythology says so.
Tommy—Well, then (triumphantly), who held up the world?

Sun Shuttle—I wish I had appointed Mr. Harrison for a post-office or clerkship, or something of that kind.

Ferguson—Why should you wish that now? You would have been left in the cold.

De Smith (accepting his perspiring bosom friend)—Why, what's the matter with you?

Dudley—How was that—had they so much money?

Dudley—No. It was because the ballet dancers had so many trunks.—Washington Star.

Bagley—I'm going to throw the book-keeping business. Every letter I write, I have to look up the back files to see how I spelled the word.

Brown—How long?—Puck.

SIGNS OF GOOD BREEDING.

Certain Marks by Which the True Gentleman May be Known.

The habits that mark the true gentleman are not so difficult to acquire as to account for the comparatively small number who own them. The first one of these is a delicate consideration for others. For consideration flies at the root of the best breeding. It is that which blushes at hearing talking the gentle to remember to stand aside and let a lady precede him in entering or leaving a room, which keeps the gentleman from sitting while she is standing, whether in a public conveyance or in a drawing-room, which makes him mind the ageing of his actions by this same.

His course is always ready: "I never thought of it," "Why should she not stand as well as I?" or, perhaps, hardest to deal with: "What is the use of bothering about such things?"

To begin with, let it be roundly stated that no part of the toilet should ever be perfected in public.

All such operations as cleaning or cutting the nails, picking the teeth, removing the dandruff of the hair, the combing of hands, pulling out stray hairs from the beard or scalp, should be performed in the dressing-room and not in the street, not on the street, in the car or, boat, or in the drawing-room. Some men seem to think it a matter of right in scraping and paring their nails in the presence of their families assembled at the breakfast table if they perform the action with a perfunctory, "Excuse me, or, "By your leave." Others do it take the trouble to apologize even this slightly. And without pessimism it may be affirmed that only exceptionally do we see a man who does not pick his teeth after a meal, if not before guests or in a public restaurant, at least in the seclusion of his family. There are still households in which it is considered quite a mark of elegance to use a glass of toothpicks as the final course of a meal.

Very much from the above-mentioned "small vices," and from others of the same school, may be termed the first step in good breeding. Such avoidance is among the things a man ought to know and to practice. But there are other observances which go to give grace and finish to a man's demeanor. One of these is the prompt removal of the hat, not only on meeting an acquaintance on the street or on coming into the house, but at other times—in a horse-car, when, indeed, there is a lady, and when she acknowledges the kindness by a bow or word, in an elevator or hotel corridor when a lady or an is present, and when kissing a woman, be she only one's wife, sister or daughter.

Do all these items seem such trifles as to be unworthy of notice? Yet they are powerful agents in forwarding or destroying the happiness of a man's home, of the women thereof, and of every one else with whom he is brought into contact. Even if the "big brother, Man," does not clearly see the necessity, for his own sake, of yielding courtesy, may he not, as a concession to feminine weakness, make a slight sacrifice of his personal inclinations?—Harper's Bazar.

Railroads.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.
THE STANDARD RAILWAY OF AMERICA
PROTECTED THROUGHOUT BY THE Interlocking System and Block Signal System.

TRAINS FOR THE WEST.

On and after Oct. 26, 1890, trains leave Hoboken as follows:

For Washington, Baltimore and the West, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00 A. M., 12 noon, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.30 P. M. Sunday, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00 A. M., 12 noon, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.30 P. M.

For Washington, 10.00 A. M., 2.00, 4.00, 7.00, 8.00 P. M. Sunday, 10.00 A. M., 2.00, 8.00 P. M.

For Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, Columbus, Cleveland, and St. Louis, 7.00, 8.00 A. M., 12 noon, 2.00, 4.00, 8.00, 10.00 P. M. Sunday, 7.00, 8

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, JANUARY 29, 1891. No. 5.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well in its limitations as in its authorities."—Madison.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Notaries Public, Master in Chancery, Surrogate Court, and Special Agent of Pub. Service Co.
Office, Front Street, Plainfield, N. J.

W. V. STINER,
Counsellor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner, Notary Public, &c.
No. 256 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, N. J.

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box 184, Dunellen, N. J. Residence in rear of Con. Presbyterian Church, Dunellen.

DR. CHARLES H. THORN,
Dentist,
At West Front Street. A new local anesthetic is in readiness for extracting teeth without pain. Consultation free.

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 71, Bound Brook, N. J. Office, Arlington Hotel, Corner Second and Park Aves., West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention. Residence, 79 East Front st., Plainfield, N. J.

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
247 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 41 and 42, (Lamoreaux Building.) Residence, Park Building.) Residence, Plainfield, N. J.—[1y]

J. R. PRESTON,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office in A. & P. Bennett's livery stables, near Depot, Somerville, N. J. Calls by telephone promptly answered. Telephone connection with Plainfield. Residence, 79 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J.—[1y]

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VAN ARSDALE,
PIANO TUNER.
Instructions given in thorough order. Terms reasonable. Pianos and Organs for sale and to let. Organs, by permit, F. C. Mott Co. or left at Wilcox's Bookstore, No. 6 Park avenue will receive prompt attention. Residence, 79 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J.

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER.
Plainfield, N. J.
Residence and Shop No. 26 East 3d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. aply

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce,
of all Kinds,
FRUIT and VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON,
NO. 36 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered free to any part of the City.
A. LUTKINS. D. A. HUMMER.

G. W. FORCE,
11 West Front street.
Opening of
FALL AND WINTER STOCK
Boots and Shoes at Low Prices
A FINE STOCK OF GOODS TO SELECT FROM.
11 West Front street.
G. W. FORCE.

TO THE PUBLIC!
We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of
LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.
It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Mason' Materials at short notice.
A. D. COOK & BRO.

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
[Formerly Clerk's.]
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.
Repairing neatly and promptly done.

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones,
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments.
All work executed in the most artistic manner and of unsurpassed quality. Prices as low as reasonable as the same class of work can be executed at up.
J. MANNING.
Factory for marble in E. C. Co., Plainfield, N. J.
Monuments ordered by Consolidated Cemetery Assn. left at Factory.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
NO. 5 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of Ladies' and Gents' shoes always on hand, manufactured, of the best material.

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
Is the only legitimate successor of the old established
NO. 16 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will continue to supply customers with the finest grades of Fresh and Salt Meats, Fish of all kinds, Oysters, Clams, Game in season. Also the finest grades of Poultry. Orders left at the above stand or sent to their residence will receive prompt attention.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (Near R. R. STATION.)
JAS. R. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Second Meal. Firstclass Stabling.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-51-tf

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Cuyler Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. ROYCE, Proprietor.
First-class Station and Stage attached.
Meals at all (Reasonable) hours. 24tf

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President,
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice " NATHAN HAVENS, "
ELIAS B. POPE, Treasurer.
apl-tf.

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS
KEPT IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE.
ap8-tf

C.E. & J.W. BROWN,
[Successors to G. F. A. C. E. Brown & Co.,]
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tiles, Anaglypta, Hand, Lincrusta Salmon Flock Papers, &c. Mortgage for Walls, Manufacturers of Window Shades.
9-51

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables

Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coupes for Weddings, Parties and Prom's Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for Excursions.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure drives. Special attention given to horses to be kept by the day, week or month.—apl-tf
TELEPHONE CALL, No. 36.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to answer the needs of the public with reliable horses and vehicles. Orders or collateral of positively. Mr. Roberts or at Force's Hotel promptly attended to.

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor
Office—Vanderbeek's Hardware, Park & Front
The Accommodation Express will attend to the passenger carrying business of the city, delivering goods and baggage to and from the Depot, and all other places. Leaving of Furniture, Pianos, &c., at the lowest reasonable. Prompt attention. Orders left here or at Rickert's Livery Stables will receive prompt attention.

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The following first-class companies are represented in the
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York, as security to assure substantially indemnity against loss by fire to property insured in the companies represented.
NATHAN HARPER
Agent.

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represents other first-class Fire Insurance Companies. Agents of the Travelers Insurance Co., Dwelling Insured for one year. Plate Glass Insured. Rent Bonds Bought and Sold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale.
OFFICE:
S. E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS B. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
NO. 20 NORTH AVENUE,
Next door to Depot, Plainfield, N. J.
Orders called for and delivered. A share of the public patronage is most respectfully solicited.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mr. EDWARD E. HOWE,
OF NEW YORK CITY,
Will take advanced pupils for the PIANO
THURSDAYS OF EACH WEEK.
With kind consent of the Rev. Wm. R. Richards, 120 East Front street, address in his name. 1 4 m

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
At LaGrande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular courses will include Modeling, Drawing and Sewing. 9 12 tf

DODWORTH'S
CLASSES FOR
Dancing & Deportment,
Seminary Hall, Plainfield, N. J.,
Commencing Wednesday, Oct. 29, 1890,
From 3½ to 5½ P. M.
For particulars inquire of E. E. Kenyon, Seminary Hall, or THOS. J. DODWORTH, Residence, 1,130 Fulton Ave., N. Y. City.
10 2 6m

PAINTERS & PAINTERS SUPPLIES

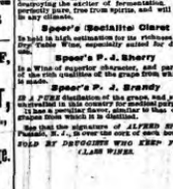
Paints, Varnishes, Glass,
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
ASWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
apl3

J. D. WOOLSTON. J. P. BUCKLE
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 20 NORTH AVENUE

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Carey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—24 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 295. Pianos moving a specialty. 21tf

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion. Also, Sherman for females, weakly persons and the aged.



Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the grape, fermented in casks, where it is left to ripen, and bottled before fermentation has ceased. Its invaluable medicinal qualities are Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being prescribed and used by Physicians of all schools, the purity and genuineness of this Wine is guaranteed by the signatures of the Analysts of Boards of Health who have examined it. The possession of these and the wonderful invalids use it to advantage. It is the only pure Wine that should be used and fortified and suited to the various palates that other Wines fail to satisfy.
It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED UPON.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the juice of the Oporto grape, preserved in its natural state, extracted as it runs from the press by filtration and electricity, thereby destroying the active of fermentation. It is a perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's (Socialitis) Claret is held in high estimation for its richness as a tonic. Taken with regularity and used for dinner
Speer's P. J. Sherry is a Wine of superior character, and possesses the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivaled as a fine cognac for medicinal purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grape from which it is distilled.
See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES.

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR,
The best cigar sold in the state, and made under the personal supervision of CLAUS HAVEMEYER, ESQ.
Also a full assortment of the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars, Cigarettes and Smokers' Articles in Great Variety.
Daily

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in CIGARS & TOBACCO
—SEGARS!—
A SPARK AVE., (NEXT DOOR TO SCHOOL ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials, of every description.
Thoroughbred "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, without preservatives, manufactured daily from the leaf.

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
[Successor to R. B. Maynard.]
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 20 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting done at their residences. Shaving, Shampooing, &c., satisfactorily Performed. 12tf

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Madison Avenue, cor. Front (2d Floor), Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on Consignment.

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Heat Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 19 SOMERSET ST. 9-15-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
20 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.
MODERN.

FOR GIRLS AND BOYS.

RODERICK, JAMES, AND ME.

From my window every day
I see Roderick, James and me,
Roderick, James and me go to play,
And then we come back to tea.

"Now, James," they said, "you must play with your toys,
And you, Roderick, good little, sweet little boys,
And we will make some noise."

We play with our toys and we play with our toys,
We make no noise for nearly a while,
Roderick, James, and me,
Then I fall right against the knocking-gong;
They fall right against the knocking-gong;
And we make a noise.

Then we found a pillow that had a rip,
And we made a hole in the rip,
Roderick, James, and me,
And we made a noise with the feathers one,
All over the room. Oh! wasn't it fun,
As the feathery flakes did fly!

But as to the end, we were scared and sad,
Papa and mamma came in, and found
Roderick, James, and me
Only sacrifice, because they sate.
And they put us all three right straight to bed without any tea.

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
[Successor to R. B. Maynard.]
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 20 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting done at their residences. Shaving, Shampooing, &c., satisfactorily Performed. 12tf

"MAMMA'S TRAMPS.

Little Boys That Both Away and Came Back Again.

Little Tod stood on the steps, rubbing his knuckles into his eyes. His breast heaved, and he was muttering to himself.

"Mamma's jus' too mean for any thing," he said. "May be I'm bad, but she needn't scold me so much, it I am bad."

He debated a moment, pushed open the door, and called out:

"Mamma, I'm going away."

"Well, good-bye, then," mamma said. But, won't ou 'tay 'ou 'ove I go?" asked Tod, not budging.

"I only kiss boys when they come and tell me they are sorry," mamma said.

"But I am sorry, mamma, awful sorry." The sobs came again, and with a little gasp.

"Oh, you'll be back soon enough," declared mamma, in a cloud of dust from her broom almost hiding Tod.

He stepped back, coughed and then closed the door. Now Tod was in disgrace, and he knew it. He had been mean, cowardly, willful, he felt that he had deserved a scolding, but was not ready to say so. He walked down the garden path with a big brother, only a year older, and nick-named "Bud," though he did not bear any resemblance to him.

"What's the matter?" asked Bud.

"Mamma 'bused me," declared Tod, with very little regard for the truth.

"That's a shame." Bud sympathizingly said. "Come on, Tod, we'll play sweeps'n' day doesn't come every day."

Bud had blossomed into pantaloons, but Tod still wore a frock, which added roundness to a figure already somewhat chubby.

"Bud, let's run away," Tod said.

The older brother threw his hands into his pockets, a skeptical look creeping into his face. The proposal had startling him somewhat.

"Mamma'll hurt us, an' bring us back, an' he kind to us," suggested Tod.

"Oh, she'll be glad sort of a mamma," replied Bud, under a qualm of conscience. "I 'spect we ain't as good as we might be, but I'm sure I don't know how to bring us back?"

That question rather upset Tod's calculations.

"Well, she needn't," he presently said. He gave his straw-hat a hail fellow-well-met kick, and began to whistle.

"Hold on!" cried Bud. "I'm going with you."

Out of the garden, through the orchard, and across the meadows they went. Bud was beginning to enjoy the adventure, and proceeded various plans of finding a willing listener in contrary little Tod.

"There's an old bark hut in the woods, said Bud. "We'll stay one night in that."

"No!" cried Tod, in alarm. "A big bear might—"

"Nonsense!" interrupted Bud. "There ain't no bears around here."

"Isn't this jus' splendid!" Tom cried, as they neared the wood.

The shadows were cool, the moss was like a velvet carpet, and leaves fluttered sleepily. All bright flowers relieved dusky green here and there. A rabbit sprang out of the underwood, a squirrel chattered on a whirled limb, and a jaybird dropped a blue feather right in front of Tod, who clasped his hands and stuck it in the ribbon of his hat. Soon they were busy cleaning out the bark hut. Bud whistled again until he almost took away Tod's breath, they were so stupendous.

By noon they began to feel hungry. Suddenly their hunger increased, probably because they heard the farm-house bell ring for dinner.

"Tod, could you find your way back?" Bud asked.

"I 'spect I could" replied Tod.

"Then go bring a lunch," Bud suggested.

"But we're runned away," protested Tod, feeling called upon to be consistent.

"But we're awful hungry," reminded Bud.

There was logic in that, and finally Tod set out for the house. Mamma was on the porch and pretended not to know Tod.

"What do you want?" she sharply asked.

"Something to eat," Tod said. "Let me have it in a basket."

"Oh, my!" cried mamma. "Enough for a whole gang of Tods! That's kind of pedent don't you think? Well, I never give any thing to tramps."

"I'm mamma—" began Tod.

"I might give you some dinner if you un'load those ships from the cart," mamma said.

"I-I can't," stammered Tod.

"You mean you won't," mamma said. "Well, good-day. A tramp who won't work can't get any thing to eat here."

Tod's heart fell within him, but he was a plucky little fellow, and pulled himself together with a jerk.

When he reported the failure of his errand to Bud the latter felt a little chop-fallen.

"I 'spect we'd give the basket of things to go," he said.

"Well, then, you go try," suggested Tod, benevolently. "It is the big ox-cart, Bud, said—"

Then his blood man seized the chips," was Bob's reply. "We can get plenty of berries to eat."

Berries satisfied their hunger for a time. They played in the woods, and the afternoon were away. Tod lost a shoe in the quagmire, and Bud was stung by a hornet, and both the boys were scared by a wild hog, which might as well have been a bear, from the way in which they ran for the hut. Suddenly the woods darkened, and then a low, rumbling, deepening sound was heard.

"Bud, there's a storm coming up," Tod cried, as he caught Tod by the hand. "Let's dig for home!"

It did come, long before they could reach the dog in dense purpose. Two tired, drenched, draggled boys they were, as they burst into the house. It was dark outside, and the lights from the kitchen window reflected upon them.

"Bless my soul! Where's my apron!" mamma cried. "And here's brought another tramp with him."

"We've got home," Tod said. "We're Tod and Bud. We won't come in."

"Oh, I've no doubt of that," mamma said.

"We runned away," Tod said, mournfully, repentantly. "We're sorry. Awful sorry. I'm very sorry. And I'll be true as good."

"Well, that's something else," mamma said. "Come in. I've always a kiss for a little boy who tells me he is sorry."

She picked up Tod and kissed him, wet, and dragged out sorry-stained though he was. Tears came into her eyes, and her heart beat faster, for she had become alarmed about them.

"I'm sorry, too," confessed Bud, and so mamma stooped and kissed him.

They washed themselves, dried their clothes, ate a hearty supper, and then went to bed.

"How now how—it was in the old bark hut," announced Tod.

"There's no place so nice as home," replied Bud.—Frank H. Stauffer, in Interior.

STORY OF THE FAN.

From the Oriental Palm-Leaf to the Modern Manifest.

The nineteenth century belle, who, after casting a last look of satisfaction into the mirror which reflects her charms, takes her manifest fan, probably has no idea that the original of her graceful toy was the exclusive prerogative of sovereigns and celestial dignitaries. The Egyptians and Mesopotamians, who briefly bequeathed to posterity wall pictures whose clear and solid outlines show to the most minute detail all their civilization, display magnificent specimens of feather fans, which, borne on long poles by the attendants surrounding royal personages, observed the practical purpose of protecting them from the scorching rays of a tropical sun and the same time contributing to the pomp and splendor of the pageant.

The pictures on Greek vases show us the ladies of Athens and Corinth in various graceful poses, holding fans which, though still retaining the form of the palmleaf, appear to have been, like the modern universe, an important and artistically ornamented adjunct of the toilet. The Roman women were by no means behind their Hellenic sisters in appreciation of these dainty trifles, as is proven by the numerous passages in the writings of the classic poets and historians; nay, in the degenerate days of the later Emperors the fan was part of the equipment of the effeminate painted dandies who strolled through the marble halls of the baths.

The middle ages held it in no less esteem, and the most superb decorations were lavished upon it, but it still retained the original form of the palm-leaf, and usually consisted of brighthued feathers fastened to a handle.

Not until the period of the renaissance do we find a change in shape, and this, too, was probably first noted in Europe from the East by way of the greatest emporium of commerce during the middle ages—Venice. These new fans were little banners, either square or circular in form and made of silk or parchment, ornamented with painting or embroidery and often finished with a border of feathers fastened loosely on one side to a staff, around which they swung. But this shape, specially designated as Venetian, superb specimens of which are contained in a collection made by the Prince of Wales, was soon supplanted by the folding fan, which has reigned alone throughout Western countries ever since the sixteenth century. This, too, was probably a gift from Eastern Asia, imitated in Italy—nay! it is probably the first example of the Japanese fan-lore secretly spread upon Western art and which of late has made itself so distinctly felt in fashion.

The original folding-fan, according to the modern ideal, was enormous, and not until the seventeenth century did it shrink to moderate dimensions. The mid and high-born ladies of Europe found ample field for decoration by painting, embroidery, and lace of every description. Its circular form, as attained by this article of dress are evinced by the statement that toward the close of the sixteenth century a fan valued at 20,000 was given to Margaret of Lorraine by Queen Margaret of Navarre, the beautiful toy was composed of mother of pearl set with precious stones. During the eighteenth century the material value of fans was greatly enhanced by art. Besides a number of exquisite pictures, whose grace and skill would secure them a conspicuous place among the artists of the present time, men of eminence, as did Watteau and Boucher, did not disdain to employ their genius in decorating fans.—Washington Star.

Giving Herself Away.

We are perfectly willing to admit that Mrs. Colonel Yerger is a fond wife and mother, etc., but she should not say words that she does not understand. She gave a party a few evenings ago and Dr. Bitters was present. During the conversation on cholera the doctor remarked:

"I am very much afraid the cholera will spread all over the world, and it may even reach Austin."

Mrs. Yerger thought it would not spread.

"What makes you think it will not spread?" asked the doctor.

"You see, doctor," replied Mrs. Yerger, "some people are more adapted to cholera than others. Now, the French are more adapted to cholera than any other people. They are more cholera than the English. People that are cholera are most sure to get the cholera, if there are any microbes floating in the atmosphere."—Texas Siftings.

CHARLEY'S MIRACULOUS ESCAPE

A Cry—Man overboard!

Charley Ellswagle—It's all very well to make fun of these English chaps, but they have their uses, hah Johnie Peak.

Handy Treatment for a Cold.

"You have taken a severe cold," said the old family doctor, "and it seems to have settled in your throat."

"Yes, doctor, you see I am literally speaking, full of colds and a vivacious eighty-eyed young woman."

"Oh, you silver tongue treasure, do you feel?" asked the doctor.

"Try me!"

"Are you warm?"

"Yes, I am using you Hun medicine, mustard plasters, electricity, anything!" said she in a breath.

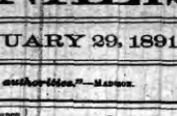
"Have you want to get back your voice?"

"Yes."

"Try hercule treatment, mind you."

"All right—what is it?"

"Why, you must talk it all for two days."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.



This Interesting Bird Prizes House Chop, sticed, of Which Will Be in Hereinafter Exhibited.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]
[Special Correspondence.]

If one can not read the head-piece of this letter it argues, of necessity, that I was not able to understand one word of Japanese, nor learn aught from the characters with which it is covered printed. As all is possible, none the less, to him who will learn, I shall proceed to explain them. In his museum of wooden figures here, the scene which, more than any thing else, seems to excite the curiosity of foreigners, during our great Buddhist fair of Asasaka is assuredly the one which represents Hanyuzan waiting with a fan. To the throngs this has for many a day seemed incomprehensible, and so soon as the crowd has seen these figures, they have expressed their surprise by cries of astonishment, accompanied by awkward and droll imitations with their fingers. "Wodeshi! is it possible!" In short, this habit is a complete surprise to them. "A man shock, in fact," they say, "to carry one's food to one's mouth with a tool that resembles a pitchfork more than any thing else," and they think that one is in great luck if it arrive there without slipping away and falling back into the sauce or spattering the tablecloth. "How graceful and neat," they cry out disdainfully. There is every reason to believe, too, that those awkward tools which you call forks will ybt long be used after you have learned something of Japanese courtesy and their manner of eating. By what follows, I wish to inculcate in my readers those ideas of the graces of our little Japanese chopsticks. So refined and so neat at table, when they are handled with proper dexterity and grace.

FIG. 1.

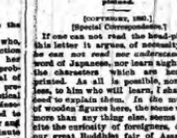

FIG. 2.

No one has accurately described their function, because no one can adequately comprehend them. Like Japanese, and characters at the head of this letter, to which allusion has already been made, much to the theoretical parts of chopsticks. You will at once see that it is easier to write and pronounce than the word fork. And now let us compare the two objects. On one hand we find barbarity in form, enormous weight, a tool difficult to handle and of doubtful cleanliness, while on the other hand, we see grace, refinement and extreme neatness. Stop to examine the two little chopsticks, six inches in length, the thickness of a lead pencil and of dazzling whiteness.

Our neighbors, the Chinese, who are less refined in their coolness than we, make them of gold and silver, and times even of ivory, for use among the rich, while the poorer people in the restaurants use them made of the commoner metal. In the restaurants these little chopsticks are used to establish a sort of lottery. They are heaped high up in a pile and in a great wooden box behind the door and marked with a cipher. Each patron of the place on entering places his hand into the box and draws out at hazard two sticks for his meal, and those whose fortune has favored may have drawn out two sticks with corresponding ciphers, are entitled to an additional dish.

FIG. 3.

Among us this custom is unknown, our civilization being too much refined for indulgence in these sorts of pastimes. Neither the poor nor the rich are ever served twice with the same chopsticks, even in the case of the simplest meal. With us they are made exclusively of wood and invariably burned after each repast. When sealed at the table each guest finds at his place a sealed envelope, containing a pair of chopsticks made of wood and immaculately white. And to show that they have never before been used they are cut from the solid piece of stick and not entirely separated from the bottoms, precisely as your sulphur matches are made. And now the first course has been served each guest unseals his envelope, picks up the chopsticks, and, separating them, breaks off the wood.

By observing the following instructions one can readily learn how to use the chopsticks. Take the first stick and in the manner indicated in Fig. 1 place one end in the angle formed by the joint of the thumb of the right hand and the forefinger, the middle of the stick resting lightly on the third finger, which serves as a slightly extensible, elastic support. In the chopstick without any effort of pressure remains rigid and immovable—a part of the hand, in fact —which can not be moved when it follows that in its rivetitions around the wrist. If you will now add to the action a second stick between those of the thumb which remains free in the forefinger and the middle finger, precisely as one picks up a pen when about to write. This is the movable stop-stick, in which resides all the mechanism and skill that one may acquire by being brought closer to or moved farther from the first stick, will form the pincers to pick up every thing. The manner how small it may be. The combination of these two movements is shown in Fig. 2, and you see how easy and graceful it becomes.

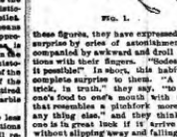

FIG. 4.

No matter how awkward you be, chopsticks may be with your hands. It is impossible that you should not succeed in using the chopsticks at your first meal. The proof of it is that European children are given first to use them with us, and so soon as they are able to hold a spoon they use instinctively the one or the fork, and it is only with great difficulty they acquire it again, much to the disgust of their parents. One should be able to do every thing with our chopsticks, but the supreme test of Ability to take eggs one by one from a plate and place them in a basket, stretched on the floor, between the legs (see Fig. 4). In doing this it is necessary to avoid with great care the X, for then the stick becoming crossed, either crushes the egg or it falls and is broken. In one of the stores here, filled with household utensils, which one of our Emperors of the fifteenth century brought home from the temple of Nara, can be found several sorts of chop-sticks for eating and various kinds of models, which goes to prove that even at that early age we Japanese were eating with moderation and grace, while your ancestors were eating with their fingers.

A ROMANTIC CAREER.

Senator Mitchell's Rise From Obscure Poverty to Wealth and Prominence.

Hon. Hisgen Herman, the Congressional Representative of Oregon, speaking of Senator Mitchell, says that his career has been romantic in the extreme. When very young he entered life by opening a law office in a little adobe town called San Luis Obispo, and ostensibly the practice of law was conducted entirely in the Spanish language, and he obtained for awhile whether he should go to some other city where the English language was used, or whether he should learn the Spanish language. He finally concluded that it would be cheaper and better for him to go to San Francisco, and he went there. He waited a long time as to whether he should choose go to Nevada, a country about which all people knew will became of the recent discovery of gold there, or whether he should go to Oregon. He finally decided to go to Oregon, and left San Francisco on the 4th of July, 1860, with just fifty-two dollars in his pocket. He stopped at a hotel in Portland where they charged twenty dollars a week for board, and, after a short stay he decided that he would open a law office there.

At that time he only had five dollars left, but his landlord trusted him for his board, and he hired a little office and had no furniture but a table and chair. His last five dollar bill he spent in purchasing a book of the statutes of Oregon. He had no other library except the splendid education which he carried around in his head.

It was in the log-roll will, as the reader may well understand, but young Mitchell got out his shingle finally, and by the end of the first year he had twenty-six out of the fifty-two cases that came before the court. He is a handsome fellow, very affable, very polite and agreeable in his manners, and his practice rose steadily, so that it was not long before he was making $40,000 a year in his legitimate law practice. Of course, like Ingalls, he also negotiated money, and as soon as young Mitchell paid off his debts and commenced to have a little money to loan he made investments of the money so that his fortune continued to grow. He is the father now of a family of suitable want and the future of his family is also well cared for.

What a Blind Man Needs.

Schools for the blind are deficient in one important particular—they give too little attention to the practical and too much to the theoretical parts of physics. I was educated in a school for the blind, says a blind man, and spent a good deal of time, for instance, in learning music, for which I had neither taste nor talent, and have always since been sorry I did not learn another trade instead of wasting my time as a piano. What a blind man needs is not so much higher sentiment as ability to make a living. He is put at a serious disadvantage by reason of his blindness, and he is forced to the prime consideration with him, he comes in after life to look with disapprobation on most of the educational frills now so popular in schools for the blind. To be sure, if he has that rich, while the poorer people in the restaurants use them made of the commoner metal. In the restaurants these little chopsticks are used to establish a sort of lot-terly. They are heaped high up in a pile and in a great wooden box behind the door and marked with a cipher. Each patron of the place on entering places his hand into the box and draws out at hazard two sticks with corresponding ciphers, are entitled to an additional dish.

FIG 5.

Among us this custom is unknown, our civilization being too much refined for indulgence in these sorts of pastimes. Neither the poor nor the rich are ever served twice with the same chopsticks, even in the case of the simplest meal. With us they are made exclusively of wood and invariably burned after each repast. When sealed at the table each guest finds at his place a sealed envelope, containing a pair of chopsticks made of wood and immaculately white. And to show that they have never before been used they are cut from the solid piece of stick and not entirely separated from the bottoms, precisely as your sulphur matches are made. And now the first course has been served each guest unseals his envelope, picks up the chopsticks, and, separating them, breaks off the wood.

By observing the following instructions one can readily learn how to use the chopsticks. Take the first stick and in the manner indicated in Fig. 1 place one end in the angle formed by the joint of the thumb of the right hand and the forefinger, the middle of the stick resting lightly on the third finger, which serves as a slightly extensible, elastic support. In the chopstick without any effort of pressure remains rigid and immovable—a part of the hand, in fact —which can not be moved when it follows that in its rivetitions around the wrist. If you will now add to the action a second stick between those of the thumb which remains free in the forefinger and the middle finger, precisely as one picks up a pen when about to write. This is the movable stop-stick, in which resides all the mechanism and skill that one may acquire by being brought closer to or moved farther from the first stick, will form the pincers to pick up every thing. The manner how small it may be. The combination of these two movements is shown in Fig. 2, and you see how easy and graceful it becomes.

FIG. 6.

No matter how awkward you be, chopsticks may be with your hands. It is impossible that you should not succeed in using the chopsticks at your first meal. The proof of it is that European children are given first to use them with us, and so soon as they are able to hold a spoon they use instinctively the one or the fork, and it is only with great difficulty they acquire it again, much to the disgust of their parents. One should be able to do every thing with our chopsticks, but the supreme test of Ability to take eggs one by one from a plate and place them in a basket, stretched on the floor, between the legs (see Fig. 4). In doing this it is necessary to avoid with great care the X, for then the stick becoming crossed, either crushes the egg or it falls and is broken. In one of the stores here, filled with household utensils, which one of our Emperors of the fifteenth century brought home from the temple of Nara, can be found several sorts of chop-sticks for eating and various kinds of models, which goes to prove that even at that early age we Japanese were eating with moderation and grace, while your ancestors were eating with their fingers.

A ROMANTIC CAREER.

Senator Mitchell's Rise From Obscure Poverty to Wealth and Prominence.

Hon. Hisgen Herman, the Congressional Representative of Oregon, speaking of Senator Mitchell, says that his career has been romantic in the extreme. When very young he entered life by opening a law office in a little adobe town called San Luis Obispo, and ostensibly the practice of law was conducted entirely in the Spanish language, and he obtained for awhile whether he should go to some other city where the English language was used, or whether he should learn the Spanish language. He finally concluded that it would be cheaper and better for him to go to San Francisco, and he went there. He waited a long time as to whether he should choose go to Nevada, a country about which all people knew will became of the recent discovery of gold there, or whether he should go to Oregon. He finally decided to go to Oregon, and left San Francisco on the 4th of July, 1860, with just fifty-two dollars in his pocket. He stopped at a hotel in Portland where they charged twenty dollars a week for board, and, after a short stay he decided that he would open a law office there.

At that time he only had five dollars left, but his landlord trusted him for his board, and he hired a little office and had no furniture but a table and chair. His last five dollar bill he spent in purchasing a book of the statutes of Oregon. He had no other library except the splendid education which he carried around in his head.

It was in the log-roll will, as the reader may well understand, but young Mitchell got out his shingle finally, and by the end of the first year he had twenty-six out of the fifty-two cases that came before the court. He is a handsome fellow, very affable, very polite and agreeable in his manners, and his practice rose steadily, so that it was not long before he was making $40,000 a year in his legitimate law practice. Of course, like Ingalls, he also negotiated money, and as soon as young Mitchell paid off his debts and commenced to have a little money to loan he made investments of the money so that his fortune continued to grow. He is the father now of a family of suitable want and the future of his family is also well cared for.

What a Blind Man Needs.

Schools for the blind are deficient in one important particular—they give too little attention to the practical and too much to the theoretical parts of physics. I was educated in a school for the blind, says a blind man, and spent a good deal of time, for instance, in learning music, for which I had neither taste nor talent, and have always since been sorry I did not learn another trade instead of wasting my time as a piano. What a blind man needs is not so much higher sentiment as ability to make a living. He is put at a serious disadvantage by reason of his blindness, and he is forced to the prime consideration with him, he comes in after life to look with disapprobation on most of the educational frills now so popular in schools for the blind. To be sure, if he has that rich, while the poorer people in the restaurants use them made of the commoner metal. In the restaurants these little chopsticks are used to establish a sort of lot-terly. They are heaped high up in a pile and in a great wooden box behind the door and marked with a cipher. Each patron of the place on entering places his hand into the box and draws out at hazard two sticks with corresponding ciphers, are entitled to an additional dish.

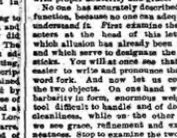

FIG 5.

Among us this custom is unknown, our civilization being too much refined for indulgence in these sorts of pastimes. Neither the poor nor the rich are ever served twice with the same chopsticks, even in the case of the simplest meal. With us they are made exclusively of wood and invariably burned after each repast. When sealed at the table each guest finds at his place a sealed envelope, containing a pair of chopsticks made of wood and immaculately white. And to show that they have never before been used they are cut from the solid piece of stick and not entirely separated from the bottoms, precisely as your sulphur matches are made. And now the first course has been served each guest unseals his envelope, picks up the chopsticks, and, separating them, breaks off the wood.

By observing the following instructions one can readily learn how to use the chopsticks. Take the first stick and in the manner indicated in Fig. 1 place one end in the angle formed by the joint of the thumb of the right hand and the forefinger, the middle of the stick resting lightly on the third finger, which serves as a slightly extensible, elastic support. In the chopstick without any effort of pressure remains rigid and immovable—a part of the hand, in fact —which can not be

The Constitutionalist.
W. L. FORCE, A. L. FORCE
Editors and Proprietors.

AMENDING THE ELECTION LAW.

It is announced that Senator Werts will so amend the new election law that one-house-to-house registration shall do for three or four years. There, will however, be ample time and opportunity to review and correct the lists at open sessions of the Registry Board duly advertised. This amendment will not in any way impair the efficiency of the law, but will remove the objection made against it by overburdened taxpayers, especially in the agricultural districts. The Senator also intends to make the law clearer as to the men who may be appointed election officers. A strict interpretation of the law prevents the appointment of men holding any other office. The Attorney-General has decided that this applies to those acting at local elections. Senator Werts says there was an such intention and that the object of the law was simply to prevent the appointment of election officers holding elective offices, but was not meant to include Notaries, Commissioners of Deeds and men officiating at municipal elections.

It is also intended to simplify the law in its application to local elections and the issuing of certificates of candidates.

On these and other points Senator Werts is receiving letters and memoranda from all who have had experience as to the working of the law. He is anxious to hear from all who have any suggestions to make, so that any proposition of utility may be embodied in the amendment before it is introduced. The Senator promises to draft in a week or two. As the legislative session is not likely to be a long one, those who have any recommendations to make should forward them to the Senator at his home in Morristown or to the Trenton House, Trenton.

"Bury the wires ought to be the cry henceforth.

The Republican majority were outgeneralled by the Democratic minority in the United States Senate, on Monday.

The Republican press howls "traitors", to the six honorable Republicans who had the courage to assist in shelving the iniquitous Force Bill. Well, they ought to be able to stand it, knowing as they do they receive the thanks of the mass of the people who are opposed to the attempt to deprive them of one of his right, and to perpetuate a monarchal government.

The State Legislature has now got down to business. The session promises to be a short one. Speaker Bergen has made many warm friends as presiding officer. Senator Adrian presides over the Senate with dignity. Important measures, politically, will come before both branches during the session. Let the Democrats remember that a Democratic State should hereafter have a Democratic Legislature, and give district the State as it should be.

Thanks to the vigilance of the Democrats in the United States Senate, the infamous Force Bill was shelved on Monday last, with the assistance of six Republicans, Messrs. Wolcott, Teller, Cannon, Jones, Washburn and Stewart. The event came about by Sen-tor Wolcott moving to take up the Apportionment Bill, which motion was carried by a vote of 32 to 28. McPherson was present and Senator Blodgett paired with Senator Chandler. There seems to be a reasonable hope now that there will be no chance for the Republican schemers to pass this gag law during the session.

NEW JERSEY'S SENTIMENTS.

The following resolutions introduced by Assemblyman Mullone, were adopted by the House and Senate at Trenton on Tuesday by a party vote, one Republican, Mr. Smith, of Newark, voting in favor of the resolutions:

WHEREAS, The measure now pending in the Senate of the United States, known as the "Force bill," is a revolutionary and unconstitutional measure, destroy of the people of this country and establish the permanent ascendancy of a political party supported by an overwhelming majority of the people as the polls last November; and

WHEREAS, The infamous partisan measure violates the traditions of the country for the past one hundred years and strikes a deadly blow at the reserved rights of the States, thereby aiming at a strong, centralized and paternal Government at Washington, supported and upheld by Federal bayonets; and

WHEREAS, The people are to be robbed every two years of from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, ostensibly to promote fair elections, but really to subvert the will of the people and maintain the permanent supremacy of the Republican party; and

WHEREAS The great metropolis of the West are Hemisphere, and the Empire City of the Union, New York, was despoiled of their representation by the leaders of the Republican party solely, because it is a Democratic city; therefore be it

Resolved, The Senate concurring, that the State of New Jersey withdraw its participation from the World's Fair if the "Force bill" should become a law.

Assemblyman Lane, of Union County is an active member of the House, and has assumed the leadership of the Labor interest. He has also introduced a number of important bills, which ought to become laws.

The Senate Committee on Elections has hit on a happy way out of the little embarrassment in which Senator Keys was placed by his election certificate being signed by the Committee. The Committee met Tuesday morning, and after organization, with Senator McDonald as Chairman, decided to report back the Senatorial Corps contested election case to the Senate, with a request that a special committee be appointed to consider it. This will let Senator Keys out nicely from sitting as a judge in his own case, and will save any feeling from a declination by him of the appointment made by President Adrain.

The Force bill means the death by strangulation of the Chicago World's Fair.

The McKinley bill drives foreign exhibitors and visitors from the Exposition and immediately made it a National enterprise.

The Force bill comes now and by its partisan discrimination and unprecedented interference progresses part of commerce from taking part in an event which is to mark the growth of a nation and the development of our Union.

There will be no World's Fair in Chicago in May next. There will be no National Exposition if the Force bill passes.

CHANGES IN CONTROL.

Farm and Stock Values Improved for a Decade.

To the telegraph, telephone and electric light companies the storm of Saturday night and Sunday was a severe one, causing great destruction in this locality, that even the tremendous blizzard of three years ago. Never were the wires in more hopeless confusion, and it will be months before would be for the State of New Jersey.

What we ask of New Jersey, at this time, is from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 for State roads, 200 miles in 200 counties, and we should have the State from North to South and from East to West, opening up and improving, for the immediate benefit of our citizens, for all our purposes, for the whole State, as an improvement in extent and benefit, not to be found in kind elsewhere in the United States.

What will this cost us, per capita, including men, women and children? If three million dollars only, is needed, and that is an estimate on the basis of the cost of our county roads in Union, then it is a head, or one-tenth the cost per head in Brooklyn, of its one mile road. Can we afford the latter sum? We need not, and think, it is submitted, were the cost ten times as great. The reasons are plain. Our present citizens will not have $8 per head to pay, and we should have no State debt, to run at least twenty years. If not on the completion of the roads, certainly within the period it twenty years, the increase of taxes on property which does not now exist, but which will develope in improvements by reason of the roads, pay the debt; and the number of persons to pay it will be 2,000,000 instead of 1,500,000.

If the foregoing scheme is to be developed on the basis of the best roads or otherwise, the general recommendation of Governor Abbett is to materialize in any additional form, the consensus of opinion to-day is that no one is essential. The County Road Act is a good one. Union county, where it originated, has availed itself of its provisions, and the example of Governor Abbett, in this locality, are beyond calculation. They are assured already beyond our original expectations. It is contemplated by the people of Westfield, to the extent of $50,000 to procure a brass band on the completion of the County Roads, thus making public demonstration of its joy.

But life is too short to realize benefits from this act in many of the counties of the State remote from large cities and where farming communities prevail, but denied already by loads they despair of supporting longer. The State must act; and what more fit agency to carry out its provisions than the State Road Board. It seems to me that it is your special province to follow up the recommendations of Governor Abbett. We should receive your prompt action. Everything is favorable to your success. It has been well said by a leading journal, the Philadelphia Press, in commenting on Gov. Hill's message:

> No country districts in the world have ever had thoroughly good roads except when aided by some powerful corporation. The Empire State follows the plan of building State roads to connect the cities, and it has the best system of country roads in the world, has three separate Railroad Departments and Commissi; the like great authority, the Legislature. The roads radiating from them in departments, and the more the highways are improved the better for the cities. Hill's plan the richer portions of the State could afford to build the roads in the poorer, to the general profit of all.

Gentlemen of the Board: Inaugurate the move that shall result in placing your State in position of action and progress that are now possible under Governor Abbett's recommendation, by immediate action on your part, and your grateful remembrance will cause your names to live after, and adorn the stained glass windows of this public temple with the images of their blessed benefactors.

The Last of Amphion Hall.

On Tuesday evening, Feb. 10, will be given the last attraction in Amphion Hall, when a complimentary benefit is to be tendered J. Edwin Hall and his little daughter, Fannie

The Force Epidemic Ended.

The epidemic of glanders which threat ened to spread through Central New Jersey has been stayed, and by the prompt action of the State Board of Health. Dr. J. Gerth, Jr; Thursday raised the quarantine on the Scotch Plains stables where the disease was found to exist, and where it was discovered. Dr. Gerth announces that there is now no more danger from either glanders or farcy.

Mr. McPherson as President.

It is our duty to report the fact that the Hon. John Roderick McPherson of New Jersey is beginning to loom up as a possible candidate for President—New York Sun.

All right, Sonny! If Senator McPherson is the candidate for President in 1892 you will be supported as the big vote New Jersey will give him.—Somerville Messenger.

Get Your Umbrellas Ready.

The almanacs for 1891 predict that storms will occur on the following days during the months of January, the time varying from twenty to seventy-two hours: January 30, 31; 23, 30, 31; February 1, 2, 12, 13, 14, 15, 22, 23, 24, 25; March 7, 8, 9, 10, 17, 18, 19, 20 29, 30, 31; April 1, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 27, 28; June 6, 7, 8, 9, 17, 18, 19, 20, 30; October 1, 2, 10, 11, 12, 13, 23, 24, 25; November 2, 3, 4, 5, 15, 16, 17, 25, 26, 27, 28; December 7, 8, 9, 10, 20, 21, 22, 26, 30, 31.

New Jersey's Presidential Candidate.

[From The Atlantic City Journal.]

Senator McPherson is one of the most finest orators and broadest men in the United States Senate. He has for years been one of the ablest and most active committee, serving upon the Naval and Finance Committees, whom his cool, discriminating judgment and well balanced mind have made him extremely influential.

He was one of ex-President Cleveland's warmest friends and supporters in his elections, and it was generally understood that if Mr. Cleveland had been successful in the last Presidential campaign Senator McPherson would have been a member of his cabinet, serving in the capacity of Secretary of the Treasury.

A Candid Opinion as it is Wrote.

A member of the Metropolis has cut from some paper and treated what alleges to be a "criticism" of the Sentinel's recent comment upon the failure of the County to get its State, with a population of less than 67,000 has built county roads within the last two years, at a cost of from $220,000 to $250,000. The amount of miles built from 30 to 50.

The cost of the Union County Roads is just about $6 for each individual in the county, including men, women and children. It is a fair statement, and I believe it quite true, that the people who pay for those roads would not have them below $10 per head. The Sentinel has said that the cost of the roads was not yet completed. The Brooklyn Bridge, one mile long, cost the people of that city, including land damages, more than $15,000,000 at the value of real estate in Brooklyn advance $10,000,000 by reason of that one bridge connecting it with New York. They got only a mile, but they got a good thing. On the contrary, they need another bridge by reason of increased and increasing population.

Gentlemen for Brooklyn, on the score of population, is as much as fifteen millions would be for the State of New Jersey.

What we ask of New Jersey, at this time, is from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 for State roads, 200 miles in 200 counties, and we should have the State from North to South and from East to West, opening up and improving, for the immediate benefit of our citizens, for all our purposes, for the whole State, as an improvement in extent and benefit, not to be found in kind elsewhere in the United States.

What will this cost us, per capita

CITY DEPARTMENT

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, City Editor.

—Now bury the wires.

—How many of the telegraph poles still standing are at the same angle as ever?

—Union Melvin was fined $10 Tuesday for intoxication and disorderly conduct on Cottage place.

—$139 copies of THE PRESS on Tuesday, containing the Rev. Mr. Richards' sermon on Jezebel, were printed and sold.

—Another five-alarm just has been added to Plainfield's new service. It is placed in the office of Scott's printing machine factory.

—Mrs. N. E. Sleet, of Lambertville, is holding fast to a can of peaches which her mother, Mrs. Sarah Holcombe, of West Amwell, put up some twenty years ago.

—A desk belonging to Mr. Steele was discovered frozen fast in the ice of a pond hole on Lake street, the other day. The strangest circumstance is that the desk was alive when found.

—THE PRESS need make no apology for devoting so much of its space Tuesday to the sermon by the Rev. Mr. Richards of Jezebel and the Baals. It is a matter of concern to every one of you.

—Elizabeth people are happy over the existing war between two rival gas companies. They have thousands of cubic feet of smoke a pipe. Plainfield has only one such dealer—Dobbins.

—The following facial remark, for which the Boston Advertiser is responsible, might have been written by a "journalist": "Things having been as they were no one has reason to wonder that the outcome is what we see."

—Street Commissioner Meeker made a game of sections hands leave their work on the railroad, Tuesday, and dig a trench under the railway East of the Park avenue bridge so that the water from the embankment would run under instead of over the flagging.

—Arrangements are being perfected for a reception and golden concert to be given at Music Hall late in March, which, at many of the brightest stars in the musical world will sing and play. The programme may also include a group of Spanish dancing girls, the latest fad of New York's 400.

—The Plainfield lawyer who is exercised because THE PRESS mentioned the fact that he did not clean his sidewalk, need not feel so very much ashamed. A couple of city officials, a doctor or two, and a prominent speculator, all living in this city, might also be mentioned as being as culpable as he.

—Mr. Stanley's popularity as a lecturer is declining. He was in Brooklyn recently he talked to a small audience in a large hall. To Paterson the management lost money. Plainfield refused him altogether, and in Newark he spoke to crowded houses when he simply repeats what has been said in print?

—Grote of New York who builds and furnishes all the alleys for the finest bowling alleys in the country, has been given the contract to fit up the lower story of the Crescent League's new club house with everything necessary and of the best. It comes high, but the Leaguers must have the finest alleys in the land.

—Were people pass under the dilapidated wooden awning at the corner of Park and North avenues, then pass anywhere else in the whole city. And all day long for two days now, that awning has dripped streams of dirty water upon the toupets and wraps of scores of women and down the backs of hundreds of men.

Grand Army Installation.

A delegation from Winfield Scott Post, No. 72, G. A. R., of this city, visited Bound Brook Monday night, to assist in installing officers of Graves Post, No. 97, of that place. The team also assisted Post 72 from Woodworth Post, No. 75, of Somerville. James M. Atwood, Vice Department Commander of New Jersey, was installing officer.

A Ball to be Proud of.

Anything that has been published in THE PRESS about the ball given in Middlesex in our Scotch Plains correspondent, to the effect that Excelsior Hall of that place is not a well heated, well ventilated and altogether delightful and comfortable place of entertainment, is certainly more than a misstatement—it is an untruth. The members of Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company whose bowling brave direction are the representative citizens and business men of the town, and they keep their Hall in the best of order and condition.

Who Will Succeed Assistant Engineer Kettle?

James A. Martin, second assistant engineer of the Plainfield fire department, has formally declined to accept re-nomination. During Mr. Martin's two years of service he has been most faithful and energetic, and fully deserves the promotion that was promised him last year by Mayor Mais. Somebody, however, at the last moment shifted the mayor's mind and Mr. Martin's reward was not forthcoming.

Although the salary of the assistant engineers, as THE PRESS has said before, is entirely insufficient for the worthy duty, yet as soon as the news of Mr. Martin's declination is read above, there will arise a number of candidates for the position, the greater part of whom are the last of fit, competent and eligible ones that just now occur to THE PRESS, discloses the fact that the name of James W. Mooney, Jr., stands forth pre-eminent.

Prizeworthy Perfumery.

The music room and parlors of Mr. A. Wyckoff's residence on Madison avenue, were filled Friday at a musicale given by a few of his more advanced pupils. The gathering included many of the best known society people of the city and many representatives of the wealthiest families. The programme was:

1. Sextette	Mozart—Selected
	MISS WILLS.
2. Serenade	Schubert
	MISS MARKING.
3. Rondo	Bach
	MISS TILOU.
4. Concert Waltz	Mendelssohn
	MISS HOOLEY.
5. Mazurka	Chopin
	MISS WYCKOFF.
7. Cascade de Perles	Gottschalk
	MISS. MORGAN.
8. La Source	Ascher
	MISS RAYMOND.
9. Serenade	Chaminade
10. Capriccietto	S. G. Rooke
	MISS WYCKOFF.

The playing of Mrs. Howard and Miss Wykoff-spoon, deserved and received particular attention. Miss Wykoff is one of the most talented and promising pupils of the city, are people of Mr. Vanloo's.

PERSONALS.

Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Pierson entertained the choir of the Crescent Avenue church Thursday evening.

Wm. H. Conway, of LaGrenda avenue, is seriously ill and much anxiety is felt by his family and physicians.

Mrs. Isaac L. Miller, of Broadway and Richmond street, gave an afternoon tea to a large number of friends on Saturday last.

Mrs. Charles W. McClellan of Washington Park, will give a musicale to a large circle of her friends, February 3, from 3 to 6 o'clock. Arrived in Europe of his mother, Mrs Warren Marsh.

Edward Milliken, of Central avenue, who recently returned from a hunting trip to Florida, has returned to the city and after over 600 quail in a few days.

A young son of George T. Rogers, of Rock View avenue, was so unfortunate as to suffer a compound fracture of the leg while coasting last Tuesday morning.

Geo. Mehl, Sr., of West Second street, entertained a number of his friends, on Thursday, at a turkey supper, followed by dancing, recitations and other pastimes.

Mr. and Mrs. John W. Murray, of Central avenue, will spend a part of this Winter in Florida instead of at Old Point Comfort as they have done in past seasons.

Ex-Councilman Wm. H. Voorhees, now Vice President and Manager of the Fraser Tablet Triturate M'f'g Co., of New York, is starting old friends in Plainfield, last evening.

The death of Gertrude W. Schmidt daughter of the late John Coolidge Adams, and Pauline Schmidt, occurred at 108 Richmond street Sunday. She was in her eighteenth year.

Ex-Mayor Mais is very ill. Inflammation of the bowels has set in and his condition is dangerous. His only near relative, a nephew, was sent for and arrived from Canada yesterday.

Patrick Day died at his home on West Third street, Thursday night. In the 74th year of his age. Funeral services were held Saturday morning at nine o'clock. He leaves two sons.

Letters received from E. P. Thorn by friends in this city, state that he is delighted with the orange groves of Florida, the musical world with song and play. Ex-Postmaster may also include a group of Spanish dancing girls, the latest fad of New York's 400.

—The Plainfield lawyer who is exercised because THE PRESS mentioned the fact that he did not clean his sidewalk, need not feel so very much ashamed. A couple of city officials, a doctor or two, and a prominent speculator, all living in this city, might also be mentioned as being as culpable as he.

—Mr. Stanley's popularity as a lecturer is declining. He was in Brooklyn recently he talked to a small audience in a large hall. To Paterson the management lost money. Plainfield refused him altogether, and in Newark he spoke to crowded houses when he simply repeats what has been said in print?

—Grote of New York who builds and furnishes all the alleys for the finest bowling alleys in the country, has been given the contract to fit up the lower story of the Crescent League's new club house with everything necessary and of the best. It comes high, but the Leaguers must have the finest alleys in the land.

—Were people pass under the dilapidated wooden awning at the corner of Park and North avenues, then pass anywhere else in the whole city. And all day long for two days now, that awning has dripped streams of dirty water upon the toupets and wraps of scores of women and down the backs of hundreds of men.

Grand Army Installation.

A delegation from Winfield Scott Post, No. 72, G. A. R., of this city, visited Bound Brook Monday night, to assist in installing officers of Graves Post, No. 97, of that place. The team also assisted Post from Woodworth Post, No. 75, of Somerville. James M. Atwood, Vice Department Commander of New Jersey, was installing officer.

A Ball to be Proud of.

Anything that has been published in THE PRESS about the ball given in Middlesex in our Scotch Plains correspondent, to the effect that Excelsior Hall of that place is not a well heated, well ventilated and altogether delightful and comfortable place of entertainment, is certainly more than a misstatement—it is an untruth. The members of Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company whose bowling brave direction are the representative citizens and business men of the town, and they keep their Hall in the best of order and condition.

Who Will Succeed Assistant Engineer Kettle?

James A. Martin, second assistant engineer of the Plainfield fire department, has formally declined to accept re-nomination. During Mr. Martin's two years of service he has been most faithful and energetic, and fully deserves the promotion that was promised him last year by Mayor Mais. Somebody, however, at the last moment shifted the mayor's mind and Mr. Martin's reward was not forthcoming.

Although the salary of the assistant engineers, as THE PRESS has said before, is entirely insufficient for the worthy duty, yet as soon as the news of Mr. Martin's declination is read above, there will arise a number of candidates for the position, the greater part of whom are the last of fit, competent and eligible ones that just now occur to THE PRESS, discloses the fact that the name of James W. Mooney, Jr., stands forth pre-eminent.

Prizeworthy Perfumery.

The music room and parlors of Mr. A. Wyckoff's residence on Madison avenue, were filled Friday at a musicale given by a few of his more advanced pupils. The gathering included many of the best known society people of the city and many representatives of the wealthiest families. The programme was:

1. Sextette	Mozart—Selected
	MISS WILLS.
2. Serenade	Schubert
	MISS MARKING.
3. Rondo	Bach
	MISS TILOU.
4. Concert Waltz	Mendelssohn
	MISS HOOLEY.
5. Mazurka	Chopin
	MISS WYCKOFF.
7. Cascade de Perles	Gottschalk
	MISS. MORGAN.
8. La Source	Ascher
	MISS RAYMOND.
9. Serenade	Chaminade
10. Capriccietto	S. G. Rooke
	MISS WYCKOFF.

The playing of Mrs. Howard and Miss Wykoff-spoon, deserved and received particular attention. Miss Wykoff is one of the most talented and promising pupils of the city, are people of Mr. Vanloo's.

MR. MARSH VIEWED FROM NEWARK.

[Reprinted in the Newark Evening News.]

Every day newspaper readers are likely to hear of seemingly sudden and grievous calamities to lawyers. Recently there came from an eminent Judge a statement which can be construed as meaning that a lawyer should be punished at once right upon the judgment in accordance with the rule followed by a layman in considerate treatment of one who is in contempt of court, and a few days later in the Senate at set County Court a Plainfield lawyer made an equally remarkable assertion of the supposed privilege which doth hedge a member of the bar. It appears that for the purpose of unduly influencing a jury to give a verdict of the kind which he desired in a libel case he had in his address before the twelve men reflected severely upon the conduct and character of a witness. This witness is the editor of Plainfield paper, and is accordingly cordially hated by the publishers of a rival journal in the same town. In the latter paper a full report of the lawyer's severe animadversion was published. How it happened that the counsellor is on terms of personal friendship with the editorial witness whose acts he described before the jury in the terms which might have been used in dealing with those of a thief. The editor, it appeared, had made a very natural blunder in the case in question, and as he had not been libelled he could more than he could have been expected to do to retrieve it, he naturally felt aggrieved when he saw the report of it in the world these severe reflections upon him.

Sorry that he had hurt the feelings of his journalistic friend, and not forgetful, while doing so, of his own, the lawyer before long fled opportunity for effectual retaliation, the lawyer decided to take it all back. Accordingly, at the next session of the court, after the jury had retired and was out of hearing—he made an apology. He said that he had been reproached as likening the editor to a thief, and that he regretted that they had so. He had done had been to say that his own client's liability had been no more than if he had stood by the article furnished by him to the editor in his drawers, and it had been stolen and published without his authority. The Judge, the courtroom officials and the lawyer having had time to see the beautiful difference of the distinction the lawyer continued. "Sometimes counsel in their zeal for a client," he said, "will in the heat of argument unduly criticise the witness for the other side. In such a case it would be improper for a newspaper to publish an accurate report of such criticism, much more an inaccurate report."

In other words, lawyers addressing a jury have a right to accuse or abuse witnesses in such fashion that it would be improper for a newspaper to publish their remarks. They have a right to libel witnesses in the presence of the jury and to do so, and it is a crime to call attention to their actions. It has been stated that they have also privileges denied to laymen in the matter of contempt of court, and notoriously when holding public office they can safely take fees which would be regarded as bribes if accepted by men not of the profession.

What an interesting and instructive thing it would be for some able jurist to write a book on the limits of the immunities which lawyers enjoy from the ordinary rules and responsibilities of civilized human conduct.

It Is Respectfully Neg.

The names of the station Bienfield, on the South Branch Railroad, and of its post-office Roydeld, at the same place, have both been changed to Roydeld. The change has been authorized by the officials of the Railroad Company and Post Office Department, and went into effect at the beginning of the present year.

Cover by the Quart.

Up in Sussex county, they sell cows by the quart. They give the cow a fair week's trial, keeping correct account of the number of quarts of milk she gives, and then divide it by seven, giving the number of quarts daily. She is then to pay $2 a quart. If the cow gives an average of 3 quarts daily, she is then valued at $50; if, say, 10 quarts daily, then the price is $40

Leading Topic Fitness Reasons of Bad Habits.

At least one of the large manufacturing institutions of the city has been making inquiries of late into the habits of its several hundreds of employes, and some unexpected discharges have been made as a consequence. The effect of experience "We don't care to know anything about the private lives of employes that they don't want to tell us; but when we find habits existing that are formed whenever a man forms drinking or gambling habits and to drop him in consequence."

Borough Property Changes Hands.

Among the recent real estate transfers recorded in Somerset county are the following:

Margaret E. McLaughlin to Herman Deike, property in North Plainfield, $400.

Samuel Q. Lawson and wife to Chas. F. Sobring, property in North Plainfield, $6,000.

H. G. Runkle, of West Eighth street, Plainfield, to Mrs. Isabella Plainfield Granite Light Company, and one of the Directors of the Plainfield Water Supply Company, will leave for Havana, the last of this week. A few days before he left his home, are building extensive water-works in that city. Mr. Runkle will go by rail to Florida and by steamer from there.

Mr. Bell Declined the Position.

Alexander Bell of Plainfield has received cards of invitation for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Maria Louise, Shepard, niece of Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Shepard of this city, to Mr. William Jay Schieffelin, on Thursday, Feb. 5, at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York. The ceremony will be followed by a reception at the home of Mr. Bell's grandmother, Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt.

Although the salary of the assistant engineers, as THE PRESS has said before, is entirely insufficient for the worthy duty, yet as soon as the news of Mr. Martin's declination is read above, there will arise a number of candidates for the position, the greater part of whom are the last of fit, competent and eligible ones that just now occur to THE PRESS, discloses the fact that the name of James W. Mooney, Jr., stands forth pre-eminent.

Prizeworthy Perfumery.

The music room and parlors of Mr. A. Wyckoff's residence on Madison avenue, were filled Friday at a musicale given by a few of his more advanced pupils. The gathering included many of the best known society people of the city and many representatives of the wealthiest families. The programme was:

1. Sextette	Mozart—Selected
	MISS WILLS.
2. Serenade	Schubert
	MISS MARKING.
3. Rondo	Bach
	MISS TILOU.
4. Concert Waltz	Mendelssohn
	MISS HOOLEY.
5. Mazurka	Chopin
	MISS WYCKOFF.
7. Cascade de Perles	Gottschalk
	MISS. MORGAN.
8. La Source	Ascher
	MISS RAYMOND.
9. Serenade	Chaminade
10. Capriccietto	S. G. Rooke
	MISS WYCKOFF.

The playing of Mrs. Howard and Miss Wykoff-spoon, deserved and received particular attention. Miss Wykoff is one of the most talented and promising pupils of the city, are people of Mr. Vanloo's.

BOTH SIDES TO BE HEARD.

The Legislature, Though Republican, Will Fully Investigate the Charges Against Keys.

Reprinted from the New York Herald.

Most people seem to imagine that the protest against the election of William J. Keys as Senator from Somerset county will not receive any consideration because he is a Democrat and the majority in the Senate is of the same faith. This impression was strengthened by the appointment of Senators McDonald, Keys and Cantlon as the Committee on Elections. Those who know President Abram recognized this as one of his characteristic jokes, but nevertheless people took it as a defiance to the Republicans who wrongfully unseated Senator McDonald last Winter and an intimation that they need not look for any consideration in their attempt to prove that Senator Keys had not the legal qualifications in the matter of residence in this State for the required period.

No attempt is made to justify President Abram's selection of Mr. Keys as one of the judges of his own case. His warmest friends admit that it was a blunder, though an unintentional one—that will have to be retrieved as quickly as possible. Senator Keys will, of course, resign his position, and will probably asked to be relieved.

But it can be stated authoritatively that the Republicans will have all the opportunity they want to present evidence in support of their protest.

"The protest was referred to our committee without a hearing, and the committee adjourned on Tuesday,"—says Senator McDonald—"and it was too late to do anything. Until then the Committee had nothing to do. We have all the time to do, and I shall call the Committee together at the earliest moment, probably Monday night, to-morrow and map out a plan of procedure. We shall give ample opportunity for both sides to be heard. We shall first examine the protest and then the answer thereto, and then hear any statements or evidence to be submitted in support of it. Senator Keys, will, I presume, be represented by counsel, and we shall hear what he has to say. I intend on his side of the case. In a general way that's what we'll do, but of course the actual details cannot be foreshadowed until the Committee meets. We'll be in a hurry and was out of hearing—be made an apology. He said that he had been reproached as likening the editor to a thief, and that he regretted that they had so. He had done had been to say that his own client's liability had been no more than if he had stood by the article furnished by him to the editor in his drawers, and it had been stolen and published without his authority. The Judge, the courtroom officials and the lawyer having had time to see the beautiful difference of the distinction the lawyer continued. "Sometimes counsel in their zeal for a client," he said, "will in the heat of argument unduly criticise the witness for the other side. In such a case it would be improper for a newspaper to publish an accurate report of such criticism, much more an inaccurate report."

In other words, lawyers addressing a jury have a right to accuse or abuse witnesses in such fashion that it would be improper for a newspaper to publish their remarks. They have a right to libel witnesses in the presence of the jury and to do so, and it is a crime to call attention to their actions. It has been stated that they have also privileges denied to laymen in the matter of contempt of court, and notoriously when holding public office they can safely take fees which would be regarded as bribes if accepted by men not of the profession.

What an interesting and instructive thing it would be for some able jurist to write a book on the limits of the immunities which lawyers enjoy from the ordinary rules and responsibilities of civilized human conduct.

It Is Respectfully Neg.

The names of the station Bienfield, on the South Branch Railroad, and of its post-office Roydeld, at the same place, have both been changed to Roydeld. The change has been authorized by the officials of the Railroad Company and Post Office Department, and went into effect at the beginning of the present year.

Cover by the Quart.

Up in Sussex county, they sell cows by the quart. They give the cow a fair week's trial, keeping correct account of the number of quarts of milk she gives, and then divide it by seven, giving the number of quarts daily. She is then to pay $2 a quart. If the cow gives an average of 3 quarts daily, she is then valued at $50; if, say, 10 quarts daily, then the price is $40

Leading Topic Fitness Reasons of Bad Habits.

At least one of the large manufacturing institutions of the city has been making inquiries of late into the habits of its several hundreds of employes, and some unexpected discharges have been made as a consequence. The effect of experience "We don't care to know anything about the private lives of employes that they don't want to tell us; but when we find habits existing that are formed whenever a man forms drinking or gambling habits and to drop him in consequence."

Borough Property Changes Hands.

Among the recent real estate transfers recorded in Somerset county are the following:

Margaret E. McLaughlin to Herman Deike, property in North Plainfield, $400.

Samuel Q. Lawson and wife to Chas. F. Sobring, property in North Plainfield, $6,000.

H. G. Runkle, of West Eighth street, Plainfield, to Mrs. Isabella Plainfield Granite Light Company, and one of the Directors of the Plainfield Water Supply Company, will leave for Havana, the last of this week. A few days before he left his home, are building extensive water-works in that city. Mr. Runkle will go by rail to Florida and by steamer from there.

Mr. Bell Declined the Position.

Alexander Bell of Plainfield has received cards of invitation for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Maria Louise, Shepard, niece of Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Shepard of this city, to Mr. William Jay Schieffelin, on Thursday, Feb. 5, at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York. The ceremony will be followed by a reception at the home of Mr. Bell's grandmother, Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt.

Although the salary of the assistant engineers, as THE PRESS has said before, is entirely insufficient for the worthy duty, yet as soon as the news of Mr. Martin's declination is read above, there will arise a number of candidates for the position, the greater part of whom are the last of fit, competent and eligible ones that just now occur to THE PRESS, discloses the fact that the name of James W. Mooney, Jr., stands forth pre-eminent.

Prizeworthy Perfumery.

The music room and parlors of Mr. A. Wyckoff's residence on Madison avenue, were filled Friday at a musicale given by a few of his more advanced pupils. The gathering included many of the best known society people of the city and many representatives of the wealthiest families. The programme was:

1. Sextette	Mozart—Selected
	MISS WILLS.
2. Serenade	Schubert
	MISS MARKING.
3. Rondo	Bach
	MISS TILOU.
4. Concert Waltz	Mendelssohn
	MISS HOOLEY.
5. Mazurka	Chopin
	MISS WYCKOFF.
7. Cascade de Perles	Gottschalk
	MISS. MORGAN.
8. La Source	Ascher
	MISS RAYMOND.
9. Serenade	Chaminade
10. Capriccietto	S. G. Rooke
	MISS WYCKOFF.

The playing of Mrs. Howard and Miss Wykoff-spoon, deserved and received particular attention. Miss Wykoff is one of the most talented and promising pupils of the city, are people of Mr. Vanloo's.

THE PYRAMUS AND THISBE.

Delightful Performance of Plautus's Two Famous Lovers at the Opera House.

Perhaps the most notable event in Plainfield's history—and surely the most notable of the present season—was the performance of "The Pyramus and Thisbe" at the Opera House last night, also on last Thursday evening. The handsome and thoroughly appreciative audience which spoke quite to the credit of the evening's entertainment.

The play, which was given in costume, was presented by the Plainfield Dramatic Club, and was under the direction of Mrs. Lovell Pratt. The first was a prologue, delivered by Miss Pratt, which was followed by a dialogue between Pyramus and Thisbe, who were played by Miss Pratt and Mr. Lovell Pratt. The love affairs of his son and daughter and the son and daughter of some other people, Farmer Braddock, a sanitary engineer, who was too good a sailor to learn the knack of successful farming, was persecuted by William T. Pelletier, Miss Braddock's son, first-class cad and a merchantship, who returns to the farm from a voyage just in time to avert financial disaster and foil the villain, was done by Bryant Tracy. Daniel Olmsted, as Brogden, janitor in the firm of Brogden & Sons, landlords' agents, was the villain, and as artistically good one.

George Harker, who made had the main comedy character in "Watty," the rustic. He was sufficiently broad. His make-up was very funny, and his every movement was in character and down to the mirth. Edward Bloodgood was a "limb of the law," "Fred Pinch" by name, who was retained by Watty to look after his love with "Deborah," the farmer's daughter. Percy Sweet, as "Steve", a messenger, was almost as slow as the genuine article. Herbert Bradford, Miss Braddock's son-Bookeeper, as "Mrs. Braddock," the farmer's wife, received liberal applause. "Letty Lashdell," Sailor Jack's sweetheart, a demure and pretty country lassie, whom "Mr. Brogden" sought to win by the power of money, was prettily played by Miss Elizabeth Stewart. Miss Maud Van-Boskerck, as "Rhoda," a rustic, made little unpleasant for "Watty" in the first part of the play, but graciously relented before it was too late. Mrs. George Wharton Edwards, as "Deborah," the nautical farmer's first mate, made comedy drama. Miss Lashdell, "Letty Lassdell," with her brother Jack's money, and got the farmer into a pack of trouble, from which all succeeded out properly by Jack when he returned from voyaging over the seas.

The most decided hits of the piece were made by Miss Stewart and Mr. Edwards and Mr. Pelletier in their respective roles, but especial mention also should be made of the acting of Miss Van-Boskerck, Miss Stewart and the Misses Van Boskerck. Mr. Bloodgood made an excellent "Weisher," and the lawyer of Mr. Olmsted was equally good. Mr. Olmsted as the villain and "Jack" was well sustained by Mr. Tracy, and Mr. Edwards was excellent. The costumes and characters were all carefully studied. The play was very prettily staged, and everything was artistically appropriate, as was to have been expected from the long experience of Mr. Edwards as stage manager.

The scene was that of a charming old English farm-yard, with rose-covered fence, and brightly shining brass milk cans before the cottage door.

The drama was followed by a laughable farce entitled "A Box of Monkeys," wherein Mrs. Brooks, Mrs. Mason, and Mrs. Evans, were each sprightly, very pretty and extremely fashionable in the order named. The costumes were charming. The male characters were ably sustained by Messrs. Perkins and VanVliet. The stage setting—a beautiful parlor scene, in pink, white and gold—was painted expressly for the occasion by George Wharton Edwards, and was much admired.

In "A Box of Monkeys" Deuse M. Van Vliet was "Edward Ralston," the young man from the country. Edward P. Perkins was "Chauncey Oglethorpe," his partner and the second son of a Lord: Mrs. George C. Evans was "Mrs. Oudego, Thomas," a widow with two years; Mrs. Charles E. Brooks was her niece; "Sierra Sengaline," a "pcairie rose;" and Mrs. J. Parker Mason was the "Lady Guinevere Gladpool," an "English princess," daughter of the "Earl of Paynaught."

During the evening Elliott's string orchestra filled the pauses between the acts with music.

The programmes were probably the richest thing of the kind ever seen in Plainfield. They were elegantly printed by DeVinne on the choicest of hand-made parchment paper, and made a souvenir of the occasion that all will value as having happy memories.

The affair was given for the benefit of the Boys' Club, the Muhlenberg Hospital and the Children's Home, of this city, and will net a handsome sum. A second performance will take place in April, when two new plays will be given for the same charities. Tickets are already selling very fast, and may be had of the Patrons, as already published in THE PRESS, and of J. Parker Mason, General avenue.

Just Missed the Thirtieth Base Now.

Louis G. Beakman, moulder, of East Third street, narrowly escaped frightful injury in Smith's carpentry shop at West-field recently. He was struck on the forehead by some moving machinery, and was thrown down so that his body just escaped being cut in two by a rapidly whirling circular saw. The wound above his eye will keep him confined to the house for some time.

Narrow Escape Blighted.

Chancellor McGill has just made public recognition of the reputation and character of Charles A. Bland, Esq., of this city, as an equity lawyer, by appointing him to the honorable office of Special Master in Chancery. Mr. Reed is appointed for the vacancy caused by the death of the late Judge Enos W. Runyon, and is to be congratulated upon the substantial proof of the esteem in which he is held by the Chancellor.

Safe to Fee.

Private advice informs THE PRESS that Messrs. E. P. Thorn and Ellis A. Campbell arrived safely at Jacksonville, Fla., on the 20th inst., after having experienced from Plainfield on the 16th inst. to Crescent City, Fla. Mr. Thorn says in his letter that the trip has not only had the intended with his personal arrangements during his voyage, and that the first and only familiar face he met on landing from the steamer was that of Dr. A. Bedell, a member of the firm of W. L. Peters & Bro., editors and proprietors of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST and DAILY PRESS, of this city, who is making a tour of the South on account of his health. He further states that he has just begun to catch black bass in St. Johns River, and that many friends in this section expect to hear great reports from him in that line later on, but will not, however, rest content with any story that does not include a fish-net full. He says they receive a substantial evidence of his skill. His "side partner" regrets that circumstances prevent him from being with him in his fishing pleasures.

Not Up to Date.

I heartily recommend Scientific Oil for rheumatism, it acts like a charm. J. S. McCLELLAN, Druggist, Indianapolis, Ind.

Dr. Bell's Cough Syrup takes the lead of all. Sold by druggists. Price 25 cents.

Carpenter & Patterson, Lancaster, N. Y.

IF HE DECEIVED THAT, HE DECEIVED MORE.

Another Expert Testifies to a Point Sayler Denied.

If Dr. Judge's testimony in the Vreeland trial in Elizabeth is true; if Prof. the Vreeland trial in Elizabeth is true; if Prof. the Vreeland trial in Elizabeth is true; if Prof.

A FLOATING HOSPITAL.

A Refuge That New Yorkers Have Built for the Poor.

Weekly Rescue of Sick Babies to Next Dog—Scenes at Starting and at the Way—How the Little Ones Enjoy Themselves.

[Copyrighted, 1891.]
[Special Correspondence.]

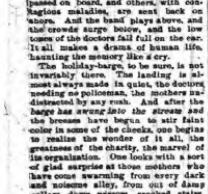
We had stopped at Fifth street. Our barge had floated lazily that morning from out the shadow of Blackwell's Island hospital to where the second landing is made. We had taken on at Twenty-sixth street babies without a name, soulless babies, so skinned and wan, so pale and weak, that no one afford to most of them, that con's heart ached. Not babies at all, one began to believe after looking into their faces, but babies with an age that had known no youth, dowry with a suffering always acute, withered, unnurtured. No, they were not babies, but incarnations of a misery centuries old—the aggregates of all man's sin to man, his sorrow, his unrelieved agony since time began.

It was in vain, that, during that first half hour, the breeze came fresh from the river, and the flags fluttered and flung against the blue sky above. The weight of that mystery—man's willingness to cast evil to his brother, and the power of creatures as these babies to exist—bore too heavily. Not even when a grateful understanding of the philanthropy at work began to dawn on the mind could one throw off the gloom. Just then there came the landing at Fifth street, and more babies, more misery, more squalor, more overcrowding.

"Enteritis," "Meningitis," "Gastritis," called the doctors to each other in low tones, as they looked at the eyes and, wise nods over the heads of the people, while some of the babies are passed on, and others, with most contagious maladies, are sent back on shore. And the band plays above, and the cool air sings below, and the low tones of the doctors fall full on the ear. It all makes a drama of human life, haunting the memory like Faust.

The holiday-barge, to be sure, is not invariably there. The landing is almost always on a Friday, but when Monday needing no policeman, the mothers undistracted by any rush. And after the barge has left the pier, and the strong of the breezes have begun to stir faint color in some of the cheeks, one begins to understand the wonder of it all, the greatness of the charity, the marvel of its organization. One looks, too, for a look of glad surprise at those mothers who have come swarming from every dark and noisome alley. From out of dark cellars, down narrow, crooked stairs, bearing their pinched and white-faced babies for a breath of fresh air, for a little sun. One forgives the woes in delight at the remedy.

It is almost twenty-three years since "St. John's Guild" first began sending



THE RAVENOUS.

dred feet of high-water mark, with the sea on one side and the stretch of pine woods on the other, with wide verandahs and cool wards, it would be hard to find anywhere a place better adapted to its needs. None of the glazing white of the town hospitals is here. The wood is dark and restful to the eye. The glare of the ocean does not penetrate beyond the wide shade of the verandahs, and from the pine groves on the other side comes only a refreshing, softened light. Two garrulous old parrots stand like bore with trained nurses and matrons. When a sick baby is brought to the hospital it is the mother remains with it, and both are cared for in that same generous spirit which characterizes all that is done by the president and trustees for the sick and helpless of New York.

LILLIE HAMILTON FRENCH.

MISSY AT DINNER.

Dashaway (to hostess after the evening party)—I want to ask you if I may have the privilege of escorting the two Curtis sisters home? They are, by far, the prettiest girls in the room.

Hostess—Certainly, my dear Mr. Dashaway. I was about to ask you would you be so kind, for there is such a scarcity of gentlemen! But (archly) it is rather awkward for you that there are two of them.

Dashaway—Oh, that's all right (a moment later, to the elder Miss Curtis)—My dear Miss Curtis, I am going to escort your sister home. I will be back for you in half an hour.—N. Y. Sun.

THE RETURN FROM THE WEDDING.

"An' what are they doin' now?"

"Oh, Marian! it's just too splendid for any think. She's in the library, with her head on his shoulder and he's a-musin' his hair like every think!"—Life.

A Dire Revenge.

He had been turned out of a West street saloon, and was much ruffled, when an observer took a step nearer and asked:

"Throw you out?"

"Yes, threw me right out!"

"Any particular reason?"

"I haven't any money."

"I see. Well?"

"Well, the blooming bloke didn't get any the best of me, and don't you forget it!"

"Did you hit him?"

"Hit him! Forty times worse than that! I told him right in the presence of five other bloomking blokes that he was no gentleman!"—Detroit Free Press.

They Gave Him a Big Parlor.

He was a good-tempered old gentleman and never suspects that there are people who are not willing to do all in the world. He accosted the hotel clerk cordially as he arrived, somewhat breathless from the exertion of the stairs.

"I have often heard," he said, generously, "how hotel clerks got to be wonderful shapers, and I have always doubted it, but I'm liked if I can understand how you came to guess that I was fond of economy, and liked to get a room as high where I could look at the stars nights."—Washington Post.

A Mean Man.

"Look here, Jones," he said, the lately resigned conductor to the railroad editor, "I've always treated you white, haven't I?"

"You have."

"And when I resigned the other day didn't I tell you I'd worked for the company twenty years?"

"I believe so."

"And yet this is the kind of a send-off you give me." And he laid the last grain of the pack of cards he had pointed to the notice of his retirement, which stated that he "had worked the company for twenty years."—St. Joseph News.

An Apt Teacher.

Mr. Beauregard—I see your name on this painting. Why, you must have painted it!

Miss Dilly Tantit—Yes; I have been taking lessons of Mr. Billyrie for three weeks.

Mr. Beauregard—I had no idea you could paint so beautifully.

Miss Dilly Tantit—Oh, I only did the name.—Puck.

A Change in Weights by Time.

A Maine woman one hundred years old says that in her day children were taught to write by making impressions on sand with their fingers. To-day block letters are copied by children from printed lessons on the slate.—Chicago Times.

Not to Be Used After All.

Mrs. Maddox—I'm very sorry again, doctor, my cough bothers me so; I'm afraid I'm going to die.

Genial Doctor—Don't discover mind, it's not a very difficult thing to do. The best part of our life is much easier than the rest. You see, there's no teething.—Judy.

Finish His Course.

Mr. Billsdon—Is that a very funny story this morning, sir?

Mr. Brillion—No. A bore of some young woman named Bibbs. The donkey! Some of these days I'll send plaster of Paris.—Jeppler's Circular.

A ROMANCE IN CITY LIFE.

Recollections Connected with Rockefeller's Wedding Day.

Not far outside of New York City, in one of the suburbs whose names are splashed by the waters of the Sound, there is a pretty cottage, a cottage as it is possible to find. Its plain white glazing brightly shining in the sunshine of a June day, the perfume of every rose that grows in the garden which surrounds it comes to you as you ride by. It is, in short, the cottage of a romance, and it is only a few years ago that the world was startled by the news of the simple wedding that took place there.

Before dinner comes the stop for the patients destined for the seaside hospital. The barge anchors in mid-stream and the patients are carried ashore in boats, so long and so many-cared that one thinks of the early pilgrim fathers coming to some new land in small boats. And the doctor waits on shore with a flag of hope like a joyous pioneer.

The seaside hospital is on New Dorp, Staten Island, arouses renewed enthusiasm. Built on piles, so giving a draught underneath, and within a hundred feet of high-water mark, with the sea on one side and the stretch of pine woods on the other, with wide verandahs and cool wards, it would be hard to find anywhere a place better adapted to its needs. None of the glazing white of the town hospitals is here. The wood is dark and restful to the eye. The glare of the ocean does not penetrate beyond the wide shade of the verandahs, and from the pine groves on the other side comes only a refreshing, softened light. Two garrulous old parrots stand like bore with trained nurses and matrons. When a sick baby is brought to the hospital it is the mother remains with it, and both are cared for in that same generous spirit which characterizes all that is done by the president and trustees for the sick and helpless of New York.

THE RAVENOUS.

LILLIE HAMILTON FRENCH.

MISSY AT DINNER.

Dashaway (to hostess after the evening party)—I want to ask you if I may have the privilege of escorting the two Curtis sisters home? They are, by far, the prettiest girls in the room.

Hostess—Certainly, my dear Mr. Dashaway. I was about to ask you would you be so kind, for there is such a scarcity of gentlemen! But (archly) it is rather awkward for you that there are two of them.

Dashaway—Oh, that's all right (a moment later, to the elder Miss Curtis)—My dear Miss Curtis, I am going to escort your sister home. I will be back for you in half an hour.—N. Y. Sun.

THE RETURN FROM THE WEDDING.

"An' what are they doin' now?"

"Oh, Marian! it's just too splendid for any think. She's in the library, with her head on his shoulder and he's a-musin' his hair like every think!"—Life.

A Dire Revenge.

He had been turned out of a West street saloon, and was much ruffled, when an observer took a step nearer and asked:

"Throw you out?"

"Yes, threw me right out!"

"Any particular reason?"

"I haven't any money."

"I see. Well?"

"Well, the blooming bloke didn't get any the best of me, and don't you forget it!"

"Did you hit him?"

"Hit him! Forty times worse than that! I told him right in the presence of five other bloomking blokes that he was no gentleman!"—Detroit Free Press.

They Gave Him a Big Parlor.

He was a good-tempered old gentleman and never suspects that there are people who are not willing to do all in the world. He accosted the hotel clerk cordially as he arrived, somewhat breathless from the exertion of the stairs.

"I have often heard," he said, generously, "how hotel clerks got to be wonderful shapers, and I have always doubted it, but I'm liked if I can understand how you came to guess that I was fond of economy, and liked to get a room as high where I could look at the stars nights."—Washington Post.

A Mean Man.

"Look here, Jones," he said, the lately resigned conductor to the railroad editor, "I've always treated you white, haven't I?"

"You have."

"And when I resigned the other day didn't I tell you I'd worked for the company twenty years?"

"I believe so."

"And yet this is the kind of a send-off you give me." And he laid the last grain of the pack of cards he had pointed to the notice of his retirement, which stated that he "had worked the company for twenty years."—St. Joseph News.

An Apt Teacher.

Mr. Beauregard—I see your name on this painting. Why, you must have painted it!

Miss Dilly Tantit—Yes; I have been taking lessons of Mr. Billyrie for three weeks.

Mr. Beauregard—I had no idea you could paint so beautifully.

Miss Dilly Tantit—Oh, I only did the name.—Puck.

A Change in Weights by Time.

A Maine woman one hundred years old says that in her day children were taught to write by making impressions on sand with their fingers. To-day block letters are copied by children from printed lessons on the slate.—Chicago Times.

Not to Be Used After All.

Mrs. Maddox—I'm very sorry again, doctor, my cough bothers me so; I'm afraid I'm going to die.

Genial Doctor—Don't discover mind, it's not a very difficult thing to do. The best part of our life is much easier than the rest. You see, there's no teething.—Judy.

Finish His Course.

Mr. Billsdon—Is that a very funny story this morning, sir?

Mr. Brillion—No. A bore of some young woman named Bibbs. The donkey! Some of these days I'll send plaster of Paris.—Jeppler's Circular.

SAVED THE MONEY.

A Creditor Who Became Acquainted with Two Rascals.

Two rascals met on the street and each mistook the other for some old friend.

"Thank-ee outrage!" exclaimed a citizen, who had fallen into the trap.

"Call the police and have him arrested!" shouted a second.

"Gentlemen, I am not satisfactioned!" advised a third.

"Gentlemen," said the victim, as he counted his fat fork, "it's all right—all right."

"How all right?"

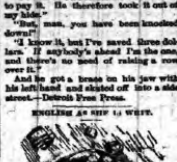
"I owned him three dollars and refused to pay it. He therefore took it out of my hide."

"Well, man, you have been knocked down!"

"I know it, but I've saved three dollars. If anybody's abused I'm the one, and there's no good of raising a row over it."

And he got a brass on his jaw with his left hand and skated off into a side street.—Detroit Free Press.

ENGLISH AS SHE IS WRITE.



"The rain came down in bucketfuls."—Harper's Young People.

A Very Lovely Dress.

Henry Ward Beecher used often to quote a remark which he once overheard in the White mountains at a hotel where he was staying with his family. On the piazza one day a girl near to him said to her companion, a damsel of her own age:

"Oh, Marianne, I do think that gown of yours is just too lovely for any thing, and it is so appropriate to wear up here!"

The other smiled self-approvingly.

"Yes," she said, smoothing down the folded of the frock in question, "I do think the gown sets off the mountains better than any other I ever had on."—N. Y. Mercury.

Good Grounds.

"Do you think you will gain your lawsuit?" asked Gus Smith of Colonel Forger, who had been run over by a fire engine, and was suing the city of Austin for damages.

"Yes, I think I'll come out ahead."

"Has your lawyer given you grounds to think so?"

"Yes, I have given him grounds to think so. I've flooded him two lots on Austin avenue as a fee."—Texas Siftings.

For the Public Weal.

"My good girl," said an experienced amusement purveyor, "take my advice and don't go on the stage."

"I suppose," she said, sharply, "you are going to undertake to save me from a terrible fate, or something horrid?"

"No," he replied, solemnly, "I was thinking of the public."—Washington Post.

Homeopathy Applied to Pleasure.

"In the far West," said the tall man from Utah, "we don't have no bank failures. We cured them fancy financiers of that folly by the homeopathic method."

"You did?" asked Guiles, as he put down his glass. "How did you manage it?"

"Why, easy enough. Whenever a bank suspended we suspended the banker. It's like a charm, that did."—Chicago Times.

WHY JOHNNIE WAS THANKFUL.

"Golly! I'm glad my mother don't wear slippers like them."—Puck.

A Make-Weight.

At Vichy, our friend Goutrax got into conversation with a jaded familiar, who said among other things:

"I have a couple of marriageable daughters. I am giving the eldest 50,000 francs for her dowry and the second one 100,000 francs."

"She is your pet child, I suppose?"

"No; she squints."—Le Patriote.

Hints to a Reformer.

He presented himself at the editor's door, saying: "Sir, I am the great American reformer. Do you want an interview?"

"Yes; wipe your feet, take off your hat, stop chewing that tobacco and sit down."—Judge.

Identifying Him.

Maddox—Who is that 2-lapidated-looking individual?

Cumso—That's a man named Rawlins. Graduated at the head of his class in college and delivered an eloquent valedictory on "The Secret of Success."—N. Y. Sun.

A DECIDED GAIN.

Hobson—How did you to joy your sum mer trip, Bagley?

Bagley—I made a delightful time. Gained one hundred and thirty pounds.

Hobson—One hundred and thirty pounds! I don't believe it.

Bagley—Don't you? Well, here it comes down the street. Just wait a moment and I'll introduce you.—The Jury.

Up to the Occasion.

One of the highest officers in the German army is very particular that his soldiers are properly fed. He is in the habit of making unexpected visits to the barracks and inspecting the food in person. On the occasion of one of these visits he ordered two soldiers carrying a steaming boiler from the kitchen.

"Put it down. Fetch a spoon," he commanded.

The astonished soldiers looked at each other.

One of them rushed off, but reappeared in a few moments with a spoon.

"It seems to me that sort of soup you get," said the General, as he dived into the boiler with the spoon, but at once he turned it to use it on, exclaiming: "Why, you will remain at the barge and have only soup down here by one of the boys."

The shadow of a great dread was his face as he spoke, for he knew that he must absent his meals with the men or else be guilty of favoritism.

The soldiers saluted and marched off.—Chicago Tribune.

FREEHOLDERS' MEETING.

(OFFICIAL.)

ELIZABETH, N. J., Jan. 6, 1891.

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county, held Thursday, January 6, 1891, at 2 P.M.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Bond, Dolp, Hilton, Rollinson, Jones, Kyte, Littell, Pierson, Roll, Russell, Sullivan, Thompson, Trahon, Vanderbeek, Wright, West—14.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting were read and on motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

I hereby request your honorable body to permit me to, at my own expense, have the meadows now being laid on the Elizabeth river, in the town of Union, widened and deepened, also between the street known as Bayway and the Elizabeth river, in the town of Union, No. 42. The work to be of the same character and quality as that being done at the meadows between Nos. 41 and 43, now being done by the contractor who is doing the work for the county at the same time.

Yours respectfully,

WM. J. HAVE.

On motion of Freeholder West, received and referred to County Attorney.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Vanderbeek:

Resolved, That the County Collector is hereby directed to pay over the money appropriated for hospitals as follows:

To the Elizabeth General Hospital and Dispensary, . . . $225.00

To the Muhlenberg Hospital of Plainfield, . . . $175.00

Freeholder Roll moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That permission be granted to J. Williams Lyons to have County road on North avenue widened, in accordance with his request this day made, provided the plans and specifications with the county as may be approved of by the committee on said avenue and county attorney.

Freeholder Jones moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That the county collector be and he is hereby directed to pay to Messrs. B. M. and J. F. Shanley $5,000 of the amount withheld from them on account of contracts for constructing county roads upon their giving a bond on such conditions as shall be approved by the County Attorney and County Collector and upon the said Messrs. Shanley paying interest on said sum of five thousand dollars until the time when the same becomes due.

Free older Littell moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted as follows:

Ayes—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Bender, Brian, Howard, Jones, Kyte, Littell, Roll, Sullivan, Thompson, Trahon, Vanderbeek, Wright, West—14.

Nays—Freeholder Dolp, Pierson—2.

Not voting—Freeholder Russell—1.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That bill of $857.00 be paid to R. M. & J. F. Shanley for extra work on St. George avenue in Linden township, city of Rahway, upon his signing such release to the county as shall be approved by the County Attorney.

Freeholder Roll moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder Kyte moved that the clerk be directed to notify Mr. Shanley to be referred to the county attorney for his opinion.

Which was carried.

Freeholder Howard moved a recess be taken for one half hour to enable auditing committee to approve bills.

Which was carried.

On roll call after recess all the members were present.

The following bills audited and approved, were read and ordered paid unanimously:

Court—Wm E Samson, $28; Benj F Lee, 43 12; John Dixon, 30; do, 7 50; T F McGinnis, 201 12; Jas T Wing, 45; John L Crowell, 367 66; Cook & Hall, 21; Geo Neill, 9 40; do, 18 90; Henry C Schoppe, 30; John Ryan, 483; Robert Walpole, 98; B M Rogers, 37 80; Jas M Carey, 37 50; Amos Miller, 26 80; Eli M Barber, 26; do, 4 20; Jas C Jeppson, 2 20; do, 2 20; do, 2 20; Wm B Kinsey, 2 20; do, 2 20; A D Cook & Bro., do, 360 75; Jas T Looby, Union, 88 20; Jas S Goodwin, Clerk Plainfield, 1,000; Lindley Sonneider, Elizabeth, 5 33; Benjamin S Dean, do, 21,52; Chas Hoffman, do, 1,788; do, 14 40; do, 47 30; do, 92 84; do, 3,196 33.

Bridge account—C C Bailey, Union, 823 10; Standard Paint Co, Elizabeth and Lindel, 99 75; Chas Lindel, Elizabeth, 15; William R Ogden, Elizabeth, 10; I S Loring, Westfield, 222 33; Samuel C Moore & Sons Co, Elizabeth, 2 40; do, 2 40; Wright Bros, Hoboken, Bayway, 112 75; Wm Chamberlain, do, 1190; Newark Stone Quarry, do, 94 39; John M Van Fleet, Rahway, 1,000; David Bunch, do, 21 25; John W Van Fleet, do, 66 66; A Geo Neill, 9 40; do, 18 90; Henry C Schoppe, 30; John Ryan, 483; Robert Walpole, 98; B M Rogers, 37 80; Jas T

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1891. No. 6.

"Support the Constitution, which is the consent of the Union, as well as its limitations, as to its authorities."—MADISON.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Masters in Chancery, Solicitors in Bankruptcy, Notaries Public, Conveyancers, &c.
Office: Front Street, Plainfield, N. J.

W. V. STEER,
Counselor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner, &c.
Cor. PARK AND NORTH AVES. 4-34-ly

GORDON W. DAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box 155, Telephone, N. J., or address in care of Constitutionalist, Plainfield, N. J. 7m37

DR. CHARLES R. THURSTON,
Dentist,
30 West Front Street. A new local anesthetic for painless tooth extracting (each ordered) pain Gold filling a specialty.—3m30

H. HARD,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Box 24, South Plainfield, N. J. Orders left at E. Frost Street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—41y37

OSCAR B. TEALE,
Architect,
121 Broadway, New York City. Rooms 10 and 11. Long-term and Building Loans Solicited. 3 Reed-Block, Plainfield, N. J.—3m37

J. H. TROTTER,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office in A. A. Sexton's livery stable, corner Main Street and Watson's avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Calls left at house by postal, T. O. Box 109 or left at Wilson's drug store, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention. Residence, 91 Rose P. court-street, corner Sing street. 41y1137

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Residence and shop No. 26 East 2d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 4p49

LUPKINS & HUMMER,
SALESMEN
Butter, Eggs & Produce
Meats of all Kinds,
FRUIT IN SEASON. WOOD BUTA BLOCK IN THE BASEMENT.
NO. 36 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
A. LUPKINS. L. A. HUMMER.
41m17

G. W. FORCE,
32 West Front street.
Opening of
FALL AND WINTER STOCK
Boots and Shoes at Low Prices
A FINE GRADE OF GOODS TO SELECT FROM.
32 West Front street.
G. W. FORCE.
1m39

TO THE PUBLIC!

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.

It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Mason' Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
1m37

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Tunnicliff's Bookstore, Park avenue.
The Accommodation Express will attend to the transferring business of the citizens of Plainfield. Goods or Baggage to and from the Depot, or from one residence to another, promptly and carefully dealt with. Orders solicited. Prompt attention to all.

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
(Formerly Clerk's.)

Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry!
repairing neatly and promptly done.
4m37

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND Ornamental Monuments,
Fencing for Cemetery Plots
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments.

All work executed in the most skilful manner and every reasonable price. All orders left at the Works, E. Second St., Plainfield, N. J., or at Front St., next to R. E. Ch., Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention. Monuments erected in Graveyard or Cemetery.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES.
No. 8 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of Footwear made from the best material, and in the latest styles. Repairing done neatly and promptly.

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
Is now the sole proprietor of the old established
Grocery Store,
No. 14 NORTH AVENUE.
Where he will be pleased to meet his friends, and the public generally. Fine Groceries, Teas, Coffees, Spices, Canned Goods, Oysters, Cheese, Butter in season. Fine Confectionery always on hand. Anything not found in stock kept in store furnished at short notice.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

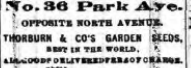
FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR N. Y. & P. DEPOT.)
JAS. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat, Fine Sample Rooms, Billiards.
Thoroughly genial at reasonable rates. 52-ly

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Unity Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD L. BOYCE, Proprietor.
Choicest wines and liquors always on hand. Free-lunch Station and Stands attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours. 7m37

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice-President.
NATHAN HARPER, " "
ELIAS R. POPE, Treasurer.
41y

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS,
BEST IN THE WORLD.
ALSO ONE OF RILEY SHEDD'S FEED AND FLOUR STORES.
4m37

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
(Successors to C. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.,)
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tints, Anaglypta, Lincrusta-Walton, Stained Flock Papers, &c. Borders for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
3-13-ly

LIVERY.
A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables


Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Parties and Private Balls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure drives. Satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at my residence, 21 Somerset street, will receive prompt attention.
TELEPHONE CALL, NO. 54.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will be pleased to receive his old patrons and friends at his new stables, where he will be found ready and able to serve them with all kinds of turn-outs at the shortest notice, and upon reasonable terms. Horses boarded by the day, week or month. Good attendance. Terms moderate. Patronage solicited.
4p

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Sold in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
"This Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the Concord grape, pressed in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable
Tonic and Strengthening Properties
are recommended by many other Wine. Being pure and well matured, its delicious aroma, delicate vinous, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed. It has received the principal Medals and Diplomas of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalid can use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and adapted to the various ailments that affect the Quicker and Weaker Sex. It is in every respect WINE TO BE RELIED UPON.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the Juice of the Concord Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it rises from the vine. It contains all the nutritious, delicious, medicinal properties of the fruit in their perfection, it destroying the ferment or fermentation. It is entirely free from alcohol, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's Sacrative Claret
is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, strongly united for Dinner use.
Speer's P. J. Sherry
is a Wine of superior character, and partaken of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is distilled.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
is a pure article of fine grape, and stands unrivaled in this country for medicinal purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grape from which it is distilled.
It is also that the celebrated SPEER'S PORT, Passaic, N. J., is over the fork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FINE GOODS. (LIABLE WINES. 9-29-ly

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The undersigned are prepared to place risks in the
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the
City of New York, or prepares to assign warrants, adequate protection to Fire and Marine risks effectually and satisfactorily. Office at residence on Plainfield avenue, corner Somerset street.
NATHAN HARPER

Speer's Socialist Claret
is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, strongly united for Dinner use.
WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.
Attorney

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also Agents for the Insurance Companies of the Atlantic Line. Dwellings insured for one, three and five years. Bank Stock Bought and Sold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale.
5 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS R. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
In connection with my Meat Market, I am prepared to furnish oysters, fish and game in season. Orders left at my store, corner Second and Somerset streets, will receive prompt attention. Goods delivered to all parts of the city. Patronage solicited.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mr. EDWARD E. HOWE,
OF NEW YORK CITY,
Will take advanced pupils on the PIANO THURSDAYS OF EACH WEEK.
With kind consent of the Rev. Wm. Sparrow, 102 East Front street, reference is kindly given.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue.
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The Course will include Modeling, Drawing and Sewing. 9 11 12

DODWORTH'S
CLASSES FOR
Dancing & Deportment,
Seminary Hall, Plainfield, N. J.,
Commencing Wednesday, Oct. 29, 1890,
From 3½ to 5½ P. M.
For particular inquiries at R. E. KENTON, Seminary Hall, or at 108 E. DODWORTH, Residence, 1,136 Fulton Ave., N. Y. City. 10 3 oct

PAINTERS & PAINTERS SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass,
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
4p33

I. B. WOOLSTON, J. P. BUCKLE
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTERS SUPPLIES, 28 NORTH AVENUE
4p2367

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
(Successor to T. J. Corey.)
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—S. W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the city. Furniture given special attention. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 109 or Ex. Feder solicited. 1192

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Sold in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
"This Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the Concord grape, pressed in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and become partly raisined before gathering. Its invaluable
Tonic and Strengthening Properties
are recommended by many other Wine. Being pure and well matured, its delicious aroma, delicate vinous, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed. It has received the principal Medals and Diplomas of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalid can use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and adapted to the various ailments that affect the Quicker and Weaker Sex. It is in every respect WINE TO BE RELIED UPON.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the Juice of the Concord Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it rises from the vine. It contains all the nutritious, delicious, medicinal properties of the fruit in their perfection, it destroying the ferment or fermentation. It is entirely free from alcohol, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's Socialist Claret
is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, strongly united for Dinner use.
Speer's P. J. Sherry
is a Wine of superior character, and partaken of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is distilled.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
is a pure article of fine grape, and stands unrivaled in this country for medicinal purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grape from which it is distilled.
It is also that the celebrated SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the fork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FINE GOODS. (LIABLE WINES. 9-29-ly

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Exclusive agent for CHESTERFIELD
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The best 5 cent cigar in the State, and made on the same principle as the
CLEAR HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
Also agent for some of the Chicago Brands of Fortune and Domestic Cigars. Cigarettes and Tobacco at wholesale and retail.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety.
1m37

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMEST'
—SEGARS!—
No. 5 PARK AVE., (Corner of SECOND ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials,
Of every description.
The celebrated "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, with other brands of standard quality on hand. 4m37

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
(Successor to E. B. MAYNARD.)
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 20 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting done at short residence. Shaving, Shampooing satisfactorily performed. 41y37

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
ALL BUSINESS—Entrusted to my care—Prompt Plainfield, N. J.

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Best Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF.
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 9-12-ly

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE.
Hugo Weigman,
32 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.
4m37

WHATEVER form of printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings.
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memorials,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Public or Private Circulation.
Everything.

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST.

DAILY PRESS

(Chautauqua Building)

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING.
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc., Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above branches in a strictly first-class manner.
Having associated myself with Mr. Thomas Hoyt, late of New York City, I am now prepared to do all kinds of Plumbing, Gas Fitting, Tin Roofing, Etc., in the most workmanlike manner. Orders left at the shop, south of the Depot, will receive prompt attention. All work guaranteed.
D. W. LITTELL,
No. 2 SOUTH AVE. (OPP. PLAINFIELD N. J.

Parlor Stoves,
Othello Ranges,
Choice Timothy Seed,
Furnace, Range and Stove Repairing Promptly Done.
House Furnishing Goods,
Hardware, Plumbing and Tinning.
A. E. GRIFFEN,
18 East Front Street.
TELEPHONE CALL, 7. 11-14

THE WOMAN OF FASHION.

Latest Fancies Devised for Umbrella Handles.

Sons of Rain-Free to Adorn the Newest of Coaching—Light Gold and Cut Silver the Favorites in Some Quarters.

[CONSTITUTIONALIST, 1891.]

Nothing is more constantly devised by man or woman than the unique in parasol and umbrella handles. The woman of fashion carries an umbrella or parasol to her promenades, both in winter and summer; and, in consequence, she is continually on the lookout for novelties that will be new, handy, elegant and attractive.

Dresden china is the latest material that is used for umbrella handles. It is stout and thick when put to this use, and does not break as easily as one would suppose from the delicacy of the fad. The color of the Dresden varies according to the taste and fancy of the purchaser. Dark colored handles, slightly decorated, accompany umbrellas designed for shopping, shopping and calling. White light, gay ones, almost Dolly Varden in appearance, are for use in the theatres in the parlor and upon the avenues.

Pins for the hair are worn in all sizes, shapes and kinds. They are worn in a quantity as one can boast. A pretty combination of hair-pins for a set in Parisian style is this: There is a gilt hair-pin, with tortoise-shell prongs, and the others have solid gold prongs topped with the most exquisite shades of turquoise blue, reflecting from a lovely amber to a deep wine brown.

In the hair of a light blonde these are peculiarly effective, reflecting the golden shades of hair and giving back a radiance from the many-colored tortoise shell.

Another set of hair-pins varied widely in the design of each pin. One had the body of an ape for a head; another was a dull red gold with a cat's eye set within; a third was cut silver that shone like diamonds. Frosted gold was another, and the prettiest of all was a combination of turquoise and tortoise-shell. These pins are all meant for actual service as well as ornament.

Another hand in the line of new jewelry, though an expensive one, is for having toilet pins headed with real jewels instead of the conceited heads that grace the pins that come by the paper. These jeweled pins are obtainable, in imitation, for a few cents a piece, but real articles cost a fortune. A certain belle left an order with her jeweler for fifty garnet-headed pins, twelve only being of the real jewel, each of light gold and cut silver and set in a design of the conceited heads, pearl and Dresden. Many of these jewels require a gold setting; so, although the heads may be the finishing gems that could be procured, the cost was more than the average woman of taste would care to expend upon one own silk toilet so easily lost and so really slight in the matter of ornamentation.

CARRIAGE HOOD.

Every thing that can be done to heighten the charm of the tea gown is now devised by the modiste who understands her business. At an afternoon tea a young matron appeared in an exquisite gown designed by an American artist, and executed upon one own silk looms. It was gold color in hue with a pompadour design flashed during across it. Pink figures were faintly outlined on the surface, blending with the background in an indistinct wavy mass of color.

The waist was half confined by a girdle which consisted of a number of miniatures painted on porcelain and set with gold and rhinestones. The likenesses were those of the friends of the young lady whom she had known and who, as a special token of their friendship, had had the painting set in the form of a locket. Each of the gown went three chains of gold, beautifully cut, and from the center an immense diamond that reflected the hints of the gown and of the girdle.

The rage for gathered and puffed sleeves is so great that they have already invaded the precincts of the decollete gown. This seems almost impossible, yet it is a fact that they are the latest daring way as to defy detection if really well done. A gown is made low-necked and sleeveless. Over the shoulders is fastened a tight-fitting silken strap and on this strap is gathered a full, long sleeve that falls from the shoulder and is there gathered in upon a band. At first sight, one is startled to see the high bands of muslin on the strap over the shoulders and only the long graceful sweep of the sleeves free one from the impression that something is amiss. Some of the most fashionable dressers in the city have adopted this fad, and it is said to be the latest fancy in garments.

THE FELLOW AS HE IS NOW.

SKETCHED AT SIXTEEN.

One more extreme in fashion upon the women of fashionable society is this: It is the wearing of what in modern times is termed bonnets and what is "real fancy" in general style and language as they are worn in Paris or who goes to the utmost height permissible in any thing. In the long skirts that one may now upon the street there is a good illustration of this. The truly fashionable lady who would not dare to sweep the street in front and barely sweeping the pavement in the rear. There is no question that this style of upsets one's dress and the back is gathered in a graceful fold of fabric that upsets one's dress and gives a fan as it reaches the bottom of the skirt.

A very stylish gown from one of this description is of black and white brocade. The pattern had a tendency of light for and a high color of the seams, while a deep band of black velvet was around the bottom of the skirt.

These plain skirts scarcely demand a description, as they are so simple in their construction. The fullness of the gown proceeds from the waist to receive a deep band. The lining of a plain skirt and so caught an overskirt appearance around the knees. This, too, the petticoat is cut quite full, so as to give a sweeping plain skirt, and, consequently, the place where it leaves off is distinctly apparent to observers. Such a new style of divided skirt does away with this difficulty, for it provides warmth and sufficient protection, while the skirt has the long graceful sweeping effect, nor tend to twist about the knees of the wearer as she walks.

DOLLY DEBUTANTS AND MISS SECOND SEASON.

CLARA BARTON.

The most elegant and expensive divided skirts are very long, coming almost to the ankles, and are rather tight. They cost upwards of ten dollars each and are not altogether convenient, being difficult to lift out of the mud in sloppy weather. Another style, costing only a quarter as much, is made of heavy linen or even poplin. These are satisfactory in warm weather. But the divided skirt that holds the palm of popular approval is a combination of silk and wool. It ties just below the waist with a shir ribbon, extends only to the knees and has a clinging quality that makes it just the thing for warmth, health and ease in windy weather, or when the thermometer threatens to take a run down among the zeros.

With such a petticoat as this and an all-wool combination garment, a woman is prepared for all kinds of weather, save very hot.

Latest advices insist that all boas shall be fleat, somewhat broad and very long, reaching to the hem of the skirt. A fashionable boa of this description is in black Angora. A high collar of the same material is fastened by a clasp and surrounds the neck. The front is fastened with a silver clasp. The effect is something like a cape with the fronts falling loosely to the bottom of the skirt.

The cape in seal and astrakan is new, because it combines the high, straight collar with a large full cape, which can be turned up or down at pleasure. A toque in seal and astrakan and a calcgrogram upon the ornaments are companies this, and there is also a seal muff with astrakan gauntlets fastened to the ends.

This very convenient arrangement protects the wrists and keeps the hands warm inside the muff.

A charmingly becoming carriage cloak came out last week. It was of black silk brocaded intermixed. It was lined throughout with fine white Mongolia fur and an ingenious bon of the same surrounded the neck and fell over the cloak. Deep cuffs set off the sleeves.

Fur toques are greatly worn. In all cases they are combination affairs, feathers or flowers and beaver, the astrakan and seal, or plush and fur. A becoming seal fur hat had a broad band of otter for a border. The crown was turned up like the brim of a turban and was much higher in the front than in the back. Another seal hat was turban shaped and was trimmed with sable-tails all around the crown.

A Singular Difference.

A.—I am in a hideous pickle.

B.—How so?

A.—I have not got any thing to eat, and the only thing I've got to pawn is my false teeth, and if I pawn them and buy something to eat then I can't eat it. I never was in such a hideous fix in all my life.—Texas Siftings.

Too Bad.

"How many languages do you speak, Mr. Dullard?"

"Seven."

"How delightful to be able to converse in so many tongues!"

"Yes. It would be more if I could think of any thing to say."—Puck.

A GIRL'S MISTAKE.

The Clever Ruse by Which She Robbed a Rich Californian.

"During the month of September, 1888, I was employed on a confidential case in St. Paul, Minn.," said Detective Hagan, of the New York, Ontario & Western railway service to a Utica Herald reporter, "and was one day standing in the Union depot watching for a suspected party, when a train came in well filled with passengers. Among those who alighted was a wealthy gentleman from the Pacific coast. Just as he stepped on the platform a handsome young woman, apparently about twenty years of age, rushed into his arms saying: 'Oh, papa, papa, I'm so glad you've come,' and with that she began to shower the bewildered Californian with kisses. Then she gave a short, frightened scream, rushed through the crowd, entered a hack, and was driven away. In all, suppose it was a case of mistaken identity. The Californian enjoyed the mistake.

"He came to me and the railway officer, who were talking about some business, and said it was a very pretty girl, and he guessed we had better take something on the strength of it, as the kisses were worth a considerable. We went out to the hotel, and he took his smile while the officer and myself took a cigar. When the Westerner came to pay for the wine and cigars he discovered that his pocket-book and two hundred dollars were gone. He then began to unravel the fact that his fine gold watch and diamond shirt stud were also missing. The Californian was not long in the where or when the things had been taken. I examined his shirt front and discovered a tooth missing, where the diamond stud had been. There was no doubt that the handsome girl who gave him such an affectionate embrace had done the work. The Californian was very much chagrined at losing his stuff, and after telling him that I was a detective, he asked me to take charge of the case and find the girl and my services were for services and all expenses. After placing my special agent on the case I was then engaged with I. Dorsheimer, of Minneapolis, where I located the woman at one of the hotels. She had registered as Grace Fellowman. When I called her she told me her history. She had been a member of a wealthy family in Cincinnati. I said her name of the world. Her father died, and left her a large fortune. Then she went to Europe and spent it. She returned to the United States and came to Minneapolis, where she met a young man who was a lover of the world. He was a lover of the world. He was a lover of the world. He

The Constitutionalist.
W. L. FORCE, A. L. FORCE
Editors and Proprietors.

FRUITS OF VICTORY.

One of the most pleasing and important results of the popular verdict rendered against partisan Republicanism last November is the election of David B. Hill, the distinguished Governor of New York, to the Senate of the United States.

It is pleasing, because justly rewarding personal merit, and highly important, according to the views of the National Legislature a genuine statesman and intrepid defender of American freedom.

Governor Hill is a Democrat without fear or favor. At all times and under every circumstance he will be found a straightforward and undisguised Democrat. There is no half horse half-alligator politics about him. Political opponents could not make a mistake as to stands and what he means, and political friends can safely rely upon his fidelity.

As a thinker, writer and speaker, Governor Hill is a man of mighty power, and as Senator, he will not only rank equal to the ablest of colleagues, but prove himself second to none battling for the rights and prosperity of the people against the aggressions of wealth.

It is with sincere pleasure we hail the coming services of United States Senator Hill, of New York, and hope in due season to congratulate the people of New Jersey that Senator Jackson also has also been commissioned to aid in preserving unimpaired the priceless principles of Jefferson.

JUSTICE AND PEACE.

Governor-elect Pattison, of Pennsylvania, in a recent address, after eloquently alluding to the settlement of that Government by William Penn and the wise and equitable form of government he established, remarked:

"Penn had no trouble with the Indian question. Outnumbered and surrounded by savages who had never known the touch of civilization, he succeeded in bringing all within the terms of his government. He came without arms. He declared his purpose to abandon forever violence and the use of weapons, but peace, and not a drop of Quaker blood was ever shed by an Indian."

What a grand historic fact to ponder.

"Not a drop of Quaker blood was ever shed by an Indian."

And why?

Because William Penn and his Quaker followers met the Indians as peace-makers, recognized them as the original owners of the soil, treated them justly, and as a sacred duty held unbroken all treaty stipulations.

The Quakers honestly kept faith with the Indians.

If a like policy had been carried out by the Government of the United States there would have been no trouble, no violated treaties, no ruinous cost of blood.

The opposite has wrought all the mischief and misery.

"Be just and fear not."

NEW STATE OFFICIALS.

In joint session Tuesday last the Legislature of this State selected Gen. William C. Heppenheimer, of Hudson county, to succeed Major Anderson as Comptroller, and George R. Gray, of Essex county, as State Treasurer, to succeed Col. John Toffey. Both appointments are excellent ones.

Another Mountain Stone Crusher.

The Township Committee had night transferred the Bentley Brothers' rock on the mountain side near Johnston's drive, where a stone crushing plant will be put in operation.

A Frisky Heifer Before a Train.

A two year-old Alderney heifer strayed from "Willow Farm," Dunellen, Friday, and ran up the Central Railroad track as far as the Green Brook "tanks," where she was struck by the engine of a coal train. The engineer, not wishing to injure the heifer, threw up his whistle, but all would have been well had the heifer kept up her pace. Instead she turned and faced the engine, prepared to fight. She was struck by the cow catcher and thrown into the ditch uninjured.

The Keys Counted to be Promptly Heard.

In the Keys election contest, the Senate of New Jersey yesterday morning appointed a special committee consisting of Senators Marsh, Cramer and McDonald to hear the case and report to the senate Senator Keys is represented by the Hon. Alden McDermott, Speaker Bergen, and other prominent Democrats, while counsel for the contestant, Chas. A. Reed of North Plainfield is represented by Craig A. Marsh of this city. The hearing will take place early next week at Trenton.

Local Representatives as Viewed at Trenton.

Thomas F. Fitzgerald, the Samuel Pepys of New Jersey, has just issued his annual wee book, more familiarly known to public men politicians and place-hunters as the "Legislative Manual." This little handbook of reference is more meaty than ever, which is saying a great deal in favor of the new edition. It bristles with accurate tables of elections, terse bits of political history, new tid gs in National and State affairs, new flashlight biographical sketches of Congressmen, Senators and Assemblymen. It is also adorned with pictures of the Governor, Secretary, Comptroller, Allen S. Toffey, State Treasurer, and Governor Abbett. The following facts about the personnel history of the State Senate and Assembly, are taken from this edition are taken from the manual:

W. J. Keys, Democrat, of Somerset, is fifty-six years and seven months old. Dottie Keys, N. Y. He settled in Somerset county in 1866. He is a breeder of bloodied cattle and horses and is the pr e ident of the Somerset County Agricultural Society. He prides himself on his long connection with the sterling Democracy of New York.

Fred. G. Marsh, Democrat, of Union, is a native of his county and is thirty-three years of age. He has held nearly every important public office in Elizabeth and was an assemblyman in 1884, and has been serving on all the important committees.

James J. Bergen, Democrat, of Somerset, is a native of New Jersey, forty-three years of age. He is a lawyer and was partner of H. M. Garretson, of Jersey ci y. He has well filled a score of prominent public positions in Somerset county, and is the present Speaker of the Senate.

Thomas F. Lyon, Democrat, of Union, is a native of his county-fifth year and a native of New Hampshire. He was a journeyman printer in New York and a cashier in a Wall street banking house. He has written for a number of newspapers and is now owner of the Elizabeth Herald.

George Ayres, Republican, of Union, is forty-four years of age, and was born in South America. He was a soldier in the Regular Army before the war and served through the war in the Union. He held minor offices at Fanwood.

DUST TO DUST; ASHES TO ASHES.

All That Was Mortal for the Late Jos Hale Laid Away to Rest Forever.

The body of Jos Hale is now at rest forever beside the body of his wife. All that was mortal of the venerable philanthropist was consigned to Greenwood cemetery, Monday, A. M., and was buried from the house of the dead—Monday, A. M., and was buried from his own home, which he had built and occupied for many years. Among the fellow-men he will be known as a benefactor, even in blessed memory his living has been transferred from the city he loved to the celestial home on which his faith was set, for everlasting.

At the Crescent Avenue residence which had been his earthly dwelling, there gathered, Sunday afternoon, those who had been his friends through life, till the house was crowded to the doors. Many representative citizens were present, including the municipal officers, headed by a duly by Mayor Alexander Gilbert and the City Council, Monday evening.

The body of Mr. Hale lay in a simple casket covered with black cloth. His face was calm and peaceful, and wore a smile of perfect repose.

Of ostentation there was none. Its presence would not have accorded with the life just ended. The flowery tributes were heaped within the place. Instead there was the reverential attitude, the silent tear, of a host of people who gathered about the body, and looked again on their remembrance the features of the departed. Only a simple cluster of emblematic white pinks and lilies, standing in a vase, breathed delicate fragrance and purity into the atmosphere.

Two brief sermons were preached. The first was by the Rev. Hobart Clark, pastor of the Plainfield Unitarian church; the other by the Rev. William R. Richards, of the Crescent Avenue Baptist church, each eulogized the deceased's eulogy; but let the personal history of the good old man speak for itself.

Mr. Clark first read appropriate passages of Scripture—passages grief-assuaging, full of comfort and celestial beatitude. Every word was fraught with inspiration and hope. Every line was full assurances of the Word one's eagibly tribulations vanished, and sorrow was succeeded by peace.

"I am the resurrection and the life"—read the preacher. "Whosoever believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and he that liveth and believeth on me shall have everlasting life."

The pastor dwelt on the sweet simplicity of the life of the deceased, his unostentatious charities, his consistency and held up his career as a shining example to the rising generation.

Quoting from the Scriptures, he said: "I found upon exhibited my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and upright man, one that feareth God and eschewth evil."

And the words which the Lord had used in speaking of his servant of old he considered fully as appropriate for the one who had just begun to rest from his labors.

The Rev. Mr. Richards also applied a Scriptural passage to the deceased.

"I am old yet never saw the solid—was recorded the truth that Wisdom carried is one hand length of days, and in the other riches and honor. Mr. Hale—he added—is living proof of the truth of the saying.

The clergymen drew a lesson after lesson from the honest purposes, the good deeds, the excellent citizenship, the industrious habits, and the Christian life who had gone to his reward. His memory—they said—would remain an imperishable monument, to be added as a popular where he had so long held the high honor of being first citizen. He had been a sustainer of many charities, which he instituted, will bear his name, and through it that name would always be on the lips of the generations of readers. But besides his public charities, he had been a benefactor to the poor and left; and heartiest people throughout the city were familiar with hundreds of good deeds that his right hand did that his left hand never knew.

After the sermon a special choir, composed of Mrs. Knight, Mrs. Hodges, Mr. Knight and Mr. Andrew Gavett, rendered that beautiful hymn, Bullivan's "Rock of Home Land, and the Rev. Mr. Clark pronounced the benediction over the people.

On Monday the remains of Mr. Male were escorted to Greenwood Cemetery by a committee from the Unitarian church and Crescent Avenue Baptist church. Here in the earth which is to know his sweet and gentle spirit repentance, he will be oblivious to it all; he has won a crown which is earth and hell can never buy; he is at rest forever.

A Big Bridge over the Central.

The abutments of the Lehigh Valley railroad, where the proposed road is to cross the New Jersey Central at Green-brook, are completed, and everything now in readiness for the construction of the massive iron bridge that is to span the place. The work is completed on each side of the Central tracks.

Mr. Lenard's Funeral.

The annual election of officers of the Central Baptist Sunday-school will take place this week Friday evening. The Hook and Ladder Company have nominated the old Chief, John J. Booth. The Steamer and Engine Company have made nominations Monday, and the Empire Company Tuesday. A hot fight is anticipated.

To Wonder's Mr. Bull's Movements Are Reported.

Mr. Daft noticed the other day, that his barometer was rising, that he had known it to be in many years. He was of course very apprehensive about the weather, as the instrument was one of the finest and most reliable that he then owned, costing a thousand times.

He experienced either a destructive storm or a hurricane, or a cyclone, and was suddenly shocked the sky all day. But no unusual atmospheric disturbance occurred, nor was the weather anything more than ordinarily fine. Mr. Daft pondered that his quality and true barometer should suddenly bear false witness. He decided, however, that he would have to part with it.

But he has since changed his mind and is thinking, indeed, of buying that same barometer a second time. He called on Monday afternoon, and on learning the afternoon before the morning when he noticed the unprecedented depression to his barometer, he found that his boys playing in the hall had thrown a ball against the instrument with such force as to knock a pint or less of its mercury on the floor. He will not say to what he says he says anything but spotted.

Gossip Ayres Elected.

There is one thing that the press of Union county can claim, and that is that Hon. Gossip Ayres, Republican, of Union, is the Senator from Union county. He is a native of South America. He was a soldier in the Regular Army before the war and served through the war in the Union. He held minor offices at Fanwood.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY IN PLAINFIELD.

Austin Hurlbrut, a Resident of Liberty Street, Set Upon by Footpads and Robbed.

Austin Hurlbrut, a resident of 12 Liberty street, was waylaid, assaulted and robbed on the public highway late Saturday night.

His place of business as a butcher is on Somerset street. Having no safe in his store, he keeps the habit of taking his earnings with him after closing the shop each evening. This habit seems to be more or less known about town, for on Saturday night he was waylaid and the man he sought to make guilty we of the knowledge. Their first attempt was a failure, the second a success.

Mr. Hurlbrut left Somerset was assailed in front of his own home by two desperate-looking characters, who sought to throw him to the ground. A struggle ensued, and Hurlbrut shouted loudly for help. His assailants sought to stifle his cries, but did not succeed, and finally ran away and left him compared to his own devices.

Saturday night when he went home it was rainy, and he carried an umbrella. Stationed in front of his own house he was set upon, he turned into Orchard place, and was in front of one of the new houses in process of erection when he was assaulted by the same two men who had attacked him before. He was knocked down and robbed of his money, which amounted to about $30. He was then left to make his way home as best he could.

Hurlbrut is a man of stature and was recently married. He is a member of the Plainfield Unitarian church; the other by the Rev. William R. Richards, of the Crescent Avenue Baptist church, each eulogized the deceased's eulogy; but let the personal history of the good old man speak for itself.

Mr. Clark first read appropriate passages of Scripture—passages grief-assuaging, full of comfort and celestial beatitude. Every word was fraught with inspiration and hope. Every line was full assurances of the Word one's eagibly tribulations vanished, and sorrow was succeeded by peace.

"I am the resurrection and the life"—read the preacher. "Whosoever believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and he that liveth and believeth on me shall have everlasting life."

The pastor dwelt on the sweet simplicity of the life of the deceased, his unostentatious charities, his consistency and held up his career as a shining example to the rising generation.

Quoting from the Scriptures, he said: "I found upon exhibited my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and upright man, one that feareth God and eschewth evil."

And the words which the Lord had used in speaking of his servant of old he considered fully as appropriate for the one who had just begun to rest from his labors.

The Rev. Mr. Richards also applied a Scriptural passage to the deceased.

"I am old yet never saw the solid—was recorded the truth that Wisdom carried is one hand length of days, and in the other riches and honor. Mr. Male—he added—is living proof of the truth of the saying.

The clergymen drew a lesson after lesson from the honest purposes, the good deeds, the excellent citizenship, the industrious habits, and the Christian life who had gone to his reward. His memory—they said—would remain an imperishable monument, to be added as a popular where he had so long held the high honor of being first citizen. He had been a sustainer of many charities, which he instituted, will bear his name, and through it that name would always be on the lips of the generations of readers. But besides his public charities, he had been a benefactor to the poor and left; and heartiest people throughout the city were familiar with hundreds of good deeds that his right hand did that his left hand never knew.

After the sermon a special choir, composed of Mrs. Knight, Mrs. Hodges, Mr. Knight and Mr. Andrew Gavett, rendered that beautiful hymn, Bullivan's "Rock of Home Land, and the Rev. Mr. Clark pronounced the benediction over the people.

On Monday the remains of Mr. Male were escorted to Greenwood Cemetery by a committee from the Unitarian church and Crescent Avenue Baptist church. Here in the earth which is to know his sweet and gentle spirit repentance, he will be oblivious to it all; he has won a crown which is earth and hell can never buy; he is at rest forever.

A Big Bridge over the Central.

The abutments of the Lehigh Valley railroad, where the proposed road is to cross the New Jersey Central at Green-brook, are completed, and everything now in readiness for the construction of the massive iron bridge that is to span the place. The work is completed on each side of the Central tracks.

Mr. Lenard's Funeral.

The annual election of officers of the Central Baptist Sunday-school will take place this week Friday evening. The Hook and Ladder Company have nominated the old Chief, John J. Booth. The Steamer and Engine Company have made nominations Monday, and the Empire Company Tuesday. A hot fight is anticipated.

To Wonder's Mr. Bull's Movements Are Reported.

Mr. Daft noticed the other day, that his barometer was rising, that he had known it to be in many years. He was of course very apprehensive about the weather, as the instrument was one of the finest and most reliable that he then owned, costing a thousand times.

He experienced either a destructive storm or a hurricane, or a cyclone, and was suddenly shocked the sky all day. But no unusual atmospheric disturbance occurred, nor was the weather anything more than ordinarily fine. Mr. Daft pondered that his quality and true barometer should suddenly bear false witness. He decided, however, that he would have to part with it.

But he has since changed his mind and is thinking, indeed, of buying that same barometer a second time. He called on Monday afternoon, and on learning the afternoon before the morning when he noticed the unprecedented depression to his barometer, he found that his boys playing in the hall had thrown a ball against the instrument with such force as to knock a pint or less of its mercury on the floor. He will not say to what he says he says anything but spotted.

Gossip Ayres, Republican, of Union, is forty-four years of age, and was born in South America. He was a soldier in the Regular Army before the war and served through the war in the Union. He held minor offices at Fanwood.

OBITUARY.

Jasper G. Codmus.

Jasper G. Codmus died at Force's Hotel at Scotch Plains before seven o'clock Saturday morning, after several months.

Mr. Codmus was a native of Bayonne, this county. He was born Oct. 29, 1826, which makes him at the time of his death 64 years, 3 months and 9 days. His parents lie in Staten Island, near Sailor's Snug Harbor, where the father bought a farm. At the age of twenty-two he left home and went to New York city, which the elder Codmus pretended to him. His own subsequent years were spent in a returning his, during which time he pursued the occupation of ship-chandler, however, compelled him to abandon the sea, and he entered the real estate business, which he followed for a considerable period in both New York and Philadelphia. After his removal to Plainfield, in 1869, he conducted a livery stable at the corner of Front avenue and East Second street, known in Teeter's furniture establishment. He was a man of considerable property. Besides the accommodations mentioned, he owned a number of tenements, which he acquired a half-interest in his father's estate at the death of the father in 1864, sharing with his brother the $6,000 inheritance left by the father. In 1865, when he sold his Staten Island property, he value had greatly advanced. So invested considerable of his wealth in real estate in this city, and was the owner of valuable residence portions of the city. Politically Mr. Codmus was a Democrat, but in 1874, on March 16, he was elected by a Republican majority of 400, and was elected Supervisor, a Republican who resigned. He was spoken of for re-nomination, but declined. He was a member of Excelsior Lodge, No. 1, F. A. M., Plainfield Encampment, I. O. O. F., and was highly esteemed by all. For the last six years he occupied a suite of rooms in Force's Hotel, on North avenue. He was a bachelor, his wife having died and his married life was an unhappy one. He leaves three daughters and one son, all married. He has, it is understood, left his estate to the sons of Eugene Laing and R. Mulford Estil.

Mr. Codmus was a member of the Ex-empt Firemen's Association.

Special I. R. C. A. Notes.

[Each at eight P. M.]

Feb. 5—T. H. Tomlinson, M. D., "Physical Degeneracy."

Feb. 7—Rev. Arthur Alex. Gilbert, "Money and Banking."

Feb. 19—Debate: "Resolved, That the McKinley bill benefits the laboring classes."

Feb. 26—Informal reception and college songs. The Y. M. C. A. State Convention opens at Trenton.

SUNDAYS AT 415 P. M.

Feb. 1—The Rev. J. L. Hurlbut, D. D.
Feb. 8—H. W. Cowan, jr. Princeton College.

Off for Boston in a Sunbeam Train.

A superb train of vestibuled Pullman palace-cars, built for the Pullman Palace Car Company by Wilcoxon brassworks, mental and Mexico columns, and embodying the latest improvements in car-building, will be open to the inspection of the public at the Lehigh Valley depot of the Central Railroad of New Jersey to-morrow, from 11 A. M. until 12. The cars are six in number—the sleeping-cars "Whitcomb," "Sunbeam," "Sunset" and "Greylock," the dining-car "Corocado," and the composite-car "Esperanza" (containing library, barbershop and bath room). The train will start at 12:30 o'clock the same day over the Baltimore & Ohio route, for Mexico and California, passing through Plainfield at about 12:40.

"The Bonebolt" the Banner Clam.

A band of nine young misses, known in the Methodist Episcopal Sunday-school as the "Bonebolts," held a candy sale at the residence of their teacher, Mrs. Edwin Loomis, 12 Rockview avenue, Saturday afternoon, and accumulated the sum of $11.75 for the cause of missions. The event was a very pleasant one, and made a pretty and animated scene. Each of the charming young misses was dressed in a distinguishing badge a budding rose. Their names are Nellie Martin, Ada Wooldson, Edna Harris, Mattie VanHorn, Flossie Loomis, Maude French, Bertie Loomis, Estelle Chandler and Lula McNaughton. They get the banner for raising a larger amount for missions than any other class in the school.

Evenings at the Crescent League Park.

A series of attractive evenings have been prepared for the pleasure of those who will be present at the Crescent League's new club-house, during the fair on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week.

On Thursday evening G. W. Comens the celebrated imitator and well known entertainer, will appear before the people. Friday evening, the Crescent League Quartette, Stevens, VanArsdale, Barnes and Gordon will sing. Saturday evening the New York banjo club of the King's boys will play. There will be orchestral music every evening—and perhaps the great Comanche will appear one night.

A Thunderbolt to the Race-Track People.

Five hundred dollars fine and a year in State prison. This is the sentence which Judge Stilwell imposed upon the pool-selling race-track owners in Passaic, the men who openly and defiantly violated the laws at the Clifton race-tracks.

"——sometimes," says the Journal, of Elizabeth—"that there is consternation among the whole racing, pool selling, track gambling fraternity, and no wonder that the announcement of the fall of six of their number, who have for years defied the honor and character and morality and the law are worth pressing.

The Judge in pronouncing the heaviest sentences and sentences in Union, Passaic and other counties, according to the present outlook, is likely to be just what the people of Passaic and the right-minded people of this State most desire. It is to be hoped that every race-track in New Jersey will be permanently abandoned, and every pool-room and bookmaker driven out of the State."

Another Endorsement of Dr. Bigley's Plan.

[From The Newark Journal.]

In an address before the State Board of Agriculture at Trenton, Tuesday, Mr. Chauncey B. Ripley dwelt upon the subject of State roads, and made an advocate of Gov. Hill's idea of State highways. He would have these highways running from Newark to Camden, and from Sussex to Cape May, connecting with the county roads. He encouragin gthe construction of improved county roads.

The question of roads has been left for many years to stand upon its merits. It is really a question of State and even national concern, and therefore one that should be of national legislation should deal with. The policy of the State should be that of the vast provinces with the capital by good roadways, some of which still exist, and the prosperity of the property values the world enjoyed under the protection of the Crown until corruption ate out the heart of the State.

The Journal also approves the Bigley policy, but the lesson it conveys has been wholly lost on the American people. Our roadways are as a rule bad beyond description, and almost impassable in the winter season. Nothing is done to improve them, and it is left to the individual enterprise of the people to do the best they can. Supposing a man owns two miles of road, which will cost him $1,000, and is bonded for $500 at 6 per cent. and taxed $15 on $1,000. Suppose a man owns two miles of road, which will cost him $1,000, and is bonded for $500 at 6 per cent. and taxed $15 on $1,000. Suppose a man owns two miles of road, which will cost him $1,000, and is bonded for $500 at 6 per cent. and taxed $15 on $1,000. This shows that no one can be paying a higher rate of taxes or interest than his neighbor, and all are in the same boat.

RESPECT HIS WISHES.

JOB HALE LEFT AN UNSIGNED WILL BUT HIS HEIRS KNOW HIS DESIRES.

Money for the Library and the Unitarian Church and Among His Friends—Bequests to Five Years Was Out of the Will's Provisions.

The city that he loved so well and to whose welfare and prosperity he contributed more than did any hundred other men; the public library and gallery of art he was founder; the Unitarian society he was identified to so continuously; the church society he has recently been so active in establishing here the Young Men's Christian Association in which he was an honored benefactor—these will probably be the principal beneficiaries of the will of Job Male.

He left no making of his will, until too late.

When he lay on his bed last Thursday night with every throb of his heart growing weaker, and every breath a struggle, the great effort to dispose of his possessions in legal form. There were present beside the dead both lad, his nephew, Mrs. Emeline Bass, and his wife's sister, Mrs. Eliza Hoit; his niece, Mrs. Fenno; Drs. Davis and Endicott; a gentleman and another close friend of the dying man, who had been in charge of his property in Jersey City.

The doctors, recognizing their patient's keenness desire to will away his property before the end came, left the room, and remained within call. Mr. Male's mind was clear and long intended, did everything possible to prolong his life short of a too deeply troublesome, if not impossible, undertaking of his name while the lawyer was copying with all human speed, the provisions and bequests that the dying man was dictating to him.

Job Male Jr., and it was his uncle's desire that a lawyer should be called in to make his will. He had two letters in his pocket-book addressed to lawyers, and wish and summoning him from Canada to be present. So although the aged man was sinking fast, Craig A. Marsh, Esq., was called in and when he left Mr. Male in some mills before the courts, was sent for.

The sick man was thoroughly conscious of everything that he was saying and that was being done. He told the lawyer to insert a provision in the will, that none of his property should be sold before the expiration of the term of five years, so weak that he could hardly be heard. The lawyer leaned forward and asked—"One year, Mr. Male?" "No, no," was the reply. "Five years!" Again he shook of the head. "Three years?" The sick man rolled his head wearily from side to side on his pillow and whispered, "No, no! five years."

He made a bequest to the Male Public Library and to the Unitarian church. After all his wishes had been noted, the lawyer began the making of a draft in legal form. The effects of relations from the settlement began to develop. The sick man was asked by the lawyer in the presence of the witnesses mentioned above, whether he had left any relatives. "Whitcomb," he said with a faint smile, "Greylock," the dining-car "Corocado," and the composite-car "Esperanza" (containing library, barbershop and bath room). The train will start at 12:30 o'clock the same day over the Baltimore & Ohio route, for Mexico and California, passing through Plainfield at about 12:40.

"The Bonebolt" the Banner Class.

A band of nine young misses, known in the Methodist Episcopal Sunday-school as the "Bonebolts," held a candy sale at the residence of their teacher, Mrs. Edwin Loomis, 12 Rockview avenue, Saturday afternoon, and accumulated the sum of $11.75 for the cause of missions. The event was a very pleasant one, and made a pretty and animated scene. Each of the charming young misses was dressed in a distinguishing badge a budding rose. Their names are Nellie Martin, Ada Wooldson, Edna Harris, Mattie VanHorn, Flossie Loomis, Maude French, Bertie Loomis, Estelle Chandler and Lula McNaughton. They get the banner for raising a larger amount for missions than any other class in the school.

Evenings at the Crescent League Park.

A series of attractive evenings have been prepared for the pleasure of those who will be present at the Crescent League's new club-house, during the fair on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week.

On Thursday evening G. W. Comens the celebrated imitator and well known entertainer, will appear before the people. Friday evening, the Crescent League Quartette, Stevens, VanArsdale, Barnes and Gordon will sing. Saturday evening the New York banjo club of the King's boys will play. There will be orchestral music every evening—and perhaps the great Comanche will appear one night.

A Thunderbolt to the Race-Track People.

Five hundred dollars fine and a year in State prison. This is the sentence which Judge Stilwell imposed upon the pool-selling race-track owners in Passaic, the men who openly and defiantly violated the laws at the Clifton race-tracks.

"——sometimes," says the Journal, of Elizabeth—"that there is consternation among the whole racing, pool selling, track gambling fraternity, and no wonder that the announcement of the fall of six of their number, who have for years defied the honor and character and morality and the law are worth pressing.

The Judge in pronouncing the heaviest sentences and sentences in Union, Passaic and other counties, according to the present outlook, is likely to be just what the people of Passaic and the right-minded people of this State most desire. It is to be hoped that every race-track in New Jersey will be permanently abandoned, and every pool-room and bookmaker driven out of the State."

Another Endorsement of Dr. Bigley's Plan.

[From The Newark Journal.]

In an address before the State Board of Agriculture at Trenton, Tuesday, Mr. Chauncey B. Ripley dwelt upon the subject of State roads, and made an advocate of Gov. Hill's idea of State highways. He would have these highways running from Newark to Camden, and from Sussex to Cape May, connecting with the county roads. He encouragin gthe construction of improved county roads.

The question of roads has been left for many years to stand upon its merits. It is really a question of State and even national concern, and therefore one that should be of national legislation should deal with. The policy of the State should be that of the vast provinces with the capital by good roadways, some of which still exist, and the prosperity of the property values the world enjoyed under the protection of the Crown until corruption ate out the heart of the State.

The Journal also approves the Bigley policy, but the lesson it conveys has been wholly lost on the American people. Our roadways are as a rule bad beyond description, and almost impassable in the winter season. Nothing is done to improve them, and it is left to the individual enterprise of the people to do the best they can. Supposing a man owns two miles of road, which will cost him $1,000, and is bonded for $500 at 6 per cent. and taxed $15 on $1,000. Suppose a man owns two miles of road, which will cost him $1,000, and is bonded for $500 at 6 per cent. and taxed $15 on $1,000. Suppose a man owns two miles of road, which will cost him $1,000, and is bonded for $500 at 6 per cent. and taxed $15 on $1,000. This shows that no one can be paying a higher rate of taxes or interest than his neighbor, and all are in the same boat.

THE STATE CHAMPIONSHIP CHESS CONTEST.

Additional Synopsis for the Cup That Has Been Held by Plainfield Players for Three Years.

The sixth annual tournament of the New Jersey Chess Association for the championship cup now held by Mr. Keys of this city, will be held on Monday, the 23d of next month, at the rooms of the Plainfield Club, in the business section, on East Second street, that city.

The New Jersey Association was organized in Elizabeth, on Washington's birthday, 1886, and the cup was presented by Alfred Conger in the autumn of that year. It was won by E. C. Stokes, of Millville, in 1887, at Newark, and on Washington's birthday, 1888, at Plainfield, the cup was held by Mr. Stokes again won the championship.

Out of thirty-two contestants in the third annual tour-ey, held at Rutherford, Passaic county, on April 22, 1889, Mr. Keys of Plainfield. Plainfield was selected for the place of meeting in 1890 and another Plainfield man, C. L. Murphy, was the victor. At the first business meeting of the Plainfield Club, again took the championship at the tourney last year, which was held in New Brunswick.

The competition for the championship and the cust-dy of the C. H. Waterbury cup is open to all players of the State, and Mr. Murphy is now the holder. Mr. Alfred Conger is the secretary, and he and him all communications regarding the coming meet should be addressed

MAYOR GILBERT DENOUNCED.

Officers Babbitt and Jones Shield and Announce That 150 Colored Citizens Have Been Disgraced By Their Appointment as Dog Catchers.

To His Honor, Mayor Gilbert:—We the colored citizens of Plainfield, through the undersigned, do most respectfully request to appoint James Babbitt as regular policeman and Israel Jones as special policeman for the city. We feel that you have disgraced the colored voters by appointing the above two named gentlemen to the position of dog catchers.

Respectfully,
James Barrett,
Israel Jones.

Plainfield Grooms Not Voters Suit.

With a neatly painted wagon, plainly lettered to indicate its mission, a collector for the Grocers' Association of New Brunswick will hereafter call on all old debtors who owe accounts for groceries. If they don't pay at first he is hired to call daily until they do. The stoppage of the "cold deb wagon" in front of their houses is expected to bring a blush of shame to the delinquents among the community, and eventually to bring out the cash.

An Old Lady's Sudden Death.

Mrs. Phebe, wife of Johnathan Lyons of 55 West Second street, was seized with an apoplectic fit while walking along the sidewalk in front of her home, and fell to the ground in front of the residence of L. Warren Randolph, the West Front street pharmacist. Relatives of Mr. Randolph heard her groans and came to the rescue. Dr. W. C. Boone was sent for, but she was dead before he arrived. She had just parted, at the corner near her home, from her son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sturtevant, who were on the wh y to the theatre, when the sudden illness occurred.

Lelia is Found.

Lelia Highsmith, the seven-teen-year-old protege of Councilman and Mrs. Rimore D. Moffett, who disappeared from her home so mysteriously last Friday, has been found. The girl is found and the story told ex-clusively in Tuesday's Press and copied in the New York papers of next morning.

The girl was found Saturday at work in a hotel at Rosellie. When she left the Moff-tt resi ence Friday, she took nothing but her nightdress, declaring she had no, so she was compelled to seek shelter from Saturday's storm somewhere. Why she went to Roselle is not yet explained. A telegram to The Press announcing that she f-und, is all the information that has been received up to the hour of going to press. She walked all the way from Plainfield.

New York Asbury Enjoyed the Event.

[From The Republican, Perth Amboy.]

On Saturday evening last a number of the members of Le-gon House Co., No. 1, of this city, visited Plainfield and presented to Plainfield Engine Co., No. 1, a handsome steel engraving, each 20x30 inches. Our fire laddies received a hearty welcome, such as the Plainfield Fs are noted for.

Ex-Chief Jennings, in behalf of the company, received the pictures in a neat speech and responded in a way in which true feeling of friendship which has existed between the companies for the past eight years. After the ex-Chief had concluded his remarks the guests and members sat down to an elaborate spread especially prepared for the occasion.

Chief Doane, Alderman Miller and several members of the Plainfield City Council entertained the boys with speeches, and a royal good time was had by all present. Foreman Ross, Secretary Hall and Jo Blake's old chief were of the company, did all in their power to make it an enjoyable occasion for Lincoln House members, and the evening's pleasure will long be remembered.

THOSE OVERHEAD WIRES.

Manager Moore Denies That Family Exist in the Electric Lighting Service.

William H. Moore, manager of Plainfield's electric lights works, reports to The Press that the electric lighting system of the city is in perfect condition, and can limit work-g order. Those who for the past few days have been so prolific of complaints may therefore for themselves take into consideration all the existing faults which they report, in estimating the value of Mr. Moore's standard of perfection.

Mr. Moore is inclined to chide as unreasonable those who have protested because Broad way, Prospect avenue, Fifth avenue, Sixth street, and Railroad avenue were denied of light Thursday and Friday nights. He says that out of 570 street lamps only 18 were unlighted, which is thanks to an economical system of the company so soon after the severe storm. His men have worked overtime a great deal, he adds, changing up the wrecks-gs, and have replaced many of the poles that were destroyed. Mr. Moore further says that when disarranged again by broken telephone, fire-alarm or gas-company service wires, Mr. Moore further says that when fire-alarm wires are in a shocking state, being down all over town, and explains that the telephone wires do not interfere greatly with the electric light service, but are mistaken by people for electric light wires. The wire which passes over the Park Place and Plainfield depot is the only which passes by under the trees in search of a telephone wire. And he promises Tom Paine and the electric light wire-men that when the storm is over he will have Broadway and the business streets generally in such a condition that people will be ready, he concludes, to forswear any disposition to complain of the electric lights and gas in North Plainfield.

Dr. Price's Patient Still Improving.

Charles Tenison, of North Plainfield, who is being treated for consumption with Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, continues to develop favorable symptoms of better health. The story of his case has already been told in these columns, and that he was pronounced by a physician in the first stages of consumption and many months ago. His mother's and sisters all died of the same disease. The patient has a sister who has also been afflicted with consumption. He is fourteen years old and was at one time a clerk in Edsall's store. It is needless to say his case is of intense interest to the medical profession of the whole city.

Senator Keys Will Keep His Seat.

[From The Newark Evening News.]

Fortunately for the dignity of the Senate, Mr. Keys, of Somerset county, does not share the fine sense of humor which prompted the President of the Senate to call him on the Elections Committee. Mr. Keys has refused to act on the committee in his own seat, and a special committee has been appointed to go through the formality of keeping out the intruder. Republican who wants the place. Democrats say Mr. Keys will keep his seat, but he will do so with more decorum than he has shown in the past. The carrying on such a "joke" as Senator Adrian appointed to putting Keys and McDonald, of all men in the Senate, on the Elections Committee.

Quantities of pretty things at reasonable prices, many novel features, a change of entertainment each evening and other attractions will repay a visit to the Crescent League fair.

"Let a friend tell you how, at very little expense, you can get rid of that cough or cold that settles on your lungs and leads to consumption." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

Disgusted with Borough Methods.

Many Citizens Will Not Register Their Names and Residences.

Mayor Place of North Plainfield and Dr. Brakeley of Dunellen have stirred up a storm in opposition by their praises of the borough system of government. We take the note following letter from a correspondent of The Journal Messenger of Somerville:

"There seems to be a pressure brought to bear on this question that would indicate that there was something lurking under the surface that, yet ready for the light. The Dunellen Journal, this week, seems to be carried away on this borough bubble. On Dec 28 it gave space to a lengthy article from the pen of the Hon. Charles Place, the oldest of the North Plainfield Borough Commissioners, who comes out dressed in the g-rments of a real live mayor. Mayor Place has given us a vast amount of instruction, and told us that if things were so and so, then they would be so and so.

"We ought not to doubt Mr. Place, for in his own words, he says: 'I can assure that I set forth some of the advantages of a borough corporation, was received and I cheerfully comply.' He is frank to own that he was requested to write that letter, but he has not given us a hint as to what his motive was. All wholesome laws are supposed to be the soul of wisdom, and the fine points in favor of borough laws are supposed to be the reverse of that. They are crude, inapplicable and oppressive, arbitrary to the last degree, and totally devoid of clear legislative wisdom.

"A borough government is a strong government, at Mr. Place justly says, so it is, and it is strong in the fact that everyone on the poor man who owns a home that is not fully paid for. He can be compelled to do anything that may strike the fancy of his masters. He can be sent to jail for refusing to register his name, and will want their own property improved at the expense of some one else.

"It is no wonder that Senator Winton is himself disgusted with the laws as they stand, and is doing his best to procure a set of laws modeled after the village acts of New York.

"Dr. Brakeley of Dunellen has also placed himself on record through an interview in The Chronicle. The doctor makes the point that the borough system is light where it was intended it should be thrown by the street lamps, and tell us how much they cost, and that only about four out of every five years. In so saying he would give us a sound and plausible excuse for the need of that lock-up of which he speaks. This should have been done at the time of laying the lamps were thrown away. Then the first one who smashed a lamp could have been properly punished and the remainder of them saved. As it is they present a sorry plight. Bare posts and here and there a lamp frame with no glass in, are all that can be seen. They do not shine like the moon, but like the second sun in the world. But the posts remaining are a sad reminder of the spurned monuments of the enduring mercy of the disgusted tax-payers of the place."

Another Will Broken.

The Grandson of Mrs. Hiscox Wins Again in Appeal.

Charles Hiscox, grandson of Emeline Hiscox, late of Dunellen, contested in the Orphans' Court of Middlesex county the will left by his grandmother, which bequeathed everything to her daughter near her home, from her son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sturtevant, who were on the wh y to the theatre, when the sudden illness occurred.

Lelia is Found.

Lelia Highsmith, the seven-teen-year-old protege of Councilman and Mrs. Rimore D. Moffett, who disappeared from her home so mysteriously last Friday, has been found. The girl is found and the story told ex-clusively in Tuesday's Press and copied in the New York papers of next morning.

The girl was found Saturday at work in a hotel at Rosellie. When she left the Moff-tt resi ence Friday, she took nothing but her nightdress, declaring she had no, so she was compelled to seek shelter from Saturday's storm somewhere. Why she went to Roselle is not yet explained. A telegram to The Press announcing that she f-und, is all the information that has been received up to the hour of going to press. She walked all

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - City Editor.

—"Uncle Isaac" Brown says that the Winter of 1857 was just like this.

—The pledges for the T. M. C. A. building have reached a total of $36,000.

—A semi-annual dividend of 3½ per cent has been declared by the City Railroad Bank.

—Ay a means of reducing the boy of the 3 p. m. love condition, the cigarette has no —.

—Eugene Wood has been installed as driver of steam fire engine No. 1, succeeding Matthew Conaway.

—Charles Seberg has commenced the erection of a new building on North avenue, between Saturday evening, at the Union Country Club.

—Alex. Mallinson, formerly of Stelle's pharmacy, is shortly going to drug store in the Ulrich building, North avenue, opposite the railroad station.

—T. J. Gillie, Carey's bondsman on the appeal, has post Miller Bros., in full for the amount of the judgment and that the latter had to sue for to recover.

—The Baptists of New Jersey are the finest this year to present a strong memorial to the Legislature, asking that no race track legislation be enacted.

—Another chance to dance on the Crescent's fine floor, will be afforded Thursday night when the Young Men's Democratic Association will give a ball there.

—Peach trees have been broken by the heavy fall of snow and ice. Some people claim that abundant fruit follows when the forest is thus weighed down.

—Thomas Martin, until recently mail messenger between the Plainfield post-office and railway station, has purchased the restaurant at 56 East Front street.

—Reuben Ray has succeeded Edward Martin as mail messenger between the Plainfield post-office and railway trains, under a new contract, with the government.

—The third masquerade ball of the Gesang and Turn Verein, will be held in their hall, Monday evening, Feb. 9. There will be music and everything else to make the affair a big success.

—There will be interesting live bird and blue rock shooting contests at Campbell's Club House, Park Station, on Feb. 23, Washington's Birthday. Full particulars will be published later.

—The New Jersey Sabbath Union have appointed a committee to watch the bull-baiting and the liquor men," and see that no law is enacted permitting saloons to be kept open during even a part of each Sunday.

—The liquor dealers of this city, who have formed an association for the protection of their business—and the advancement of the price of beer—and a decrease of ice—met at the City Hotel, on Friday evening.

New Wire Tower Romance.

Manager Schoonmaker of the Western Union telegraph office reports that the company's wires are all in first-class condition again, and says that all dispatches will be promptly handled.

Coal Traffic Shifted from the Central.

An arrangement has been effected by which the Lehigh Valley railroad will hereafter handle the coal trade of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad company between Bound Brook and Perth Amboy, until the completion of the Reading's new Port Reading branch. Heretofore the traffic has been carried over the Jersey Central.

Death of a Bright Young Son.

Guy D. Hamilton, the seven-year-old son of a job printer, and Ida A. Hamilton, died at the home of Mrs. Hamilton's second husband, Charles Drake, at Scotch Plains, Thursday morning. He was a remarkably bright little fellow, and his lovable character and charming manners endeared him to the hearts of all who knew him.

A Birthday Party.

A very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Mrs. Bartell, Washingtonville, Tuesday, the occasion being the birthday anniversary of Mrs. Bartell. A congenial party of relatives and friends met together and made the event a merry one. Numerous tokens of affection and esteem were presented. Music and social games were enjoyed.

A Wedding.

The vivacious Miss Theresa S. Bender, of Chimney Rock, well-known as the Corsespondent of the Somerville Messenger, was married Wednesday, Jan. 28, at seven o'clock, the fortunate groom being Geo. A. Schmit, of Martinsville. The ceremony took place privately at the Methodist parsonage, and was performed by the Rev. R. Johns. The party boarded the Washington express for parts unknown.

Crescent Leagues Base-Ball.

Captain Lathrop is already actively arranging for good sport on Plainfield's base-ball grounds during the coming season. The following notice he is industriously circulating about the Crescent:

The Crescent League of Plainfield has organized its base-ball team for the coming season. It has secured new grounds, which are centrally located, and which are in fine condition. It is now ready to arrange games with all first-class clubs in and around New York city. Address J. O. Lathrop, Box 32 Broadway, N. Y.

Good Work of the Salvation Army.

Members of the Reform Club speak in high terms of the work the Salvation Army is doing in the Barclay and west-side meetings. Last Sunday evening the attendance was so great that fully two hundred people were crowded out of the place. It proved too great a temptation for the stove-genius had to lock the doors when they thought the hall was crowded enough. Numbers purchase convention nightly.

Books of the Borough Overseer.

Through the instrumentality of J. A. Demarest, Overseer of the Poor of North Plainfield, the books of the Poor Department of the Borough have been thrown open to public inspection for the first time in the borough's history. Those desiring to give or receive information that will assist the overseer in his work of discriminating among applicants can find him sitting alone to the vestry, here for one week a chance to examine the books at Mr. Demarest's office, 34 Harmony street.

The Men and Women in Charge.

Day and night, preparations are being made for the Crescent's fine floor to be open Thursday evening. No pains are to be spared to make it an attractive and pleasing event to everybody. A committee of progressive young men will see to it very carefully that everything is conducive to what is generally a monotonous affair. The following committees of Charles F. Leggett, Chairman; C. E. Reed, Secretary and Treasurer; Messrs. Harold H. L. Emerson, C. P. Rogers, A. V. Little, J. R. Sloan, G. O. Stevens and F. S. Green. The floor committee consists of Messrs. F. S Green, Miss Sloan, Mrs. C. P. Leggett and the Misses Emerson, Little, VanWinkle, Peters and Kline.

The committee on invitations and promise that (and there will be no mistake) only about the Crescent League lads.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon B. Stewart are the happy parents of a baby girl.

Mrs. Fredrick Beer of Bay street, is laying dangerously ill with pneumonia.

Mrs. Charles E. Brooks will give a Mother Goose party at her home on Crescent avenue, this evening. One of the most amiable of Plainfield's young women, will act as "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary."

At the home of the bride, none, Wednesday, Sarah Eleanor Smith, dau hter of Benjamin Smith, was married by the Rev. E. Adams Murphy, to William E. Ingersoll of Rittenhouse. There was a large attendance of guests, and quantities of costly presents.

Hester W. Cowan, who is well known in connection with the Princeton base-ball team, will be the guest over Sunday of S. B. Struthers of Madison avenue. Mr. Cowan will give the young men a talk at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, Sunday afternoon at four o'clock.

At four o'clock of Tuesday afternoon of next week, at the home of the bride's parents, Saturday evening, at the Union Country Club.

Mr. and Mrs. William VanOrden, of Brooklyn, spent Sunday at the home of Mrs. Van Orden's sister, Mrs. U. B. Crane, of East Second street.

The Somerville Unionist-Gazette says: "The Rev. Asa R. Dutz of Plainfield is visiting at his father's home at Raritan. He is rapidly improving in health."

Secretary Miner of the Boy's club, took charge of the choir-rest of the Church of the Holy Cross, Sunday, and the choir of the Church of Good Shepherd.

Secretary Manning of the Plainfield Y. M. C. A., spent Sunday at Long Branch where he spoke to a large gathering in addressed in forming an Association in that place.

Miss H. Bird, for many years managing clerk in the employ of J. Fred Mackendall, has been rewarded for his faithfulness by a partnership in Mr. Mackendall's prosperous business.

Sir Knight Asa Collier and wife represented Trinity Commandery, No 11, K. T., at the reception tendered the Grand Commandery in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city, Thursday evening.

Up to the close of the Uhrbach-Long season, a few days ago, Commander Bill A. Marsh had spent forty successive days in Court without an intermission. At fifty dollars a day, that was quite a six-weeks' vacation.

Ex-Councilman John B. Dumont has bought the Frazee Lee property on the East corner of Broadway and Sixth street, formerly occupied by Dr. A. Uhler. The house is to be renovated and offered for rent.

Charles B. VanName, of Third place, has recently returned from a trip to California. He came back by way of Mexico and Texas and thus escaped the blizzards of the plains and the temptations of Morgan's raiders.

The Rev. and Mrs. Asa Read Hills have returned from a visit at the home of Mr. Dills' father at Raritan. A few weeks of farm life and the air so greatly improved the health of the Park Avenue Baptists' pastor.

Mrs. Rachel Benton, wife of the late Louis B. Benton, died at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Benton, Friday Thursday. Funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Interment at Catskill, N. Y.

The trustees of the Methodist church of Watchung, one of Newark's suburbs, will unite with the other churches of the locality in a reception to the Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist who is to conduct revival services at Bloomfield in March.

The old Donellen homestead of John Pope, who died a few years ago, is now vacant, a circumstance which has not occurred in the past half century or since the house was built. Some alterations are to be made which will add greatly to the appearance of the place.

The Rev. L. G. Gressells, of Dunellen, recently concluded a series of revival meetings at Old Bridge, Middlesex county. The meetings were continued two weeks and with good results. Mr. Gressells is at present supplying the Baptist pulpit at that place, returning to Dunellen every Monday morning.

The music-loving people of Plainfield—who are the great majority this season—will be intensely pleased to hear that it is probable that the celebrated musicians of Germania, Mr. H. E. Krehbiel of the Tribune, will be persuaded to give a lecture on Die Meistersinger of Wagner, at The Casino, this Spring.

The Rev. L. G. Gressells, of Dunellen, recently concluded a series of revival meetings at Old Bridge, Middlesex county. The meetings were continued two weeks and with good results. Mr. Gressells is at present supplying the Baptist pulpit at that place, returning to Dunellen every Monday morning.

The music-loving people of Plainfield—who are the great majority this season—will be intensely pleased to hear that it is probable that the celebrated musicians of Germania, Mr. H. E. Krehbiel of the Tribune, will be persuaded to give a lecture on Die Meistersinger of Wagner, at The Casino, this Spring.

Miss Lottie Zimmerman, formerly of this city and now of Indiana, is the guest of Mrs. Charles Lyman of Washington avenue.

Mrs. George C. Evans was the hostess at a dinner given to a favored party of friends, Saturday evening, at the Union Country Club.

Miss Mallinson, formerly of Stelle's pharmacy, is shortly going to drug store in the Ulrich building, North avenue, opposite the railroad station.

—T. J. Gillie, Carey's bondsman on the appeal, has post Miller Bros., in full for the amount of the judgment and that the latter had to sue for to recover.

—The Baptists of New Jersey are the finest this year to present a strong memorial to the Legislature, asking that no race track legislation be enacted.

—Another chance to dance on the Crescent's fine floor, will be afforded Thursday night when the Young Men's Democratic Association will give a ball there.

—Peach trees have been broken by the heavy fall of snow and ice. Some people claim that abundant fruit follows when the forest is thus weighed down.

—Thomas Martin, until recently mail messenger between the Plainfield post-office and railway station, has purchased the restaurant at 56 East Front street.

—Reuben Ray has succeeded Edward Martin as mail messenger between the Plainfield post-office and railway trains, under a new contract, with the government.

—The third masquerade ball of the Gesang and Turn Verein, will be held in their hall, Monday evening, Feb. 9. There will be music and everything else to make the affair a big success.

—There will be interesting live bird and blue rock shooting contests at Campbell's Club House, Park Station, on Feb. 23, Washington's Birthday. Full particulars will be published later.

—The New Jersey Sabbath Union have appointed a committee to watch the bull-baiting and the liquor men," and see that no law is enacted permitting saloons to be kept open during even a part of each Sunday.

—The liquor dealers of this city, who have formed an association for the protection of their business—and the advancement of the price of beer—and a decrease of ice—met at the City Hotel, on Friday evening.

New Wire Tower Romance.

Manager Schoonmaker of the Western Union telegraph office reports that the company's wires are all in first-class condition again, and says that all dispatches will be promptly handled.

Coal Traffic Shifted from the Central.

An arrangement has been effected by which the Lehigh Valley railroad will hereafter handle the coal trade of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad company between Bound Brook and Perth Amboy, until the completion of the Reading's new Port Reading branch. Heretofore the traffic has been carried over the Jersey Central.

Death of a Bright Young Son.

Guy D. Hamilton, the seven-year-old son of a job printer, and Ida A. Hamilton, died at the home of Mrs. Hamilton's second husband, Charles Drake, at Scotch Plains, Thursday morning. He was a remarkably bright little fellow, and his lovable character and charming manners endeared him to the hearts of all who knew him.

A Birthday Party.

A very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Mrs. Bartell, Washingtonville, Tuesday, the occasion being the birthday anniversary of Mrs. Bartell. A congenial party of relatives and friends met together and made the event a merry one. Numerous tokens of affection and esteem were presented. Music and social games were enjoyed.

A Wedding.

The vivacious Miss Theresa S. Bender, of Chimney Rock, well-known as the Corsespondent of the Somerville Messenger, was married Wednesday, Jan. 28, at seven o'clock, the fortunate groom being Geo. A. Schmit, of Martinsville. The ceremony took place privately at the Methodist parsonage, and was performed by the Rev. R. Johns. The party boarded the Washington express for parts unknown.

Crescent Leagues Base-Ball.

Captain Lathrop is already actively arranging for good sport on Plainfield's base-ball grounds during the coming season. The following notice he is industriously circulating about the Crescent:

The Crescent League of Plainfield has organized its base-ball team for the coming season. It has secured new grounds, which are centrally located, and which are in fine condition. It is now ready to arrange games with all first-class clubs in and around New York city. Address J. O. Lathrop, Box 32 Broadway, N. Y.

Good Work of the Salvation Army.

Members of the Reform Club speak in high terms of the work the Salvation Army is doing in the Barclay and west-side meetings. Last Sunday evening the attendance was so great that fully two hundred people were crowded out of the place. It proved too great a temptation for the stove-genius had to lock the doors when they thought the hall was crowded enough. Numbers purchase convention nightly.

Books of the Borough Overseer.

Through the instrumentality of J. A. Demarest, Overseer of the Poor of North Plainfield, the books of the Poor Department of the Borough have been thrown open to public inspection for the first time in the borough's history. Those desiring to give or receive information that will assist the overseer in his work of discriminating among applicants can find him sitting alone to the vestry, here for one week a chance to examine the books at Mr. Demarest's office, 34 Harmony street.

The Men and Women in Charge.

Day and night, preparations are being made for the Crescent's fine floor to be open Thursday evening. No pains are to be spared to make it an attractive and pleasing event to everybody. A committee of progressive young men will see to it very carefully that everything is conducive to what is generally a monotonous affair. The following committees of Charles F. Leggett, Chairman; C. E. Reed, Secretary and Treasurer; Messrs. Harold H. L. Emerson, C. P. Rogers, A. V. Little, J. R. Sloan, G. O. Stevens and F. S. Green. The floor committee consists of Messrs. F. S Green, Miss Sloan, Mrs. C. P. Leggett and the Misses Emerson, Little, VanWinkle, Peters and Kline.

The committee on invitations and promise that (and there will be no mistake) only about the Crescent League lads.

MEMORIALS.

Mr. and Mrs. James R. Jay are at home.

Miss Jennie Voorhees, daughter of ex-Councilman V. orhees, is visiting relatives in this city.

Miss Campbell and E. P. Thorn have returned from a two weeks' visit to Cincinnati, City, Florida.

John B. Burbank, Jr., of Westfield, is at home after a pleasant business trip to Canada and the West.

The board of trade met last evening and appoin ed officer Grant Captain of Police for the ensuing year.

Chas. P. Rogers of this city, has been commissioned to the bedside of his sister in Wisconsin, who is seriously ill of consumption.

Miss Lottie Zimmerman, formerly of this city and now of Indiana, is the guest of Mrs. Charles Lyman of Washington avenue.

Mrs. George C. Evans was the hostess at a dinner given to a favored party of friends, Saturday evening, at the Union Country Club.

Mr. and Mrs. William VanOrden, of Brooklyn, spent Sunday at the home of Mrs. Van Orden's sister, Mrs. U. B. Crane, of East Second street.

The Somerville Unionist-Gazette says: "The Rev. Asa R. Dutz of Plainfield is visiting at his father's home at Raritan. He is rapidly improving in health."

Secretary Miner of the Boy's club, took charge of the choir-rest of the Church of the Holy Cross, Sunday, and the choir of the Church of Good Shepherd.

Secretary Manning of the Plainfield Y. M. C. A., spent Sunday at Long Branch where he spoke to a large gathering interested in forming an Association in that place.

Miss H. Bird, for many years managing clerk in the employ of J. Fred Mackendall, has been rewarded for his faithfulness by a partnership in Mr. Mackendall's prosperous business.

Sir Knight Asa Collier and wife represented Trinity Commandery, No 11, K. T., at the reception tendered the Grand Commandery in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city, Thursday evening.

Up to the close of the Uhrbach-Long season, a few days ago, Commander Bill A. Marsh had spent forty successive days in Court without an intermission. At fifty dollars a day, that was quite a six-weeks' vacation.

Ex-Councilman John B. Dumont has bought the Frazee Lee property on the East corner of Broadway and Sixth street, formerly occupied by Dr. A. Uhler. The house is to be renovated and offered for rent.

Charles B. VanName, of Third place, has recently returned from a trip to California. He came back by way of Mexico and Texas and thus escaped the blizzards of the plains and the temptations of Morgan's raiders.

The Rev. and Mrs. Asa Read Hills have returned from a visit at the home of Mr. Dills' father at Raritan. A few weeks of farm life and the air so greatly improved the health of the Park Avenue Baptists' pastor.

Mrs. Rachel Benton, wife of the late Louis B. Benton, died at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Benton, Friday Thursday. Funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Interment at Catskill, N. Y.

The trustees of the Methodist church of Watchung, one of Newark's suburbs, will unite with the other churches of the locality in a reception to the Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist who is to conduct revival services at Bloomfield in March.

The old Donellen homestead of John Pope, who died a few years ago, is now vacant, a circumstance which has not occurred in the past half century or since the house was built. Some alterations are to be made which will add greatly to the appearance of the place.

The Rev. L. G. Gressells, of Dunellen, recently concluded a series of revival meetings at Old Bridge, Middlesex county. The meetings were continued two weeks and with good results. Mr. Gressells is at present supplying the Baptist pulpit at that place, returning to Dunellen every Monday morning.

The music-loving people of Plainfield—who are the great majority this season—will be intensely pleased to hear that it is probable that the celebrated musicians of Germania, Mr. H. E. Krehbiel of the Tribune, will be persuaded to give a lecture on Die Meistersinger of Wagner, at The Casino, this Spring.

Miss Lottie Zimmerman, formerly of this city and now of Indiana, is the guest of Mrs. Charles Lyman of Washington avenue.

Mrs. George C. Evans was the hostess at a dinner given to a favored party of friends, Saturday evening, at the Union Country Club.

Mr. and Mrs. William VanOrden, of Brooklyn, spent Sunday at the home of Mrs. Van Orden's sister, Mrs. U. B. Crane, of East Second street.

The Somerville Unionist-Gazette says: "The Rev. Asa R. Dutz of Plainfield is visiting at his father's home at Raritan. He is rapidly improving in health."

Secretary Miner of the Boy's club, took charge of the choir-rest of the Church of the Holy Cross, Sunday, and the choir of the Church of Good Shepherd.

Secretary Manning of the Plainfield Y. M. C. A., spent Sunday at Long Branch where he spoke to a large gathering interested in forming an Association in that place.

Miss H. Bird, for many years managing clerk in the employ of J. Fred Mackendall, has been rewarded for his faithfulness by a partnership in Mr. Mackendall's prosperous business.

Sir Knight Asa Collier and wife represented Trinity Commandery, No 11, K. T., at the reception tendered the Grand Commandery in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city, Thursday evening.

Up to the close of the Uhrbach-Long season, a few days ago, Commander Bill A. Marsh had spent forty successive days in Court without an intermission. At fifty dollars a day, that was quite a six-weeks' vacation.

Ex-Councilman John B. Dumont has bought the Frazee Lee property on the East corner of Broadway and Sixth street, formerly occupied by Dr. A. Uhler. The house is to be renovated and offered for rent.

Charles B. VanName, of Third place, has recently returned from a trip to California. He came back by way of Mexico and Texas and thus escaped the blizzards of the plains and the temptations of Morgan's raiders.

The Rev. and Mrs. Asa Read Hills have returned from a visit at the home of Mr. Dills' father at Raritan. A few weeks of farm life and the air so greatly improved the health of the Park Avenue Baptists' pastor.

Mrs. Rachel Benton, wife of the late Louis B. Benton, died at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Benton, Friday Thursday. Funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Interment at Catskill, N. Y.

The trustees of the Methodist church of Watchung, one of Newark's suburbs, will unite with the other churches of the locality in a reception to the Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist who is to conduct revival services at Bloomfield in March.

The old Donellen homestead of John Pope, who died a few years ago, is now vacant, a circumstance which has not occurred in the past half century or since the house was built. Some alterations are to be made which will add greatly to the appearance of the place.

The Rev. L. G. Gressells, of Dunellen, recently concluded a series of revival meetings at Old Bridge, Middlesex county. The meetings were continued two weeks and with good results. Mr. Gressells is at present supplying the Baptist pulpit at that place, returning to Dunellen every Monday morning.

The music-loving people of Plainfield—who are the great majority this season—will be intensely pleased to hear that it is probable that the celebrated musicians of Germania, Mr. H. E. Krehbiel of the Tribune, will be persuaded to give a lecture on Die Meistersinger of Wagner, at The Casino, this Spring.

MARRIED LOVERS.

Mr. and Mrs. James R. Jay are at home.

Miss Jennie Voorhees, daughter of ex-Councilman V. orhees, is visiting relatives in this city.

Miss Campbell and E. P. Thorn have returned from a two weeks' visit to Cincinnati, City, Florida.

John B. Burbank, Jr., of Westfield, is at home after a pleasant business trip to Canada and the West.

The board of trade met last evening and appoin ed officer Grant Captain of Police for the ensuing year.

Chas. P. Rogers of this city, has been commissioned to the bedside of his sister in Wisconsin, who is seriously ill of consumption.

Miss Lottie Zimmerman, formerly of this city and now of Indiana, is the guest of Mrs. Charles Lyman of Washington avenue.

Mrs. George C. Evans was the hostess at a dinner given to a favored party of friends, Saturday evening, at the Union Country Club.

Mr. and Mrs. William VanOrden, of Brooklyn, spent Sunday at the home of Mrs. Van Orden's sister, Mrs. U. B. Crane, of East Second street.

The Somerville Unionist-Gazette says: "The Rev. Asa R. Dutz of Plainfield is visiting at his father's home at Raritan. He is rapidly improving in health."

Secretary Miner of the Boy's club, took charge of the choir-rest of the Church of the Holy Cross, Sunday, and the choir of the Church of Good Shepherd.

Secretary Manning of the Plainfield Y. M. C. A., spent Sunday at Long Branch where he spoke to a large gathering interested in forming an Association in that place.

Miss H. Bird, for many years managing clerk in the employ of J. Fred Mackendall, has been rewarded for his faithfulness by a partnership in Mr. Mackendall's prosperous business.

Sir Knight Asa Collier and wife represented Trinity Commandery, No 11, K. T., at the reception tendered the Grand Commandery in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city, Thursday evening.

Up to the close of the Uhrbach-Long season, a few days ago, Commander Bill A. Marsh had spent forty successive days in Court without an intermission. At fifty dollars a day, that was quite a six-weeks' vacation.

Ex-Councilman John B. Dumont has bought the Frazee Lee property on the East corner of Broadway and Sixth street, formerly occupied by Dr. A. Uhler. The house is to be renovated and offered for rent.

Charles B. VanName, of Third place, has recently returned from a trip to California. He came back by way of Mexico and Texas and thus escaped the blizzards of the plains and the temptations of Morgan's raiders.

The Rev. and Mrs. Asa Read Hills have returned from a visit at the home of Mr. Dills' father at Raritan. A few weeks of farm life and the air so greatly improved the health of the Park Avenue Baptists' pastor.

Mrs. Rachel Benton, wife of the late Louis B. Benton, died at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Benton, Friday Thursday. Funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Interment at Catskill, N. Y.

The trustees of the Methodist church of Watchung, one of Newark's suburbs, will unite with the other churches of the locality in a reception to the Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist who is to conduct revival services at Bloomfield in March.

The old Donellen homestead of John Pope, who died a few years ago, is now vacant, a circumstance which has not occurred in the past half century or since the house was built. Some alterations are to be made which will add greatly to the appearance of the place.

The Rev. L. G. Gressells, of Dunellen, recently concluded a series of revival meetings at Old Bridge, Middlesex county. The meetings were continued two weeks and with good results. Mr. Gressells is at present supplying the Baptist pulpit at that place, returning to Dunellen every Monday morning.

The music-loving people of Plainfield—who are the great majority this season—will be intensely pleased to hear that it is probable that the celebrated musicians of Germania, Mr. H. E. Krehbiel of the Tribune, will be persuaded to give a lecture on Die Meistersinger of Wagner, at The Casino, this Spring.

BARELY ESCAPED WITH THEIR LIVES.

A Fiendish Attempt at Dead of Night by Unknown Scoundrels to Set Fire to Judge Fee House.

An Inhuman Stranger Turns a Dead Ear to Appeals for Help.

The family of William J. Ford narrowly escaped burning to death in their beds at an early hour last Thursday morning.

Mr. Ford himself was at Trenton, attending a meeting of the Masonic Grand Lodge of the State.

At about four o'clock Mrs. Ford and her children were awakened by suffocating heat and smoke, and by the crackling of flames.

The smoke was so dense that the flame of the lamp that had been burning in one of the bed-rooms could not find enough oxygen to support its combustion, and went out.

Through this asphyxiating cloud Mrs. Ford's eldest son, whose age is about eleven years, managed to creep, till he reached the window and found breathing space on the roof of the piazza.

Sliding down one of the pillars of the porch, and feeling himself in safety, his child thought was of his mother.

Painters had left a ladder in the yard, and the lad sought to raise this against the side of the burning building.

He hailed a man who was passing, and cried for assistance, but the fellow was too intent on his own selfish purposes to listen to the boy's appeal himself or to arouse the neighbors.

Instead of heeding the boy's appeals, he walked on.

The stranger's inhumanity did not daunt the plucky young son of the shoemaker.

By a noble effort he succeeded in raising the ladder to the piazza roof, and a moment later he had conducted his mother and her two younger children safely to the ground.

By this time a policeman happened along, burst in the front door, and was driven back by the smoke. He then ran to give an alarm, and after much difficulty the old alarm-tower was mounted and the bell was struck in the old-fashioned way.

Had the new fire-alarm telegraph system been working the location of the fire would have been known instantly, and only a few precious minutes would have heard the alarm and turned out.

Considerable time was lost in idle running about from point to point, searching for the exact spot where the burning house was situated.

When the firemen found the place, however, they did excellent work. Under the direction of Superintendent Engineer Martin they soon had the flames under control, and the fire out.

The lower story and interior of the upper story were burned, causing a loss of $1,500 to the house. The furniture and clothing of the Fords, on which there is an insurance of $1,000, is damaged—partly by fire and partly by water. The house is owned by a woman in Albany.

The Fords saved nothing but the night clothes in which they escaped.

Mrs. Ford told a reporter that she desired to thank the firemen and the policeman for their efforts, and for the kind offices performed on their behalf.

The location of the house is at 76 West Second street, midway between New and Liberty streets.

The cause of the fire is attributed to a defective flue.

Amphion Hall's Close Call.

When Fritz Franze, janitor at Amphion Hall, heard the fire-alarm, at about half-past four o'clock, he was just getting ready to close up the Hall after an all-night dance. Eager to run to the fire, he hurried closing arrangements and, going to the rear of the stage, found that a brisk blaze had been started by a defect in the electric lighting apparatus. Had he been a moment later a serious fire must have resulted, as the flames were rapidly eating up the interior of the partitions when the fire was discovered and extinguished. The Hall had a narrow escape from destruction.

Plainfield's New Fire-Alarm All Right.

Those ill-advisers who have been carping at the fire-alarm chime-gong and telegraph innovation in Plainfield, and who have been clamoring for a return to the old hap-hazard bell system, had their wish gratified above morning, when the loosening of the old bell and the subsequent clanging of the same worthless don't know what they are talking about. A committee of electrical experts chosen by the city passed on the system before it was accepted, and declared it to be the best and strongest in the market. The fire-alarm wires stood the strain of the recent storm better than the wires of any other system, only by the falling of telegraph poles across them.

A PLAINFIELDER KILLED BY THE CARS.

Fatal Ending of a Pleasure Visit on a Railroad Bridge.

John Lewis Kline, formerly a resident of this city, where his parents still reside, was crushed to death Thursday noon on the Pennsylvania railroad bridge connecting Elizabeth river, near Rahway avenue, Elizabeth. King was forty-one years old and had been employed as a plumber and gas fitter by Mr. Elizabeth Bennett of Parker street, Newark. He was not working Thursday, and started out for a short walk. He was crossing the bridge when the Long Valley express shot by. Structure whichon that train appeared in an opposite direction. The wind was blowing and King could not hear by reason of the noise of the train. He was struck by one of the bridge rails. One car projected so far that it pressed him between its side and the railing. He was pushed along for several feet and crushed against the bridge.

King was taken to the City Hospital, where he died about ten minutes after reaching there. The body, which was somewhat mangled, was taken to the morgue, also conducted and preparations made for the funeral.

A coroner's jury viewed the body of the dead. King's father, John B., is employed as a gardener at Bonnell's, residing in Bonnell's house.

MARRIED.

Smith—Lewis.

A wedding that was both notable and novel took place at Grace church, Wednesday, Jan. 28, when Miss Caroline Elizabeth Lewis, daughter of Dr. John W. Lewis, was married to the Rev. Octavius D. Rei ld, rector of St. Alban's Episcopal church at Bustonsville Center. The wedding was a notable one because of the social prominence of the interested parties, and the brilliant celebration of the event; and novel because of the fact that right clergymen participated.

The hour of the marriage service was seven o'clock, when the church was filled with invited witnesses. The Rev. Dr. Erskine M. B dman performed the ceremony. The Rev. Mr. Mabey—who also filled the office of "best man"—was the groom's friend. Kemp of Trinity, The other members were the Rev. Messrs. Jeffrys of Philadelphia, Hall of Bordentown, Hall of Haverstraw, Rev. B. J. Davis of West Philadelphia, the Rev. E. N. Morris of New Haven, and the Rev. William Wilson Smith of Merrick, L. I. All of these clergymen were university classmates of the groom. The Misses Myra Rose and Maud Lewis, sisters of the bride, were bridesmaids.

The bride wore a gown of white repped silk and satin brocade, and carried a bouquet of lilies. The bridal party proceeded to the front of the chancel steps, where the betrothal was given. Then, as the surpliced boy choir sang a gloria, the bridal party marched down the aisle, where the father gave away the bride.

From half-past seven to nine o'clock a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, 37 West Second street. The house was thronged with guests; and, as at the church, full evening dress was the rule. The ladies were in their very elaborate and beautiful, and the costumes grouped together made as fine a picture as at any similar event Plainfield has witnessed. There were many out-of-town guests, who were royally entertained, and who continuously showered congratulatory greetings and good wishes on the bride and groom.

The display of wedding gifts was large and of unusual beauty.

Mr. and Mrs. Reid will reside at Danielstown, after a wedding trip in the South.

But it Won't Do.

(From The New Brunswick Home News.)

Plainfield people propose to surveil their soldiers encampment on Decoration Day, 1892. Here is a proposition which should be unveiled at least one year ahead of that proposed by our neighbors in Union county.

Road Disclaimer's Duty.

(From The Elizabeth Journal.)

The ministers of Plainfield have taken up know the crusade against the unholy partnership of pool selling and liquor selling and it is equally good. The newspapers in that city are giving their sermons the fullest publicity possible. Plainfield has set the pace and we commend Plainfield's help in this fight against these vicious influences.

An Alleged Burglar at Fanwood.

A man giving his name as Daniel Jones, of Trenton, was caught by Col. Charles E. Bishop, of Fanwood, trying to break through the rear door of his house Friday morning. Mr. Moore made the fellow a prisoner, and took him before Justice Hopkins of this city. Constable Mateer took Jones to the County Jail at Elizabeth to await trial.

Incorporating The Albion.

The Albion Hotel Company of Plainfield filed articles of incorporation with the Union county Clerk at Elizabeth last week. The company will begin business at the reconstructed Park House with a capital of $10,000, divided into 100 shares of $100 each. The directors are: Frank E. Miller, Charles W. Morse, Nelson Runyon and John J. H. Pollion.

A Tribute of Kindly Feeling to the Dead.

The big mass of machinery at the Pulaski Iron Works was stopped running afternoon Jan. 29, during the funeral services over the remains of the late Joseph Wilson, and the fellow-workmen of the deceased were accorded opportunity to attend the obsequies. This evidence of the corporation's kindly feeling for its employes was greatly appreciated.

The Elopement Denied.

In Newark, Jan. 26, by the Rev. J. Lawlor Wells, Robert N. Garvey and Mary E. Liable, of this city, were married. The bride was the widow of John Liable of North Plainfield, and the groom was a widower with one child, yet neither of them are over twenty-one years of age. Relatives of the bride denied to a Press reporter that she was run away to be married. Still her parents did not know anything of it until it was all over.

Be it Welcome Who Has the Price.

Salvation may be had, it seems from ten to fifteen cents—according to the situation of the seat one chooses—to gain admittance to the Salvation Army meetings that are held on Sunday, too. Suppose the churches were to compel payment from all witnessing their service! Does the Army hope to reach the fallen class by making worship for a return to the old hap-hazard, bell system, had their wish gratified above morning, when the loosening of the old bell and the subsequent clanging of the same worthless don't know what they are talking about. A committee of electrical experts chosen by the city passed on the system before it was accepted, and declared it to be the best and strongest in the market. The fire-alarm wires stood the strain of the recent storm better than the wires of any other system, only by the falling of telegraph poles across them.

A PLAINFIELDER KILLED BY THE CARS.

Fatal Ending of a Pleasure Visit on a Railroad Bridge.

John Lewis Kline, formerly a resident of this city, where his parents still reside, was crushed to death Thursday noon on the Pennsylvania railroad bridge connecting Elizabeth river, near Rahway avenue, Elizabeth. King was forty-one years old and had been employed as a plumber and gas fitter by Mr. Elizabeth Bennett of Parker street, Newark. He was not working Thursday, and started out for a short walk. He was crossing the bridge when the Long Valley express shot by. Structure whichon that train appeared in an opposite direction. The wind was blowing and King could not hear by reason of the noise of the train. He was struck by one of the bridge rails. One car projected so far that it pressed him between its side and the railing. He was pushed along for several feet and crushed against the bridge.

King was taken to the City Hospital, where he died about ten minutes after reaching there. The body, which was somewhat mangled, was taken to the morgue, also conducted and preparations made for the funeral.

A coroner's jury viewed the body of the dead. King's father, John B., is employed as a gardener at Bonnell's, residing in Bonnell's house.

MARRIED.

Smith—Lewis.

A wedding that was both notable and novel took place at Grace church, Wednesday, Jan. 28, when Miss Caroline Elizabeth Lewis, daughter of Dr. John W. Lewis, was married to the Rev. Octavius D. Rei ld, rector of St. Alban's Episcopal church at Bustonsville Center. The wedding was a notable one because of the social prominence of the interested parties, and the brilli ant celebration of the event; and novel because of the fact that right clergymen participated.

The hour of the marriage service was seven o'clock, when the church was filled with invited witnesses. The Rev. Dr. Erskine M. B dman performed the ceremony. The Rev. Mr. Mabey—who also filled the office of "best man"—was the groom's friend. Kemp of Trinity, The other members were the Rev. Messrs. Jeffrys of Philadelphia, Hall of Bordentown, Hall of Haverstraw, Rev. B. J. Davis of West Philadelphia, the Rev. E. N. Morris of New Haven, and the Rev. William Wilson Smith of Merrick, L. I. All of these clergymen were university classmates of the groom. The Misses Myra Rose and Maud Lewis, sisters of the bride, were bridesmaids.

The bride wore a gown of white repped silk and satin brocade, and carried a bouquet of lilies. The bridal party proceeded to the front of the chancel steps, where the betrothal was given. Then, as the surpliced boy choir sang a gloria, the bridal party marched down the aisle, where the father gave away the bride.

From half-past seven to nine o'clock a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, 37 West Second street. The house was thronged with guests; and, as at the church, full evening dress was the rule. The ladies were in their very elaborate and beautiful, and the costumes grouped together made as fine a picture as at any similar event Plainfield has witnessed. There were many out-of-town guests, who were royally entertained, and who continuously showered congratulatory greetings and good wishes on the bride and groom.

The display of wedding gifts was large and of unusual beauty.

Mr. and Mrs. Reid will reside at Danielstown, after a wedding trip in the South.

But it Won't Do.

(From The New Brunswick Home News.)

Plainfield people propose to surveil their soldiers encampment on Decoration Day, 1892. Here is a proposition which should be unveiled at least one year ahead of that proposed by our neighbors in Union county.

Road Disclaimer's Duty.

(From The Elizabeth Journal.)

The ministers of Plainfield have taken up know the crusade against the unholy partnership of pool selling and liquor selling and it is equally good. The newspapers in that city are giving their sermons the fullest publicity possible. Plainfield has set the pace and we commend Plainfield's

FOR LITTLE PEOPLE.

GINGER-BREAD LAND.

I had such a wonderful, wonderful dream—
A fairy took hold of my hand,
And accompanied me to the confines of fun
To see
To far away Ginger-bread land.

If you could have walked in those beautiful streets—
If you could have seen what I saw,
If you could have peeped there and seen what I saw,
If you did not believe it so!

There was ginger-bread stating—now would you believe?
All over a ginger-bread house,
With ginger-bread icing for tiling between—
What a house for a little boy or a mouse!

The boys and the girls were of gingerbread, too,
And were really ginger-bread clothes,
The trees and the bushes were best in the ground
With ginger-nuts hanging in rows.

There were ginger-bread horses and gingerbread dogs,
And more, to my wonder and joy
I saw, and I counted, a ginger-bread cat by my feet,
That I was a ginger-bread boy.

And then I was hungry, and hunted about
For nibbles, just nibbles to eat,
To see, with such plenty on every side
I hardly could make a mistake.

But while I was eating, the fairy was gone—
The ginger-bread went out of sight—
Alack and alack and alas!—I awoke
Before I had eaten a bite.

Oh! Oh! if I only could take it again,
That journey so jolly and grand,
I surely would never, never eat my nose
In beautiful Ginger-bread Land.
—Sidney Dayre, in Youths' Companion.

LIFE IN AN AIR CASTLE.

Peculiarities of An Interesting Little Insect—Habits and Habitat.

While we are drowsily watching the white clouds and our thoughts are far away, they are suddenly recalled to earth by a great spider coming briskly down from the branches overhead, with every appearance of energy and contempt for the idle dreamers whose meditations she has interrupted. She, too, is building a castle in the air; but that occupation, in her case, means real work. Madam Spider takes no summer vacation. While the soft blue haze rests over the mountains and the very breezes seem to have sunk to slumber, she must toil for a living, patiently weaving, back and forth and round and round, until she has fashioned one of those delicate wheels that are so exquisite in appearance and which have proved fatal to so many a fly.

This intruder upon our quiet is large and handsome, with a black and yellow suit that fairly glistens in the sunshine as she runs up and down her slender lines. The fine silken material of which she constructs her web is all formed within her body, and draws out through the many little tubes which form her spinnerets. Very delightful fine fibers come forth they are rolled into the thread we see, and the fabric grows like a piece of lace under the skilful touch. Notice the long spokes radiating from the center of the wheel to the foundation threads of the laid down. These she draws out and secures at proper intervals, one by one, with a delicate sticky fastening, and, when all have been placed, returns to the center, and begins to go round and round, drawing a sticky thread after her and fastening it to each spoke as she comes to it. When the wheel has taken perfect shape, she seems to make a resting-place for herself, by giving out a little fluffy silk and laying it in a single patch just below the centre; and there establishing herself, awaits the result of her labors, which will prove unlucky tome in the form of a fly or other winged insect.

We may well wonder at the spider's skill in constructing a real air castle like this. It is more than any of us can do; but is not the spider herself to know. She has another bit of knowledge that would be of more use to us than the world only could tell us; but no one has ever found out how the spider knows when it is going to rain. That she does know is evident. She does not watch the clouds, or consult the barometer, or read "the signs of the times" as she designs her web, yet she never gets caught in a shower; and you may be sure, when you see her at work, that the day is not running the serious risk of having it all destroyed by the beating of rain-drops. She is a prudent for that, for not only would it be a great loss of time and labor, but her supply of silk might become quite exhausted, and she would need food before she could replace it. Perhaps, if she had no means for setting a trap, where would the necessary meal come from? Such questions will not fit into a predicament like that if she can help it, and, therefore, never spins a web where there is any fear of a shower.

But the spider's wisdom does not end here. She knows how to build a very different sort of web, and it may be that we can find such a one suspended among the bushes. It looks like a fairy hammock, a web in the length, hanging upside down, and is formed of strong, closely-woven, reddish silk, that the rain can not harm, for it is not the well-built for a day, like the wheel-shaped webs, and must be made different-ly.—"The Times," has entered her utmost care upon this curious structure, and it is no easy matter to find one that contains the same, all fastened together in a little pink ball, the whole mass being about the size of a pea, and she has gone away, probably to die, knowing that her little ones will be safe in the cocoon she has built for them.

Are there any more air castles near us? There is one among the bushes, which, though quite as large as that of the graceful as that of our black and yellow friend, has an improvement in shape of a special importance to the builder, and is a timid brown creature, and, though so much less conspicuous than her neighbor, does not need to display her modest colors in the middle of the web; so she has constructed a closely-woven tent among the leaves of the huckleberries, and sits in this pretty tower without fear. Her meals lingers near. He is ever on the alert for them, and stands in some fear of his ingenious neighbor, for he is not much of a builder himself, and is obliged to content himself with whatever food the busy little fellow may bring in his way. He so see that life in an air castle is not always so poetical and dreamy as it may appear.—Mrs. Louise Hook, in Christian Union.

SHE SHOULD HAVE WAITED.

The Secret of an Unhappy Day with the Green Parasol.

It was a little elaborate green silk parasol, with long, swooping fringe, very old-fashioned and queer, but in the eyes of Matilda Louisa it was quite the most "really and truly" beautiful thing in all the world.

It had been their mother's best one, but she had bought another, and now this was to be the property of "one of the big brood in the spare room, and every Sunday of the long, hot summer-time she had been allowed to carry it and take it out to carry to Sunday-school.

Only they must take turns in the carrying.

And when it was Matilda's turn, and the little white muslin sack was donned on, and the small straw bonnet, with its knot of daisies on top, was tied on eagerly under her fat chin, the proud price into the spare-room with all her might, the wildly gay old canary drawn and come out with a very sad face, but as exceedingly triumphant mood. Matilda had had a previous engagement, she called loudly to Louisa to "Hurry, well be late."

And Louisa would never go under the cool shade that the green silk and long fringe afforded, even on the most sultry, windless days, although pretty and persistently invited with the most persuasive air.

The sun might pour down its scorching rays so that even the birds crept gloomily under the nearest leaves, the rather dusty roadside flowers and the straw bonnet with the knot of daisies on top would smack horribly by the time the unhappy girl reached the church, but with downcast cheeks that she wasn't to look at.

And when it came Louisa's turn, the neighbors would see Matilda skipping along in an independent, happy manner, as far as her parasol was concerned, for if there were not such a thing in all the world as a sunset!

"Too fast so smart," said Matilda one day, peering under the long fringe into Louisa's shining face as they always have it the very nicest days, you do."

It really seemed true that the very nicest holidays of all the long, hot summer-time did indeed fall to Louisa's lot when they could not be used and proud, and shabby and sorry at all.

She turned her little round head up among the ribbed fringe and looked up, said with a most proud air: "You shouldn't envy folks; teacher said 'envy was wicked.'"

"I ain't is envyin'!" declared Matilda, stalking sturdily on. "I only wish I had it!"

"Well, you can't," said Louisa, clinging to the long handle with confidence, "'cause it's mine, you see, and they've got an awful long ways to go yet before we get to Sunday-school, too, Tildy!"

Matilda groaned a gentle groan, but some thing dark was just then the uppermost passing through her mind. Why, next berry and pin money first time Sunday it came Louisa's turn to carry the parasol, rush into the spare-room, capture the prize and walk demurely off with it before the little fat sister knew a thing about it!

"She's had it all the best days," she reasoned to herself, walking on, "an' so it's fair—yes, 'tis!"

The idea grew so delightful, the more she came to think of it, that she forgot all about the next Sunday, when she should have it all to herself as a thing that fairly belonged to her.

And all the days between, over and over, as it rained and as it didn't, Matilda kept planning and planning, until the time came, when—in the little white bonnet and the small straw hat with the knot of daisies on top—she stood before the big bureau drawer.

Hastily she drew out the precious green parasol with the long fringe, and rushing out of the house, she flew up the street, not breathing safely, till she turned the corner.

Then she didn't dare raise it, till she was quite sure that Louisa was not scuttling just after. And so she didn't begin to get the real enjoyment out of it, until she was nearly at the Sunday-school room.

And when the step of the way each breeze that blew the sweeping fringe seemed to say: "Oh, you mean little thing you! Oh, you mean little thing you!"—as all she was ready to dash it into the middle of the streets, and sit down on the sidewalk and cry her vexation.

But she was presently obliged to sneak into her class, where she usually brought a smiling face—and hauled herself into the smallest corner.

"Where is Louisa?" asked Miss Rood.

"She's—she's—coming," stammered Matilda, with very hot cheeks.

"Is she sick?" pursued the teacher, another anxiously.

"No'm," said Matilda. "that is—I don't—she finished—desperately.

The scholars laughed outright at that. But Miss Rood looked grave, and took up her book to begin the lesson.

And just then, in walked Louisa, with her grandest air, and a most consented expression of countenance, and down in her fat face. And wonder of wonders! in her hand she held in the most confortable position, a bright blue parasol, with a dear little bow on top, and a shining white handle.

Matilda rubbed her eyes, and stared with all her might?

"You got the great one, didn't you?" said Louisa, after getting into her seat with dignity, and glancing at her sister's side. "Oh well, it's yours now, mother's given it to you"—cause Aunt Em'ly sent me this, last evenin', only we couldn't find you to tell you. Aint you glad?"

Sand! Well, Matilda did not make an unkind remember at when it was—rather that. Why hadn't she waited?—Margaret Sidney, in Youth's Companion.

CHARCOAL BURNING.

The Kind of Wood Used and Its Preparation for Burning.

"I am just clearing up a tract of woodland and am turning the refuse to account by making charcoal," remarked a countryman to a reporter. "Beech wood and hickory are the best for this purpose, but any wood will do in a pinch. Pine will burn, for it is hardly worth burning. Generally the good wood is called into requisition, and the pile is made of knots and refuse. This pile is often 100 feet in diameter and from ten to fifteen feet in height. The wood is split as small as possible, and is piled in circular fashion, with a small opening at the top. The fire is started by dropping shavings into the opening and lighting them, and then lighting them by dropping live coals into the cavity. A few holes are made near the bottom to admit a draft, and as soon as the fire begins to smoke these holes are closed with sods.

"Now, if every thing goes right, the fire is allowed to smoulder away, with just air enough to keep it burning. If a high wind should spring up, as it often does, every hole is closed tight to keep down the fire, and very little is called; and this time is a period of great anxiety to the charcoal burner. Sometimes the fire will burn a 'pit,' as it is called,

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
M. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1891. No. 7.

"Support the Constitution, which is the consent of the Union, as well to its limitations as to its authorities."—Hamilton.

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 W.	2 W.	3 W.	1 M.	2 M.	3 M.
1 in.
2 in.
3 in.
4 in.
5 in.
6 in.
7 in.
8 in.

All Electro's must be solid round.
"Kinds of Everything," column, 5 cts. per line.
Double cols. 50 per ct. advance of above rates.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Chancery and Supreme Courts of Jersey, Notaries Public. Offices corner of Park avenue and Second street.

W. V. STERER,
Counsellor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner of Deeds,
Cor. PARK AND NORTH AVE. 1-30-1m

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales attended to promptly; cash paid. P.O. Box 188, Dunellen, N. J., or residence, 21 Sea of Grove avenue, Plainfield.

DR. CHARLES H. TURRILL,
Dentist,
30 West Front street. A new local anæsthetic ap-plication for extracting teeth and filling a cavity. 3-6-tf

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 71, North Plains, N. J. Orders left at Constitutionalist office, corner of West Front street and Park avenue, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention. 4-17-tf

OSCAR L. TEALE,
Architect,
247 Broadway, Room 422, Bowne building, (Long-distance 'phone, 1,077,) and Plainfield, N. J. 4-24-tf

J. E. FRASER,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office in A. M. Seguine's livery stable, Front Main street, and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Day 'phone, No. 7. Night 'phone, No. 7. Residence, 1 Elm Row. 4-24-tf

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VanArsdale,
PIANO TUNER.
In connection with his thorough order. Perpetual-motion Piano and Organ for sale and to let; also, by special, P. P. Box 216 or left at Wil-liam Hamilton, Nos. 7 Front street, will receive prompt attention. Residence, 21 East Front street, second door above Madison. 4-17-tf

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Residence and Shop No. 36 East 3d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 4247

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds,
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON,
No. 34 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
A. LUTKINS. L. A. HUMMER.
1-30-1y

G. W. FORCE,
11 West Front street.
Opposite
FALL AND WINTER STOCK
Boots and Shoes at Low Prices
A FIRE GRADE OF GOODS TO SELECT FROM.
11 West Front street.
G. W. FORCE.
1-30-1m

TO THE PUBLIC!

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,

Fresh from the Mines.

It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Kindred Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
leader

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE,
(Formerly Clarke's.)
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.
repairing neatly and promptly done.
4241

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones,
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Stock Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments
All work executed in the most stylish manner and satisfactory guaranteed. Estimates cheerfully furnished. L. MANNING, Front St., next to N. J. Ch., PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Monuments erected in Somerset Cemetery. 4-17-tf

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES;
No. 5 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of desirable goods always on hand. Repairing done to order.

No. 16 NORTH AVENUE.
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the best goods of Fruit and Nut trees, Vines, Plants, Roses, Bulbs, Seeds, Bees in Season at the current market prices. Anything not found in stock furnished at short notice.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR R. R. STATION.)
JAS. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat. Fine Sample Rooms. Bus to and from Trains.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 12-21-tf

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Grant Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. ROUCH, Proprietor.
Formerly called Transient Hotel, at Bound Brook.
First-class Stables and Sheds attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours. 1yrdf

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER, "
EDGAR B. POPE, Treasurer.
4202

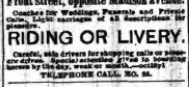
L. S. VOORHEES, J. F. BOOKER
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 38 NORTH AVENUE

MISCELLANEOUS.

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave,
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS,
SENT IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE.
4247

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
[Successors to O. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.]
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tiles, Anaglypta, Lincrusta Walton, Lincrusta Dado, Friezes for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
3-10-tf

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables


Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Parties. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure drives. Horses for sale. Horses boarded by the day, week or month. Satisfaction guaranteed.
TELEPHONE CALL, No. 21.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will still early be found ready and able to answer or attend to all kinds of interesting to the public. Horses and carriages for funerals a specialty. 29

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderveer's Stables, Packer street.
The Accommodation Express will commence to ply between the Depot and Packer street, Plainfield, on and after Monday, Dec. 1st, 1890, and will leave Depot at 7 and 9 A. M., 1, 3 and 5 P. M. Orders left at the office will receive prompt attention. 4-17-tf

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The undersigned desires to call the attention of the
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the
City of New York, for prompt and satisfactory settlement of all losses by fire. Office in Plainfield, No. 5 Park avenue, next to the Post-office.
NATHAN HARPER
Agent.

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.
4202

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represent other first-class Fire insurance companies. Agents of the James Somerville Line. Drafts on Inland Bremen, Finland City National Bank Building and Bank, Alma

BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale.
No. 5 FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. EDGAR B. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
WOOD STREET MARKET, NORTH PLAINFIELD.
Orders sent for and promptly delivered. A share of the public patronage solicited. 4-17-tf

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modern Dancing, but nothing else. 2-13-tf

PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass.
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
4202

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
[Successor to R. B. Maynard.]
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 36 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting done at their residence if desired. Shaving, Shampooing and satisfactorily performed. 12-11-tf

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Middle of Arrangement, Front St. Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

CARNEY BROS., Ag'ts,
11 SOMERSET ST.
TINNERS,
PLUMBERS,
GAS FITTERS.
PARLOR STOVES,
COOK STOVES,
HEATERS.
Grates and Brasses for all kinds of Stove s can be found here at Johnson' prices. Bring your Tin ware mending to us. The best Tinners, the best Plumbers, and the best Gas-fitters in the section. We can now put the very best of Tin Roofing, and our work always gives satisfaction.

Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.
Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Best Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 3-15-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE: CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
38 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.
4247-tf

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
AND
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE,
Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for families, weekly persons and the aged.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the Red and Pink Catawba Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and refining until they shrink and become thoroughly matured. Pronounced by physicians invaluable.
Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being pre-pared from grapes grown on our own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Doctors of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the most delicate invalid can use it with safety. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and for the various ills and ailments that affect the weaker sex.
Sold by druggists and dealers. Be sure to call for SPEER'S PORT GRAPE WINE and take no other. Prices, $1.00 per bottle, $12.00 per dozen.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
Is the juice of the Concord Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by the use of Salicylic Acid, thereby preventing the fermentation, without destroying the nutritious qualities. Will keep for any climate.
Speer's (Socialitic) Claret
Is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, without brandy or any distilled spirit.
Speer's P. J. Sherry
Is a Wine of superior character, and palatable as the rich quality of the grape from which it is made.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivaled in this country for medicinal purposes. It has been analyzed by Professor Chandler, of the grapes from which it is distilled.
See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 4-30-y

WHATEVER form of printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings,
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memorials,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Publication or Private Circulation.
Everything.

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST.

DAILY PRESS

(Chautauqua Building),

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING,
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc., Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above branches of work in the most satisfactory manner. Having had years of experience in the business, I feel confident that I can please all who favor me with their patronage.
Estimates furnished cheerfully. Shop Rear of Post-office, Plainfield, N. J.
D. W. LITTELL,
No. 5 NORTH AVE. NORTH PLAINFIELD.

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of and Dealer in
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The best Cigar in the State, and made on the premises. Call and examine stock.
CIGAR HAVANA BRANDS A SPECIALTY.
Also, constantly on hand a full line of Imported and Domestic Cigars. Cigarettes and Smokers' Articles in Great Variety.
1yr17

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMESTIC
—SEGARS!—
11, 13 PARK AVE., (NEAR CORNER SECOND ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacconist Smoker's Materials, of every description.
Cigarettes.
The celebrated "Old Judge" is handling Tobacco, with the largest stock and best assortment to be found in this section. 4-24-tf

THE STRANGER ON THE SILL.

Grown tired then of wives and men
In the lively home where I was born—
Grown tired of the cheerful haunts of men
And the sunshine and the corn—
I left my father's door one day
And I set my face to roam,
And I was a stranger and a waif
When I came to the gates of home.

There is the home—but, as of yore,
I can come and go at will—
And I see the sunshine on the fields,
And see the long meadows stream
With the evening's golden light,
And I hear the voices dear
That I used to know in childhood
And that I shall know in death.

There is the orchard—the very trees
Where my childhood knew long hours of ease,
Where my youth and I held converse sweet—
Till my life imbibed more wisdom than any book can teach,
And I learned to look on the face of God
And talk with Him as a friend with friend,
And to understand the voices of the night.

There bubbles the clearly spring below
Where I used to bathe my feet when a child,
And where I used to lie and drink from the hollow gourd
That I have found the coldest and best.
There stretches the road that leads to the village,
And I see the cows that are so dear,
And the sheep.

Dear kindly sheep that come and bleat for me,
And whom I have learned to know after years,
Their expressions from their dumb tongues,
And their instincts from their mute ways.
The tranquil quiet calls me back to myself,
And I understand myself and my relations to God.

The barn, the byre, the house, the home,
The neighbors with their loving hands,
The old mother with her knowledge,
My heart still lingers with them all.
I am a stranger and a waif
When I come to the gates of home.

[Harper's Weekly.

THE STRANGER ON THE SILL.

Grown tired then of wives and men
In the lively home where I was born—
Grown tired of the cheerful haunts of men
And the sunshine and the corn—
I left my father's door one day
And I set my face to roam,
And I was a stranger and a waif
When I came to the gates of home.

There is the home—but, as of yore,
I can come and go at will—
And I see the sunshine on the fields,
And see the long meadows stream
With the evening's golden light,
And I hear the voices dear
That I used to know in childhood
And that I shall know in death.

There is the orchard—the very trees
Where my childhood knew long hours of ease,
Where my youth and I held converse sweet—
Till my life imbibed more wisdom than any book can teach,
And I learned to look on the face of God
And talk with Him as a friend with friend,
And to understand the voices of the night.

There bubbles the clearly spring below
Where I used to bathe my feet when a child,
And where I used to lie and drink from the hollow gourd
That I have found the coldest and best.
There stretches the road that leads to the village,
And I see the cows that are so dear,
And the sheep.

Dear kindly sheep that come and bleat for me,
And whom I have learned to know after years,
Their expressions from their dumb tongues,
And their instincts from their mute ways.
The tranquil quiet calls me back to myself,
And I understand myself and my relations to God.

The barn, the byre, the house, the home,
The neighbors with their loving hands,
The old mother with her knowledge,
My heart still lingers with them all.
I am a stranger and a waif
When I come to the gates of home.

[Harper's Weekly.

JOE DUBUQUE'S ESCAPE.

Asked by a Woman He Hastily Evaded the Officers.

Once upon a time Joe Dubuque was held in jail. Dubuque, you know, was robber whose line was picking pockets. He ranked high in his profession and was looked up and had things his own way, since from other members of the "family." His insurrection brought shoals of his dark and devious friends to the town. He was charged with a robbery of considerable moment—$21,000—and this was looked upon as a thief even such as to insure him a long term if convicted. Money was wasted like water in his defense, but Joe's legal talent was brought to his succor. A great trial took place, every point in favor of and against him was argued and the affair was conducted with all the accessories of a high-priced legal tableau.

"If," said Prosecutor DeWolf, "the honest men of a community would come to the front and give more active best with half the heart these outlaws betray business disaster would become obsolete in a single year." But Joe Dubuque was convicted and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary. There followed a new trial and appeals, however, who had stood by him through all still held their heads high. It was a long and yet he was in penitentiary. Many things might happen. The case was on appeal to the Supreme Court. This would give them three months yet, as Dubuque was to be detained in jail until final decision. Why did they not go the prisoner's bail? Because it was fixed at $10,000, and no man with that amount of property to his name was barricaded from harm with a dozen posts of the full amount and a thousand more in reserve. Dubuque's friends were very good business men. It was resolved to have Dubuque out even at that, while the trial dragged. Any methods would be tried first.

"It would be a slight cheaper," said the renowned Mollie Matches, "if we could break Joe out."

This was a woman who passed for Dubuque's wife. She was very pretty and very brave and went to see Dubuque every day.

"I will cling to you, Joe, until the penitentiary doors pinch my fingers," she said, and she did. She was one of this sort of woman with this sort of man know she told the truth. They have the wife's heart and are faithful through all.

Dubuque was a good prisoner and behaved well. The officers liked him, and he was granted many liberties. They watched him narrowly, however, and when he took his exercise each day his cell was searched. The sheriff felt that some effort would be made to liberate his captive. He knew that dozens of daring and ingenious men were on the outside who would prompt and bet to set Dubuque free. He knew that money was no object because he had been style. Several attempts were made to get Dubuque into the street. He laughed at the offer, which was to go through a sewer-manhole, but it helped him to realize the outlaws' anxiety for Dubuque.

"We'll get you some other plan," said Matches, "and if they fail we'll put up the ball money and take him out that way."

Meanwhile dark and hidden preparations were afoot to release Dubuque by the rather extraordinary method of breaking into the jail. There was no effort to supply Dubuque with tools or weapons, as he knew his cell was daily ransacked and so informed them. So the outside scheme was evolved and set in execution.

The sheriff, however, became vaguely impressed with a sense of danger. One day he secretly resolved to take Dubuque to the penitentiary to await the high trial. He told no one, not even tell his deputies or turnkeys. He would start the next afternoon at two o'clock. When Dubuque was told he became duly sorry to see him—the day before the proposed start for the State's prison—and he told the sheriff that he felt some degree of sympathy for the tasteful creature, asked her whether the message to Dubuque. He must stay.

"Certainly," she said.

The officer reflected a moment, while the girl watched him, keen as a cat. She decided that he was going to leave us all. She knew in an instant some more was afoot. At last he said:

"Come to-day at 11:40 and take Jimmy with Joe. I'm going to give him a good dinner to-morrow."

"I will," said the girl, and went in to Dubuque and straightway told the whole conversation.

"I must get him a file or chisel," said Dubuque, reflectively. "You go—simply come to-morrow afternoon."

Then she recast knitted his brows and thought hard while the girl waited.

"Tell me what to do," he said.

Dubuque at last, "and is going to make a job somewhere. Let me look at a time-table, and I will tell you." He ran over one of the several with which his cell was filled.

"Here it is," he said, after a moment's reading. "He's planning to take me to the pen. The train starts at 2:30, you say? I think so," and the girl, "Now what will we do? Shall I notify Mollie Matches?"

"No," said Dubuque. "I'll tell you how we'll do this. I have never let on that I know much, but I've been thinking all the time and I've got a plan that I think will work. I'll get out of the window of this jail and a place to hide when they come to it. That is, I think I can get out. I've got much to do and little time to do it in.

Here the sentence went on and told the girl his plans. They were very full and explicit. That afternoon she made a secret visit to Dubuque and gave him a file and a chisel and a small dark lantern and also a number of little articles which he had asked for.

"I would knock over the sheriff and take his clothes," he said, "but I don't like to have a man's death on my conscience. I'll make him a present of his clothes."

"Joe," said the girl, "I feel sorry for him, too. And how you fighting with such pluck and courage."

"Joe," said Dubuque, drawing nearer. "I don't mind a tap or two with a billy or a sand-bag, but I won't murder never killed a man, and I never will. I'll keep that ale off my hands."

The girl went away. At 4:00 that afternoon the turnkey came with supper. Ordinarily he did not open the cell-door, but passed the food through a little orifice. This time he came to Dubuque's door the prisoner was seated at his little table, apparently drawing on paper.

"What's that, Dubuque—a plan of the place?" he asked.

"No, sir."

"Then it can not hit me on it."

Dubuque was down on the edge of his bunk with a sullen air, and dashing his arms, said never a word.

"Well, then," said the turnkey, "I'll come and get it," and he began to unlock the door.

Dubuque never moved. The turnkey entered and stepped for the table. Just as he reached it Dubuque leaped, threw full on his head and handed to the floor. It was the rubber billy. A prisoner in the next cell called out to him, and quickly divined the trouble going on. Like a good fellow, he at once began to howl "Hook-a-thief" at the top of his voice to cover Dubuque's work.

"That song will be worth money and a friend to you," said the turnkey, and Dubuque, as he bound and gagged the smitten turnkey. Then he put on the man's hat and coat, and taking his keys stepped out and locked the door. The senseless turnkey was locked in. Dubuque went to the door of the next cell door, and, unlocking it, let himself in and locked the door behind him. Then he capped down the man with his key of the outer wicket, which was the turnkey's sign to let the officers in, and let him out. Dubuque expected to pass undetected. The turnkey's hat was a big sombrero, which, as he put it on half turned from the guard at the door, protected his features from view. There were several officers to go through, after this, but Dubuque was hopeful he might manage it. It was growing dark at the time of the relief of the guard. He would help.

But just as Dubuque capped at the gate-door to get out an unforeseen thing happened. The vocalist was still howling "Hook of a thief" and waiting for his supper, when "Bang!" came the report of a pistol inside the jail. It was the turnkey, who, though stunned, had come and gagged, on recovering his wits had managed to fire his pistol without taking it from his belt.

"I should have taken away his revolver," reflected Dubuque hastily as he heard the echoes. But he never came to the occasion. In an instant he turned back and began unlocking the inner door again, which led to the cells. The outside guard was tearing open the outer door, while half a dozen deputies, already arrived, were waiting to get in. Dubuque got his door open at the same time the outer door was opened. In an instant the mob of deputies rushed inside to the cells without regarding Dubuque. This alert yet thoughtful individual waited until all were in, closed and locked the door, and then started through the jail, deserted by all the world beyond." In the last door he met the sheriff, who was to have taken him next day. He did not recognize Dubuque, and asked hastily what was the trouble. Dubuque told him that Dubuque smote his would-be entertainer to the floor with his rubber billy. Then he ran into the street and fled.

He knew pursuit would be hot on his heels in less than five minutes. Ten yards from the jail he came to a side-way by changed to the cloth cap, hiding his big sheath of the turnkey in a coal-box which stood in the hall.

"Is Mr. Jameson in?" he asked, as he came into the office.

"No," said the clerk, a very young man; "Mr. Jameson went out with a friend several with a lady to see a man who was sick and who wanted to employ him in the Dubuque case."

"I'll wait awhile," said Dubuque, and, taking a chair, he sat looking out the window at the fluttering street. He had sent his girl to take this lawyer away from his office so that he might use it to hide in. The clerk knew him by sight, so it would not do to have him there.

"That's what I call one way to employ a lawyer," said Matches, when he heard of it.

While Dubuque waited in the lawyer's office pursuit ran up and down the sidewalk beneath its windows. The young clerk took a thoughtful pleasure in watching it. At last a detective who was stationed at the door came in and was told and who wanted to employ him in the Dubuque case.

"I'll wait awhile," said Dubuque, and, taking a chair, he sat looking out the window at the fluttering street. He had sent his girl to take this lawyer away from his office so that he might use it to hide in. The clerk knew him by sight, so it would not do to have him there.

"That's what I call one way to employ a lawyer," said Matches, when he heard of it.

While Dubuque waited in the lawyer's office pursuit ran up and down the sidewalk beneath its windows. The young clerk took a thoughtful pleasure in watching it. At last a detective who was stationed at the door came in and was told and who wanted to employ him in the Dubuque case.

"I never feel absolutely removed from danger," said Dubuque, "until a detective is chasing me. Then I know I'm safe."

While Dubuque sat by the window a carriage drove up and stopped before the street. Dubuque hailed a cigar the clerk gave him to comfort him while waiting and watched the carriage row. He must make no mistake. Presently a little hand holding a white handkerchief was placed in the carriage in the door. It was Dubuque's carriage. But he smoked on and was in no hurry. One day a little dollar. Dubuque then waited and Dubuque waited. At last it was quite dark.

"I will see Mr. Jameson later," said Dubuque to the clerk. "Or tell him I'll write to him."

Then he went across to the carriage. The door was opened and he stepped in with pretty girl was there.

"Through thick and thin," he said, as he took her in his arms and kissed her. As they rolled away from the door another car, Dubuque waved an adieu as he looked out from the dark carriage. "I must look after my Hook of Aged man," he thought. Then he kissed the pretty girl again. Joe Dubuque had escaped.—Kansas City Star.

A Pitiful Case.

Jim Belcady has just returned to Austin from a pleasure trip through Kentucky, his native State. He tells a pitiful story of the death of his father, which occurred while he was in the Mammoth Cave.

He asked the guide if he (finitely) could break off a small piece of stalactite and take it along with him to Texas.

"No, you don't," responded the custodian of the cave. "If we were to allow people to go around and break off chunks of rock, it would have got away with the whole cave."—Texas Siftings.

Taking Stock.

Clerk—We don't seem able to do any thing with our "Connecticut Corn" sir; it don't sell, even at the reduced price. Proprietor—Well, well—just keep it in stock, and in a few weeks we'll work it off as "improved Kansas" at the same price.—Harper's Weekly.

He Couldn't Stand the Weather.

"What kind of goods is it?" asked Colonel Blood, of Jacksonville, when his attention was called to a new arrival.

"It's a weather stick."

"Oh, that's what's turned my stomach, as much as I have it."—Mooney's Weekly.

Appropriate Language.

A colonel, a regiment of Boston Army, H. Colton, has discovered that the only animals to stand through the siege of Atlanta are the mules. Although they have been subjected to injections of morphine, which are taken up by their food, a portion of the mules are still alive, and on whose corpses is brought down to the city. The mules are in a very poor condition, and it is reported that H. Colton thinks the appropriate language to use to them is "Whoa!"—Texas Siftings.

THE SCHEME WORKED.

How Two Clever Schemers Outwitted an Old and Cunning Merchant.

Mr. Brown kept store and acted as a medium of exchange. He used to come to his store from quite a distance, and far up in the woods among the lumber camps.

One cold, windy day late in autumn, two of these lumbermen stood on the rocky bluff which overlooked the beautiful and quiet village below, in close conversation. They were looking to initiate themselves into the good graces of Squire Brown sufficiently to obtain a supply of provisions on tick from them through the job in contemplation, clothe themselves for the colder blustering weather that was to follow. The week, just after, as it had happened their looms had given down for the season, and attacked the backfish on the line. Both birds had hooked themselves. Now they were drawn to the surface they were still in good wind. As he hauled them in the lines angrily tangled together, causing a bloody, wounded attack on the fishermen. He tried to overpower the fish—it divers but they were too much for him, and defeated him completely. In the melee they broke the snoods or short lines that held them to the net line, and flew away with them dangling from their mouths.—N. Y. Sun.

HOW HE DRUMS.

A New Theory Concerning the Noise Made by the Grouse.

Mr. W. H. Gibson says: In the so-called "drumming" of the ruffled grouse, that soft murmurous tattoo of which the ardent lordship musters his little company of willing captives, we have another familiar sound as yet so much wrapped in mystery as the "boom" of the night-hawk.

What is the origin and nature of that "drum" which has so long puzzled the world?

Many naturalists have definitely located this mysterious drum, the hollow "drumming log" having long been considered a necessary adjunct to this muffled roll. Such has been the most commonly accepted theory, seemingly verified by the bird itself, from its singular preference for a fallen log as the scene of the musical performance. Others declaim that the bird "beats its sides and the log" simultaneously; a belief which is shared by Audubon and many others. Against this I would oppose the testimony of an eyewitness and close observer—the writer, in truth—who deposes and says that the bird clearly-defined limb of the drumming log. But what has brought you up here this old day?"

"Oh, urgent business," returned the latter. "I am about getting ready for my winter's job on the lot. I purchased the old Bell tract in Hillsdale and—"

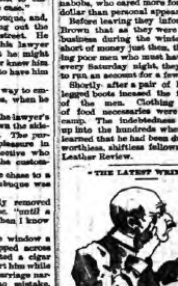
"Indeed," replied his companion. "I am on the same errand. As I failed to get my price for the land, I concluded to put in a crew and clear the lot of pine and then sell for what I can get."

In this way they went on talking of their business, big cuts and farms, until the astonished merchant, notwithstanding their seedy and cheap appearance, actually thought them two old miserly nabobs, who cared more for the mighty dollar than personal appearances.

Before leaving they informed Squire Brown that as they were to do a big business during the winter, and were short of money just then, that by letting poor men who must have their pay every Saturday night, they would like to have him run a store for a few weeks.

Shortly after a pair of heavy, long-legged boots for the head of each of the men. Clothing and stores of food necessaries were shipped to the camps. Dividends had rewarded up into the hundreds when the squire learned that he had been duped by two worthless, shiftless fellows.—Shoe and Leather Review.

"THE LATEST WRINKLE."



—Life.

Appropriate Largess.

The Head-Waiter—Xmas me, sah. You's give me a quarter las' Xmas.

Colonel Green (from Richmond)—That's all right. If you and the landlord get on the Sunday Magazine, I'll swallow my war record.—Judge.

SAMUEL BRADBURN.

How He Satisfied Two Fathers in Search of Fun.

An incident in the course of one of Bradburn's journeys was discussed by an old minister, who had the best evidence of its authenticity—Bradburn's own lips afterwards confirmed by Bradburn's nearest relatives and biographer. The incident, says the Sunday Magazine, shows that his wit could be merciless when sorely provoked. He had come to a roadside inn to stay for the night. While waiting, another pleasure-grieved—a young Lord, attended by his valet. The young gentleman was irritably, but exasperated slightly in conversation. On seeing Bradburn, whose appearance attracted attention in the station, the gay young fellow, speaking aside to the latter, said:

"Y-o-o-n b-bare a parson here."

"He's a Methodist preacher, my Lord," said the valet.

"Oh, then, J-J-'ll have an h-h of fun with him." Approaching Bradburn, he said:

"P-p-pray, sir, excuse you b-bell me how to treat B-b-Balaam's ass spoken" Bradburn, who knew that if you look full at a stammerer you increase his difficulty, replied:

"What did you say, sir?"

"P-p-pray, sir, excuse you tell me h-h-how it was th-that B-Balaam's ass spoke?"

"What do you say, sir?" cried Bradburn, looking keenly into his face, and putting his hand to his ear.

"P-p-p-p-p," muttered the Straggler, "I-I-I-

The Constitutionalist.
W. L. FORCE, } A. L. FORCE
Editors and Proprietors.

DEFY NOT THE PEOPLE.

No political party in this country can defy the duly expressed and authenticated will of the people regarding measures of public importance and survive. It may prolong existence for a time, but dissolution is sure to come.

Partisan history, in more than one instance, bears witness to the truth of that.

When the Constitution of the United States was projected, and after its adoption, there flourished a party denominated the Federal. The champions of this political organization were men of ability and prominence, who, although partisans during the Revolutionary struggle, still clung to the aristocratic ideas of government and madly strove to foster them upon a newly enfranchised people. Popular sentiment rebuked against such an unjustifiable attempt and rapidly concentrated power. Notwithstanding which, Federalism timidly pursued its efforts, regardless of means, to secure and perpetuate existence. Finally the people aroused to determined action gained the victory and overthrew opposition.

What then became of the self-confident Federalists?

Sank out deep beneath the angry surges of popular disfavor, they never, as a party, arose to the surface.

They had defied the voice and wishes of people time and thereby committed partisan suicide.

The Federal party was forever dead.

What has been may again occur.

Like cause produces like effect.

Never before our National Government was established did the sovereign people proclaim such positive hostility to the doings of any political party as the action of last November registered against partisan Republicanism, because of its McKinley monopolistic tariff and Lodge force carrying election bills.

Popular opposition to those measures was thunder-toned.

Yet, the Republican leaders, or most of them, apparently fail to see the hand-writing of fate.

DEFY NOT THE PEOPLE!

PENSIONS FOR FIREMEN.

All firemen are interested in the bill before the House, introduced by Mr. Madden, which amends the law concerning the fire departments of the State and to provide for the retirement of firemen and employees therein. Under the present law, any officer or man doing fire service, or employed in the fire department, who shall be killed while doing duty, or shall die as the result of duty, may be given an annual pension not to exceed $150. The bill amends this by fixing the amount in case of the chief engineer of the department, not to exceed $600; the assistant engineer, chief or any other officer, not exceeding $500; and any other member of the department, not exceeding $400 per annum, to be paid to the widow or children. This is undoubtedly to meet the case of Chief Farrier and the firemen recently killed at the Jersey City fire.

After being imprisoned in the Hoboken Manhoke mine, 115 hours without food, water or sleep, the three miners have been rescued alive by their fellow workmen.

Our sister village of Bound Brook is to be under borough law hereafter. At an election held on Tuesday to decide the question, the vote stood 175 for to 120 against borough government. Now, we suppose, the important matter of selecting a Mayor will be the all absorbing topic.

In the Alabama Legislature the House has passed, without discussion and without opposition, Mr. Wood's bill for the pensioning of Confederate soldiers and sailors, residents of Alabama, who from wounds or other causes are now unable to earn a livelihood, and for the widows of such as were killed in said war, and have not since married. The bill imposes a special tax of 1 mill, and is to run six years.

The Negro Advancement Convention of Alabama is made up of colored Republican leaders. Yet, notwithstanding that a strong effort was made a day or two ago in that Convention to adopt a resolution calling upon Congress to pass the Force bill, a substitute amendment was adopted after an hour's debate to the effect that the loss the negroes of Alabama had to do with that measure the better it would be for their race.

Hon. Richard McPherson, Clerk of the National House of Representatives, clears up, in a letter, the doubt expressed as to the application of the new Reapportionment Bill to the choice of Presidential electors in 1892. He says: "For a hundred years ago declares the matter, as neither the Constitution nor the Reapportionment law does. The Electoral College will be held exactly as it would if no bill stood when the day for President and Vice-President shall take their seats.

A good bill to kill is that one of Assemblyman Daly's which gives to grand juries the power to discharge persons held on indictments found by the previous grand jury. Such a power has hitherto been very wisely and safely vested in the court and prosecutor, and certainly they are much more able to judge of the probable innocence or guilt of the accused at large ways than the number of electors shall be equal to the number of Senators and Representatives to which the several States may by law entitled at the time when the President and Vice-President to be chosen come into office.

The same statute has a proviso excepting the foregoing declaration when Congress shall fail to make the new apportionment before the Presidential election. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the new apportionment already passed by Congress fixes the electoral vote for 1892. The full complement will consist of 444 members, and 223 will be necessary to elect.

Assemblyman Lane of Union County, is earning a name and reputation for his efficiency as a Member of the Lower House.

Who will President Harrison appoint to succeed the late Secretary Windom, New or Cannon? Neither have any special qualification for the office.

Fifteen members the present Congress have died in office, and in a few weeks, at least a hundred and fifty more will sink into a deeper oblivion.

In the collision of the Silver bill and the Force bill, in the United States Senate, the former was adopted and the latter sunk in deep waters as it ought to be.

Although nothing of great importance has as yet passed the State Legislature, we may expect important measures to be discussed and passed on soon.

Senator Marsh makes an active and watchful State official. He has already introduced some important bills and will be heard from when their passage is urged. He makes no mistakes.

Another Machinist Dies of Pneumonia.

Robert W. Pullan died this morning of pneumonia, at his home, 13 Manson place. He was a machinist at the Ford & Bonnell Tool Works. He leaves a wife and three children. He was a prominent member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and a first warder in Monitor Lodge, Ancient Order of Red Men. His age was forty-two.

St. Agnes' Has a Fair.

Ripley Hill, Chauncey B. Ripley's pet property at Westfield, had another addition yesterday afternoon, when it was filled with bay standing on one of the lots for sale at the crest of the hill caught fire. The hay and barrack were totally consumed. Loss, about $200; insurance $200 for Dr. Ripley. The fire made a splendid midnight beacon for the Mt. Arami villagers.

A Complete and Reliable Stock Farm.

Bernhardt Bros. & Co. are highly honored by reputable business men of this and other sections, has purchased from A. D. Thompson, the Riverside Stock Farm at Plainfield, and is prepared to furnish horses of all kinds and for all purposes, also mules and fresh cattle, at all times. He warrants as represented everything that he sells. Notice will be found to be thoroughly reliable in every respect. His advertisement in another column gives further particulars.

Ash Wednesday at the Holy Cross.

The musical part of the Ash Wednesday service at the Holy Cross church was very beautifully rendered by the men and boys of the vested choir, under the leadership of W. H. Miner, the organist and choir master. A sermon on how to observe the lesson of Lent was preached by the rector, the Rev. T. Logan Murphy. The following are the intentions in the period out by church members the holy season will not have been spent in vain. There was a large congregation.

Board Grab a Borough, In Spite of William's Protest.

Despite the fact that William Archibald Coddington penned a printed affidavit and circulated it industriously among the Bound Brook voters, stating that Somerville's annexation to Bridgewater Brook a borough at this time, the election on the borough question Tuesday was in favor of incorporating the town on the Raritan into a borough by a majority of 55 votes.

The number of ballots cast was 301. Of those 7 were rejected; 175 were for incorporation, and 119 were against.

Physician, Pastor and Editor, Three of a Kind.

[From The Standard Bearer.]

May doctors differ? This is the question that is to be tested by law in New York State, an old statute forbidding their diplomas if they do. It has been pretty well settled that in the country people may do nearly as they choose, provided they do no crime. But it has also been settled, by custom and the medical code, that doctors cannot "advertise." Here the matter rests, and here it ought to rest. The medical, the editorial and the pastoral offices all require a real society on their merits and not on the skill of the doctor, the minister or the editor in advertising himself in any other way than by the good he does. At present, for this condition of affairs is what gives so much dignity to these three great professions.

Resolutions of Regret.

At a meeting of Ivanhoe Council, No. 1074, American Legion of Honor, held in Plainfield, N. J., February 10, 1891, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS: The Supreme Ruler in His allwise providence and unerring wisdom has seen fit to remove from our Order by death our beloved brother and companion, Robert Pothell,

Resolved, That while we bow humbly to his supreme will to the will of the Divine Master, we sincerely deplore the loss of one whose wise counsel was one of our bond of Union, and whose faithful services as a officer of our Order, had endeared him to us as a brother.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere sympathy to his family, trusting that in this great trial, they will receive the consolation that comes from above, in sorrow's hour, and the assurance of our brotherly interest in their welfare.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed in full upon the minutes of the Council; published in the daily papers, and a copy forwarded to the family by the Secretary.

H. S. TUNGATE,
W. H. HOUSEL,
G. L. VANDERVEER, } Committee.

An Inequality of the Light Question.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—It is a well known fact that Dunellen has a new electric light bill each month. When the electric light bill each month. When the electric light bill each month. When the

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Measles are epidemic in Plainfield. They are said to have started in Bryant set—ol.

—The recently overhauled municipal affairs were sworn in by the Mayor, Saturday evening.

—Everett has 100 dozen Mitchell hand goblets, fine quality, which he is closing out at 50 cents a dozen.

—The church bell of Holy Cross church will not be rung while Mr. Worth of Grove street is lying so seriously ill.

—The report of the Central New Jersey Railroad Company for 1890 will show about 10 per cent. earned on the stocks.

—Watsupka Lodge, Knights of Honor, has leased the Archer Lodge rooms and will probably select it for Lodge, K. of H., the Royal Arcanum, etc.

—Swindlers who sell cheap soap and promise a rubber mat with the purchase are warned on the advertising business-lines in Central New Jersey towns.

—A special meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club will be held Saturday evening, for the election of new members and the transaction of other business as may come before the meeting.

—The Democratic voters of North Plainfield Township will meet at the corner of Somerset street and Grove, this Friday evening, to transact business in connection with the coming election.

—Services will be held in St. Mary's church to-night at eight o'clock, and on every Wednesday and Friday evening during Lent at the same hour. On Wednesday evening the sermon will be delivered by visiting clergymen.

—Mrs. George Bushe, who lives on West Front street, next door to No. 1's engine-house, has a child dangerously and would be thankful to any kind-hearted woman for personal attention. She has no one to give her the care she needs.

—The Soldiers' Monument Committee met last Friday evening and still further perfected its plans for soliciting subscriptions. In a few days the committee will issue an appeal to the people, illustrated with a design of the monument and its description.

—A flock of chickens tried to hold possession of the Central Railroad tracks in face of a Blue Lightning express train on Tuesday. When the locomotive reached them they fled for their lives. One of them was caught and held by the cowcatcher, and was carried away, flopping its wings in its death struggles.

—Important improvements are about to be commenced on the present terminus of Dice Away at Netherwood Heights, by grading and laying out avenues and continuing Broadway through to the main road leading to Railway, so that it is known as the Lee tract, recently purchased by Mr. Sidell Michael Uhdal, the well-known grader, has received the contract for grading and laying out the streets and will rapidly push the work to completion.

WHO WILL GET THE CHILDREN?

The Asset Chosen for Orphans, But the Knights of Pythias Hold Them Most.

An interesting legal struggle for the possession of the three orphan children of the late John L. Duckworth, of this city, is about to be begun by James Barbour, a well-to-do liveryman and general carman of Elizabeth and a member of the American Club, against the Plainfield Knights of Pythias and the Plainfield Children's Home. Mr. Keating, who lives at No. 156 South Park street, gave to a reporter yesterday the following history of the case:

About ten years ago his wife's sister, Miss Joanna Powers, married Mr. Duckworth, who was a bookkeeper, and lived at Elizabethport. Soon after their marriage they removed to Plainfield, where Duckworth obtained employment in the Potter Press Works. A year and a half later a boy, aged six, and a girl, aged four, were born. Two years ago Mrs. Duckworth died of consumption. Her husband, who joined the Plainfield branch of the Knights of Pythias, put the little boy in the Children's Home and kept the girls at the house of a Mr. Chamberlain, where he boarded. Later, the eldest girl was taken charge of by a Miss Miller, with whom she young widower kept company, and to whom he finally, he was engaged to be married.

About two weeks ago Duckworth was stricken with pneumonia, and he died after a few illness. He was buried Saturday, Jan. 31. At the funeral a dispute arose as to what should be done with the orphans.

"It was said that the father's dying wish was that they should remain where they were"—said Mr. Keating—"but the fact is that Duckworth was carried off so quickly that he had no opportunity to make any provision regarding his children. His step-sister, Mrs. Frederick Casmer, of Greenville, offered to take the orphans, but as her means are limited and she has all she can do to support her own family, my wife said she would take the children for a year that, as she is the nearest of kin, and has the best right to their custody. This arrangement at the time seemed satisfactory all round, but a few days afterwards, when we went for the children we found they had all been put into the Home by Mr. Chamberlain without our consent. We, as next friends, had a right to, but did not, interpose. Mr. Chamberlain said that he could not get them. I indorsed Wm. Kreig, of Elizabeth, who belonged to the order in that city, do go with me to Plainfield and endeavor to get to the Knights, but they did not seem to be disposed to let the children be removed, and so they put them in the Home. The authorities of the institution won't surrender the children unless legal steps are taken to compel them to do so. I sent a letter to the Knights, in which I made for my wife a formal demand for the guardianship of the orphans, as we are well able to keep and educate them. My letter was read at the lodge meeting of the Plainfield branch, but I have not received a reply.

"On behalf of my wife and her sister, Mrs. Kreig, who lives in Greenville, and who is anxious that Mrs. Keating should take charge of the orphans, I shall certainly resort to every legal method to compel the Home to surrender the children. I have consulted Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, and he is of opinion that my wife has at undoubted right to the custodianship of her young relatives."

Mr. Keating visited Plainfield yesterday afternoon to consult with the lawyer. When Duckworth died he had life insurance of about $100 coming to him, which is being used partly to defray the cost of medical attendance at the Home. When this money is exhausted they will become a burden on the authorities, and a point that will likely be raised by the Knights of Pythias at Elizabeth and Plainfield, but also among the residents of Elizabethport, where Mrs. Keating is well known, being a descendant of one of the oldest families of that section of Elizabeth.

PERSONALS.

—The South-Day Baptists are to have a $6,000 organ in their new church.

—Stephen, the Human Fugitive Rialto, will lecture in The Casino during next month.

—Senior Belnap is building a house on Sanford avenue. He will occupy it in the Spring.

—A phantom party was given by Mrs. Charles S. Corwin, at her home on East Ninth street, Tuesday evening.

—John Brooks, Superintendent of the Potter Press Works, has purchased the valuable business property, Nos. 14 and 16 West Front street, through the agency of Wm. H. Woodruff.

—The Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the First Baptist church of this city, preached the dedicatory sermon at the dedication of the new Baptist church at Junction Tuesday.

—Mr. and Mrs. Carmen Parse were in Knoxville, last month, visiting Mr. and Mrs. Honeyman. They subsequently left for Chicago, where they will reside. Mr. Parse's continued and increasing ill health.

—Miss Lyons, who has been private secretary to the Corporation Counsel for some time, has accepted the position on the Life publishing company of New York, and will enter upon her new position at once.

—Ex-Mayor of North Plainfield, John H. Va. Winkle, and Martin Wooden, son-in-law of this deceased, are the executors named published in what is believed without doubt to be the last will and testament of Jasper G. Cadmus.

—Robert Mitchell, an employe of the Potter Press Works, died of pneumonia Friday morning, the age of thirty-five. Funeral services were held from his late residence, 29 Grant avenue, Sunday afternoon at four o'clock.

—We are all devoutly hopine that Clergeman Devlin will be enraged by the Choral Society to sing here. Maybe then those who went into ecstasy over the pyrotechnical Howe will realize how far from Howe's voice she has by comparison.

—Friday night, after rehearsal, the choir of Holy Cross choir gave a serenade to the rector, the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, in front of his residence on Second street. It sounded very sweet, and the immediate neighborhood enjoyed the music as much as the rector did.

—G. A. Brown, Esq., has been appointed and confirmed as Corporation Counsel of this city, ten consecutive terms. One with Major Randolph, two with Major Mason, three with Mayor Rockefeller, four with Mayor Male, and is now beginning a term with Mayor Gilbert.

—Miss Amelia T. Potts, of "Laurelly", Woodland avenue, is again at home, having spent a very delightful week with her aunt, Mrs. George B. DeRevere, of Union Square Hotel, New York city. Mr. Potts, Miss Alice, accompanied her home, and remained over Sunday.

—It is rumored that George Wotherspoon, of this city, recently returned from Europe, will organize a company, the "Little Lord Fauntleroy" company successfully, has been engaged by Henry B. Dixey to represent him during his absence on the road, and that he will be known as the Lee tract, recently purchased by Mr. Sidell Michael Uhdal, the well-known grader, has received the contract for grading and laying out the streets and will rapidly push the work to completion.

—Services will be held in St. Mary's church to-night at eight o'clock, and on every Wednesday and Friday evening during Lent at the same hour. On Wednesday evening the sermon will be delivered by visiting clergymen.

—Mrs. George Bushe, who lives on West Front street, next door to No. 1's engine-house, has a child dangerously and would be thankful to any kind-hearted woman for personal attention. She has no one to give her the care she needs.

—The Soldiers' Monument Committee met last Friday evening and still further perfected its plans for soliciting subscriptions. In a few days the committee will issue an appeal to the people, illustrated with a design of the monument and its description.

—A flock of chickens tried to hold possession of the Central Railroad tracks in face of a Blue Lightning express train on Tuesday. When the locomotive reached them they fled for their lives. One of them was caught and held by the cowcatcher, and was carried away, flopping its wings in its death struggles.

—Important improvements are about to be commenced on the present terminus of Dice Away at Netherwood Heights, by grading and laying out avenues and continuing Broadway through to the main road leading to Railway, so that it is known as the Lee tract, recently purchased by Mr. Sidell Michael Uhdal, the well-known grader, has received the contract for grading and laying out the streets and will rapidly push the work to completion.

WHO WILL GET THE CHILDREN?

The Asset Chosen for Orphans, But the Knights of Pythias Hold Them Most.

An interesting legal struggle for the possession of the three orphan children of the late John L. Duckworth, of this city, is about to be begun by James Barbour, a well-to-do liveryman and general carman of Elizabeth and a member of the American Club, against the Plainfield Knights of Pythias and the Plainfield Children's Home. Mr. Keating, who lives at No. 156 South Park street, gave to a reporter yesterday the following history of the case:

About ten years ago his wife's sister, Miss Joanna Powers, married Mr. Duckworth, who was a bookkeeper, and lived at Elizabethport. Soon after their marriage they removed to Plainfield, where Duckworth obtained employment in the Potter Press Works. A year and a half later a boy, aged six, and a girl, aged four, were born. Two years ago Mrs. Duckworth died of consumption. Her husband, who joined the Plainfield branch of the Knights of Pythias, put the little boy in the Children's Home and kept the girls at the house of a Mr. Chamberlain, where he boarded. Later, the eldest girl was taken charge of by a Miss Miller, with whom the young widower kept company, and to whom he finally, he was engaged to be married.

About two weeks ago Duckworth was stricken with pneumonia, and he died after a few days' illness. He was buried Saturday, Jan. 31. At the funeral a dispute arose as to what should be done with the orphans.

"It was said that the father's dying wish was that they should remain where they were"—said Mr. Keating—"but the fact is that Duckworth was carried off so quickly that he had no opportunity to make any provision regarding his children. His step-sister, Mrs. Frederick Casmer, of Greenville, offered to take the orphans, but as her means are limited and she has all she can do to support her own family, my wife said she would take the children for a year that, as she is the nearest of kin, and has the best right to their custody. This arrangement at the time seemed satisfactory all round, but a few days afterwards, when we went for the children we found they had all been put into the Home by Mr. Chamberlain without our consent. We, as next friends, had a right to, but did not, interpose. Mr. Chamberlain said that he could not get them. I indorsed Wm. Kreig, of Elizabeth, who belonged to the order in that city, do go with me to Plainfield and endeavor to get to the Knights, but they did not seem to be disposed to let the children be removed, and so they put them in the Home. The authorities of the institution won't surrender the children unless legal steps are taken to compel them to do so. I sent a letter to the Knights, in which I made for my wife a formal demand for the guardianship of the orphans, as we are well able to keep and educate them. My letter was read at the lodge meeting of the Plainfield branch, but I have not received a reply.

"On behalf of my wife and her sister, Mrs. Kreig, who lives in Greenville, and who is anxious that Mrs. Keating should take charge of the orphans, I shall certainly resort to every legal method to compel the Home to surrender the children. I have consulted Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, and he is of opinion that my wife has at undoubted right to the custodianship of her young relatives."

Mr. Keating visited Plainfield yesterday afternoon to consult with the lawyer. When Duckworth died he had life insurance of about $100 coming to him, which is being used partly to defray the cost of medical attendance at the Home. When this money is exhausted they will become a burden on the authorities, and a point that will likely be raised by the Knights of Pythias at Elizabeth and Plainfield, but also among the residents of Elizabethport, where Mrs. Keating is well known, being a descendant of one of the oldest families of that section of Elizabeth.

REJOICING OVER BLESSINGS.

Special Praise and Thanksgiving Services at Trinity Church.

The people of the Trinity Reformed church have for weeks been desirous of appropriately commemorating the recent bountiful bestowal of spiritual blessings on the various religious congregations of Plainfield, and particularly on the congregation of their own church; and the laudable desire found expression Sunday in special services of praise and thanksgiving to God.

At the morning service the pastor, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, preached an able discourse on Christ's reward, from the text, "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever"—Daniel xii: 3.

In the evening the pastor drew an earnest lesson, in most eloquent language, from the story of the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well. His text was: "The woman then left her water-pot, and went her way into the city"—St. John iv: 28.

The congregation each evening was large, but especially so in the evening. The sermons of the pastor were full of great power.

The music during the day was rendered by a special chorus choir, composed of Mrs. J. S. Cutter, Mrs. J. C. VanDyke, Mrs. Wm. Hall, soprano; Miss Fannie Mathison, Miss Lizzie Dunn and Miss Ella Dunn, alto; T. K. Ben H and H. J. Martin, tenor; F. S. Cutter and Ira Hall, bass.

The choir organist was A. L. Titsworth.

A substantial thank offering was made at each service.

HYMENEAL.

Adams—Carlisle.

As THE PRESS has already stated, the wedding of Miss Ella Vallon Carlisle to Henry Coolidge Adams, at "Rosalinda," Saturday afternoon, was a most brilliant society event. The bride of the beautiful mother, where the ceremony took place, was thronged with guests from Plainfield, New York and Brooklyn. The marriage ceremony was performed in the parlor, at the bridal staircase the surplised boy choir of Grace church, under the leadership of Prof. Tuttle, sang the wedding march. They remained in an alcove adjoining the staff landing throughout the marriage service, and performed charging the bridal party out. The effect of the tender, subdued strains of music floating about the place from the hidden voices while the marriage knot was being tied was very pretty, and was pronounced a charming novelty.

The bride wore a beautiful gown of white satin, with train en regal, and a veil of costly lace. She entered the parlors on the arm of her grandfather, J. H. Wright of Middlebrook, and was met by Dr. Hall, who wore white silk covered with lace net. She carried a bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley, a cluster of which was worn by the bridegroom, a mark by all the members of the family.

The ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst. The groom is from Scarsdale, N. Y., but is now in Plainfield and bride will be in New York city.

As especially pretty duo native effect was produced in the hall and parlors, during the ceremony and the highly enjoyable reception, by a pleasant glow of light from ornamental Japanese lanterns.

The wedding feast was by Marsel, and was superb.

DANCED THE VIRGINIA REEL.

But Chose the Wrong Place for Their Fun, and Got in Trouble in Consequence.

For dancing a Virginia reel on the platform at the Grant avenue station of the Jersey Central railway, and disturbing the dance with whistlings and yells that two policeman heard blocks away, six lads, whom same regard as "good boys," eighteen, were prisoners before City Judge Cochiston Tuesday morning. It was shown that the boys were guilty of the charge of whistling on the board flooring at the station as a ball room sight after night, causing constant disturbance of the peace and quietness of the neighborhood. All six were adjudged guilty, but on Harry McComus, Joseph Malone, Henry Pugh and Wm Fry sentence was suspended. James Reed and Robert McComus were fined $3 each.

An Old Set Stocking for Plainfield.

(From The Summit Record.)

Charles A. Davis, of Bloomfield, who will be remembered by lovers of base-ball as the first-baseman of the old Red Stocking Club, has signed a contract to play this Summer with the Oregonian of Plainfield, one of the best clubs in the State.

Westfield's Fire Election.

The annual election of the Westfield Fire Department took place Tuesday night. John J. Schmidt was re-elected Chief over Isaac Seeley by 16 majority. Isaac Beeman was chosen First Assistant and Robert Woodruff, Jr., Second Assistant, without opposition.

He, Too Once, Turned Nobody Away.

J. W. A. Bustenrache, who is frequently mentioned in the columns of Reform Editor THE PRESS to inform the public that he is not the man who was accused by a correspondent Saturday of roughly ejecting a thinner after salvation from a recent meeting of the Salvation Army at the hall.

A West Brooklyn to Honor Natives.

S. R. Dayton, F. Walker, G. W. Cordell, Martin Bevins, Calvin Dunn, Wm. Sandford, of New Market, and Benne Manning, of South Plainfield, comprising the township committee, were in session here last night and on Friday afternoon, preparing their annual report of the finances of the township.

The Customer Who Got Burned.

Thursday fire destroyed the barn of J. C. Frail, Superintendent of Construction and Equipment of the Pullman Palace Car Company, on East Front street. The fire started in a hay mow; the cause is not known. The flames were discovered in time to save the horses, but considerable of harness. Wm. Olem ran all the way from Leland avenue a mile into town to get out the engines, and succeeded in getting them to the scene of the blaze, and cut in an alarm by telephone. All the apparatus of both city and borough turned out, but the barn was destroyed to the ground and the horses had nothing but ruins to play on. Hewis E. Leland's barn was saved by a bucket brigade formed by the neighbors. The loss of the barn and of Mr. Frail's property was insuring, and the damage was covered that he was burned to death. He escaped by all right kicker.

BOROUGH SOLONS IN SESSION.

The Fourth Ward Council Accept Many Streets and Sewers.

The Borough Council of North Plainfield held their regular meeting for February Friday night. Mayor Charles Place called the meeting to order. Councilmen Hamilton, Kiefer and Seeley were present. Councilman Hageman answered to the roll call, but excused himself after hearing of the absence of Councilman Berkins was absent.

A long list of petitions for sidewalks, street lights and cross walks, from residents in the Fourth ward, were read. They were presented and referred to appropriate committees.

The committee of Geo. Conover to report on the Union Engine Company, No. 1, was confirmed.

Borough Magistrate James Hardy, reported $6.75 from his address to the Police department during the month.

Tax Collector H. Newton Spencer reported collections of $25.15 for the months of January, making a total of $6,078.39 for the year 1890.

Borough Clerk H. F. Hollister reported fines collected by the amount of $199.50, and fines $173.05, making a total of $363.15.

James Hardy resigned the office of Borough Magistrate. The resignation was referred to the Committee on Marshals and Licenses, who subsequently reported in favor of the acceptance. The resignation was then accepted.

Mr. Emmons presented a resolution, which was adopted, establishing Feb. 17 as the date when the registry officers shall begin to canvass for the election of March 10, and Feb. 24 and March 3 as the dates when the registry board shall meet to transfer the names of voters from the canvassing books to the registry list and to revise the registry.

A resolution from Mr. Needham, which was adopted, provided that the Auditing Committee shall audit the books of the Collector and Clerk and report at the next meeting.

At this juncture some excitement was caused in the lobby by the entrance of Horace H. Martin, who was breathless from hurrying up the stairs, and whose arrival stirred the spectators in the lobby, who had been quiescent all the evening, into unusual activity. All attempts to obtain recognition from the Mayor, the numerous gentlemen gave vent to such hoarse whispers as "Take off your hat!" "Pull down your vest!" and other elegant witticisms tending to indicate that the personal attire of the new arrival was defective, as a matter of fact, was faultless. While the funny fellows were still sniggling over their own inimitable humor Mr. Martin told the Mayor his errand.

He represented the Township Committee, as Clerk,—he said—and wished to secure for the Committee, from the County Board of Freeholders, action pending a considerable importance. The matter was the division of income and expense between the Township of North Plainfield and Borough and Bolough had been in the habit of sharing half and half the income from licenses and the expenditure for the police force and salaries. A new law had been passed governing this matter, and the Committee, which was then in session, desired prompt adjustment of the matter, so as to know on what financial basis it was to work in the future. The matter was referred to the Committee on Finance, which, as there was only one member present, could not report till another meeting night. Mr. Martin was instructed to report to the Committee that the Borough Council met in the matter at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Emmons arose for information. He wanted to know why the street lights were not burning, and why the fifty unlighted nights when one couldn't see his hand before his face—was it intentionally done or what?

Mr. Seeley replied that it was due to be ignorance and neglect of the Italians who are employed to light the lamps. They were supposed to do so, but they didn't. Complaint had been made to the Board of Health, and Health Officer Williams had been instructed to see that the lamps were lighted on light nights. Unfortunately the recent moonlight period, it was had been storms which had made the nights dark but which had not stirred the Italian from their sentry. He had examined it on the officials of the company who employed them, the officials said that the Italians alone were at fault, and had been instructed to do their duty. They could not understand what they said.

Mr. Smalley said that he never had been satisfied with the old street lighting system, and he was glad to see the end of the present month than during the last three years.

Mr. Emmons said that he considered the way the Committee on Lights were manipulating things showed a great lack of appreciati n of the interests of the people.

Mr. Smalley said that it was all a small matter anyway. The borough would so n have a good electric light, so what was the use of fooling over pre-ent unpleasantnesses.

Mayor Place said "Maybe we can stand it a few days longer", and the Council proceeded with the order of business.

By resolution of Mr. Smalley the sum of $150 was appropriated from the Borough Fund to make a second payment on the bill of J. P Emmons for the masonry work on the borough lock-up, and $150 as second payment on the bill of J. S. Longstreet for carpenter work.

Provision was made for the payment of two notes amounting to $1,200, due Feb. 20 and 24.

The Council adjourned to Feb. 20.

Odd Fellow.

Abraham Bockelaire, of 39 East Brook avenue, Somerville, and well known in this city, is the possessor of an ancient and valuable musical instrument, which is named the Philadelphia Harp, made in the year 1793. He also has a chair that came over the sea from Holland in 1609, and was in possession of the Dutch Reformed church for a number and a valuable coppler coins of ancient dates, also copies of almanacs and other documents published many years ago.

Base-Ball Rules Already.

The Sun says: "J. Livingston, the well-known pitcher of the Ridgewood Club, and W. Gilbert, of Brooklyn, are both on the Crescents of Plainfield, N. J., have not yet signed with any club. Both have good records.

The Somerville Democrat says: "The West Ends have secured Harkins, Bergen, Jos Reilly, Al. Williams, Sam. Mott, Carbonnell and Davenport for this year's team. They use to play six games with the Crescents, two each in July, August and September."

Base Ball Note.

The Somerville Democrat says: "The West Ends have secured Harkins, Bergen, Jos Reilly, Al. Williams, Sam. Mott, Carbonnell and Davenport for this year's team. They use to play six games with the Crescents, two each in July, August and September."

Base-Ball Rules Already.

The Sun says: "J. Livingston, the well-known pitcher of the Ridgewood Club, and W. Gilbert, of Brooklyn, are both on the Crescents of Plainfield, N. J., have not yet signed with any club. Both have good records.

MOTHER CRANE.

How She Found Her Wayward Boy at Camp Freedom.

HEN all the women and most of the men left Camp Freedom, Mrs. Hetty Crane lingered on. She had been the first woman to come up the steep and rocky trail leading to the valley of Isolate and forlorn, little straggling camp, and now it seemed probable that she would be the last to go down the rocky mountain slope, leaving the deserted little camp behind.

The miners who had remained in Camp Freedom still entertained the fond but delusive hope that the little camp would yet have a "regular boom." But the boom did not come. All too time were there any more than four or five hundred people in the canyon at the narrow and gloomy gulch below, and but one or two of them had "struck it rich." One of these fortunate men was Bryce Hale. He and his partner, Dan Rose, was a few rods above Camp Freedom, and was the only one in the whole gulch that had developed a lead of any value. He gave employment to the twenty or twenty-five men who stayed in Camp Freedom, when all the others, disgusted and discouraged, packed up their few poor possessions and went away to more promising fields, leaving their few cabins and abandoned claims behind, as silent witnesses of the hopeful dreams and of fair dreams that come to naught.

Mrs. Hetty Crane, a small, tidy, smiling woman, who had the quick faculty of mine-sense of life, seemed to have come to Camp Freedom aimlessly and purposelessly, like the many homeless and unsettled elements of humanity who wander restlessly from place to place in search of they know not what.

Mrs. Crane, who were faded and frayed widow's weeds, did not seem to have any definite object in view when she came riding up Camp Freedom's one narrow and crooked street on top of the stage coach at the close of a day in June.

Like most of the other new arrivals, she spent the first few days in "looking around," although one could see all there was in Camp Freedom in a very few moments.

She wandered up to the Day Star mine one day and fell into conversation with Bryce Hale. He was the best known and most influential man in the camp, and Mrs. Crane said that she thought he was the best person to ask about her probable success if she should open a boarding house in the place.

Now the Irish man cook who had charge of the kitchen of the log "big boss" house of the mine and most of his workmen boarded was a shiftless, insufficient fellow, more successful in "fast nursing the digestion of Hale and his men, and, instead of advising Mrs. Crane to open a boarding house of her own, he advised that she take charge of his for the present.

After "five minutes' reflection, Mrs. Crane agreed to this proposition, and that night Hale and his men ate such a hearty supper as had not been eaten in the whole history of Camp Freedom.

Mrs. Crane was unanimously voted "a brick," and the next day Hale told the fate that had sent her to the camp.

The dreary and offensively dirty old cabin took on a new look before three days, and at the end of a week Mrs. Crane had made it into a marvel of neatness and cleanliness.

"I think that the moral welfare of men depends largely on their surroundings," she said to Bryce Hale, "and I don't intend that any of the men in this house shall have their moral tone lowered by living in dirt and eating food that would ruin the stomach and temper of a Job." Hale said that "amen," for he was himself a lover of cleanliness and good living.

But Mrs. Crane was silent as the Sphinx regarding herself, and at the end of six months Hale and his men knew no more about her than on the day she first rode into the camp.

They did not even know whence she came nor when she thought of going in time to come. She seemed to be a woman without a past and without a future. But she was not entirely reticent. She was always smiling and cheerful, with ever a cheery word for the men and a kind act for the sick, and kindness when they were sick or when misfortune of any kind overtook them, so that Hale, although none of the men were older than herself, all of them began to call her "Mother Crane."

"I TELL YE, THIS IS COMFORT."

They talked to her more than to the other women in the camp began to go before the long, dreary winter set in, but she did not, and by the time winter came she was the only woman left in the camp, and all the men had grown accustomed to her presence at the Day Star mine.

The nearest town was ten miles away, and the men from Camp Freedom seldom visited it. When they did go they went in a body, for the express purpose of having what Hi Sharp, the wildest spirit among them, called "a high old time." They went on Saturday, stayed all night, and got back Sunday afternoon, bringing with them the news and gossip their eager ears had heard during the past week. Once one wild and stormy Sunday night in December, exhausted with their long, stiff climb down the mountain, the drifts that had formed during the day.

Mother Crane had, as usual, a pot of strong, fragrant coffee, and a piping hot supper waiting for them.

"I tell ye this is comfort," said Jack Hixon, as he stretched his long legs under her table and expanded his eye for a third cup of coffee. "I tell ye, Mother Crane," he said, "it does all of us fellers a power of good to get down to Quarts City once in awhile, because we're alive so starvedly glad to get back again to our cabins in the mountains quite to compensate for the whole week. I feel, my Judge, that they don't go no sich grub nowhere else as we git."

"That's it, Jack," said Clem Lilton, "and we'll lynch the man what tries to take Mother Crane away from us by matrimony or by other means that's what we will."

"Spokin' of lynchin'," said Jack, "you an idee that you'd hold-up they've got in jail down there in Quarts City will hang 'fore daylight. He's the first one they've ever caught and the hurry they're goin' to make an aggregate of him, no matter if he ain't but twenty or twenty-one years old."

"Is he young as that?" asked another of the men, turning to look at her. "If they'd set to hang him then, pore feller, I reckon see, his name's Petersen, eh's it?"

"He's been goin' by that name but they've found letters on him that proves that he's known by as Hiram Hugh Dayton back in the States, and—"

"What did you say his name was?" interrupted Mother Crane, rising from her seat at the head of the table and leaning earnestly forward with pursed lips and pallid face.

"Hugh Dayton," repeated Jack Hixon.

"Hugh Dayton!" Mrs. Crane's voice was to a whisper as she repeated the name. Her breath came in short, quick gasps. She grasped at the table for support and said words to a whisper strong and brave you be. Are you strong and brave enough to go back to Quarts City on such a night as this and bring Hugh Dayton back to me—his mother? I am his mother, my name is Dayton, not Crane, as you have thought for him for two years. He wrote me that he was coming to Camp Freedom, and I came after him, and I am to meet him. I did not know where else to go. It is four years since he left his home, and I have been in search of him all over the world and its temptations. He drifted into Leadville, and I heard nothing from him for two years, until he wrote me he was coming here, and I came on to meet him and save him from the evil companionship he was in with. Go and bring him to me now. He may be innocent of this crime; he may be guilty. But innocent or guilty, bring him to me, his mother. He is my son, my only child, and I love him so."

"HUSH, LISTEN TO ME."

In ten minutes she was alone in the cabin, her head bowed on the table and her sobs and passionate, half-frantic prayers the only sound that broke the silence of the little room.

It was almost daylight when the tramp of many feet was heard outside and Mother Crane opened wide the door and peered out into the darkness. Her face ghastly in its pallor and her trembling lips refusing to carry out the question she longed and yet dreaded to ask.

She could see the forms of the men as they approached over the snow, but she had eyes for but one form and one face. When within a few yards of the cabin the men halted, and one man alone came haltingly forward with bowed head and trembling limbs.

The mother heart of the waiting woman took yet who it was, and she ran forward to meet him with a cry of "Hugh, my son, my son!"

They went slowly into the cabin, their arms around each other, and the men silently went away leaving them alone.

Camp Freedom is only a memory now to "Mother Crane" and her son. They located their last on it when the morning after that sorrowful night came. They turned their face eastward bent toward the far West of the Pacific slope and began life anew, lamenting the wicked days of the past and atoning for it by the good and true lives they led in the future, the mother, with no grievous sins of her own to atone for, helping her son to make atonement for his own.—Zenas Dane, in Drake's Magazine.

TALK WITH A LION-TAMER.

How He Acquires Complete Mastery Over His Savage Pets.

The lion-tamer was a highly intelligent young man, who, born in the United States, went to Germany in his youth. In Hamburg he associated with a leading firm, the Jamrach of Germany, and so, having a natural bent in charge, became familiar with handling them. Travelling for the business, he made frequent visits to Africa and Asia, collecting animals. In a commercial sense, considering lions and tigers as cattle to be bought and sold, he became thoroughly acquainted with their ways and instincts. Certainly it was the only school where such quiet pursuits over savage animals could be acquired.

"It is a natural talent," said Mr. Daring to a writer in Harper's Weekly; "all my animals have been two years in training. Why, it takes two months to make a lion sit in a chair and stay there. I can not vaunt general intelligence in lions; it is, rather indifferent. I have had some five young lions, superb in body, that had no brains. Not wicked or cross, but stupid. Stupid it was a tendency to forget to-morrow all that had been acquired for months before. But I can't always do it. Leo is my best pupil. He never was ugly, but once I gave him up and sold him, for he was so dull; then took him to school again; and I know no lion second to him now in point of sense and docility. That is the point. A lion doesn't want to do things. He just doesn't want to. Now you must make him want. Punish him and you make him your enemy; afraid of you, and he gets worse, no better. I think him, and talk to him in English, for English is the best language for command. The see-saw and the velocipede are difficult tricks. Not one lion in a thousand can be taught to keep his balance. They usually tumble off. Perhaps in that performance their highest intelligence is called into play. The velocipede requires a careful lion, and I have just the right one. It would be cruel to whip a lion for stupidity. It

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
M. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1891. No. 8.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well as its limitations as to its authorities."—MADISON.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
(Successors to Jackson & Runyon),
Solicitors for Plainfield, Citizens' Insurance Co., Solicitors in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioners,
COR. FRONT AND NORTH AVENUE. 4-34-ly

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer.
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box 155, Dunellen, N. J., or address in care of CONSTITUTIONALIST. Terms reasonable.

DR. CHARLES E. TWEED,
Dentist.
26 West Front street. A new local anesthetic application for extracting teeth without pain. Gold filling a specialty.—pd3

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 21. Scotch Plains, N. J. Orders left at N. J. Quarry, second hand store, 21 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—4162

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
241 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 38 and 39, Temporary address, Park Building.) Residence, Plainfield, N. J.—pd

J. M. FRISTER,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office in A. E. Sampson's livery stable, corner Main Front and Somerset streets, Plainfield, N. J. Calls made promptly attended. Telephone connection. Residence, 19 East Front street. Office, 23 East Second street.—4162

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VAN ARSDALE,
PIANO TUNER.
Is now prepared to tick pianos in order. Terms reasonable. Pianos and Organs for sale and to let, on easy terms, by special. P. VAN ARSDALE at Mr. Wolf's Music Store, No. 1 Park avenue will receive prompt attention. Residence, 13 East Front street, corner Elm street.—4y12w1

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Jobbing promptly attended to. Shop connects with dwelling. apay

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds,
GAME AND VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON.
No. 56 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
A. LUTKINS. L. A. HUMMER.
6m4y

G. W. FORCE,
11 West Front street,
Opening of
FALL AND WINTER STOCK
Boots and Shoes at Low Prices
A FINE GRADE OF GOODS TO SELECT FROM.
11 West Front street.
G. W. FORCE.
1841ly

TO THE PUBLIC!

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that, we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.

It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We have also prepared to furnish all kinds of Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
1m4y

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
(Formerly Clerk's.)
Watches, Clocks And Jewelry.
Repairing neatly and promptly done. 2697

Steam Marble Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones,
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments
All work guaranteed in the most skilful manner and at strictly reasonable prices. Call and see us before purchasing.
FRONT ST., next to M. E. Ch., PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Monuments erected in Greenwood Cemetery, N. Y. 4162ly

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No. 2 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of desirable goods always on hand. Repairing done in the best manner. Prices reasonable. Orders left at this office will receive prompt attention. 4162ly

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
Is now in the employment of the old customers and friends of the firm at
NO. 14 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will continue to supply Fuel, Wood and Coal of the best quality at the lowest prices. Flour and meals, Oysters, Clams, Game in season at the lowest market prices. Anything and everything kept in first class establishments of the kind. Orders left at the store will receive prompt attention. 4162ly

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR D. L. & W. STATION.)
GEO. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat, First-class Plumbing.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 12-31-tf

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Sixth Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. SOUCH, Proprietor.
Permanent and transient board, at fair rates. First class station and stable attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours.

BANKING.

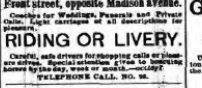
Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
ELIAS S. POPE, Treasurer. 4m51

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc;
No. 36 Park Aye.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS BEST IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE. 4m51

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C.E. & J.W. BROWN,
(Successors to C. F. & G. E. Brown & Co.)
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
Hardware, Tools,
Best Timothy Seed.
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 13 SOMERSET ST. 3-13-tf

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables



Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Parades and Private Parties. Light carriages at all hours. Careful driving a pleasure.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure rides. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day, week or month.—oct13y
TELEPHONE CALL, NO. 31.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building in
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to serve customers in a first-class manner. Fine carriages and horses a specialty. 29

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderbilt's Manufactory, Park avenue. The Accommodation Express will attend to the prompt delivering packages of the city, calling for goods for Dunellen and from the Depot, or from factory to depot. Furniture, Pianos, &c., handled with care and safety. Prompt attention given to Orders.

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE
The undersigned, observing the opposition to the Stock Companies,
Star and Merchants Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York, are prepared to write insurance, mutually assessable only for such losses as may occur, at the lowest rates consistent with safety.
NATHAN HARPER
Agent.

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.
Mortgages.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also Agents for other first-class Fire Insurance Companies. Agents for the Home Mutual Building and Loan Association. First and City National Bank Bonds Bought and Sold. Ann.
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Good Estate for sale.
OFFICE:
5 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS S. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
NO. 20 SOMERSET STREET, NORTH PLAINFIELD.
Orders left at the store or at residence, corner of the public square in Scotch Plains, will receive prompt attention. 4162

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND KINDERGARTEN,
12 LaGrande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET,
Will re-open WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling, Drawing and Sewing. 9 11 tf

PAINTERS & PAPER HANGERS' SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass,
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
5-9-52

L. B. WOOLSTON, J. F. BUCKLE
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 20 NORTH AVENUE
4y9tf

MISCELLANEOUS.

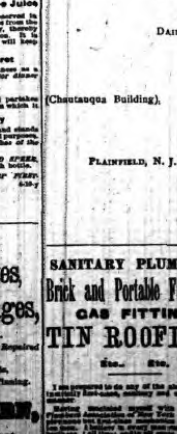
LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
(Successor to T. J. Carey.)
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—S. W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges very moderate. P. O. Box 298. Piano Moving a specialty. 2134tf

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Seed,
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 13 SOMERSET ST. 3-13-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
20 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N.J.
mch26tf

Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.
Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
AND
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.



Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the Grape (the Speer Grape), raised in Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink, and become rich in saccharine matter before gathering. It is are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being prepared under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Physicians and Clergymen of Health who have examined it. The Medical Faculty recommend it in the highest terms, as a pure stimulant, free from acid, and entirely unadulterated and suited to the various ailments that affect the nervous system.

Tonic and Strengthening Properties
It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the juice of the Speer Grape, preserved in its natural state, seven years as it rises from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby preventing the action of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's Sacramental Claret
is held in high estimation by its richness as a Tonic. Recommended by the medical faculty for dietary use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry is a Wine of superior character, and perfection in its purity and richness. Age will improve it.

Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivaled in its delicate aroma and flavor. Physicians prescribe it in their practice, dietetic as that of the grape from which it is distilled.
We do not list signatures of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., to over the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP IT ONLY.
ELIAS WIEBE. 5-30-y

Parlor Stoves,
Othello Ranges,
Choice Timothy Seed.
Furnaces, Ranges and Stoves Repaired
House Furnishing Goods,
Hardware, Plumbing and Tinning.
A. E. GRIFFEN,
Terms Cash. 20 East Front Street. 11-14

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The best cigar in the State, and made on the principle of "value received."
CLEAR HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
A large assortment of the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars, Cigarettes and Tobacco always on hand.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety. 1y

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMESTIC
—SEGARS!—
No. 8 PARK AVE., (next corner to SECOND ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobaccos and Smoker's Materials,
Of every description.
The celebrated "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, Without Exception the finest cut chew in the market. 42tf

CARPENTERS.

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
(Successor to R. B. Maynard.)
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 26 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's HAIR CUTTING done at their residences. Shaving, Shampooing, &c., satisfactorily performed.

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Madison Avenue, cor. Front St. Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

CARNEY BROS., Ag'ts,
11 SOMERSET ST.
TINNERS,
PLUMBERS,
GAS FITTERS,
PARLOR STOVES,
COOK STOVES,
HEATERS.
Grates and Bricks for all kinds of Stove s can be found here at Jobbers' prices. Bring your Tinware mending to us. The best Tinners, the best Plumbers, and the best Gas-Fitters in the State are employed by the Carney Bros. Co., and our work always gives satisfaction.

Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.
Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

WHATEVER form or printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings.
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memorials,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Public or Private Circulation.
Everything.

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST.

DAILY FREE

(Chautauqua Building).

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING,
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc., Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above business in a workmanlike manner, and at reasonable prices. Particular attention given to Plumbing and Gas-Fitting. Orders left at my residence, corner Somerset and Sixth streets, North Plainfield, or at my shop, 20 East Front street, Plainfield, will receive prompt attention.
D. W. LITTELL,
No. 4 NORTH AVE. (OPP. POSTOFFICE.) 3-13-tf

A FRAGRANT OFFERING.

I gathered alone in the hills,
The loveliest in the sky—
Were lullabies that the mosquitoes tongue
Of the sweet evening lullaby.

I heard no song of Mozart's note,
There all the sounds of air,
But, jarring of the discords rent
Assailed my whirlwind.

A slender thief Mr. Peter's door
Had entered, and bewailed
I stood alone a while
To ask of the dead.

Alone! Another followed me,
By stars she looked, and kisses,
And then I knew that love
Upon a new made grave.

Then I saw the mosquito's poor blood
Upon the sheet of white,
I knew the pallor that he lost
Made his cheeks pale.

So be remembered, by I thought,
In sorrowful to die,
Our immortality!
Oh by the graves of those we love,
Our sorrowful to die,
Be kind to mosquitoes from above:
We kill them with a sigh.

WON BY A PLOT.

Why Minnie Married the Man She Chosen by Her Father.

"It is so perfectly unreasonable of you, papa," pouted Minnie McAlister, only and petted daughter of Lawyer McAlister, and pretty and willful in a pet kitten, "so perfectly unreasonable, and it is so independent of that fellow to write and ask for my hand before I have set eyes on him."

"But you have not your eyes on him now, my child, interrupted her father, "and you are not going to."

"Oh, yes," with a toss of the dainty head, "when he was in his first jacket, he is plausible, I know all about that. Because we were two pretty children, and played playmates, our stupid fathers said: 'Let us pledge our children to each other.' And now, after twelve years, when I am a young woman and he twenty-one, the impudent creature coolly desires me to be true to that nonsensical pledge, and writes to ask a renewal of your consent."

"Which he certainly has."

"Then, little one, if you love me so truly, you can forgive me for a little deception, I am sure. I have been playing a part, Minnie."

"Then, who—what—" she began. "I don't understand."

"I must explain, I am Walter Graham."

She sprang from his arms in wonder and amazement.

"Walter Graham!" she repeated.

"Yes, Walter Graham. Your father wrote to me how utterly you scorned my suit. I had not and could not forget my childish fancy for you. Through all the years I have been in foreign lands I have remembered you and hoped you would not forget the pledge made by our fathers. But I found you had forgotten and refused to see me. Then I determined to win you if I could but clear the name of a noble mother for my self stating the case as it stood. Fortunately I had received a thorough musical education in Germany, which enabled me to play my part, and I did not need to disguise, as there was no danger of your recognizing me, and I thought and worked for a more secret. I came, saw and conquered. Won't you forgive me?"

She crept into his arms.

"Why, I suppose I shall have to," she said, "for I love you so, I could not be angry with you.

Just then her father came in.

"Well, papa," he said, "you have concluded to accept that horrid, impudent, insolent fellow after all, Minnie? Why, I am glad you have been by a wicked nose passed within Piggy's sight. ended so happily. Take her, Prof. Bangownell, and if you find her half as good a wife as she has been a daughter, in spite of her caprices, you will never repent having taught music, I'm sure."—N. Y. Evening World.

—At the Navy Yard.—"We cast cannon in here," said the guide, as they stopped inside. "Do you?" asked the pretty girl. "Now, please show me where you blow great guns. I often hear my naval friends speak of them."—Kate Field's Washington.

—Daniel Salisbury and his wife, of Lee Co. Parle, Miss., are probably the oldest married couple in this country. They are 108 and 101 years old respectively, have been married eighty years, and are still "quite smart."

Sensational.

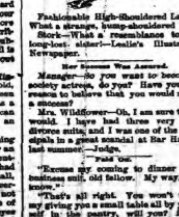
Citizen—Say, Bill, can't you do something for my friend Topper? He's been in a hard drinker so long that now he's deaf, blind and lame.

City Official—Maybe he know many voters in his district?

"Yes—a good many."

"All right. Tell him to call at my office, and I'll appoint him a sanitary inspector."—N. Y. Weekly.

STYLE AT THE ZOO.



Fashionable High-Shouldered Lady—What a strange, lump-shouldered bird!

Stork—Well, I'm somewhat proud of my long-legged children!—Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

Her Opinion Was Asked.

Manager—So you want to become a society actress, do you? Have you any reason to believe that you would make a success?

Mrs. Wilddrover—Oh, I am sure that I would. I have been very unhappy in my divorce suits, and I was one of the principals in a great scandal at Bar Harbor last summer.—Puck.

"Excuse my coming to dinner in a business suit, old fellow. My way, you know."

"That's all right. You won't mind my giving you a small table all by yourself in the pantry, will you? It's a couple of miles to do it, old chap."—N. Y. Sun.

Preparatory Philosophy.

Miss Flora Wall—Janie Stryker seems to be quite accomplished in absorbing the conception of most any old thing.

Miss Minnie Ball—Oh, yes! You know he's her brother.—"Where there's a will, there's a way."—Puck.

One of Those Wondrous Children.

Fond Parent—What a naughty, naughty doll! Jo looks ashamed of herself.

The Doll—Wow-ow-ow-ow-ow!

Fond Parent—Why, Jo, you naughty little brother Jimmy, Jo!—Judge.

The Season of Mis Fortune.

"I don't think those customers strike a fair average," a floor walker was heard to remark.

"Why, what have you met a walking delegate?" suggested Mrs. Blank pleasantly.

"No, a dozen of them."

A LITTLE GRAY THIEF.

Where Nicole's Monsieur Found Her Little Boy's Lunch Basket.

"O monsieur, I just don't know what to do! I've thought and thought till my head aches, and I don't think I can contribute thing to any," exclaimed Bertie Nelson, as he rushed into his mother's room and threw himself into a chair.

"Why, my son, what do you wish to say, that you are so excited about it?" asked Mrs. Nelson, as she laid down her work to listen to Bertie's complaint.

"Why, you see, monsieur, the teacher said we should all write a composition for next Friday. I've got to write about 'Industry,' and what do I know about it? I'm sure I don't know what to say? There will be a pretty book given to the one who does best."

"Well, my son, I'm sure you will be able to write a good composition, Bertie, and I am sure that will be an easy subject for you. You can make a very long composition for bottom of the

FOR GIRLS AND BOYS.

HOW DOES HE COME AND GO?

Oh! now does the Sand-man come,
And how does he find the way
Down so deep from the sky like a cloud at play?

How he walk through the streets in broad daylight,
To visit the high and the low?

Oh! what does the Sand-man do,
And why is he never seen?
How he carry a sack on his little round back,
And what's in the sack I would like to know!

To tell us that sleepy-time's here?

Oh! my dear children, nobody knows
How the Sand-man comes or goes,
For though he may wish very much for the sight,
When the Sand-man comes we shut our eyes tight.

—Harper's Young People.

OUR PET PIG.

Not the One That Went to Market, But Just as Fine Quite as Interesting.

It is not the little pig who only went to market, and let another little pig stay at home, and still another one had the roast beef. You have heard all about those five pigs ever since you were little, and you know them as your count baby's now. The one real little pig this true story is about was smart though, to do all the things herself. And this is how it happened.

We four, and no more, went to ride one day, in the big wagon, who do you think had come into the buggy,—to make Bertie's fun, I guess. There were six tiny mice cosily sleeping in the nest.

"I believe that old mouse stole my sausage to build a house for her family just because I wrote about her naughty tricks," said Rose, as he ran to catch Bertie, "I'll get them all now; I'll let Bobby eat up her whole family."—Laura C. Gibbons, in Our Little Men and Women.

PLAYING ESKIMO.

The Sad Fate That Befell the Boy, His Dog and Old Mack.

Ray had often seen the pictures of the homes of the Esquimos and thought snow-houses must be very nice indeed, so one day he decided to make one for himself.

"Not to live in all the time, mamma, but just to rest in when I'm tired of playing," he said.

He began with a small ball, and rolled it over and over through the damp snow until it was almost as high as his head.

And papa helped push it along, until he could stand on his tiptoes and notice over the top of it.

Then he began work in earnest with his bright new shovel, and before night had a very comfortable house, which he and his dog Bruno, and old Mack, the horse, could all crawl into.

Ray had grown quite dark between haystacks I heard a tired little voice say, sadly:

"Oh, dear, Eskee! I never can find my way home."

For a long time after this Piggy seemed willing to make the best of it. She was firmly set in her own mind that a well-behaved pig, who never did any harm, should be allowed the freedom of the barn-yard. At last she thought it seemed to her mother and papa that if I do it it stooping," he asked, anxiously.

"Do as real Eskimos do—make the best of it," smiled mamma.

Ray ran four brightly, and before noon, the water was dripping from the eaves.

They begged a candle to keep in his house, and hunted up all of the broken tea-sets for him.

Then he harnessed dog Snyder into the handsled, and thought he was an Eskimo at last.

Suddenly there was a rumble, a crushing, a smothered scream and a faint yelp.

Mamma ran to the window and beheld a scene of utter ruin. An avalanche of snow from the roof had buried the beautiful snow hut, Eskimo Ray and dog Snyder from view!

Snyder scratched his way out and ran for the barnes barking loudly, and as he grew braver with each barking the shake of the head, and concluded to look again. When he found that it was the dog Snyder that was giving such a fuss he blanket for her funny bed under Fanny's nose.

As for all the other pigs in the world, our one all alone seemed to think that they had gone out of it. She certainly could not find them, so "this little pig stayed at home."

This was before she took her second journey. One day Fanny was drawn by a

"I pity the poor Eskimos, mamma," he said, as he stood by the window that evening. "I'm glad I don't want to be one any more."—Youth's Companion.

CONTAGIOUS ELEGANCE.

Mrs. Garrity—Phwat divil's machine have you on th' tebble, Cassie?

Mr. Garrity—I'm after gettin' Fadin shot it's all th' shiyle now th' th' upper tin fl' bur-rn th' candle at both ends av it.—Judge.

Came to Handy for the Boy.

The shapely arm of a lady in very humble circumstances in Sapinaw, Mich., made her long to display the gems in a pair of 25-button gloves. She scraped the price of them, after weeks of saving, from the money given by her husband for household expenses. Two days after she purchased them she saw her little boy wearing them on his legs, out in the street, and they came above his knees.—Toledo Blade.

Liable to Peril.

Editor—Why isn't Kipling's latest story in on time?

Assistant—Just got it through the custom-house. They wanted me to pay duty.

Editor—The idea!

Assistant—Yes, thats it; they said it was far fetched.—Mudney's Weekly.

Fond of Cutting a Swell.

Dashby—Have you ever heard of the adventure of Hereller at Monte Carlo?

Cashby—No; what was it?

Dashby—Why, he cashed a lord there.

Cashby—You don't say so? Well, he was always a great fellow for "cutting a swell."—America.

Her Idea Was Up.

"What did the lawyer say to you, Bridget?"

"He said me did I know there was treas enough in me head to make a dozen women, and I pretended I didn't, for fear he was sendin' enough in his tongue to fill it, the said haythen."—Jury.

The Professor's Advice

A student, in writing upon some historical subject, had quoted from an ancient author, Pliny. When the time for his theses to be critiqued, the professor called out an answer to the quotation in question, and the student thereupon began the criticism by showing that it was in the portion which he had quoted. The professor interrupted the criticism by saying: "If I were you, I would not quote when I could write better myself."—N. Y. Mercantile.

Pictured with It.

"How do you like the little dog I gave you, Johnny?"

"I never saw one. I liked better. It had the most dog."—Jury.

Rates of Advertising.

Space	1 WEEK	2	3	1 MONTH	2	3	6	12
1 Inch	$1.00	$1.75	$2.50	$3.00	$5.00	$7.00	$12.00	$20.00
2 Inches	1.75	3.00	4.00	5.00	8.00	11.00	20.00	35.00
3 "	2.50	4.00	5.50	7.00	11.00	15.00	28.00	50.00
4 "	3.00	5.00	7.00	9.00	14.00	19.00	35.00	65.00
5 "	3.75	6.00	8.50	11.00	17.00	23.00	42.00	80.00
6 "	4.50	7.00	10.00	13.00	20.00	27.00	50.00	95.00
8 "	5.50	9.00	12.50	16.00	25.00	34.00	64.00	120.00
10 "	6.50	11.00	15.00	20.00	30.00	40.00	75.00	140.00
12 "	7.50	13.00	18.00	24.00	36.00	48.00	90.00	165.00
16 "	9.00	16.00	22.00	30.00	46.00	62.00	115.00	210.00
20 "	11.00	19.00	26.00	36.00	55.00	75.00	140.00	260.00
24 "	13.00	22.00	30.00	42.00	65.00	88.00	165.00	310.00
32 "	16.00	28.00	38.00	54.00	84.00	114.00	215.00	400.00
40 "	20.00	35.00	48.00	68.00	105.00	142.00	270.00	500.00

4th Editor's note beautiful round.

"Little of Everything" column, 5 cts. per list.

Business pub. 50 per ct. allowance of above rates.

ESPIONAGE IN FRANCE.

The Spy System as Observed by a Visitor in Paris.

A City Which Swarms with Police and Their Emissaries Who Are Constantly Watching and Reporting the Movements of Foreigners and Strangers.

The Third Republic is no freer than were say previous French regimes, says a writer in the Philadelphia Times, from this dark blot of espionage that French call mouchardise. Never before at any period of France's history has the reign of spies been so widespread and absolute in Paris as now. There has been latterly much discussion in the world's press of this extraordinary degree to which official espionage obtains in France, and very interesting details have been forthcoming on the subject. Even now in a position to affirm that in Paris the police system under the present rule of France—the meshes of the detective net are woven even more closely round the foreign population than has ever been the case in St. Petersburg. Evidence of this fact might easily be found in the "Memoirs" of the Boulanger conspiracy. From first to last every detail of this movement was known to the police, and the chief sacrifice of the Boulangists themselves being informers.

The instant you arrive at a Paris station you are in the midst of spies. You are driven to a hotel in a cab. In half an hour the cabman will furnish the police with age by which he has been able to gather concerning your position, destination, business, etc. Arrived at the hotel, you become an object of scrutiny, as close as it is secret, on the part of the concierge, who is specially attached to the place in the capacity of manager or cashier, or even porter of "doors," are the really enrolled soldiers of the great detective army. And here I may mention a special characteristic of the French detective system—its faculty of recruiting adherents in all classes of society. French spies, for the most part, are not simple spies and nothing more. They have a trade or occupation of their own, to which they seem wholly devoted, while yet assiduously pursuing soft rose their spying.

The unsuspecting stranger in Paris has dinner at his hotel served by a waiter who, as a matter of course, is in the pay of the police, and will subsequently report to them what conversation he overheard during the meal. He is then taken forth, primed with a glass or two of fine champagne, for an examination by a department of the Prefecture sort. First, he repairs to one of the brilliant boulevard play-houses. A few days later he sees from his comfortable-looking man, with steady, observant eyes, who glances now and again at our friend in such a way that he will be utter think: "I wonder where I've seen that man before?" He never had seen him before, but it does not need much for a moment to suspect the man of being what he really is—a police spy!

The play ended, there is just time for half an hour's stroll under the horse-chestnuts in the Jardin de Paris. Here the tender-hearted Parisienne and other spies or scamps, or may, indeed, be both at once, for French police authorities are very versatile in choosing their instruments, and seem to have a very low opinion of honesty—divide every other. Their theory runs that the greater villain a man is the better agent he will make, and the most efficacious means of keeping a man under spy surveillance is to have him become a spy himself, for only spy upon each other quite as much as on the rest of mankind.

But our foreigner finishes up the evening by turning into the Cafe Americaine for supper, where he has for companion a spy himself, for the waiter set, with whom he enters into conversation. She has a sweet smile, which displays two rows of glittering teeth, and puts many questions to him concerning France and the French. Naturally enough, our visitor imagines this is all done out of that right, easy, Gallic politeness for which the race is famous. How is he to know that every word he has said in reply will come to the ear of the police not later than the following afternoon?

If our friend be fond of sport he will soon be finding his way to the racecourse near the capital, and into the baccarat clubs with which Paris abounds, and here he will be hardly in contact with police spies in greater number than there are racers on the course or cards on the table, so that no game goes on in every sphere of Paris life and society.

A Dog Goes to the Almshouse.

Wide Awake is responsible for the following: A family in Salem, Mass., owned a dog that had become quite old and decrepit. He was very fond and would take the best place in the room and no one could make him leave. A willful boy, one evening, pushed him, said: "Sir, this dog is so troublesome we must send him away." The dog got up and looked at his master and went out of the room. In a few days they heard that this dog, whom everybody knew, was in the poor-house. Where the town's poor people were taken care of, and stranger still, on Saturday, when this little dog went to see friends, this dog went home to see "sir" and "ma'am," stayed over Sunday, came back again and lived there ever after.

One Satisfied.

Cane to Handy 89 the Boy.

The shapely arm of a lady in very humble circumstances in Saginaw, Mich., made her long to display the gems in a pair of 25-button gloves. She scraped the price of them, after weeks of saving, from the money given by her husband for household expenses. Two days after she purchased them she saw her little boy wearing them on his legs, out in the street, and they came above his knees.—Toledo Blade.

Liable to Peril.

Editor—Why isn't Kipling's latest story in on time?

Assistant—Just got it through the custom-house. They wanted me to pay duty.

Editor—The idea!

Assistant—Yes, thats it; they said it was far fetched.—Mudney's Weekly.

Fond of Cutting a Swell.

Dashby—Have you ever heard of the adventure of Hereller at Monte Carlo?

Cashby—No; what was it?

Dashby—Why, he cashed a lord there.

Cashby—You don't say so? Well, he was always a great fellow for "cutting a swell."—America.

Her Idea Was Up.

"What did the lawyer say to you, Bridget?"

"He said me did I know there was treas enough in me head to make a dozen women, and I pretended I didn't, for fear he was sendin' enough in his tongue to fill it, the said haythen."—Jury.

The Professor's Advice

A student, in writing upon some historical subject, had quoted from an ancient author, Pliny. When the time for his theses to be critiqued, the professor called out an answer to the quotation in question, and the student thereupon began the criticism by showing that it was in the portion which he had quoted. The professor interrupted the criticism by saying: "If I were you, I would not quote when I could write better myself."—N. Y. Mercantile.

Pictured with It.

"How do you like the little dog I gave you, Johnny?"

"I never saw one. I liked better. It had the most dog."—Jury.

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE, A. L. FORCE
Editor and Proprietors.

A DEFICIT AHEAD.

Senator Carlisle has a very able article in the February North American concerning "The Vanishing Surplus" which he points out that the treasury deficit of $14,000,000 on July 1, 1891, is probable. Mr. Carlisle opens his paper with the declaration that "unless something almost unexpectedly happens to materially lessen the amount of the annual expenditures, or at least to arrest the increase the latter, it is evident that there will be before the opening of the Presidential campaign a deficit of several millions of dollars in the public treasury." The discouraging state of affairs is attributed to the extravagant policy inaugurated and fastened upon the country by the Republican party, and impossible to be stopped or modified for many years without the consent of the Senate.

More than a year has yet to pass before the effect of Mr. Cleveland's utterance on free coinage will find expression in the National Democratic Convention, and in that time great changes may come.

Two war veterans have passed away since our last issue—General William Tecumseh Sherman and Admiral David D. Porter. This country can never forget the valiant services rendered by these dead heroes.

"Milky" McDonald, the safe breaker, has been sentenced to thirteen years imprisonment by Judge Van Valzin of Hackensack, for burglary. He operated in Hackensack while he was the same thief who blew open the Plainfield Post Office safe two years ago.

The Houses has passed the tariff bill by a half-hidden vote and there is every indication that it will go through the Senate. The tariff really leaves it to the option of business houses or corporations whether they will observe the holidays or half-holidays or not, so that no one is any better off for it.

There is no name more distinguished in the naval annals of our country than that of Porter, for this family is honorably borne by two generations. Commodore Porter and his ship, Essex, had added to make the fame of the American navy, and the son, Admiral Porter, who has just died, added to that fame by services in the civil war which were distinguished and valuable.

The great interest that has been shown in every phase of public and political life to the brief utterance of Grover Cleveland on the subject of free silver coinage proclaims him the uncrowned king," and at the same time there sets chattering in the Presidential chair a man, surmounted by an ancestral hat, who feels that he has done his full duty when he says that if silver were to pass a financial scheme which he considered fatal to every material interest, he would not feel at liberty to withhold his official approval.

The effect of Cleveland on of these two men point in the strongest way to the opinion in which they are held, and the reason for that opinion.

A COLORED MAN FOR DOG CATCHER.

And Brand-New Rotting Rooms of Modern Style For City Council Purposes.

The adjourned meeting of the City Council of Monday night was largely devoted entirely to routine matters, and nothing especially important was transacted.

All the Councilmen were present. Because of the illness of janitor Mundy, W. K. Mattox took his place. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. The protest signed at the temperance mass-meetings held Sunday night, against increasing the number of local liquor licenses, was presented and referred to the Committee on Laws and Ordinance s. The document was nine yards long, and bore 504 signatures.

A communication from Fire Chief C. A. Smith, ing the resignation of Fireman Sharman, Jr., was received and accepted.

Jacob Voehl was granted the privilege of erecting a meat barn at 70 East Front street.

A petition against the proposed change of the hackmen's stand, signed by many people or natheme, was filed. The filed signers was that Chief Cowgill and

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - City Editor.

—Skating at The Crescent next Monday afternoon and evening.

—The only recreation offered for Washington's Birthday, afternoon and evening, will be skating at The Crescent.

—The home of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Gaskill, 103 West Fourth street, was made happy last week by the advent of a baby boy.

—Miss Jane Thomas, of Mount Bethel, will undergo a surgical operation in Elizabeth this week, to about 63 guests from New York city.

—At the Netherwood fire of Sunday night, a crank and chain was lost from No. 1 hose cart. The finder is requested to return them.

—The home of Mr. and Mrs. John Mowrey of Pearl street, North Plainfield, was made happy last week by the advent of a baby girl.

—The damage of the recent storm to local telephones has all been repaired, and every instrument in Plainfield is now in working order.

—Chas. Frey, of 109 West Fourth street, was fined $5 for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, on Tuesday, on complaint of Officer Marx.

—The North Plainfield Township Committee completed auditing the books of Tax Collector H. Newton Spencer this morning, and found them correct.

—The Childrens' Home treasury is enriched by $67.54, the net proceeds of the recent entertainment under the auspices of Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum.

—A seal that had strayed from its native waters hundreds of miles away, and was caught near Sag Harbor, is on exhibition at Rogers' sea food market, West Second street.

—J. Edwin Hall, late manager of Amphion Hall, will have a benefit at Music Hall, Tuesday evening, the 24th inst. Fayette Welch and his charming soubrette, Dottie Pine, will appear.

—The high-water mark of attendance desired to be reached at Hope chapel was set some time ago at 306. Yesterday this mark was passed, 313 being in attendance, and a new mark of 350 was set.

—Mary, the wife of John Moore of 26 Chatham street, has been pronounced out of dangerous illness by Drs. Lowrie and Carman, to whom the family feel very grateful, and to whom they wish thus publicly to express their appreciation.

—Work on the remodeling of Amphion Hall into the Elkwood has been begun. Jeremiah Manning has charge of the carpentry work and J. P. Emmons the masonry work. The alterations are under the personal supervision of B. Fosgate, architect.

—Peck's new store will be the finest in town. High ceiling, broad front, deep and wide. But big as it is, it will be filled full of brand new goods when it opens. Marvellous will be selling off everything in his old store at a price to get rid of them so there will be nothing left to move.

—The "orange tea" conducted by the Young Ladies' Missionary Society of the First Baptist church Thursday was a very pleasant affair. A large number of people partook of the delicacies, the supper daintily served by the ladies. The decorations were all of oranges, and the effect was very pretty.

—The Wasteful Loader, one of the excellent newspapers of the State which finds THE PRESS a source of constant news, and one of the papers honorable enough to credit what it copies, always has a page and a half taken THE PRESS of Plainfield to dig out the facts connected with its own immediate surroundings."

—Pursuant to call in THE PRESS, a large number of Democratic voters met in Blair's Hall, corner Green Brook road and Somerset street, Friday night, and formed an organization. The Hon. John Vetterlein was elected chairman, and Chas. F. Lyman secretary. A call for a Democratic primary to nominate borough and township officers will be made at an early day.

Morgue-Keeper Casey Re-Appointed.

The Union County Court of Common pleas Feb. 11 appointed morgue-keepers for the county for a term of three years. Patrick Cas y was re-appointed for Plainfield.

Will the Crescents Join?

A new base-ball league in which the Dulmer of New Brunswick is prominently concerned, and with which the West Ends of Somerville seem disposed to affiliate, is to be formed. Efforts are being made to lure the Crescents of Plainfield to join the association.

Mrs. Wm. Reynell to be Married Again.

The Buffalo Express of a recent date has the following announcement: "The marriage of Junius B. Van Dusse, of this city, to *Mrs. Eva Reynell will take place in Eliz*abeth, N. J., on March 4. It was in the family wedding. Mr. Van Dus e has bought the handsome house at No. 616 Niagara street, to which he will bring his bride."

Mrs. Reynell's first husband was William Reynell, of this city, by whom she was treated very shabbily. After his desertion she supported herself as an artist in Elizabeth.

Job Hale's Boots Still Turning Up.

A dispatch from Lockport, N. Y., says: "Job Hale of Cargoe is the latest to hunting up the heirs of the late Job Hale of Plainfield, who left a fortune valued at $700,000. Simeon Hale, who lives at 100 Allen street, said to be one of the heirs, also Charlotte M. Slater, Jennie Woods and George Hale, of this city; Thomas H. Hale, of Medina; Lucy Richardson, of Seven Corners, and William Hale, of Rochester. The Hales of this city are working people in poor circumstances. Simeon Hale is a coal-scuttle driver, with a large family. When seen he did not seem very hilarious over his prospective $40,000. Mrs. Slater is a poor woman, and Mrs. Woods is another. Mrs. Richardson's department is the county poorhouse. George Hale is a painter. The other heirs are also in straitened circumstances."

HYMENEAL.

Conley—Meier.

On Tuesday, Feb. 10, at 8 o'clock, the Catholic church of Dunellen was treated to a great display. The occasion was the marriage of Miss Kate Maier, eldest daughter of Joseph and Catherine Maier, to Wm. Conley, of Glen Gardner. Miss Conley, sister of the groom, acted in the capacity of bridesmaid, and Jos. Maier, Jr., officiated as best man.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Father Shepard. The bride was richly and neatly dressed in one of the latest shades of gray, elaborately trimmed with fine passementerie. The reception was served to the relatives of the happy couple at the home of the bride, and a most enjoyable day was spent. Early in the afternoon they took a train for the home of the groom in Glen Gardner, where a reception awaited them. The presents received by both for Washington, D. C., and other points, were quite numerous, and testified to the high esteem in which they are held by friends.

PERSONALS.

Miss Ada Wagner of Peace street is visiting friends in Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. Roger F. Murray left on Monday for St. Augustine, Fla., to be gone two weeks.

The engagement is announced of Mr. Si. Kate Potter of Mt. Pleasant, to Harry Rogers of New York.

Mr. Theodore Bonn, of Atlanta, Ga., is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Joseph A. Hoagland, of West Fifth street.

John L. Ball, formerly the leading lumber merchant of this city, and now of Williamsport, was in Plainfield Monday.

B. A. Hegeman, Sr., is confined to his home on Sycamore avenue, because of a severe strain to the ligaments of his leg.

Mrs. Newton F. Drake has begun an action in court in an effort to compel her husband to take her back and support her.

The Rev. C. E. Dunn, of Albany, N. Y., officiated at the funeral services of Mrs. Jane Worth, Tuesday. Mr. Dunn is a nephew of the deceased.

At the home of the bride's parents in South Bound Brook, Tuesday evening, the marriage of Miss Mary A. Clark and Louis C. Ackerman of Raritan, N. J. The Rev. J. H. Parks, D. D., officiated.

Mrs. Ella Colesonlaughed her disability to the extraordinary heavy snow of Friday evening, when she entertained a happy party of friends at the home of Chas. Hampton, Mrs. F. M. Demarest, on Craig place.

Among the district deputies appointed by the new Grand Master of New Jersey Masons, A. R. V. Anthony Schooley, of Woodbridge, who will have charge of Middlesex district, in which are located Plainfield's lodges.

Funeral services over the remains of Miss Sadie Cowperthwaite were held in the church Friday afternoon at half-past two o'clock. The rector, the Rev. E. M. Rodman, read the Rev. T. Logan Murphy of Holy Cross, Jersey City, officiated.

News of the death of Mrs. Albert Maxson, daughter of the late Thos. F. Randolph of this city, comes from Westerly, R. I. Mrs. Maxson was a sister of Randolph, Jr., of Madison avenue, and of Miss Randolph, the North Plainfield public school teacher.

Prof. Edwin Swain, in Trenton, of the State Department of the Women's Relief Corps, G. A. R., the following were installed among other officers: Department President, Jennie D. Smith of Pleasantville; Treasurer, Mary Morse of Plainfield; Secretary, Hannah Westphal of Plainfield.

Mrs. Mary A. F. Gardner died at the home of Morgan C. Bird, 61 Park avenue, Saturday forenoon, in the 49th year of her age. A stroke of apoplexy was followed by her death inside of 24 hours. She was an aunt of the late Mrs. George A. Hallock. Funeral services were held at Grace church Monday afternoon at two o'clock.

George E. Rogers, of this city, has been enjoying himself at Birmingham, Ala., where the Veteran Zouaves of Elizabeth are giving royally entertained. Mr. Rogers is one of the musicians, and the Birmingham Herald says: "The band is one of the finest in the United States, and last night they paraded the streets, followed by an admiring crowd."

Ernest Kasuff, of this city, has opened a studio in New York city, at No. 40 East Twenty-third street, where he will give instruction, either privately or in class, in drawing and painting. Mr. Kasuff announces also, in the circular which he has sent out, prizes for sketches at the New York classes, that he will hold his classes for the fifth season at Chautauqua Lake during July and August of this year.

News reaches Plainfield of the death of Samuel H. Stevenson, at St. Paul, who some time ago, during his residence here, was one of the pillars of the Methodist church and a most prominent and philanthropic citizen. His son George, now of Topeka, and his daughters Mary, Anna Pangborn and Josephine, who are in Plainfield, were educated in the public schools and much admired in its society.

Ex-Councilman S. C. Ryder of this city, who is now connected with the Tropical Hotel, at Rockledge, on the Indian River, Florida, sends THE PRESS office a box of "cuscata" and "bilgha" that excel anything in the way of oranges ever tasted. Mr. Ryder will be pleased to send any of his old friends who are traveling in the South, at the "Tropical," whose manager, by the way, is a brother of Paul Wanhouse of this city.

Thomas Worth, whose dangerous illness was first told of in these columns, died at his residence on Grove street at eleven o'clock Friday night, aged 57 years. The cause of death was pneumonia. He was one of the oldest residents of Plainfield, and built the widely known erected on Grove street. He had been a harness maker on Somerset street for at least thirty-five years—ever thirty, at least,

ONLY WAIT!

When the spirit, worn and weary
With life's daily load of care,
Finds the body bent and dreary,
And the motion hard to bear—
Tired of hoping, hate of fighting,
Sighs to rest at Heaven's gate—
Then is come sweet peace, and whispering,
Patience whispers: "Only wait!"

For a watchword, take this message,
Gladly learn it well with the morning—
Glad grow hearts with the evening—
Only wait!

Oh, and hearts, whose anxious nerves
Discount pain a thousand times,
Only wait, and trust the morrow;
God's great heart beats over all.
Only wait, in weal or sorrow,
By life's heavy ocean weighted down!
Then shall surely hearts be lighter
Near the Comer, and win the Crown.
Win and wear it, for the waiting
Is the beauty of the morning—
Is the glory of the day!
Only wait!

Wait and hope! If life distress us,
Joys will be more prized for pain;
Where the light of love shall bless us,
Love is forever, and remains!
Courage, then! His hand will guide us
Gently to that happy shore
Where no ill can ever betide us,
Heart forever—only wait!

Only wait! Only wait!
—Minnie H. Perkins in N. Y. Ledger.

WARNED BY A MOUSE.

How It Helped Grace Rivington to Discover an Intruder.

The old manor-house at Barton Bridge, although one of the quaintest and most picturesque buildings on that side of the county, was not half so well known as it deserved to be. Cut off from the high way by a couple of miles of ancient and well-wooded rych-elms, the few travelers who passed by the plain station pointed out to their friends perfectly on up the sharp hill beyond it, reached the top, admired the view away across the valley of the Dene, and little dreamed of what a curious old mansion lay hidden among the trees.

Its master and owner, John Trowbridge, was an old-fashioned bachelor, who prided himself on three good things—old books, old wine, and old friends; and though he had few of the last, and their visits were few and far between, he, at least, was content that they were "enough for him, and enough was as good as a feast." It was his favorite pleasure, too, to relax from the county town, and six from the station; while the whole district of Barton was composed of about a score of cottages, all clustered round the tiny church, half a mile down in the valley. The Squire, therefore—as he was everywhere called—when not busy in his library, troubled his head about few things, beyond his own domain, lived in a royal sort of cozy comfort on half his income and put away the other half between times, as if nothing had happened. At the very first glance, the two terrible words "to be sold" met the eye of the visitor from among the dark folds of the curtain, and she shuddered to the heart. It was clearly some scoundrel who had hidden himself there for some act of robbery, and in the first fear the moment was in his hands; and all depended on her success or failure in calling him to book if that his prowess had not been detected.

After a minute of sharp thought, her mental resources all rallied, her presence age rose and her plan was formed. Without rising from her chair, she drew up the sofa-table and placed on it, calmly lighted a wax candle, and began writing a series of pretended notes, sealing and addressing each as she laid it by the post. Over the fourth of these notes she seemed to take much trouble, and, for if not aware of this, it had to read aloud short bits of it as she went on, with an occasional word of comment on her progress. "I depend on you being here, dear Jennie, in good time to-night, because the weather may be bad, and this by a special messenger to say that we shall keep you until to-morrow. I hope Bessy has the spare room ready for you, and the loveliest diamond necklace." As she uttered these last words, she suddenly stopped, and said, as if in a whisper to herself: "Why, what a goose I am! Old Foster the jeweler has sent me some of the gems and necklaces, though he faithfully promised I should have them in good time this morning. I must get up for them at once, or I shall not get them in time."

Then, having sealed up and directed the last of her pretended notes, she walked with quick step to the bell-rope, pulled it, waited for a moment and next unlocked a drawn and wide out her desk, and, as the door opened and the servant appeared, said, "Jane," said her mistress, "tell Richard to take the pony and trap round, and this to Dr. Forbes' at once. There are no answers, but as you come back call at Foster, the watchmaker's, with the other note and ask for my rings and necklace which he had to clean. If it's getting late, he had better take the pony. The necklace he can put into Miss Grace's room, and tell her that with these words she handed to the servant her precious jewel-case. In another moment the door was shut and Grace once more alone, with the pair of eyes watching her intently from behind the curtain.

The owner of the eyes had seen and heard all that had happened, and, though slightly startled, had determined not to move as yet; especially as he saw that the young lady was calmly going on with her letters, and had only two wax candles.

Meanwhile Jane herself was mightily puzzled, but being a well-trained servant, obeyed her mistress' orders. "Here, Richard," said she, "Miss Grace says you're to take the pony as sharp as you can and leave these notes at the Grange and at old Foster's for some of some back call at Foster's for some rings and a necklace that's to go into missis' case."

In five minutes he was on his way. The three notes he carried with him were duly delivered, to the great amusement by the recipients. The one to Dr. Forbes ran thus:

"DEAR DOCTOR: Don't be alarmed though I beg you to come straight to the manor-house when you have read this. Something to the servants, but many very seriously so to me and to Grace. Pray be coming. Trade is away at the magistrates' meeting. Come as soon as you can.

"GRACE RIVINGTON."

The second note was this:

"MY DEAREST JENNIE: A mouse has got into the oak room, and here I am a prisoner. Pray come to my assistance. Grace."

"Foster, this watchpaper, signed and acquitted, read as follows:

"Mrs. Trowbridge: Take instant with the bearer will give you to Barton, the pony-carriage will take to bring it here to the manor house of Miss Grace Rivington.

Old Forbes was the first to recover from his astonishment at the receipt of his friend's thought, to hurry down from his surgery and rush out of the house—mounted with a couple of horses and his big spotted stick—without a word to wife or servants, or to himself, but what to make of it. "Can the girl be up to now?" He ran as hard as he could, and in ten minutes, red-hot and breathless, arrived at the old door of the manor house, where he was well known.

"Parker," said he to the astonished footman, "Miss Grace says I am to go straight to her room without being announced. I know my way." Then he walked quietly upstairs and knocked at the door of the oak room, and as one entered.

His patient, with a pale face, and her head resting down on her left arm on her shoulders, was sitting in a low chair in front of the mirror; the fire had died down to a few red embers, and the light of the two wax candles left half the room in shadow.

"Grace, what has happened? Are you ill—here, all alone?"

And then came a dead silence, more terrible than any speech. She tried to speak, but for many minutes the effort was vain, and sobbed in the few broken words. While the agony of suspense and fear lasted, she had bravely kept up her courage; but now it was safe to let it come to reaction. Her nerves, after being strung up to the highest pitch, suddenly relaxed, and she fainted quietly upstairs and knocked at the door of the oak room, and as one entered.

His patient, with a pale face, and her head resting down on her left arm on her shoulders, was sitting in a low chair in front of the mirror; the fire had died down to a few red embers, and the light of the two wax candles left half the room in shadow.

"Grace, what has happened? Are you ill—here, all alone?"

And then came a dead silence, more terrible that any speech. She tried to speak, but for many minutes the effort was vain, and sobbed in the few broken words. While the agony of suspense and fear lasted, she had bravely kept up her courage; but now it was safe to let it come to reaction. Her nerves, after being strung up to the highest pitch, suddenly relaxed, and she fainted quietly upstairs and knocked at the door of the oak room, and as one entered.

"Not ill, doctor, not ill; and not alone; he is there behind the curtains!" she cried.

"Who is there?" said Who or what is behind the curtains?" out stepped Mr. Silkes, to answer for himself. A couple of terrible tongs of the lowest order, who had very learning had begged for broken victuals at the kitchen door of the manor-house with intent to honor of the day. "All right, governor," says Silkes, "your wife's all safe, and I'm the chap as sent to herself the young lady and the winder hole open, you see, I only come in to get a rest.

"Then," said Forbes, "you was a sad-dog and treacherous sinner to try to break into Grace Grange and the poor young lady's house. Now, you just come along with me, and I'll see what the magistrates will say to you."

"Then," said Silkes, "you'll be sorry for it, for I'll tell you all about it, and you'll see I'm not to blame."

"Grad you enjoyed it, my dear; but go read it all right and safe in the next room. The sales hadn't that old watch-sock are bad enough, and terrify me out of my wits without that. Now, I'll read aloud of them, and make won't have a note on in the place, so that we are safely protected from all fear. Now, see if I only open the door of the old press out from a room, and away I go as fast as my legs can carry me."

"O, Grace! what a screech; afraid of a mouse! Never mind, dear; with the necklace and the rings you'll be all right, and you shall have a present from me to make up to you some other day. Mr. Silkes, indeed! Come, Grace, you mustn't be so childish; and the old doctor, 'the fellow's behind him and I look him up in the Clink until the police can come and find him a few days' quiet thinking over his sins and his folly."

But then the ragabond altered his tone, and got on such a piteous note, and begged so miserably and whining into the ear of the doctor, that Grace's voice prevailed; though he did not so much as taste of the food.

"Let him go, let him go," she said, and take him away at once, before the servants come back, or they may do so any minute. And now, all my dear, good friends, a thousand thanks to you, for coming to my rescue, all of you, for the clock has struck seven, and I have to be dressed before eight."

In spite of all this, a very merry dinner, Miss Grace Rivington, in her white dress and wearing her diamond necklace, was the admiration of all beholders at that night at the ball. She danced many times, and a few with Charlie Burton, who after his marriage told me this true story.—Chamber's Journal.

BUILDING A LIBRARY.

No Royal Road to One Which Will Be of Real Service.

As there is no royal road to learning, so there is no royal road to that outward and visible sign of it which consists in shelves well filled with books, says a writer in Kate Field's Washington. The man who wants a library can not get it ready made. He may, indeed, buy a collection of books fairly well fitted to the average mind, but it will be a lucky chance if they are well selected, and then, with a sort of desperate courage, she turned back to her old position, and again looked from between glass, as if nothing had happened. At the very first glance, the two terrible words "to be sold" met the eye of the visitor from among the dark folds of the curtain, and she shuddered to the heart. It was clearly some scoundrel who had hidden himself there for some act of robbery, and in the first fear the moment was in his hands; and all depended on her success or failure in calling him to book if that his prowess had not been detected.

After a minute of sharp thought, her mental resources all rallied, her presence age rose and her plan was formed. Without rising from her chair, she drew up the sofa-table and placed on it, calmly lighted a wax candle, and began writing a series of pretended notes, sealing and addressing each as she laid it by the post. Over the fourth of these notes she seemed to take much trouble, and, for if not aware of this, it had to read aloud short bits of it as she went on, with an occasional word of comment on her progress. "I depend on you being here, dear Jennie, in good time to-night, because the weather may be bad, and this by a special messenger to say that we shall keep you until to-morrow. I hope Bessy has the spare room ready for you, and the loveliest diamond necklace." As she uttered these last words, she suddenly stopped, and said, as if in a whisper to herself: "Why, what a goose I am! Old Foster the jeweler has sent me some of the gems and necklaces, though he faithfully promised I should have them in good time this morning. I must get up for them at once, or I shall not get them in time."

Then, having sealed up and directed the last of her pretended notes, she walked with quick step to the bell-rope, pulled it, waited for a moment and next unlocked a drawn and wide out her desk, and, as the door opened and the servant appeared, said, "Jane," said her mistress, "tell Richard to take the pony as sharp as you can and leave these notes at the Grange and at old Foster's for some of some back call at Foster's for some rings and a necklace that's to go into missis' case."

In five minutes he was on his way. The three notes he carried with him were duly delivered, to the great amusement by the recipients. The one to Dr. Forbes ran thus:

"DEAR DOCTOR: Don't be alarmed though I beg you to come straight to the manor-house when you have read this. Something to the servants, but many very seriously so to me and to Grace. Pray be coming. Trade is away at the magistrates' meeting. Come as soon as you can.

"GRACE RIVINGTON."

The second note was this:

"MY DEARDEST JENNIE: A mouse has got into the oak room, and here I am a prisoner. Pray come to my assistance. Grace."

"Foster, this watchpaper, signed and acquitted, read as follows:

"Mrs. Trowbridge: Take instant with the bearer will give you to Barton, the pony-carriage will take to bring it here to the manor house of Miss Grace Rivington.

Old Forbes was the first to recover from his astonishment at the receipt of his friend's thought, to hurry down from his surgery and rush out of the house—mounted with a couple of horses and his big spotted stick—without a word to wife or servants, or to himself, but what to make of it. "Can the girl be up to now?" He ran as hard as he could, and in ten minutes, red-hot and breathless, arrived at the old door of the manor house, where he was well known.

"Parker," said he to the astonished footman, "Miss Grace says I am to go straight to her room without being announced. I know my way." Then he walked quietly upstairs and knocked at the door of the oak room, and as one entered.

His patient, with a pale face, and her head resting down on her left arm on her shoulders, was sitting in a low chair in front of the mirror; the fire had died down to a few red embers, and the light of the two wax candles left half the room in shadow.

"Grace, what has happened? Are you ill—here, all alone?"

And then came a dead silence, more terrible that any speech. She tried to speak, but for many minutes the effort was vain, and sobbed in the few broken words. While the agony of suspense and fear lasted, she had bravely kept up her courage; but now it was safe to let it come to reaction. Her nerves, after being strung up to the highest pitch, suddenly relaxed, and she fainted

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1891. No. 9.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well in its institutions as in its authorities."—MADISON.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Notaries Public, Solicitors for Banks. Offices corner of Park avenue and Second street, Plainfield.

W. V. STERLE,
Counselor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner, etc.
Cor. Park and North Aves. 1-26-tfw

GORDON W. DAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box 154, Dunellen, N. J. Residence and office on Clinton avenue, Dunellen. 10-29-tf

DR. CHARLES H. PRICE,
Dentist,
20 West Front street. A new local anesthetic up-pointless for extracting teeth without pain. Gold filling a specialty.—tf

H. HARO,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock B or H, Bonnet Plains, N. J. Private line at T. K. Dupy's, second house above 2d West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—6ly

OSCAR S. TEALL,
Architect,
245 Broadway, New York city. Rooms 14 and 20. Residence, 1 Park Place, Bedford District, Brooklyn, Plainfield, N. J.—2007

J. E. PRESTER,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office in A. M. Seguine's livery stables, corner Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N.J. Dentistry calls promptly attended to. Telephone 1 (No. 15. Consultation on diseases of all domestic animals. Residence, 19 East Front street.—1y

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VanArsdale,
PIANO TUNER.
Is at all times put in thorough order. Terms reasonable. Pianos and Organs for sale and to let, or hire by the month. P. O. Box 124 or left at Wilson's Bookstore, No. 5 Park avenue will receive prompt attention. Residence, 21 East Second street, Plainfield.—1y1202

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER.
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Residence and shop: No. 36 East 2d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 4207

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Stands at all the Principal Markets.
SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO FRESH KILLED POULTRY AND VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON.
NO. 34 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
L. LUTKINS. L. A. HUMMER.
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
1-10-tf

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables
Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Parties and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure drives. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day, week or month, or single.
TELEPHONE CALL NO. 56.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to serve friends and the public in their patronage. Horses and carriages for funerals a specialty. Parties taking carriages from here can rely on prompt and careful driving.

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderhoef's cigar factory, Park avenue. The Accommodation Express will attend to the transportation of the city, delivering goods of baggage to and from the depot, office or residence of citizens. Strict attention to business with reasonable charges. Prompt attendance given to orders.

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The Insurance Exchange has appointed agents in the following
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the
City of New York,
at prices to suit risks rendered necessary by the late fires. Insurance effected on dwellings, stores, factories, churches, etc., at the lowest rates of premium consistent with safety.
NATHAN HARPER,
Agent.

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also representing other first-class Companies. Agents of the Texas Steamship Line. Drafts on Ireland for sale. Post Office Building, Second floor, Plainfield, N. J.

BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale.
OFFICE:
E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS P. POPE.

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
NO. 16 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the finest grades of Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc., at the lowest prices. Orders left at the grocery of Wendel Force, Jr., on Park avenue, will receive prompt attention. Goods kept in first-class condition. Store formerly occupied by Sharp & Smalley.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (Near N. B. S. Station.)
JAS. R. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat. First-class Plumbing.
Telephone closets at reasonable rates. 10-31-tf

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Gaty Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. BOYCE, Proprietor.
Permanent and transient board, at fair rates. First-class stables and sheds attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours.

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MERRELL, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER, "
ELIAS P. POPE, Treasurer.
ADOLPH SCHMIDT, Asst.

L. B. WOOLSTON. J. F. BUCKLE.
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 28 NORTH AVENUE

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
(Successor to T. J. Carey,)
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—24 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 228. Piano moving a specialty. 1192

C.E. & J.W. BROWN,
(Successors to G. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.,)
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tiles, Anaglypton, Hand, Leather-Lined Flock Papers, &c. Borders for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
1-10-tf

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Best Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 13 SOMERSET ST. 8-13-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE.
Hugo Weigman,
20 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.
Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion and invalid; for families, weekly purchase and the aged.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the Grape, and is made from Speer's Grapes, Speer's vineyards, and not being until they attain their full development and perfect gathering. Its invalid use is are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under the supervision of a physician of extensive practice, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed. Recommended by the Faculty and Clergy of New York and Brooklyn as the weakest invalids use it to advantage, and the strongest and healthiest as a beverage, and delightful and suited to the various all-the-year-round conditions of life.

Tonic and Strengthening Properties

It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the juice of the Concord Grape, preserved in its natural state, and is sweet cider as it runs from the press by fumigation and sedimentary, thereby destroying the ferment of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialitie) Claret is held in high estimation for its richness as a light Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry is a Wine of superior character, and partakes much of the qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for its fine medicinal purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the Cognac Brandy, which is distilled.

Each of the above Wines bears the signature of ALFRED SPEER, and is sold in this country by responsible parties. Persons, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 6-13-y

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET,
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling, Drawing and Laying. 9-11-tf

PAINTERS & PAPERHANGERS' SUPPLIES

Paints, Varnishes, Glass,
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. C. D. CIGAR.
The best cool cigar in the State, and made entirely from the finest tobacco.
CUBAN HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
Always on hand a full assortment of the Choicest Brands of Imported and Domestic Cigars. Cigarettes and Tobacco always on hand.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety.
6-11-tf

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMEST'
—SEGARS!—
0.30 PARK AVE., (NEAR CORNER OF SECOND ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobaccos and Smoker's Materials,
of every description.
The Celebrated "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, which keeps constantly on hand. 6-11-tf

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
(Successor to E. S. Maynard.)
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 20 PARK AVENUE,
Leading Cut Chimney Hair Cutting done at their residence. Shaving, Shampooing, &c., satisfactorily performed. 12-tf

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Madison Avenue, cor. Park Pl., Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

CARNEY BROS., Ag'ts,
11 SOMERSET ST.
TINNERS,
PLUMBERS,
GAS FITTERS.
PARLOR STOVES.
COOK STOVES,
HEATERS.
Grates and Backs for all kinds of Stove can be found here at Jobbers' prices. Bring your Tinware standing to us. The best Tinners, the best Plumbers, and the best Gas-fitters in the section. We use now but the very best of materials, and our work always gives satisfaction.

SANITARY PLUMBING.
Brick and Portable Furnaces
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc. Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above branches in a neat and workmanlike manner and guarantee satisfaction. Parties contemplating building will find it to their interest to call and see me before contracting elsewhere. Shop on Somerset street, between Second and Third streets, Plainfield, N. J.
D. W. LITTELL,
No. 8 SOUTH AVE. WEST, PLAINFIELD, N. J.

THE MINSTREL.

He thought he once could sing
A song of love and sorrow,
But sometimes now he would a hall-stroke sing
Or borrow.

Indeed, indeed the art
Which later years imperil,
Demands the skill and all the heart
Of the dentist.

And now he comes to know
Just how the tune should flow,
But somehow his voice is not so strong
As the impulse of the heart
The skill to sing is better than the song.

The refreshing touch of time
That is the best of youth can spend content;
Its flying dreams are caught
Ere hope has passed beyond discontent.

Ah, count the singer's art
Assume the loftier part
As come the years, the years of song!
Ah, souls have grander themes
Than attuned them would the lyre!

—Christopher P. Cranch, in Harper's Magazine.

"DEAR OLD FRIENDS."

Delicate and Artistic Treatment of an Unexpected Meeting.

I had just come out of the post-office when I caught sight of a face that seemed familiar to me.

It was that of a man about my own age, with features handsome and a somewhat attenuated figure.

As I was trying to recall when and where I had seen him before our eyes met. I immediately perceived that our recognition had been mutual, for he came forward at once with a frank expression of pleasure and held out his hand, saying:

"Hello, old fellow, who'd have thought of seeing you here?"

"Why, I'm glad to see you, too, and don't attempt to defend it; but it is a style of address affected by some men who are not personally acquainted. I'll be glad to see you in a restaurant as if they had you across you in the mines of Siberia. I felt a little bit cramped at his want of originality; however, I smiled pleasantly, and said, as I shook hands:

"Well, if you would be so kind as to tell me who I have thought of seeing you here?"

We stood opposite each other for a few seconds, each peeping over somewhat suspiciously at the nature of our greeting, and straining to recall his name; and with his head slightly on one side, and an expression of courteously suppressed amusement on his face, on the my presence on the steps of the post-office was one of those inexplicable freaks of fate for which it is futile for less to seek to assign any reasonable law.

I gave him a few seconds to digest his astonishment, and then, feeling that the silence was becoming a little embarrassing, I said, incongruously:

"Well, what have you been doing all this time?"

"Me?" he replied, "I've been in Australia."

"Oh, ah!" I ejaculated, as if it had for a moment slipped my memory; "why, you went there"—and I hesitated, he thought calculating within myself the exact day of his known departure—

"Three years ago," he put in shortly, "and quite long enough it is, too."

I can over in my mind my acquaintance of three years ago, and could call no trace of a recollection of my new companion; so, to gain time and to clear from the subject, I asked him:

"And what sort of a time have you had?"

"Oh, much about the same as before," he answered, with a slightly puzzled air.

I candidly admit that the sensible thing for me to have done would have been to own up and admit that I had forgotten my friend's personality. Unfortunately, I am one of those painfully constituted people who are a victim to nervous horror from any thing in the nature of an explanation, and, in addition, I felt that I had gone too far to try off without some appearance of sincerity. Besides, he seemed to congratulate himself so warmly upon how he insisted upon looking on as our providential meeting, that my lips were sealed, and I felt certain in the end that if I let things slide a little longer, his name would occur to my mind.

He had stepped off the curb-stone as we walked up-town with an easy sense of good-fellowship, and said, as of course you'll dine with me this evening. Now, don't say you are engaged," he added, as I hesitated for an instant between my desire to have more of my companion and my disinclination to dine under false pretenses. "I'm certain they'll be awfully disappointed if they don't hear I have met you and let you off with a long talk, and I join them to-morrow."

I felt constrained to consent against my better judgment and added, in a playfully solicitous manner:

"And how are they all?"

"Oh, they are all tip-top—all except the Colonel;" after a pause and with a slightly subdued air—"I don't think he has ever quite got over that affair."

"Ah," I rejoined, shaking my head sympathetically, "one doesn't get over that sort of thing in a day, you know; but the others?"

"What others?" he said, bluntly.

I hesitated, and rejoined, vaguely: "Were there not some others?"

He pondered heavily for a few seconds before replying: "Yes, I believe there were some others, but they made no difference."

I was just murmuring: "Very likely not," when he turned to me shrilly and said: "I hope you don't think I came badly out of that business?"

His hand seemed to relax its pressure on my arm as he spoke, and preparing himself for some censure or act of coldness on my part.

I felt touched by this little proof of his sensitiveness to my good opinion, and pressing his arm to me, I rejoined, warmly: "I never, never heard any one speak otherwise than highly of his conduct in the matter."

He stopped and said, shortly:

"Why, who knows any thing about it? I should like you and I had it all to ourselves."

"Yes, yes," I faltered, and added, "you have been a long time away for some time, old fellow."

It did not seem to fit in very well; but he accepted it as self-argument, and said:

"There is something in that, but don't forget me, old chap. I know he relies upon you and me."

There was something so touching in the tenderness of his appeal that a glow of sympathetic affection warmed my heart, and I received on the spot that I had never forgotten him for a day since I first made his acquaintance. Some what might, at the most of that old man's life should never be bereaved. Some night I might make it a subject of club gossip or tea-table talk that I should like to see him, and should add one drop to the cup of bitterness that had been placed at his lips. There was no room in my heart for all of us which we would wish to have to-day in existence—the thousand-and-one fellow of the club—the two billions of mankind, and the selfish patriarchs of old age who is there that does not wish to have a few more years' note in his life he would not have engaged, forgotten or misused—and I felt that I would be a fool to hesitate for a bit of dinner, and those thoughts passed through my mind as we stood there. The whole incident had occupied only a few seconds, and then, shaking off my confusion, I said, with a laugh, as my companion took me affectionately by the arm:

"Now, tell me about yourself, your wife and children."

Before I had time to reflect upon what might be the result of my disclosure, I blurted out the simple truth:

"I have no wife."

He looked intensely surprised, as he said: "My dear fellow, I am very sorry. I never heard"—

He paused, inquiringly, and again I blurted out:

"I never had one."

A look of extreme pain spread over his face as he heard this. He leaned across the table, and laying his hand on mine, said, in sincere sympathy: "I see it didn't occur not to have asked you. Forgive me, old fellow, and forget that I have said those words."

I gave him a clammy hand and turned away, but he should detect the complex pettiliness of my heart. I felt some confirmed in a suspicion that had been gradually dawning upon my mind, that I had never set eyes upon my friend before that day, and that I had been carried away by some inexplicable chance-coincidence to some remote acquaintance, and by his own apparent cordial recognition of myself. There was no blinking the facts, however. Everybody that he mentioned was a total stranger to me. While every moment that I mentioned with a view to drawing him out seemed to find his mind a blank. My sole object now was to extricate myself from my false position without detection. I got absolutely and hopelessly involved in falsehood, and after having thus flightly taken away the good name of the unprofitable memory of my childhood, a sort of despair took possession of me, and a wild desire to avoid exposure or explanation at any cost.

The dinner was good, the wine excellent, and my host genuinely liked. We sat late and drank freely, and the last step I blush to think of the people I had known, the old friends I buried and the characters I took away. But he would have news, and what was I to do? Much of my information seemed to afford him matter for astonishment, and often he ejaculated:

"You don't tell me so," as I conveyed some specially startling piece of personal news.

However, the time for departure came at last, and my mind was torn with conflicting desires to escape detection and to maintain his identity.

"You'll come and see us," he said cordially, as we shook hands preliminary to leaving.

"Yes, certainly," I replied; "but where are you putting up now?"

"Oh, the same old quarters," he returned.

"That is the best way to get there?" I asked, as a last and altogether desperate hope.

"You can't do better than take a cab," he said; and we parted never to meet again.—St. James' Gazette.

HOME-MADE ARTICLES.

A Dainty Pin Cushion, a Slumber Ball and Other Suggestions for Gifts.

The dainty pin cushion shown in Fig. 1 is made as follows: Cut a piece of canvas six by six and a half inches; sew it into a bag, fill with bran, emery sand, or sawdust, and fasten it to a piece of cardboard four inches long and two and a half inches wide, to keep the center of the cushion flat at the bottom. A small piece of embroidery in silk on canvas, two by three and a half inches, is laid diagonally across the top of the cushion. Any bit of goods of the right size can be used, instead of embroidery, which in this case is a combination of faded blue in pansies, blue in the shades, moss-green, and rose-colored filling silk or embroidery silk. When finished it is laid in the center of a piece of light blue surah, ten by seven inches, plaited around the ends, as shown in the cut, and the cushion finished with two rows of light blue satin ribbon. Other colors and materials may be substituted for this cushion. It would be quite in place for the toilet table of either lady or gentleman.

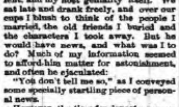

FIG. 1.

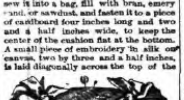

FIG. 2.

Fig. 2 is a handsome slumber-ball, made of very narrow red and yellow ribbons sewed together in stripes three and a half inches wide and finished with stripes three inches wide made of red and blue ribbons. The length of the ribbons should be seven inches, and the whole width of all when sewed together twenty-seven inches. Gather the ends of the ribbons closely together and fill the ball with feathers, bits of paper, old lace, rags, bags, hops, rose-leaves, or any thing generally used for pillows, even cotton will do. The ball ends with silk pompons, or cut the ribbons to about two inches longer, fringing the ends as in Fig. 3, and gather them just above the fringe.

FIG. 3.

Fig. 3 is a pretty memorandum slate for the office, library, or housekeeper's room. It is small, and has a pasteboard frame of which is gilded, and a cluster of flowers painted in one corner. A pen and ends of old cords, to be rejoined, a sponge and gilded slate-pencil are attached, completes the useful little souvenir, which may be varied in form or color, in the same style. A slate for lead-pencil writing, made of white enameled board, may be used instead.—Ohio Farmer.

FINE NEEDLE-WORK.

The History and Some Specimens of Embroidered Handkerchiefs.

In early times it was very necessary to find work for idle fingers—work which should serve the purpose of putting in the time and also furnish a livelihood for the family. The embroidery was introduced into the manufacture of handkerchiefs, about sixty-five years ago, by Jane Carter, herself a widow, and it is said to have been the means of keeping her and her children in comfortable circumstances during that locality. An industrial association now provides work for more than fifty persons. All sorts of beautiful articles, of underwear, bed-linen and children's clothes are made, of it, and its cheap prices and excellent quality find a ready sale.

From Irish linen is used and white knitting cotton of different numbers, the size of which will withstand the ravishes of the laundry. Knot stitch, satin stitch, outline and rolled stitch are used wherever the pattern calls for it. In the toilet set all of them are used. The rolled stitch is made by wrapping the thread around the needle. The fringe is knitted of the coarse cotton and proves a very effective finish. The border but white is used upon this. Toilet sets and table furnishings can be made of it; also many beautiful particular articles of use.—Christian Irving, in Farm and Fireside.

CAMEO MADE IN MOUNTMELLICK EMBROIDERY.

CITIZEN TRAIN PREDICTS

The Immediate Downfall of Our Social System.

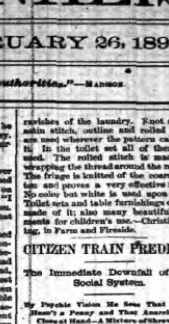
My Psychic Vision He Says That Gould Hears a Penny and That Anarchy is Close at Hand—A Difference Between Cranks and Crankiness.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

I stopped at the Continental Hotel on my way up-town this morning to ask Mr. George Francis Train if he knew the whereabouts of a man who had been followed out of sight by New York's leasing and bawling.

"I can't help you in the matter," said Citizen Train, "for I don't think you need trouble yourself. We shall all be swallowed up almost immediately.

"If you owe money, don't pay it: if anybody owes you money collect it.



TRAIN HYPNOTIZES A POLICEMAN.

promptly, for the end is on the eve of a frightful convulsion."

I asked him what in particular seemed to be going wrong with the system of things.

"Come and sit down," he said, "and I'll put the situation before you. Then I do you write out the truth as I give it to you, and the editor will red pencil it, and blue pencil it, and if you are paid to space you won't get enough out of it to buy a cup of coffee. There is only one step that could bring about a genuine editorial reform, and that is the abolition of editors."

The hotel parlors were crowded, but the Citizen found two chairs by a window overlooking Broadway. There we spoke in low tones like two conspirators, and a couple of lovers wondered at us, and a couple of drummers bowed over his newspaper. A baby tumbled into the Citizen's hat beside him on the floor, and the Citizen patted her head and said:

"By psychic power I see the coming destruction of our social system. I look as into the great maelstrom off the coast of Norway. I hear voices; they call: 'Train! Train!'

"The other night I went to the Old Guard ball. It was beautiful, beautiful, with the lights and the uniforms and the dresses; but I saw corpses and bomb-stones and skulls. I could give you the names of three hundred men who are about to die, but it wouldn't be fair to shock them by announcing the fact prematurely."

Here the small girl held up a gayly dressed doll. "Yes, it's pretty," and Train patted her curls and smiled.

Two sorts of storms seemed getting confused. "I sought for phrase to ask if the Citizen's psychic signal service had kept him informed of the progress and present whereabouts of the social hurricane.

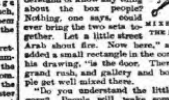
"The earth trembles before it—" The small girl sat down with momentum. Train lifted her and gave her his hand to hold by—"That flurry in Wall street last November was the first breath of the gale, that and the troubles of the Baring Brothers. There over, says every body, and the skies are now clear, but the quiet is the hush before the cyclone."

"What has bred the gale?"

"Our greed of money, our perversion of our appointed destiny, and the wrecked human nature. There isn't a living man or woman who is sound.

I asked if the social convulsion would begin.

"You know how it is in a theater. Train took from an inside pocket the familiar long black pocket-book, and from this the familiar pencil and folded paper, and began to draw up his face with some of his characteristic illustrations. "Here," and he drew a small and irregular circle, "are the people in the boxes. Do they understand or know any thing about the people in the gallories? They think themselves quite a separate order of beings. Here," and he drew another small circle at some distance, "are the people in the galleries. Do they understand or know any thing about the box people? Nothing, one says, could ever bring the two together. Let a little street



MIXED AT THE DOOR.

Arab shout fire. Now here," and he added a small red crayon to the corner of his drawing, "is the door. There is a grand rush, and gallery and box people get well mixed there.

"So you understand the little allegory? People will wake some fine morning over night, a few weeks and find that Jay Gould hasn't a penny and the Consolidated Oil Company is in the dust, Carnegie has his bread to beg and there isn't a dry-goods house or a mill or factory that can pay ten cents on the dollar. There's a great building going up yonder, seven stories high; the money that built it all evaporated in a single night; nobody really has any thing. You'll be as rich as the Vanderbilts or Astors to-morrow or the day after, for there's nothing for any of you. All bubbles, bubbles."

"And then?"

"Anarchy."

The Citizen said it correctly. Pencil in hand, he was quite capitual his command of power.

"Blood!" I emulated his calm.

"I see what is coming, but I am not constrained to reveal."

"And after anarchy?"

"Supreme force will be the great ruling power."

"And who will exercise the psychic force?"

"That is hard to say, if they can't negotiate me. I possess the secret of it by revelation or direct inspiration, and I should like to die the long-lost heir to a million and able to leave a circle, with a smaller circle inside—about into the town." GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN'S GENIUS FOR ADVERTISING TRAIN." And the words echo it back, "GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN! GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN!" Train laughed heartily with his hand thumped fashion at his mouth and the child is pleased.

"I keep this hatred and I shoot into lying round in scattered pockets. We are like Watt when he saw the cover of the tea-kettle rise and fall, and there was just about to flash upon him the power, steam; or like Morse when he got $40,000 for the last mile of telegraph line between Baltimore and Washington; or like Edison when he heard the humming of the wire and dreamed of the hollow phonograph. But we don't but nobody understands."

CYCLOPS AGAINST THE WORLD.

"And it is by this sacrifice of the individual that you have become able to exercise psychic powers?"

"It is like the closure of the horse-shoe magnet—you can't let me alone you."

The child bent her head sagely and followed with her finger the outlines of a roughly indicated horse-shoe. "The longest line is the strongest because the magnetic force. Now I have barred my system against animal food for sixteen years. I take my coffee and my cheese and my bit of cracker three times a day. Sometimes I think of doing without food, but I am not sure that one hound apple can live sustained in such a barrel of rotten meat. Yet my power increases. When I went round the world I did not ask the captain of the steamer to put on extra coal to enable me to beat the record, but he did it, psychic force compelled him."

"And how is future will this psychic force control the world?"

"A woman writes me that she has transferred a new religion, of which I am the founder. It will be only a few years until the Mexican war widows will be drawing more pension money than the Union widows. That is the way the pension laws work out. At last the Pension Office this is well understood, it will be settled in a few words. The old pensioners marry young wives, and leave them their blessings and pensions. The pensioners of the next war will will reach their maximum in numbers eight or ten years from now if there are no more pension laws passed. But the widows' list will keep on growing for a quarter of a century. Fifty years from now there will be no living Grand Army man living. Seventy-five years from now a grateful Republic will still be rewarding widows for what their husbands suffered at Gettysburg and Chickamauga. Women are yet to be born who will become widows of old soldiers and draw pensions for their husband's services in the war of 1861.

CIRCLES OF PSYCHIC INFLUENCE.

There are to-day over 100,000 widows on the pension rolls. The pensioners number 490,000. The figures will be reversed in twenty years. Ninety-eight thousand widows draw $13 a month. Last year the civil pensions were paid for $71,877,619. The civil war widows drew $19,906,857, more than one-fourth of the magnificent total."

REST FOR MOTHERS.

They Need It and Should Take It Every Day in the Year.

Good mother, maker of numerous pies, mender of socks, and home-tree-saver of a province,—rest a little. Have a chair by the stove, and, when you peep into the oven, sit down and look, too, even a moment after. You will work all the faster for the short change of posture. While mending, have your chair in the sunniest corner, where good light will come in, if possible over your left shoulder. Drop your hands occasionally and let your eyes rest, by looking at something interesting out of doors; thus many a holy thought will enter the chamber of your mind and abide with you for hours all the time. Drop the veins of government for only a little while and be a child with your children. These moments of sympathy with their delights will be remembered gratefully, longer than your severe disciplining. A few such moments are necessary, as they often are, they will be the more powerful because occasional.

Rest a little, and gather restful things about you, that you may be rested. Every woman should have a cot and an easy chair in her working-room; if this is every where impossible, every room should have these resting appurtenances. I have known houses where these were several times purchased and sold away in the drawers, bought because they were bargains, regardless of need or fitness. Every mother's home had not an easy chair to rest the body, a book to entertain the mind, nor a worsted work to soothe the heart. And the inmates a kindly thought or word for each other, let alone the world outside. Can God ask such things of such children? He does do it. Yet such surroundings these are, and the things to them bags sometimes into what seem curses of unspeakable bitterness. These parents have no rest. They have work to do. Let home bring rest to each member of the family, and let it be the care of each. Another route a little.—American Agriculturist.

Servants of the Justices.

Each of the Justices of the Federal Supreme Court is allotted a tasty servant, who is paid out of the contingent fun of the court. These servants report promptly every morning at nine at the residences of the Justices, whom they attend constantly during the day. They share the Justices, do their errands and occasionally act as coachmen for them. Each footing is also furnished with a private secretary.

Named at Last.

Teacher—What was the most important event of the history of New York? Georgie Cleaman—you may answer.

Georgie—The discovery of America, ma'am.—Mother's Weekly.

A Thousand Preferable.

Miss Elder—Will you love me when I'm old?

Lovell—Well, I don't expect to stop loving you quite so abruptly as that.—West Shore.

Just as Good.

Police Judge (who is trying to find out the trade of the accused)—What are you, anyhow?

Accused—Ash yer honor hash no doubt observed, I'm (hic) a little off this morning.—Texas Siftings.

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 WEEK	2	3	1 MONTH	2	3	6	12
1 in.	$ 1.00	1.50	2.00	$ 2.50	3.50	4.50	7.00	12.00
2 in.	1.50	2.00	2.50	3.50	4.50	5.50	8.00	15.00
3 in.	2.00	2.50	3.00	4.50	5.50	6.50	9.00	18.00
4 in.	2.50	3.00	3.50	5.50	6.50	7.50	10.00	21.00
5 in.	3.00	3.50	4.00	6.50	7.50	8.50	11.00	24.00
6 in.	3.50	4.00	4.50	7.50	8.50	9.50	12.00	27.00
7 in.	4.00	4.50	5.00	8.50	9.50	10.50	13.00	30.00
8 in.	4.50	5.00	5.50	9.50	10.50	11.50	14.00	33.00
9 in.	5.00	5.50	6.00	10.50	11.50	12.50	15.00	36.00
10 in.	5.50	6.00	6.50	11.50	12.50	13.50	16.00	39.00
11 in.	6.00	6.50	7.00	12.50	13.50	14.50	17.00	42.00
12 in.	6.50	7.00	7.50	13.50	14.50	15.50	18.00	45.00

All Electro's must be solid metal.

"Lists of Everything" column, 5 cts. per line.

Locals 10c per ct. advance of above rates.

The Constitutionalist.
W. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors. A. L. FORCE

FREEDOM.

"The people of the United States have an inalienable right to breathe and see, and they will never need nothing but liberty."—Spurgeon.

Liberty to sell.
Liberty to serve.
Liberty to move.
Liberty to pay.
Liberty to build.

Their merchant marine will revive when they are permitted to buy ships or to build them as cheaply as others, and when their commerce is no longer fettered and enfeebled from the barbarous restrictions of Federalist-Republican monopoly legislation.

You cannot promote industry or encourage commerce by limiting them.

You cannot secure the people by taxing them.

You cannot preserve their liberties if you authorize the government to take from one that you may give to another.

Liberty and equality are the fundamental principles upon which American interests are based.

Take the first of the American people and they will do the rest themselves."

The foregoing are a few sterling truths contained in a recent able and luminous speech delivered by Congressman McAdoo, of New Jersey, against the ship subsidy project, or, properly stated, the scheme to transfer money from the Treasury into the hands of mercenary speculators.

It is a burning shame that the once grand and enriching ocean commerce of the United States has been driven into exile, and subservient to foreign nations, but it cannot be brought back into prosperous and permanent existence by bounties.

Freedom is the protecting aid needed.

Make our Commercial, Agricultural and Manufacturing interests free from barbaric laws, free from unjust tariff exactions, free from unjust and exorbitant taxation, and we have this country, with its magnificent resources, would very soon outrank the whole world in substantial wealth and greatness.

Branding deaden.

Freedom gives life and energy.

Freedom would kill plundering monopoly, put deposit money in the pockets of the honest people.

PEACE NOT WAR.

There is one political fact for which all intelligent and patriotic citizens should sincerely give thanks, and that is the determined rejection by popular sentiment of the partisan effort to keep alive the fell spirit of sectional discord.

Peace we want—not War.

There will exist some Republican party leaders in Congress and out of it, who, for unnecessary political purposes, would evidently re-kindle and blow into fury the detestable fires of hatred and prejudice, but, happily for the country, the major portion of the rank and file of Republicans can no longer be blinded and led by such influence, and among the outspoken advocates of unimpaired national harmony, certain prominent Republican journals are quite as bold as those of the Democratic faith.

Peace they want—not war.

When patriotism compels unpricipled party leadership to stand aside, a new era of good promise opens the political sky.

The conflict of arms between the North and South ended a quarter of a century ago, and with the privileges of the Constitution and the blessings of Union fully preserved.

To reopen existing animosities is criminal.

To deplore the mighty resources of our national domain, without special favors for any section or class, but with just regard for the equity of free government and the ensuing prosperity of all the people, North, South, East and West, constitute the aim of true statesmanship and ought to be the ruling motive of every political party.

Peace—a united—is the goal of patriotic effort.

THE LEGISLATURE.

In the House 14th day Assembly-man Embry's bill to amend the charter of the Jackson police court was passed after a hot debate. The tax bill called forth a spirited discussion in the House.

In joint session Michael J. O'Donnell, of Hunterdon, was elected Prosecutor, vice appointed Police Justices of Jersey City, in place of Samuel W. Stilling and Peter F. Wagner, Republicans.

The Senate 42d ballot until next Monday resulted in

The old chestnut—The West Jersey Game is likely to prosper came up again in the House, and it was finally resolved to make it the special order for next Monday evening.

Two years ago Secretary Windom was supposed to be worth $250,000, but his estate, so far as it has been traced, is valued at not above $6,000, of which $5,000 is a life-insurance policy.

Hon. Fred C. Marsh is likely to receive the nomination of Prosecutor of Union county, to fill out the term of Mr. Abbett, who admires the plucky and able Senator from Elizabeth. Mr. Marsh has many warm friends in Plainfield who would be glad to see this appointment as they were when they voted for him last Fall.

General Sherman was the only one of the three noted Union commanders who lived beyond his seventieth year. Grant, Sheridan, Thomas, Hancock, McClellan, Meade, Warren, McDowell, Hallock, Hooker, Burnside and Logan all died in their soldierly graves before reaching the moderate limit of life. Among the familiar names of Generals of the war still living are Rosecrans, Sanil, Butler, Banks, Howard and Palmer, all past seventy.

Congressman McAdoo made a ringing speech in the House of Representatives, on Friday last, on the ship subsidy bill. A correspondent of the N. Y. World says of it:

"The speech abounds in paragraphs as simple and luminous as any that have been delivered in Congress by the wisest statesmen of the past. In the clear and simple form of the axiom the axiomatic truths of political and economic science. You cannot promote industry or encourage commerce by limiting them. You cannot succeed. A people by taxing them. You cannot preserve their liberties if you authorize the government to take from one that you may give to another. Liberty and equality are the fundamental principles upon which American interests are based; and for any Congressman against them by law there is no possible justification in the supposed prosperity of a class or interest from others."

—If the State sells on the suggestion of Chauncey S. Ripley, LL.D., that it will rent from the boundless wealth of Standard Oil to Gage Hall, it will be our Colossus of Rhodes.—Somerville Unionist-Gazette.

JENNIE WILEY'S SAD ENDING.

The Terrible Plight of a Young Woman Closely Connected With Well-Known Plainfield Family.

Jennie Wiley, a young woman of about 22 years of age, possessed of an attractive figure and a polished education, is imprisoned in the jail at Elizabeth, awaiting the action of the Grand Jury under a charge of murder.

She is the daughter of Clinton Wiley of Jersey City, is a niece of Franklin Wiley late of this city, and is a granddaughter of Lieutenant Wiley for many years of the Plainfield's wealthy residents. The gift for many months visited her uncle in Plainfield and made many acquaintances there.

This girl brought up in luxury, educated at the finest schools of the State must rot, a harrowing tale of betrayal and ruin, a story with a broken voice. She said that when she was turned out by a hot-tempered father because she persisted in visiting a man whom he did not like his choice, she was driven to shame to save herself from starvation. Her uncle Franklin, she said, when he ran the Grand Hotel, refused her help and she was picked up by a woman who gave her food and shelter and gained her affection, before tempting her into the life she led herself.

Jennie was arrested many months ago in the house of Minnie White, a notorious colored character, where a number of white women live but where only colored men congregate. After serving a time in the county jail she was released with the rest, but was soon locked up again, and that after being separated so long from her bad companions and having realized in her solitude the wickedness of her career and the misery of a terrible fate, she would try and be a good woman thereafter. She did for a few weeks take a position as servant in a family living on Mt. Linden, but the work was too heavy for her and she drifted right back to her former life and into even lower depths of it.

She told the reporter that she was "housekeeper" for the colored man whose baby she is accused of killing. She said the child died of natural disease that brought out blisters all over it, and that the restlessness of the child in bed "during the fever of which it died," caused the blisters to break. That is the way she accounted for the "bruises" which the coroner and his jury found all over the child's body; and which a colored physician of Elizabeth swore were caused by her daily beatings of the child with "a club as thick as her arm."

Jennie is confined in a common laboring man living in a few rooms in a low neighborhood near Elizabeth. To a question of the reporter's, Jennie said that she had never taken her child with her living with colored men in that vicinity, and that some of them were "lawfully married." She said she had not married the father of her child, but that he refused to get together enough money and clothes, some day, and leave. "Now," she says, "there is nothing left for me but to accept into the river."

Prairie Sentinel Not to be Bribed.

Democratic Assemblyman Lane, of Union county, ought to be in a position to understand what are the intentions of the State Legislature in regard to important matters now pending before it, or likely to be presented later in the session. Mr. Lane is the editor of the Scandinavian Sentinel, and this is what that paper says about the prospects of legislation favoring the interests of saloon-keepers:

"It may be that the course being followed by Democrats will have a good effect in awakening the moral sentiment of the State to a sense of the enormity of the requests of the Hudson county liquor dealers, but it is to be hoped that finally we may see that these ministers are wasting their energy in opposing the absurd demands of these irresponsible people. Any one subject to rule who the Legislature has come to a fault understanding. It is that no such demands as those referred to shall be enacted by the present Legislature. There is a well-defined public sentiment against the enactment of such laws, and it is to be hoped we speak when we say that the Democratic majority will not attempt to defy that sentiment, and we doubt whether any member of either House will have the hardihood to introduce any of the proposed bills. Should any attempt be made to carry out the measure of the Hudson county liquor dealers in its life will be completely crushed out that its sponsors will wish it had never been born."

The Republican Contestant Wins.

In joint session Michael J. O'Donnell, Democrat, was elected Prosecutor of Hudson county, vice appointed Police Justices of Jersey City, in place of Samuel W. Stilling and Peter F. Wagner, Republicans.

The Senate 42d ballot until next Monday resulted in

The old chestnut—The West Jersey Game is likely to prosper came up again in the House, and it was finally resolved to make it the special order for next Monday evening.

Two years ago Secretary Windom was supposed to be worth $250,000, but his estate, so far as it has been traced, is valued at not above $6,000, of which $5,000 is a life-insurance policy.

Hon. Fred C. Marsh is likely to receive the nomination of Prosecutor of Union county, to fill out the term of Mr. Abbett, who admires the plucky and able Senator from Elizabeth. Mr. Marsh has many warm friend in Plainfield who would be glad to see this appointment as they were when they voted for him last Fall.

General Sherman was the only one of the three noted Union commanders who lived beyond his seventieth year. Grant, Sheridan, Thomas, Hancock, McClellan, Meade, Warren, McDowell, Hallock, Hooker, Burnside and Logan all died in their soldierly graves before reaching the moderate limit of life. Among the familiar names of Generals of the war still living are Rosecrans, Sanil, Butler, Banks, Howard and Palmer, all past seventy.

Congressman McAdoo made a ringing speech in the House of Representatives, on Friday last, on the ship subsidy bill. A correspondent of the N. Y. World says of it:

"The speech abounds in paragraphs as simple and luminous as any that have been delivered in Congress by the wisest statesmen of the past. In the clear and simple form of the axiom the axiomatic truths of political and economic science. You cannot promote industry or encourage commerce by limiting them. You cannot succeed. A people by taxing them. You cannot preserve their liberties if you authorize the government to take from one that you may give to another. Liberty and equality are the fundamental principles upon which American interests are based; and for any Congressman against them by law there is no possible justification in the supposed prosperity of a class or interest from others."

—If the State sells on the suggestion of Chauncey S. Ripley, LL.D., that it will rent from the boundless wealth of Standard Oil to Gage Hall, it will be our Colossus of Rhodes.—Somerville Unionist-Gazette.

THAT ENGINE HOUSE GANG.

A Crowd of Loafers Who Will Defer the Rolling Stock From Department Into Politics.

Where it Set Quite Common.

The men who did the dirty work for Dr. Hulit in the case against the loafers about Watson engine house that is lodged in most respectable society, and the sooner it is ferreted out and the guilty parties punished the better it will be for the town. Colonel Hastings THE PRESS has had occasion frequently to censure, have been behaving themselves more sharper by about the middle of last week, and are beginning again to break loose from the bonds of restraint. During the past few months they were quite orderly in the lobby, and did nothing worse than to assail with objectionable and abusive language the people who have incurred their wrath by reporting their continued flagrant disrespect to the Mayor and the Council and their repeated public breaches of good order, as those people passed upstairs when were attending to their own business in a quiet way, and who were committing no offense whatever. The loafers who indulged in this sort of thing at first did not do it openly, but smoked out of sight and cowardly assailed their victims behind their backs, seriously damaging character and causing personal injury. This malicious and contemptible conduct will receive appropriate attention at the hands of those in authority.

It should be added, by the way, that THE PRESS is in possession of information concerning the nature of the quiet doings of certain members of the "engine house gang," and will at the proper time record some highly interesting facts concerning some very dam-ging charges.

It is of course understood that the conduct of certain firemen who more or less frequently visit the house because such location as cleaning the apparatus for early service and the majority of them, and THE PRESS does not wish to be subjected to be casting any reflection against those firemen for such visits (and we are few them) whose deportment is upright and decent; but there is a certain element that makes the engine house a loafing resort, and that do fast bringing the entire place into disfavor. That is the element meant in the use of the term "engine house gang," and such evil as this gang is abolished will the borough fire department be safe from scandal and disgrace.

ONE NAME SOUTH, ANOTHER HERE.

Frank Wood and Jackie Hardy Undoubtedly the Same, Save Mr. Rawes.

Gold Leaf, a newspaper of Henderson, North Carolina, has the following paragraph from the story of the departure of James Hardy, Borough Magistrate and Justice of the Peace, from North Plainfield, and says:

"The people of Henderson have a very distinct recollection of Frank Wood. By many he will be remembered chiefly by his connection with the Gold Leaf, and by others as a pleasant, affable, half-fellow-well-met kind of a man who impressed himself as an active, energetic, shrewd, far-seeing, sharp and quick as a superior mechanic, and a contractor and builder who thoroughly understood his business. In short, he was a man who would have friends wherever he went among the people, and was capable of making for himself an honorable name and fortune, and this is what that name would mean. People were quick to recognize his talents and abilities in his particular sphere, and no man was accorded more cordial welcome. He was a useful man in the community, a man who stood high as a workman, and his private acts and intentions were judged of by his own and not by other standards. But they soon had cause to look upon him in a different light. He contracted debts he did not pay. People began to get suspicious of him, and finally his affairs were inquired into. He skipped the town, claiming that he was going off for some months on important business. He did not return, and his wife followed. Our citizens are familiar with the whole matter, the amount of Wood's indebtedness, the steps taken to get him from Henderson so one knew, but it was afterwards reported that he had been seen in Philadelphia. It appears that the name of Frank Wood was dropped where he has since lived as James Hardy. He played about the same pranks there, and had just left for fields of new and pastures green when he was overtaken by the Brodericks at the time Frank Wood did, minus living in Plainfield, where he met and renewed Mr. Wood. The accompanying article, taken from the Plainfield Daily Press of February 14, for which we are indebted to Mr. Marvin, throws some light on the mystery of Frank Wood and his hook his departure from Hend-rson about four years ago. It will no doubt be read with a keen degree of interest by many of our townspeople."

A Double Quotation.

(From The Westfield Standard.)

The Democratic big four of Union county—Senator Marsh, ex-Judge Gilbody, County Clerk Criswell and Elmore D. McNeil. The Democratic big four of the State—Governor Abbett, U. S. Mcllroy, Scott, of Hudson, James Smith, of Essex, and ex-Congressman Miles Ross, of Middlesex.

Those Who Are Responsible, Take Warning!

To THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Who is responsible for the present bad condition of the side-walks on either side of Richmond street between Second and Third streets? On the west side is mud, and on the east side is water. Both of this city. On the east side is broken boards which compel you to walk in the roadway and dodge their way between vehicles. If the property holders are responsible for such a state of things, why do not the city officials compel them to remedy these evils? If not, then the officials are responsible take warning and see to it!

A RESIDENT.

[Jack Frost is responsible, just now.—Ed.]

All the License Applications to be Granted and Carry to be Paid Three Months' Notice.

The Committee of the Whole met last night, Mayor Leigh in the chair, and settled preliminaries. All of the Councilmen were present, and Mayor Gilbert.

They talked over the Borough ordinances, and when the Clerk came to the saloon ordinance, they stopped talking and began doing also. The ordinance will all be reported as corrected in form, and will all be passed at the next regular meeting of the Council. Quantities fine will prevail only vote for the hotel bars, but not for the "Bill-word" or other saloons.

The Committee of the Whole agreed that the Council had no right to give the Police Board power to appoint and officers, a resolution will be presented by the Council to-night to that effect. Police Justice Blanchard thinks that Carey be paid the amount of the months' salary withheld from him.

[Under the law a majority does control, so if the Police Board desire to appoint Carey, they can do so, and the Council cannot prevent it. The Police Board is not responsible to the Council, but to the Governor.—Ed.]

Ordinances will be passed to-night to-morrow night, and the Council will adjourn to meet on the 10th of March, when the Police Board will be appointed, and the Council will be ready to receive the applications for saloon licenses.

CAREY GETS WHAT?

Why Some Zealots Salary of $2 Per Day Took in Other Board Members Pockets.

Where Did it Go?

(From the Plainfield Press.)

The question was asked on the streets last night by a number of citizens, Where did the money go that was paid to Carey for services as Police Justice? The Police Board, of which Mayor Gilbert is a member, refused to pay Carey the salary, and the Council refused to pay it, and yet Carey got it. Where did it go?

The Council had this matter before it, and by the same token the bonds of the Watson Hose Company were ordered paid, but the question of paying Carey was not acted upon. The Council had no right to pay Carey, and the Police Board refused to pay him, and yet Carey got the money. Where did it go?

Carey was tried before the Board of Police of the City of Plainfield, found guilty of neglect of duty and fined for three months without pay, and the resolution of the Board designating him as "the regular policeman who should act as captain of police" was laid on the table.

The Court held that Action from office including a cessation of pay during such suspension, is a removal, pro tanto, from office, and that the power of the Legislature thereof without cause, public trial, etc.

The Court cited the provisions of the City Charter which requires the Mayor to nominate and the Council to confirm all officers not elected and which declares that all officers shall hold their offices until their successors are appointed unless sooner removed by the Common Council.

The Court held that the Common Council could not delegate this power of removal to the Police Board or any other body. For this reason the proceedings of the Board were null and void. The Court declared that the conclusion above stated rendered it unnecessary to discuss the other questions raised in the case.

That was all there was to it. Carey was suspended for three months without pay by the Police Board under the authority of an ordinance adopted Feb. 28, 1890, by the votes of Board of Police, and the Council refused to pay him. The Court decided that the Council had no right to remove a policeman, but that it cannot delegate that power to another body.

Consequently if the higher court to which the question may now be taken, rules the same way after another six months or so, then Carey can claim pay for three months. His subsequent expulsion from this force by the Council, was not a question before the Supreme Court. That happened after Carey began the proceedings that failed upon. But the decision fully covers even that question, by saying that the Council has the power to remove Certain of Judge Depue's points. The power to try and to convict policemen is in the common council and the proceedings of the police board must be set aside." It will be seen that the Court rules in effect that the Police Board had no power to suspend Carey for three months, but that the Council had a perfect right to remove him from office.

The people who still see the sleepy sheet of Somerset street, were informed in big letters last evening that "Mr. Carey will call Chief." The wider newspaper of such a statement emanating from the vacant brain-tank of Carey's lap dog, is apparent after reading the truth given under the head of "Carey Gets What?" But even if the Court had implied by its ruling that even the Council had no right to remove Carey, the storm of opposition that followed the new Mayor appointed his new force of police and the Council of this year confirmed them. But Carey was expelled from the force by the Common Council Aug. 4, 1890, and this action has not been set aside by the Court.

There are some circumstances connected with the Carey matter which the Police B ard acted, that are not unt ne-ticing. As originally adopted in 1889, and approved by Mayor Randolph, the police force was to consist of a captain, one of the police force to act as Captain. In 1894, however, during the last year of Mayor Mc-Cue's term, this ordinance was amended by another taking the privilege of appointment of Captain from the Mayor and giving it to the Board.

Consolidated Carried. Dumont, Marsh, Rose, Wadsworth and West (all Republicans) voted for the change and it was adopted. But Mayor Maxson vetoed it, saying:

To the Honorable Common Council:

I respectfully return to your Honorable Body without my approval the ordinance entitled an ordinance to create the office of Captain of Police and a Police Court Clerk and Janitor of the same.

The ordinance proposes to take from the Police Board the power conferred upon it by the act of the Legislature "approved March 18, 1871." The first section of that act provided that the police force should consist of a chief and such number of the Common Council appointed, and the second section provided that the appointment of the City Clerk and Janitor of the council chamber." The office of the Captain of Police is unnecessary in the City of the office of Policeman and has in fact been recognized as such by the Police Board when it appointed the officer under another name and another appointment as Chief of Police. Such legislation is calculated to frustrate the object of the Legislature and take from the Mayor his executive power and agents to enable him to secure observance of the law and the ordinances of the city and to conformity to the law of the State.

Respectfully,
WM. R. MAXSON, Mayor.

March 11, 1890.

At the meeting when this was received, Councilman F. E. Marsh spoke at some length, claiming that the passage of the ordinance did not interfere with the provisions of the act of the Legislature. He argued that the Mayor had no authority to nominate the Captain of Police, and a speaker moved that notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor the ordinance be now made a law.

Then arose the question of the President, Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh gave an opinion in effect that the office of Captain of Police was unnecessary and unknown, and the Council had undoubted power to regulate how and by whom such offices should be appointed.

The ordinance was then adopted by the following vote:

Affirmative—Cortell, Dumont, Marsh, Rose, Wadsworth and West—6. All Republicans.

Negative—Bogardus, Gardner, Livingston, Lives and Simpson—5. All Democrats.

[Jack Frost is responsible, just now.—Ed.]

They Named the Next Mayor of Sixth Plainfield.

The North Plainfield Democrats had a very numerous and harmonious meeting last night, and their ticket was elaborated, and Frank P. Starr nominated. Amid much enthusiasm Fred M. Slater was nominated for Mayor. The Council—Dunnell and Stewart C. Hann, for councilmen.

They Tied Lots.

Governor Abbett Tuesday approved assembly bill No. 333, which authorizes the municipal authorities of Plainfield to appoint a board of assessors and clerks and assistants employed in or about the board. Some of his offices, provided the Board of Freeholders shall so direct.

Assembly 138, authorizing municipalities of Plainfield to issue bonds and providing funds for home bonds and improvements, and for other purposes, was also approved. The bridges was also approved. The same course was taken with Senate No. 10, which includes the Plainfield Driving Park Association among those authorized to issue bonds.

NO TAX FOR PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS.

Further Decision Against Bishop Corrigan's Appeal.

Is Denied by Plainfield as Well as by Other Cities.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In last evening's edition of THE DAILY PRESS under a heading "Plainfield's Case in Dispute," you have a statement of the Bishop Corrigan's appeal from the decision of the tax-commissioners refusing to exempt from taxation the parochial school of Passaic, stating the Newark News and the Plainfield DAILY PRESS. The book of public school accountants do not even refer to the Judges or opposing counsel. The decision as reported by the Passaic Daily Herald, and the Jersey City Evening Press—copies of which I send you—was based upon the Judge's interpretation of the law, and not on the crowded condition of the Passaic parochial school. I quote from the Press:

"Judge Dixon in giving his decision says that he would approve of the report of the commissioners in the matter of the taxes, not on the ground given by the Commissioners that the schools were a public benefit, for many things are public benefits and still subject to taxation, but because the law provides that schools shall be exempt from taxation. The fact that the school was conducted for children within the boundaries of a certain parish did not deprive them of their public character, being merely a convenience to parents, and as children in schools supported by the public and attended by children within certain limits."

The Daily Guardian says: "According to Judge Dixon's decision all school property connected to an institutions of learning, just as the public schools, and being duly incorporated as such are exempt from taxation." Such an opinion is contradicted by these two journals of opposite political views, and it does not appear that the bank of commissioners submitted to the Judge in his decision in any way whatever, and Plainfield's case is not different.

Second, you add: "In Plainfield, though the school is free, the sect compels all attendants to participate in study and worship of the Roman Catholic faith, debars many from attending who would attend and put in the public school system to that of the public schools, thus abridging the liberty claimed, and adding wealth to the argument, the school is a parochial one and sold out to Catholics." Here you do me an manifest injustice, and we challenge a proof that we ever compelled a Protestant child to "participate in study and worship of the Roman Catholic faith," though we have had Protestant children attending the school.

With regard to the "sufficiency" of public school accommodations in Plainfield, I merely state a well-known fact when I say that Mr. Marsh has established many of our poor children were refused admission to the public schools or at best were admitted for only one session, and were then sent home because of lack of room. The address of Plainfield are therefore indebted to us for two benefits: that we say, at no expense to them, educating their children, and that a school was established where they can be educated.

F. E. SMITH,
Superintendent St. Mary's School.

WANT TO GET RID OF THE BOROUGH.

Dunellen Residents Clamor for a Change that Will Bring Them Annexation to Plainfield.

To judge from the frequent angry mutterings of the people of Dunellen, the life of the young borough is in imminent danger. The sentiment have for a long time been dissatisfied with the existing state of affairs, and are now getting themselves into such a state of mind which savors of mutiny. One of the most prominent citizens at that place tells the reporter that this love of the people of Dunellen ever realized the borough method of government after they once got a taste of it.

"We are dingy-led with the system"—he says. It might be government by the people of that place which is more terrid than the equal-real reigns of the earth. At that famous Winter re-rt I am sure they have just cause for complaining when they see that the commissioners have ordered the roads and walks widened, for I read in the good book that the days of the

"We top"—ed constitution—"have a borough form of government. But"—with a threatening shake of the head—"we won't keep it long. We will have a City Overthrow B—speedily, emphatically, positively. We have petitioned the Legislature to annex Dunellen to Plainfield. Nothing else will satisfy the people. We are getting ready to put an end to the place as a borough, and a lively circus will be the result. When the fur gets too much for the people we shall have no more of the borough system to make him go forcing observance of the law and the ordinance of the city and in conformity to the law of the State.

Respectfully,
WM. R. MAXSON, Mayor.

March 11, 1890.

At the meeting when this was received, Councilman F. E. Marsh spoke at some length, claiming that the passage of the ordinance did not interfere with the provisions of the act of the Legislature. He argued that the Mayor had no authority to nominate the Captain of Police, and a speaker moved that notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor the ordinance be now made a law.

Then arose the question of the President, Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh gave an opinion in effect that the office of Captain of Police was unnecessary and unknown, and the Council had undoubted power to regulate how and by whom such offices should be appointed.

The ordinance was then adopted by the following vote:

Affirmative—Cortell, Dumont, Marsh, Rose, Wadsworth and West—6. All Republicans.

Negative—Bogardus, Gardner, Livingston, Lives and Simpson—5. All Democrats.

They Named the Next Mayor of Sixth Plainfield.

The North Plainfield Democrats had a very numerous and harmonious meeting last night, and their ticket was elaborated, and Frank P. Starr nominated. Amid much enthusiasm Fred M. Slater was nominated for Mayor. The Council—Dunnell and Stewart C. Hann, for councilmen.

They Tied Lots.

Governor Abbett Tuesday approved assembly bill No. 333, which authorizes the municipal authorities of Plainfield to appoint a board of assessors and clerks and assistants employed in or about the board. Some of his offices, provided the Board of Freeholders shall so direct.

Assembly 138, authorizing municipalities of Plainfield to issue bonds and providing funds for home bonds and improvements, and for other purposes, was also approved. The bridges was also approved. The same course was taken with Senate No. 10, which includes the Plainfield Driving Park Association among those authorized to issue bonds.

"Does your mother ever scold you?" asked the teacher of the Sunday-school class. "Yes, ma'am," replied the little boy. "What does she say?" "She says, 'Johnny, you'll be the death of me yet.'"

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

(OFFICIAL.)

ELIZABETH, N. J., Feb. 5, 1891.

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union held on Thursday, Feb 5, 1891, at 2:30 P. M.

Present—Messrs. Dr. Hubbard and Frost, Messrs Beckett, Bethel, Doty, Howard, Kyle, Lee, Littell, Lyon, Mayer, Marshall, Sullivan, Thompson, Trahon, Vanderbeek and Wilson—19.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting were read and on motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS

From Clerk Chosen Freeholders:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—The last report the weather has been unfavorable for any outside work, but as far as attempted as was necessary to put the different roads and bridges in an immediate condition in shape for travel. These portions of Morristown, Springfield avenue, Summit township, of which complaint has been made have been visited in fine clean shape. Considerable hard fine coal has been used as soon as cold weather had set in, and all the traveling public seem pleased.

I also insisted on the contractors on Mountain avenue, Westfield and Springfield avenue, Elizabeth, to keep pace with their contracts. On both of these contracts the work is not finished, and on Westfield avenue, *in the course of macadamization, as it is laid bed-*ding stone and planed, and the needed repairing by filling ruts, rolling, etc., which I have had done and now they are being attended to. I therefore (accompanied with the chairman of the Morris avenue committee) put a few men at work and had the most serious portion of said hill cleared so as to afford a chance for the rain to run in its proper channel. As soon as the weather will permit it will be necessary to have the obstruction cleared at several points where the waterways are obstructed on Morris avenue. Also at Constantine's Hill, in New Providence avenue, Summit, the gutters and slopes have caved in and it is injuring the road and I am instructed to give your honorable body to take some action toward remedying the evil at the earliest possible moment.

On St. Geor.e's avenue in the city of Rahway the contractor undertook to make repairs with clay, which was entirely unsuitable for the work and same should be repaired with anything but stone, consequently it has caused some fault to be found by the citizens.

As soon as the weather will permit I will give personal attention to the work moved and replaced with good stone, which will remedy the evil. Permit me to say in conclusion that the roads as a whole are in very good shape considering the severity of the winter, and I will endeavor to see that they remain so. Many thanks are due to you for he needed that they are made at once.

Respectfully submitted,
A. D. THOMAS,
County Engineer.

On motion of Freeholder Littell the report was received and referred to the Committee of the County of Union.

GENTLEMEN—On the fifth day of February, 1890, the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union

Gentlemen—On the fifth day of February, 1890, the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union Company, purchased from Joseph Moulton and Mary E. Moulton, his wife, a certain parcel of land bounded and described according upon the Staten Island Sound and Elizabeth River. They have had it in contemplation that the same should be surveyed for the purpose of enclosing and fitting the same for the improvement of their property, it being their intention to build a dock and wharf thereon for their use; and the survey discloses the fact that the southerly abutment of the bridge and Elizabeth River Railroad over the South Front street is built upon the lands belonging to the said Company.

They have placed the matter in my hand with instructions to take such steps effective as may be necessary to recover their property or to have an adjustment thereof with the Freeholder board.

Herewith, I respectfully ask that you will cause an investigation to be made into this matter, and will appoint a committee with authority to confer with either purchased from the company the property in question, or otherwise to remove the same from the property of the company.

Yours very truly,
P. H. GILHOOLY,
Attorney for the Company.
Dock and Transportation Co.

Dated Feb. 5th, 1891.

On motion of Freeholder Briant received and referred to county attorney with power to act.

From township clerk, Fanwood.
Mr. Chas. E. Reed,

Dear Sir—Mr. Kyle handed me your communication the other day in reference to bonds. In reply would say that the Township Committee will have nothing to do with the matter, and I would say I have also received a communication from the Gas and Ladder Company, stating that if the bill of $19 for hydrants is not paid I must remove the hydrants at once. What shall I do with them?

Yours truly,
HOWARD L. HUNT,
Dated Dec. 30, 1890.

On motion of Freeholder Kyle received and referred to county counsel.

A circuit court summons in action upon contract between Henry O. Wood plaintiff vs. the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union defendant, in which the plaintiff and Freeholder West referred to county attorney.

A presentment from the grand jury against the nuisance of the contractors on said left the highway from Springfield avenue to Vauxhall Public, and the motion of Freeholder West referred to county attorney.

TREASURER REPORTS.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee to settle with the county collector report that they have examined his books showing the receipts and disbursements, compared with his vouchers, bonds and coupons paid and have found the same correct and the same agree and are correct in every particular. Receipts and disbursements from the beginning of the fiscal year to this date are as follows:

Receipts,	$614,019 42
Disbursements,	477,974 73
Balance in his hands,	$136,037.69
Respectfully submitted,
JAMES A. BRIANT,
GEO. W. LITTELL,
WM. H. HOWARD,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Vanderbeek reported and adopted.

The following bills, audited and approved, were read and ordered paid unanimously:

Election—Henry Bartels, $35.50; Henry Bartels, Jr., $35.50; A. W. Hughes, $7.97; Bridge account—A. H. Allen, Orange ford, $22; John D. Hennessey, do., 18.75; Wm. Hall, Orange ford, 22; Wm. Hall, Vauxhall, 22; Van Pelt, do., 33.33; R. S. Tomlin, New Providence, 22; Wm. Hall, Orange ford, 4.50; John S. Woodruff, Springfield, 22.25.

Incidentals—D. K. Hyno, $18; M. Dunning, do, 22.50; Wm. Hall, do, 22.50; John L. Oswell, 17.66; C. D. Ward, Vauxhall, 50; do., 25; do., 25; F. W. Westcott, 67.05.

Stationery—Chas. H. Seibmidt, $69.25; H. E. Hollister, 5.50.

Publication—Central New Jersey Herald, $5.40; Elizabeth Daily Journal, 21; Elizabeth Daily Journal, 21; Chas. H. Schmidt, 20; Lewis & Dey, 15; Wm. Hall, 22; Lewis & Dey, 15; Lewis & Dey, 15.

Printing—C. H. Hecker, trans., $6,722.46.

Salaries—Chas. E. Reed, $66; H. M. Bloomfield, $66; F. W. Westcott, 120; C. D. Ward, 66.

Miscellaneous—Geo. W. Littell, $5.50; Geo. W. Littell, 5.50; Wm. Howard, 5.50; Wm. Howard, 5.50; Wm. Howard

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

NOW'S YOUR CHANCE.

EVERYBODY HAS BEEN WANTING TO SIGN AN APPEAL LIKE THIS.

Save the Freight Hose—Lay Out a Park and Provide a Safe and Attractive Approach to the station From the South.

To the President and Board of Directors of the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

GENTLEMEN:—The undersigned citizens of Plainfield and patrons of your road, would respectfully present to your notice the following condition of things, and request for it all the honorable consideration, followed—at the earliest possible moment—by such remedial action as will be most consistent with your ideas of policy, justice, and frugality, most conducive to our comfort and safety, and that would add most to the attractiveness of Plainfield's main station.

The only blot upon our fair city to-day and the greatest obstruction to its growth, is your freight house and yard. We beg of you to remove it, not only because it is so distasteful to our sight and so repugnant to the eye of the stranger within our gates, but because it daily menaces the limbs and lives of almost every inhabitant of Plainfield. Of our city's total population at any time, almost, if not quite, one-fifth live on the North side of the track. The masses then, if they have only a minute to spare, climb a steep and muddy bank on the South side and jump across the track in front of a "cooler" to catch their train. If they have two minutes to spare they pick their way through the dirty freight yard and dodge between the shifting cars and the engines. If they have three minutes to spare they pass down under the bridges to the North side of the track, and travel around the block to reach the station.

This latter way you will say is the only safe and proper proceeding. But it takes time which we do not always have; and again, those of us who ride do not dare to go that way, for just as we passed under the bridge our train or another would rush over the horses' heads with a noise that would cause them to run away and kill us or ruin themselves forever.

In spite of this handicap you keep upon us, we yet lead in the race for growth and increase of wealth. Still you are hurting us, either knowingly or unknowingly. Your freight facilities are not adequate where they are and you own many miles further from the city's centre and out of your patrons' way. As to its "convenience" for shippers and receivers, that is only a question that affects a few truckmen who can as well drive a few blocks further; though, when you think of it, wherever you go in Plainfield, you hear about one week for a three month's visit to California. They contemplate beginning extended journeyings in foreign lands late in the Summer, and may be abroad two years.

The Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut of this city is in great demand as a public speaker. Thursday afternoon he addressed a collection of young people's societies in Newark, and in the evening he spoke before the Epworth League of an Elizabeth methodist church.

Councilman and Mrs. Emmons, of North Plainfield, celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of their wedding, Monday night. There were a jolly bunch of company, and one of those generous spreads that Mrs. Emmons knows so well how to set forth, was provided.

At the next session of the Union County Court of Pleas, to be held at the Central Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church March 17, Miss Clementine B. Yates, Mrs. J. C. Fernald and the Rev. W. R. Richards, with others from out of town, will take prominent part.

Gen. Robert McAllister, who died at Belvidere Monday, was a warm friend of the late Job Male, at whose home he was at times a visitor. He had acquaintances and admirers among all the old soldiers that Mr. Male knew, and as far as possible attended his funeral Friday.

Walter A. Bass, Jr., and T. H. Keller, of this city, arrived home Thursday with a big lot of game they had shot on Long Beach, Barnegat Bay. The result: Geese by moonlight and black duck, widgeons and green-winged teal by day, was some of the sport they enjoyed. The weather was so mild they shot in their shirt sleeves.

The New York Daily Continent in a recent issue contained a cut of "Uncle Sandy" Hamilton, the well-known Scotchman from Neth-rwood in connection with an article on the New York Southern Society, and says: "Milton Hamilton is a favorite feature as Miss Houghton's skating. Over two thousand people were present, and all highly praised the music. Miss Houghton's imitation of the Spanish dancers, Otero and Carmencita, was very clever.

A Wedding.

Horace L. Doty and Josie Taylor, both of North Plainfield, were married by the Rev. W. E. Binneyman Saturday, Feb. 21.

Washington Park Home Club.

Subscriptions towards the amount estimated as necessary to start the swell club in North Plainfield, successfully held of in THE PRESS—for the last week or so lacked just $500 of the total necessary to be pledged before anything should be done. All was at a stand-still until the other day, when Mrs. Jane Roome, with her usual generosity and earnest desire to advance public improvements and multiply attractive features in the Borough, subscribed the full amount.

The money now being within call, the individuals who will meet at the club-house Thursday evening, in the chapel of the Church of the Holy Cross. Architect Smith will present at that meeting plans for the club-house. The site is decided on and already secured, but THE PRESS has promised not to tell where it is, just yet. The name of the organization will probably be, "The Washington Park Home Club."

Senatorial Engineer.

Senator William J. Keys, of Somerset county, loves fleet horses, and he has the means to gratify his taste. He owns and lives upon the Ellis stock farm at South Bound Brook, and he has always had a deal of trotting stallions. His favorite in the string is Governor Abbett, a magnificent big animal, which he keeps in an upholstered stall, attended by a spanish groom. When the Senator rides out on the country roads he turns out in style behind the finest teams in Somerset county.

Not far from Senator Keys's home is the country residence of United States Senator John R. McPherson. The house is a modern frame structure, cosy rather than elegant, surrounded by hundreds of acres of rolling farm land. The Senator runs not only a dairy, but a stock farm also now for anything, but the two of a though. But he has the finest cattle in the State and a herd of fancy poultry. The cows are almost all Jerseys and Holsteins, and they support themselves and yield an annual income. The game preserve costs the Senator $4,000 or $5,000 a year. Mr. McPherson is not a sportsman, and he does not indulge in wild animals or fighting feathered stock. His preserves filled with foreign pheasants, ducks, gold-fish, and other ornamental birds.

A MANIA FOR RUNNING AWAY.

Bessie Jones and Minnie Warden Run Away and Are Found at Somerville.

Attended the Parties by Mrs. Sedgwick and Somerville.

The Elizabeth Dallas Herald in a strange story from the Plainfield school girl fraternity. The girl is Maggie Johnson, whose father is Edward A. Johnson of 37 Bonnie place. Edward works for Street Commissioner Conner. Maggie's elder brother, Gifford B., also has a case of age, it is, in the office of M. Harris Denham, 7 East Front street. There are two younger brothers, and a younger sister. All of these children are well-behaved, and fond of their home, but Maggie seems strangely addicted to running away.

Thursday evening Maggie presented herself at the boarding house of Mrs. Emma C. Packard, No. 211 Union street, Elizabeth, and acted so queerly, and told such a singular story, that Mr. Packard went to police headquarters and told Chief about the case. The girl was kept at the house of the Packards over night, and in the morning the Chief interviewed Maggie, and repeated her story until the little story she had told to Mrs. Packard.

Thursday afternoon—she said—a tall, well dressed young man, with black hair and mustache, called at the North Plainfield public school and asked the principal, Chas. E. Bess, if Maggie Johnson was in the room. The principal referred the visitor to Miss Claypoole, the girl's teacher, who on being informed that Maggie was urgently wanted by a lady at Elizabeth, and that he would like to take her there, let the girl depart with the stranger, who took her to the station, bought her a ticket to Elizabeth, wrote her a scrap of paper and directed it, 211 Union street, and told her to go there. He put her aboard a train, gave her $1, and told her that he would meet her on the train in Elizabeth. She spent ten cents of the money to buy cake to eat on the train. When she got to the station at Elizabeth she undertook to find 211 Union street, but found Union street without any trouble and without making any inquiries, and went direct to her destination.

The Chief naturally scouted the idea that anyone of Maggie's tender years could go direct, without making any inquiries, to a residence in a city she had never been in before, and this part of her narrative made him suspicious that the whole story was a fiction. He detailed Officer Dunning to go with the girl to investigate her tale. When arrived it she was ready to go home, Maggie said: "Just as you say. I am not particular."

Up the girl was brought to Chief and the policeman on the 11:58 train. When Decker went back it was with the information that the girl had been indulging her imagination and that what she had told in such careful detail never took place.

Not only did no young man call at the school on the North side, but she was not at school herself. Where she got the dollar from her parents did not know. She had run away four times before—twice to Elizabeth, and twice to Somerville, and twice since they came to Plainfield. Each time she stayed away from home merely over night, sleeping in doorways and other out-of-the-way places, and went about on the streets till found and taken home. The parents are greatly worried about the girl, and cannot account for her freak. Her age is thirteen years.

JOHN MOORE WINS AGAIN.

New Another Step Will Be Taken Towards Turning All the Land Over to "Uncle Billy's" Heir.

Last Friday, Judge Cowenhoven of New Brunswick made application in the Supreme Court Chambers at Jersey City for Deputy, Vanskyckel and Scudder, for a new trial in the Moore will case. He maintained that the verdict rendered by the jury in favor of John C. Moore was contrary to law and against the great weight of testimony and against the charge of the Court. He read the whole of the charge of Chief Justice Beasley and extracts from the testimony. Craig A. Marsh replied on behalf of John C. Moore, and contended that the jury were the sole judges of the facts of the case, and that there was not a single error in point of law from the beginning to the end of the charge. He urged that the evidence were insufficient to support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff the Chief Justice would not have allowed the case to go to the jury at all. The Court directed the papers to be handed up, and reserved its decision. At the opening of Court on Tuesday, the decision was announced from the bench. It is in favor of John C. Moore. The application for a new trial is denied. Mr. Marsh immediately moved for judgment, and the motion was granted. Several other ejectment suits will be brought at once, and proceedings will be taken to close out the whole controversy and turn all the land over to Johnny Moore.

A Creditable Showing, and a Superb Supper.

At the inspection of Alert Hose Company Friday the Boards of Engineers and other dignitaries were present, and the members and officers acquitted themselves admirably. The supper was excellent, and the festivities in every particular highly enjoyed.

Buried Beside His Wife.

Funeral services over the remains of Abraham Runyon, father of Chancellor Runyon, of Newark, were held in the Methodist Episcopal church Saturday. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Parsons of Newark, who paid high tribute to the principal characteristics of the deceased and to the old New Jersey family of which he was a member. The Rev. C. D. Wright, D.D., and the Rev. Dr. Hall also participated in the ceremonies. The body was laid away to rest by the side of Mr. Runyon's second wife in Evergreen Cemetery.

How One Plainfielder Spent Washington's Birthday.

Ex-School Trustee John W. Murray and wife, of this city, on Saturday evening last celebrate Washington's Birthday at Winter Park, Fla. They were diverted by such old-fashioned amusements as the manufacture of tar balls, and the playing for gold in a Florida mud hole. The male celebration took place on Saturday and began with a tennis tournament at 10½ o'clock in the morning, and ended at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Murray and other guests continued the festivities in the evening together. At 3 P. M. there were double teams, single carriages, a tub race, and walking a greased pole extended over the water.

A Good Man's Sudden Death.

A most sudden death was that of William Colthar, of 140 Duer street, North Plainfield, Friday night. Mr. Colthar had been working at his trade of carpentry all day, and in the morning had been assisting his son to deliver copies of THE PRESS on its newspaper route. He retired at about nine o'clock, feeling in perfect health. About an hour later his wife was awakened by a peculiar noise in his throat. She tried to rouse him, and realizing that he was dangerously ill, sent for Dr. J. H. Carman, who summoned, and ascertained that the man was in a state of coma, and could not be aroused. The physician announced that the end was near, but did all that was possible to relieve him. Mr. Colthar died, however, at half-past two, without having regained consciousness. He leaves but one child, and a wife. He was a man of exemplary character, industrious at his trade, and devoted to his family. He was also a faithful Christian. He was a member of the Trinity Reformed church, and belonged to Washington Lodge, Knights of Honor.

PUBLIC LIGHTS IN THE BOROUGH.

Councilmen Speak Their Minds on the Subject, and Better Service is Promised.

The street lighting troubles of the borough of North Plainfield were freely ventilated at the meeting of the Borough Council Friday. The Mayor and all of the Councilmen were present, and all took part in the discussion.

Vice President Hughes, of the Edison Electric Light Company of Plainfield, was also present, and was requested to give some information as to the prospects of speedily perfecting the new street lighting system. He said that the company was doing their best to get everything in proper shape. They were giving the public all the light they could. But weather had greatly interfered with the work of construction, and the company would not charge a cent for the service till it was all satisfactory. City completed and the lights were turned on.

After Mr. Hughes sat down the Councilmen were full of questions.

Mr. Emmons said it to know, if he could, why the lights were not put on as marks, why the company had n't kept the gasoline lamps burning, dark nights, when the electric lamps weren't ready. Mr. Hughes said that the company had done the best they could, and that their charges for such gasoline service as they had rendered would be moderate.

Mr. Hughes inquired why the electric lamps had been grouped together so powerfully in certain spots, while other portions of the borough were neglected altogether. At one place, where the Mayor and two Councilmen lived, six lights had been grouped, within sight of some people took very complacently. But the new electric contract a number of new lamps were gained without any increase of cost over the old expenditure. Why were not those extra lamps distributed through "Bull Frog City" and other outlying sections? Judgment ought to be used in distributing the lights, and no one locality ought to be specially favored.

Mr. Schring, chairman of the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps, reported that no one need blame him for any fault in the matter. He didn't locate any lamps, and he'd rather not have any in front of his house, if he had his say.

Mr. Buckle asked if any arrangement had been made to extend the light system through "Bull Frog City."

Mr. Schring said that poles had been erected, but that no lamps had as yet been attached. Judging from the present outlook, it would be impossible to enter any new territory with the lights, as the lighting of extra lamps on streets already to poorly-lighted would probably exhaust the number provided for.

Mr. Engeman stated emphatically that there were too many lights around his house. He didn't want the public to think that he was responsible for putting them there. His hitherto unsullied reputation demanded protection; the acts of the Mayor and two Councilmen of that neighborhood were not such that they could justly be held responsible.

Mr. Emmons remarked that if he might be permitted to participate in the conversation he would like to ask Mr. Hughes why it was that each of the lights as burned at all didn't burn but half the night.

Mr. Hughes impatiently explained that that charge was all hearsay.

Mr. Emmons responded that if he might be permitted to beg to differ it was not hearsay. He himself always went home early and slept all night, but other people—referring to several whose complaints have already been published in the Press—complained that the lights in lamps went out at early morning hours and stayed out. Besides, members of the Council were passing to and about the house at various hours, and themselves that the streets were in darkness; and he rather guessed he could rely on their word.

Mr. Hughes apologetically remarked that he did n't know that the lights burned only half the night—that it was news to him.

Mr. Buckle interposed that he did n't blame the company for any short-comings. Whatever fault there was belonged to the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee. The company were doing the best they could, and while their system remained under the present contract to make such arrangements with them to provide other suitable light.

Mr. Emmons suggested that he might be permitted to make a few remarks for the company. He supposed the excellent company was aware that the contract with the city to light a certain number of lamps all night every night in the year, and had promised to keep those lamps burning and days ago. If the company found that they could n't fulfill the contract it was their duty to inform the committee, not the committee's duty to find out for themselves.

Mr. Buckle threw out a sarcastic hint that a certain member of the committee was in the habit of consulting with the company, and ought to be thoroughly familiar with all the details.

Mr. Emmons said that as he was a member of the committee he would like to have Mr. Buckle specify.

Mr. Buckle answered that he referred to the chairman [Mr. Schrig, about whom some words with the company there are various stories].

Mr. Schring was quivering with anger on hearing himself referred to in a sense of jerks through the air, and said that he was surprised to have so much fault found. Then he sat down and angrily took up a paper and read days ago.

Mr. Buckle at this point moved to adjourn, and Mr. Schring promptly seconded the motion, which was speedily lost.

Mr. Hughes then said that the settlement the light question ought to be settled. He appreciated the fact that the company were in the public service in establishing competition, but he also appreciated the fact that the people in the unlighted districts were getting tired of darkness, and that something ought to be done.

Mr. Smalley suggested that the company do the best they could to get matters in proper shape, and then the Board charge anything against the borough till March 1.

Mr. Emmons thought that a fair proposition, and remarked that that would give the company a chance to get their lights in the habit of running all night without any fear of being docked for daylight, so far as it went, and was much brighter and better than the light furnished the Plainfield streets, but something satisfactory ought to be arranged at once.

Mr. Hughes announced that beyond all question all the lights would be in order single and extra, a tub race, and walking a greased pole extended over the water.

A Good Man's Sudden Death.

A most sudden death was that of William Colthar, of 140 Duer street, North Plainfield, Friday night. Mr. Colthar had been working at his trade of carpentry all day, and in the morning had been assisting his son to deliver copies of THE PRESS on its newspaper route. He retired at about nine o'clock, feeling in perfect health. About an hour later his wife was awakened by a peculiar noise in his throat. She tried to rouse him, and realizing that he was dangerously ill, sent for Dr. J. H. Carman, who summoned, and ascertained that the man was in a state of coma, and could not be aroused. The physician announced that the end was near, but did all that was possible to relieve him. Mr. Colthar died, however, at half-past two, without having regained consciousness. He leaves but one child, and a wife. He was a man of exemplary character, industrious at his trade, and devoted to his family. He was also a faithful Christian. He was a member of the Trinity Reformed church, and belonged to Washington Lodge, Knights of Honor.

A LUXURIOUS HOTEL.

The Rumored Park House Opened by Vice Admiral Codman, Who Will Be the Finest in the County.

The very disagreeable weather of last Saturday evening prevented a large number of the people of Plainfield from attending the opening of the new hotel just reconstructed at the corner of Park avenue and Eighth street by The Alden Hotel Co., of which F. B. Miller, owner of The Netherwood, is treasurer and general manager. In spite of the storm, however, over 200 were entertained by Vice Admiral Codman from New York and Brooklyn who were so pleased that they never went home until yesterday. There was orchestral music all day.

An unstinted expenditure of money is apparent everywhere. The halls and stairways from top to bottom of the building are covered with rich carpets, the parlors, and ladies' reading room are carpeted in exquisite, and the guests' rooms, of which there are 60 single and en suite, are in keeping.

The French windows opening from the parlors to the spacious verandas, are hung with Florence curtains, and the portieres are of silk chenille tapestry in pale colors. The parlors are furnished in Louis XVIth style, and are undoubtedly the most elaborate and modern of their kind in the county.

The bedrooms are furnished in quartered oak, and each is heated with steam.

The wall decorations throughout the hotel, also effected by the portieres and the Treasurer's wife who selected all the carpets, furniture, curtains and wall papers. Not a trace of the old house is left. New paint and paper cover all the work, walls and ceilings. Every piece of carpet, every stick of furniture and every scrap of bedding of the old house, was destroyed. The plumbing was torn out everywhere, and new bath and toilet rooms built on every floor.

Not a vestige even of the old table crockery remains. The finest decorated porcelain is in use in the dining room, parlors, and the table china, glassware, silver and linen, are beautiful.

Many of last Summer's staff at The Netherwood, are on duty. In the office is Frank Bowman, genial and popular. He is Treasurer Miller's right-hand man. Isaiah, in grey velvet and gold buttons, springs up as spry as in days of the city of "front." There is a new chef, Gondi, late of Pinard's, New York, but Steward Chatfield is on duty again. Mrs. Chatfield is housekeeper.

The painting of the new hotel, outside and in, is the work of A. T. Ayers's men, and F. M. Ayers has charge of the steam fitting. The wall decoration was done by W. S. Chase. The Sloanes, of New York, furnished the carpets and curtains. The furniture was manufactured in Grand Rapids.

Despite all these luxuries and comforts, and their great cost, the terms at The Alden are not at all high and reasonable there are a number of applications for rooms. It will be but a month or two before the hotel is filled, and then it will remain so all the year round.

DUNELLEN'S SALVATION.

A Thirty-Year Resident Tells What a Borough Government Has Brought About.

A PRESS reporter interviewed Christian Scheffin, of Dunellen, for the purpose of obtaining some facts in answer to the irresponsible statements of another Dunellen citizen quoted in these columns of the paper. Mr. Scheffin has resided in Dunellen for the past thirty years, and has contributed more time, energy and money towards its prosperity than all other residents of the place put together, and true, in that neighborhood—"If there had been no Christian Scheffin there would have been no Dunellen."

The reporter found him justly indignant over the false statements of the other thoroughbite. "He is a mac," said Mr. Scheffin, "whom we as a compelling under the power of a Borough government, to put down a decent sidewalk along his property. That's one reason he is against that form of government. There are many similar reasons in his case. Until Dunellen was a Borough nothing could be done for its improvement. Since then Front street has been macadamized from end to end of the Borough boundaries and flagged on both sides; four other roads have been macadamized; Prospect avenue and the New Market road have sidewalks all along them, and like improvements for the comfort of everybody are added to somebody's else every day and days ago. If the company found that they could n't fulfill the contract it was their duty to inform the committee, not the committee's duty to find out for themselves.

Mr. Buckle threw out a sarcastic hint that a certain member of the committee was in the habit of consulting with the company, and ought to be thoroughly familiar with all the details.

Mr. Emmons said that as he was a member of the committee he would like to have Mr. Buckle specify.

Mr. Buckle answered that he referred to the chairman [Mr. Schrig, about whom some words with the company there are various stories].

Mr. Schring was quivering with anger on hearing himself referred to in a sense of jerks through the air, and said that he was surprised to have so much fault found. Then he sat down and angrily took up a paper and read days ago.

Mr. Buckle at this point moved to adjourn, and Mr. Schring promptly seconded the motion, which was speedily lost.

Mr. Hughes then said that the settlement the light question ought to be settled. He appreciated the fact that the company were in the public service in establishing competition, but he also appreciated the fact that the people in the unlighted districts were getting tired of darkness, and that something ought to be done.

Mr. Smalley suggested that the company do the best they could to get matters in proper shape, and then the Board charge anything against the borough till March 1.

Mr. Emmons thought that a fair proposition, and remarked that that would give the company a chance to get their lights in the habit of running all night without any fear of being docked for daylight, so far as it went, and was much brighter and better than the light furnished the Plainfield streets, but something satisfactory ought to be arranged at once.

Mr. Hughes announced that beyond all question all the lights would be in order single and extra, a tub race, and walking a greased pole extended over the water.

DIVORCE FOLLOWS DESERTION.

Though Wife and Husband Both Were Willing.

White, who Ran Away With a Negro, Loses Her Case Before Judge Depue.

John D. McGill, of Somerville, was last week, through the efforts of his counsel, Messrs. Jackson & Codington, granted a divorce from his wife.

Mr. McGill is an engineer on the Jersey Central railway, and is known among railroad men throughout the State. His business of course keeps him away from home for days at a time, and his wife took advantage of his absence and entertained strange men in the house. For months the matter preached her inability before he found out for sure. She had two regular callers—both of them negroes.

When her husband discovered her faithlessness she sought to win him back, and openly professed the society of the negroes, "who were gentlemen," to the society of "himself, who was a common workingman." Then she promptly packed up her trunk and fled with her favorite of the two colored men.

The wife did not present herself to contest the application for a divorce. The testimony against her was of a highly unsavory character.

Panic Among the Wagons.

A horse owned by Marsh Bros., left standing at the corner of Peace street and Somerset street, Friday afternoon, took fright and ran away. After galloping up Peace street it turned into Front, and coming somewhat of a cropper at the corner of Somerset, upset about the post-office. Wagons were jammed together in a bad tangle, and several had their wheels smashed or otherwise damaged. A Miss Smalley of Dunellen was thrown out of her carriage, and had her head severely cut. Her injuries, however, are not serious. Mrs. Smith's horse also ran away, and galloped homeward.

—Prof. Roach, the State Geologist, has begun a new survey of the Raritan valley, and is now in Somerset county. It will deal largely with the soil, and will be of great value to farmers.

CHRISTIANS NOT RESPONSIBLE.

No. Louis Give Any Encouragement to Converting Plainfield's Churches and Saloons.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The New York Tribune, Feb. 21, 1891, says: "Plainfield, N. J., a city of about 10,000 inhabitants, had a year without any licensed saloons, which resulted in the closing of all the drinking dens. Only mission stone gathered in more than a hundred of them, and they were dispersed as said, until the saloons were allowed to re-open. Now nine-tenths of them. It is said, have succumbed to temptation, and gone back to their drinking habits. The saloons of Plainfield are being enlarged and new ones are to be licensed. The policy of the City Council seems to be to serve the saloon at the expense of all other interests. While it proposes to refuse at the time of closing the saloons to remain open o'clock till twelve it seeks, in addition to the saloon, to enrich the privileges of hackmen and increase their license fee. Plainfield is so eminently Christian city, and has the power to prevent it, and yet it allows the saloon to dominate. The responsibility lies with the Christian."

If the above means, as some think it does, that there are not saloons enough in the city of Plainfield to control legislation on the liquor question by direct vote, the statement is at once inaccurate and absurd. The purveyors of falsified books into the matter some years ago, and found that the church members formed about a quarter of the voters in the city. In some churches the larger share of members who are voters live in North Plainfield, outside the city limits. Since the above was published in the Tribune the writer has made a careful canvass of the question. The official figures are as follows:

The number of voters registered at our last municipal election, Dec. 1890, was 2,496. The whole number of votes cast at that election was 1 926. The number of voters who are members of the churches in the city of Plainfield is: Protestants, 864. The records of the Roman Catholic Church show that there are in Protestant churches, but the following from the pastor of St. Mary's gives the facts:

To the Rev. Dr. ——:

The number of voters in my congregation is about 220.

Yours respectfully,
P. E. SMITH.

The figures show that if the Protestant church members voted together, without exception, on a full vote they would lack at least 370 of a majority. If Protestants and Catholics united there would be left a majority. In view of these facts, every reader will see that so far as the number of votes is concerned, "Christians are not responsible" for the situation.

That the Christian people of Plainfield do not exercise the power they ought to against the domination of the saloons, I believe. That they can in time overcome the rum power, I also believe; but it cannot be done in a year, or even in two years. The remedy for our political evils, and the solid basis for permanent reform is found in an enlightened and Christianized public opinion which will make a situation like the present impossible. If any of your readers desire to know more of my opinions on this subject, they will find them in articles in the Seventh-Day Baptist church next Sabbath, Feb. 28, at 10:30 A. M.

A. H. LEWIS.

MEMORIAL ANNIVERSARY.

The Dedication of the Wilson Chapel at Washington-ville Enjoyably Celebrated.

The anniversary of the dedication of the Mary E. Wilson Memorial chapel, at Washingtonville, took place Sunday.

The services in the morning were conducted by the Rev. J. L. Hurlbut, D. D. The sermon, from Acts XXVI, 18, was listened to by a deeply interested congregation. The Sunday school, which largely attended although no especial effort was made for the day. This Sunday school work is looked on by the trustees of the mission at Washingtonville. The efforts of E. L. Bonney of this city, and his corps of efficient teachers, to attract and hold all who do not attend other places of religious instruction, has been a great success. The cordial invitation and hearty welcome extended to all, give a laudable feeling to those who may attend the beautiful chapel situated among the Washolung mountains.

Sunday evening's anniversary exercises were of the character of a prelude service, under the management of T. E. Hand, of North Plainfield, who with a male choir of young voices rendered some very fine singing.

William D. Murray, President of the Y. M. C. A. of this city, gave a short address which is said to have been one of unusual power. He portrayed the work of the chapel as deserving congratulation them on the work begun so well as to the future. He urged under more favorable conditions than ever before. New lines of work are to be taken up that were out of reach under former years of inadequate support.

The social programme marked out for the anniversary exercises, was enjoyed by a crowded house of the friends of the school. The entertainment was gotten up by a committee whose good taste and zeal was evident by the satisfactory manner in which it was carried out. After the programme refreshments were enjoyed by all. The committee of the evening's entertainment were Mrs. George Bauman, Mrs. George Winans, Miss Tillie Conover, and Miss Lottie Wilson and Miss Inga Winans. The programme was as follows:

Selection ..... Mrs. Lorenzo
Recitation—"How Girls go Fishing" .....
..... Harry Coddington
Song—"Where the Sapping Willows Grow" .....
..... by Quartette
Recitation—"Mary's Lamb" ..... Miss Beeckman
Recitation—"Lauriting Tashes" .....
..... Miss Beeckman
Recitation—"How to Kill a Cat" ..... Eddie Clark
Recitation—"The Old Maid's Club" ..... Miss Conover
Wag Works ..... Andrew Wilson
Solo—"The Song that Reached My Heart" .....
..... Miss Lottie Wilson
Recitation ..... Carrie Bullman
Recitation—"Jerry and the Apples" ..... Harry Coddington
Accompanist ..... Miss Kay Stam.

Death of Peter G. Kline.

Peter G. Kline, of Somerset avenue, died at 1:30 Sunday afternoon, Feb. 22. He was complaining since New Year's Day, but took to his bed less than a week ago. He was perfectly conscious till the end came, and recognized her near "going home" on such a beautiful Sabbath day. He died as he had lived—a Christian man. He leaves a wife, but no children. His age was forty-nine years. He was a member of Trinity Reformed church, Jerusalem Lodge, No. 66, F. and A. M., with which he was affiliated, attended the funeral on its late residence at 1:30, and at the Trinity Reformed church at two o'clock, Wednesday afternoon.

Members of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 66, F. & A. M., also attended the funeral in a body.

Constant Activity in Real Estate.

Mr. Bayling has purchased from Wm. Bayling a six-room house, with stable, on Clinton avenue, beyond the city limits. The price paid was $6,500. The sale was made through the agency of R. C. Mallery & Co. Mr. Bayling will occupy the property as a residence.

Mr. Bayling has purchased from Wm. Bayling a six-room house, with stable, on Clinton avenue, beyond the city limits. The price paid was $6,500. The sale was made through the agency of R. C. Mallery & Co. Mr. Bayling will occupy the property as a residence.

MEDICATED JOKES.

An Ottawa, Kan., doctor has sent bill to a widow for "doctoring your husband to death."

"Times gone Dr. Brown, the one that saved my life." "Did he have one?" "Yes, I think so. I owe him $5 now, and I've been paying it for years."

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

BERNHARD MEYER,

Successor to A. D. Thompson,

Riverside Stock Farm,

AT FINDERNE STATION,

On Central Railroad of New Jersey, will always have for sale a large assortment of Horses of all Kinds and for all Purposes. Also Mules and Fresh Cattle.

Everything warranted as represented or money refunded.

WM. C. SMITH, Superintendent.

BRANCH STABLES, No. 10 Palisade Ave., and Nos. 11 and 13 Ogden Ave., JERSEY CITY.

Having contract to furnish Horses to New York Railroads, I am obliged to take their old Horses, which I sell cheap. 1 12 tf

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—U. S. Government Report, August 17, 1889.

JOHN W. LAING'S HOTEL

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

For sale, the old established property known as Laing's Hotel, in the centre of the city of Plainfield, N. J., and now occupied and doing a thriving business. The property is let from one to three years, as may be desired. The building is large and commodious, and in good repair. The location is unsurpassed, being in the midst of the best business in the city of Plainfield, and in close proximity to the railroad depot. Address JOHN W. LAING, Plainfield, N. J. 1 26 tf

A VILLAGE ON BELLAMY'S PLAN.

Is the Ambition of Plainfield in Relation to Projected a Co-operative Settlement.

Plainfielders who have had their curiosity aroused by the appearance of a "blue sign-board bearing the word "Graceland" and rearing its head in solitude alongside the Jersey Central railway tracks midway between this city and Dunellen, and the stations, will be interested in the following information concerning the plans of the "Graceland" projectors.

The sign-board blue sign stands in a surrounded by ordinary farm land. During the past week a party of surveyors have been busily engaged in mapping this out for building purposes.

The land was subdivided and courses were laid for street-makers. There was a plan submitted, and a suggestion at first, as the engineers were reticent, but it is now learned that the land is being laid out for a co-operative settlement to be called Graceland. The work is going on rapidly, and contracts for a complete system of water-works and asphalt drives and walks have already been given out.

There will be a co-operative store, opera house, public library, water-works, roads and all other public institutions, on a plan similar to that suggested by Bellamy and other advocates of co-operation. Speculation will be discouraged as much as possible, the management having declared that no land sold will be allowed to purchase any of the building lots for speculative purposes, and every one who buys must build a house or forfeit his claim to land in the settlement. The plans for the opera house provide for assembly two-story buildings, with two-story stage built at each end. The dressing rooms and band scenes will be known no more. Town property will gain, and the town flourish yon. The Commons is sold at least $3,000, and the cost of the land is not to exceed $1,500, while the houses erected on the principal avenue must cost at least $3,000. For the purpose of the settlement, for the members of the settlement who may be in financial distress, and in case of a member's death his family will be given a yearly allowance of $1 for the support of his under-esteem. The projector says that the settlement is to be founded and carried on on the principles that landlordism should be abolished, as it is a menace to the happiness and high development of the human race.

Graceland is a village on Bellamy's plan.

Having taken a thorough course in optics under Dr. Ed. Klein, of Cleveland, I am prepared to test the eyes and to fit spectacles and eye-glasses to correct defective vision.

A full line of new and artistic designs for the Mantelpiece, in Jewelry, Silverware, Clocks, &c.

REPAIRING in all its branches handly done.

Buying goods from the manufacturer, I am able to offer them at reasonable prices.

Gold Spectacles and Eye-Glasses always on hand at

CALEB DICKINSON'S,
13 Front; 4 Prosper, Plainfield, N. J. 2 24 tf

J. Wm. Lloyd,

Professional Nurse and Masseur.

Invalid Companion a Specialty.

Terms, lowest obtainable; gentlemanly, good hands.

Highest references—Plainfield, Westfield, Elizabeth, New York—on application.

Permanent address, WESTFIELD, N. J. 2 19 tf

CATARRH

ELY'S CREAM BALM

HAY-FEVER

Apply Balm into each nostril and it will be absorbed. Relief is immediate and a cure follows. Not drying. Does not produce sneezing. A particle is applied into each nostril and is agreeable. Price 50 cents at Druggists or by mail, registered, 60 cents. ELY BROTHERS, 56 Warren street, New York. 1 12 ly

MELLIN'S FOOD

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS.

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

The Only Perfect Substitute for Mother's Milk.

INVALUABLE IN CHOLERA INFANTUM AND TEETHING.

A Guide to Scientific Feeding Free

FOR DYSPEPTICS, CONSUMPTIVES, CONVALESCENTS.

A PERFECT FOOD. SUPPLIED IN ALL WARTING CLIMATES.

REMOVES NO COOKING. KEEPS IN ALL CLIMATES.

SEND for Book of Opinions of the Press and Testimonials.

Mellin's Food Co.,
BOSTON, MASS.

3 13 ly-pow

Three Kinds of Men.

It takes, they tell us, all sorts of people to make a World. Well just name one or two kinds.

First—There's the fellow that who buys his clothing from cheap, hurrah clothing stores.

Next—comes the thoughtless man, who pays twice the high and naughty set prices of merchant tailor.

Third—The man who has sign stands to surrounded by ordinary farm land. During the past week a party of surveyors have been busily engaged in mapping this out for building purposes.

The land was subdivided and courses were laid for street-makers. There was a plan submitted, and a suggestion at first, as the engineers were reticent, but it is now learned that the land is being laid out for a co-operative settlement to be called Graceland. The work is going on rapidly, and contracts for a complete system of water-works and asphalt drives and walks have already been given out.

There will be a co-operative store, opera house, public library, water-works, roads and all other public institutions, on a plan similar to that suggested by Bellamy and other advocates of co-operation. Speculation will be discouraged as much as possible, the management having declared that no land sold will be allowed to purchase any of the building lots for speculative purp ses, and every one who buys must build a house or forfeit his claim to land in the settlement. The plans for the opera house provide for assembly two-story buildings, with two-story stage built at each end. The dressing rooms and band scenes will be known no more. Town property will gain, and the town flourish yon. The Commons is sold at least $3,000, and the cost of the land is not to exceed $1,500, while the houses erected on the principal avenue must cost at least $3,000. For the purpose of the settlement, for the members of the settlement who may be in financial distress, and in case of a member's death his family will be given a yearly allowance of $1 for the support of his under-esteem. The projector says that the settlement is to be founded and carried on on the principles that landlordism should be abolished, as it is a menace to the happiness and high development of the human race.

CONVERTED by THE PRESS.

Mr. Bowen Changes His Mind and is in Favor of Just One More License.

The following letter, it is the privilege of THE PRESS to publish:

NETHERWOOD, N. J., Feb. 24.

Mr. Frank E. Mills:

Dear Friend:—I trust the articles appearing in to-night's PRESS will not lead you to think that your friends in Netherwood are trying to prevent you obtaining a license for your beautiful new h tel Alden. For from it!

We believe in the saloon, of which we have enough. Plainfield cannot refuse your application and I wish you good fortune with your new undertaking.

Sincerely,
HENRY E BOWEN.

Funeral of William Colthar.

Funeral services over the remains of Wm. Colthar were held from his late residence, 140 Duer street, North Plainfield, Tuesday afternoon. The house was filled with friends of the deceased, who came to pay their last respects to the departed. The Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of the Trinity Reformed church, of which deceased was a member, officiated at the funeral sermon. The remains were carried from the house by D. N. Force, George Sail, Peter Doorringer and George R. McGill, members of Washington Lodge, No. 3401, Knights of Honor, to which Mr. Colthar had belonged. Interment was made at Bound Brook.

GATHERED FROM EVERYWHERE.

MATCHES have been in common use since 1829.

At the Salvation Army's food depot in London a basin of soup is sold for a cent.

In fashionable marriage notices in the newspapers the bride is always described as the bridegroom.

Two Pennsylvania gentlemen recently engaged in a duel with rifles at 100 paces. They fought six hours a day, stopping at noon to eat and smoke.

A new method of advertising has been offered by the East Ind

UNFULFILLMENT.

I can not have them back,
My ships that sailed so long ago;
For cold waves tossing on and on
Have covered them with snow.

They sailed so fair and free,
With towering masts and sails of white,
Out from a harbour of dreams, all bright,
Out on a trackless sea.

Perhaps in regions far
They lie, with their misty snips of mine,
Perhaps they bounded treasure-laden
Like some wild steed at rein.

Perhaps in unexplored seas
They float, with the fields diamonded, bare,
The spars of ancient wood and oil,
The tops of weather-beaten.

No more I look and long,
No more I watch and wait toward
For shadows on the storm-swept
For beacon-lights ahead.

No more I strain my eyes
For some returning signal there,
Some answering sail to meet mine,
That hold my hopes and fears.

And if I could again
Keep once more those freckled ships,
Watch once I watched with aching eyes
The pleasant sea before me,

For youth has slipped away;
And if those same ships once more
Came sailing home from unknown shore
Into my quiet bay,

I could not buy in truth,
For hopes are dead, and towers in Spain?
Which, crumbled into air again
Have perished with a breath.

I do not wish them back.
The best of life to me remains
In self-reliance, strength, and time—
Content I do not lack.

O yearning soul! whose sight
Is set for gain and not for loss,
That ne'er shall catch a backward look
Nor rouse a backward thought,

Be content. The better part
Is thine. The fretful waves are stilled.
The glad of spirit all satisfied.
Shall never vex thy heart.

Fulfillment may not be.
The ships sailed high with answered hopes,
Yet still adown the sunset slopes,
Some vessels sail for me.

—Hattie N. Packard, in Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

MR. BOWSER.

Mrs. B. Tells a Wonderful Story of Surprises.

How She Was Overcome by Unwonted Kindness and Solicitude Before and Better Every Day. The Cook's Opinion.

T HAS been a f ort night of surprises to me and I hardly expect the public he lieves w h a t I am about to relate.

The o k t o r morning, as we were seated at breakfast, Mr. Bowser observed:

"You don't look exactly well, Mrs. Bowser, and it has worried me for the last three or four days. Are you ailing?"

"It's that—that same tooth, you know," I replied. "I think the filling will have to come out and the work be done over again."

"Too bad! If there's any thing on earth to make one miserable it's the toothache. I'll go down with you this afternoon if you wish."

I looked up at him in the greatest amazement. Mr. Bowser is not a cold-hearted husband, but, like so many others, he is prone to keep all of his tenderness and most of his praise for himself. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred his words would have been:

"Tooth aching again, eh? Well, if you don't know any better than to get your feet wet or to sit in a draught, you must take the consequences. You've got sixteen hollow teeth and yet none of them ever ache."

Mr. Bowser's kindness and solicitude surprised me and touched my heart, but there was no time to speak. Whether he was ready to go down-town he asked:

"Any thing I can send up from the drug store? No? Well, better make up your mind to go down to the dentist's this afternoon. It won't be that boy of ours does grow! And, say, I have been watching him for the past few days and must praise you for the tidy manner in which you dress him, and for his respectful and genteel manners. So long, little one—home by twelve."

"PIGS AND PIPERS."

Well, I stood and looked after him, and then I sat down and stared at the wall, and then I rumbled on the lounge and began to boo-hoo like a girl who had lost her first beau. The cook came in and caught me at it, and raising her hands to heaven, she exclaimed:

"Pigs and pipers! but he's been walking all over you again! If I had such a husband I'd get down on my knees."

It was no use to tell her that I was crying because Mr. Bowser had not scolded after me, and she withdrew declaring that she almost felt it her duty to mix rough on rats with his pudding.

In a day or two there was another surprise. At noon Mr. Bowser observed:

"You haven't been out of the house an evening for two weeks. Suppose we go to the theater to-night?"

I looked at him under.

"It's a play I know we shall both enjoy, and we'll take Harry along. He's old enough to take something about it, and he won't be the least bother."

"Do you mean that we shall all go—go—"

"Go to the theater, Mrs. Bowser. Just make your arrangements accordingly."

When he had gone I stood up and shed tears. Then I sat down and cried. Then I fell over on the lounge and indulged in some more boo-hoo, and I hadn't got through when the cook came to the door ran in of an errand and caught me, and exclaimed:

"Mrs. Bowser, I wouldn't stand it another day! I'd get up and assert my independence even if I had to go out and do washing at fifty cents a day! The idea of that man sitting down on you the way he does is something shameful!"

We went to the theater, and Mr. Bowser praised the play, the actors, the house and every-thing else. He even permitted five different men, who had forgotten to bring their beer in bottles, to rot on and crowd near us three times to go out and guzzle. On the way home he even permitted a cab-driver to run over a dog, and when we reached the doorway I had no cold in my head, my tooth had ceased to ache, and I was the happiest woman in Detroit.

"JUST BUT SOMETHING TO PLEASE YOU DEVIL."

They called us late and late, for the next morning I was awakened by the cook, who exclaimed:

"Mrs. Bowser, I would encourage you, and I would sympathize with you, and I would help you in every way, but I'm going to leave this house!"

"Why, what's the matter?" I asked, sitting up in bed.

"Matter enough! Mr. Bowser has been down to the kitchen and built the fire, and he has been out to the back gate and talked with the ash-man, and he has been up-stairs and shaved himself, and he has been down to the basement and filled the coal-hod, and he has been out to the front gate and talked with the milk-man, and he has been up-stairs and dressed Harry for school, and he has been down to the kitchen and got breakfast, and he has been up-stairs and called you, and he has been down to the kitchen and washed the dishes, and he has been up-stairs and put on his overcoat and hat, and he has been down to the kitchen and told me to get a better breakfast than ever before, and he has been up-stairs and told you to stay in bed and rest, and he has been down to the kitchen and told me to look after you, and he has been up-stairs and told you to get well

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
W. L. FORCE & A. I. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1891. No. 10.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well in its limitations as in its authorities."—MADISON

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Masters-in-Chancery, Notaries Public, and Special Commissioners of Park avenue and Second streets.—1yr—[1087]

W. V. STELLE,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court, Commissioner of Deeds, Etc.
Office, Park and North Aves. 4-30-1yr

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer.
Sales of real estate promptly solicited. P. O. Box 114, Dunellen, N. J., or residence in rear of the office for sales. Terms reasonable.

DR. CHARLES R. THEIM,
Dentist,
29 West Front street. A new local anesthetic (application for extracting teeth without pain or filling a cavity).—[1081]

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 71, Scotch Plains, N. J. Orders left at C. J. Gilbert's, second hand store, 48 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—[1081]

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
421 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 11 and 12. Telephone call, 1,000 Bank Building.] Residence, Plainfield, N. J.—1m[1081]

J. R. FENSTER,
Veterinary Surgeon,
Office in A. M. Seguine's livery stable, near Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Day or night calls promptly attended to. Telephone No. 15. Specialties on diseases of all domestic animals. Residence, 70 East Fifth street, corner Clinton street.—[1081]

JOHN CHANDLER,
JARPENTER AND BUILDER,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Residence and Shop No. 36 East 3d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 4947

LUPKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds,
VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON,
No. 24 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
A. LUPKINS. L. A. HUMMER.

G. W. FORCE,
11 West Front street.
Opening of
FALL AND WINTER STOCK
Boots and Shoes at Low Prices
A FINE BRANDS OF GOODS TO SELECT FROM.
11 West Front street,
G. W. FORCE.
1m139

TO THE PUBLIC!
We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of
LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.
It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it to any customer and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice.
A. D. COOK & BRO.
1m[1]

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
[Formerly Clerk's.]
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.
repairing neatly and promptly done.
4917

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones,
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments
All work contracted is the most skilful manner and at very reasonable prices. Shop on Second avenue, in HAMILTON.
Front St., next to M. E. Ch., PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Montpelier erected in Greenwood Cemetery.—1y 7

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No. 8 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of footwear made direct from manufacturers, at low prices. 4894

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
Is now Outside proprietor of the old established market at
No. 14 NORTH AVENUE.
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the finest grades of Fresh and Salt meats, Fish of all kinds, Oysters, Clams, Game in season at the lowest market prices. Anything not on hand kept in stock furnished at short notice.

HOTELS AND SALOONS

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR D. L. & W. STATION.)
JAS. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat, First-class plumbing.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-31-87

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Cauldy Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. BOYCE, Proprietor.
Pleasantest and quietest hotel, at fair rates. First-class stables and sheds attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours.

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest on the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER, "
ELIAS S. POPE, Treasurer.
1y6

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS,
SENT IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE.
4947

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C.E. & J.W. BROWN,
(Successors to G. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.)
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tints, Anaglypta, Hand, Leather Relief Flock Papers, &c. Borders for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades,
3d3-87

LIVERY.
A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables

Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Carriages for Weddings, Parties and Funerals. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure.
RIDING OR LIVERY
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or stores are driven. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day, week or month.—[1079]
TELEPHONE CALL, No. 36.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
ADJOINING Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to answer demands for all kinds of livery stable service, and hopes by close attention and polite treatment to merit the liberal patronage so long bestowed upon his predecessors.

Accommodation Express.
PETER EMERY, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderbeek's Washstore, Park avenue. The "Accommodation Express" will attend to the carrying business of the city, including baggage to and from the Depot, or from any place in town. Moving of Furniture, Pianos, &c., carefully and promptly attended to. Prices to Others

INSURANCE.
FIRE INSURANCE!
The following are the only Companies I represent in the
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York, as regards to assets, equitable insurance rates, liberality in settlement of losses and the character of their business, reliable:
NATHAN HARPER.
1y

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.
4[illegible]

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represents other first-class Fire Insurance Companies. Agents of the Home Mutual Building Loan Association. Insured Savings. Plainfield Co-operative National Bank Stock Bought and Sold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for Sale.
OFFICE:
6 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS S. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
No. 20 FRONT STREET, NORTH PLAINFIELD.
Orders called for and delivered. A share of the public patronage solicited.

EDUCATIONAL

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 Lafayette Avenue.
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modern Languages, Music, Drawing and Painting. 7 11

PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES

Paints, Varnishes, Glass.
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
4[illegible]

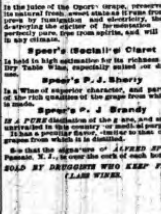
L. S. WOOLSTON. J. F. BUCKLE
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 28 NORTH AVENUE
4[illegible]

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS R. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Carey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—108 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 628. Piano moving a specialty. 11[illegible]

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Best Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 3-25-1f

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman.
29 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD. [illegible]

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weekly persons and the aged.


Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD,
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the finest ripe Oporto grapes, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left long until thoroughly ripened and hence fairly matured before gathering. Its invaluable
Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness can be relied upon by the principal Hospitals and Doctors of Passaic County, where it is used. We will guarantee that a case of twelve bottles of this wine will be delivered in the aged and debilitated families in the various villages in that otherwise weaker sex.
It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the juice of the purest grapes, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it comes from the vine, by excluding the air and electricity, thereby stopping the ferment of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's (Sacramental) Claret
is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.
Speer's P. J. Sherry is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is produced.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
is of superior excellence as a pure, and strong spirit used in this country or much prepared. Without question the purest, strongest and best Brandy from which it is distilled.
See that the signature of JAMES SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 4[illegible]

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The best 10 cent cigar in the State, and made on the premises from the finest
CLEAR HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
Always constant on hand a large assortment of Cigars, Cigarettes and Tobacco always on hand.
Cigars Articles in Great Variety.
1[illegible]

O. M. FINE,
Dealer in Havana & Domest
—SEGARS!—
No. 20 PARK AVE., (NEAR DEPOT) BROOKFIELD, PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated "Old Judge" smoking tobacco, which he recommends for cleanliness and quality. 4[illegible]

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
(Successor to H. B. Maynard.)
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 20 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting done at their residences on short notice. Shampooing, &c., satisfactorily performed. 4[illegible]

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Madison Avenue, cor. Fifth St. Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

CARNEY BROS., Ag'ts,
11 SOMERSET ST.
TINNERS,
PLUMBERS,
GAS FITTERS.
PARLOR STOVES,
COOK STOVES,
HEATERS.
Grates and Bricks for all kinds of Stoves on hand here at Johnson' prices. Bring your Tinware needing to us. We can do it. We are the best Plumbers, and the best Gas-fitters in this section. Weuse none but the very best of gas burners, and our work always gives satisfaction.
Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.
Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

WHATEVER form of printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings,
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memorials,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Public or Private Circulation.
Everything.

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST.

DAILY PRESS

(Chautauqua Building)

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING.
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc., Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above branches in a satisfactory and workmanlike manner.
Estimates furnished upon application. Shop on Somerset street, rear of Somerset House. Residence, 20 Somerset street.
D. W. LITTELL,
No. 2 NORTH AVE. (OPP. Plainfield, N. J.

TOLD IN RHYME.

A Single-mind Reader.
In thought "my queen" I'd call her, but
That let us most likely spoil it.
Then I would give the world to be
The title bestowed on her.
Until, at last, I vowed no more
To fight the feeling down.
And so I added the maid's name
To the list of my "Loves" I'd won.
To my great joy she answered "Yes,"
And we're engaged, my queen and I.
With a fast-speeding cheap steam mind,
Chicago is the single's jungle.
Single, single, single, single,
Single, single, single, single,
Single, single, single, single,
Ting! sang the bell.

Her eyes she turned, around her brow
Some of her ringlets clustered.
And, as we left the ring, I
Felt that I'd been deserted.
To-day, with wildly-throbbing heart,
To her I came to offer
My love, but she had left me
Without my proffer.
He sent me to your door to ask
You, dear, to get a wedding.
And now he bids me tell you that
He died of being single.
And so am I," she sorely said,
And she has gone to join the band
Single, single, single, single,
Single, single, single, single,
Single, single, single, single,
Ting! sang the bell.
—Margaret Sydney, in Detroit Free Press.

The Bronco's Song.
Through all the dotted years
That fill the future's space
I'll hoping mostly travel
The days, untilled, unsown.
While wrestling earth along
Upon its lazy way,
I'll sing to her that's waiting
And happy breast, to sing.
While other days depart,
The melody of spring
Shall fill my throat and heart!
—E. M. Musselman, in Harper's Weekly.

Her Perfect Lover.
"I had a lover once," she sighed,
"Yes, just once," her father said,
Who listened when I spoke and tried
To answer all my questions."

"He courteous and so kind—so good,
Held sacred this a most small to be
An idle word, or jest, or look
Anyon too often are to see.

"He loved me for my own sake, and
He used to swear, would ne'er grow tired
He would not frown that one day
Could change I'd love him!

"If he had faults he kept them hid.
I should have been blind! Yes; true,
And that's exactly what I did.
My perfect lover, sir, was—you!"
—Frederick Langbridge, in Judge.

The Two Ladies.
To rightly mold a pleasing lay,
One lacks the skill, the other key;
No wisdom has, in fantastic vein,
Run Again.
Silver Cup
Love And
There's something fallaciously quite,
Comparing rhymes and stolen sights
For "sparkling eyes" one sees Runs Again.
People Cliff
Down And
Now after dogwood like this,
The maiden sighs, the lover smiles
Who send and roses and lonely swans—
Run
Downs—and keep 'em there
—Charles Bloomingdale, Jr., in Puck.

Window-Pane Pictures.
From ere till dawn, the long night through Cold winter sills hand
Rich pictures drew
Of fairy land.
Beneath the touch of keenest hand,
Bright flowers grew, and feathery gleamed
On frozen panes, and glittering
Tangles of fairy-land.

The long night's cold frost were bent
With silver sheen, and forth was sent
A flowery trees from distant height
To where the sun's rays strayed to sight,
And forced caste—and

Then, with the coming of silver strand,
Hanging in mid-air fairly,
A drawbridge spanned the chasm grand,
And there was no ability.

A stream flowed down the mountain's side,
And cast a silvery spray,
Which glistened bright in gold and silds,
With graceful bend and easy grids
It reached the valley's floor,
And in deep gorges swept away.

Now, as the sun's rays brighter grow
A wavering light, a pale rose stage
That touched the leaves and mosses' fringe,
Fell on the misty floor.
Seeing the distant peaks aglow,
Casting from them bright their snow.

So fairy-land now fadeaway,
And we may watch in vain
Our frost pictures melt from sight—
Yet they have left a memory bright
In all the hearts of us.—Nicholas

In Token of the Love You Gave.
In token of the love you gave,
The faith, the trust, pledged in me,
When our young hearts were glad and free,
I plant these flowers upon your grave!

The wood is for you never to give
A value like it took away!
Nevermore a joyous day
Since you are gone, shall know or live.
—T. Thos. Fortune, in Springfield Republican

A Modern Meditation.
I wonder sometimes what I'd do
If all the world were mine;
If I should be unhappy
And incumbrous and benign,
Of course I would, I think I should Completely fill the bill.
But when "I don't" becomes "I could,"
"Would" isn't always "will."

Of course to rule the world would be
The direst kind of fun,
The simple pleasure problems prove
Would please most any one;
But I am not so much that I
Should do it well at all;
The world, you know, is rather big
And man is rather small.

I'd make mistakes, I'm very sure,
And stir up lots of foes,
And pretty soon the world would get Into an awful mess.
So, while I'd like to have the power
To make things run and size,
I rather think the universe
Is better as it is.
—Somerville Journal.

Our Baby.
A king in a kingdom
That's ruled by love,
Our baby holds absolute sway
And if he's willful
When his wants are made known
A request is granted right away.

Then every one runs,
From grandma to nurse,
The kingdom's topsy-turvy
In a whirl;
He has swallowed a button,
Or pulled down the curtain,
The jewel his mamma's sweet pearl!

We bow to his rule
In meek awes and love,
An edict from his royal mind,
He's little, but my,
How he rules all over
When he raises a hullabaloo.
—Home Visitor.

Distressing Greenlight.
Stick (to Bloomer)—Is this Mr. Bloomer's office?
Bloomer—No. His office is across the hall.
Stick (leaving the door open as he walks out)—Thank you, sir.
Bloomer (to office boy)—Come back and close that door! Haven't you any doors in your house?
Office Boy—Yes, sir; but they all have spring-on 'em. Allow me to show you, sir, my patent, double-back-action door spring. Only fifty cents, sir. Guaranteed to last a lifetime.—Life.

THE WOMAN OF FASHION.

She Must Wear Skirts That Sweep the Muddy Streets.

The Many Windows Reveal Glimpses of the Early Spring Fashions—Violets and Grapes Are to Be the Favorite Colors—Charming Toques.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

The prettiest dress of the season was seen at Daly's on the first night of "School for Scandal." It was of light gray lady's cloth, trimmed with velvet and rustle of the same tint. A small satin toque bordered with velvet and adorned with two American Beauty roses was fastened on the hair by means of a cut silver hat pin, giving the appearance of a diamond-headed arrangement. A tiny scuff of lace and gray satin was suspended around the neck by a silver chain.

It is a signed, sealed and settled fact that the woman of, fashionsmust sweep the streets with her skirts. The Paris modistes have signed their names to paragraphs embodying this fashion. Our own dressmakers have sealed the decree by following it to the letter and the woman of fashion has put on the sweeping skirt and swum it on the public thoroughfares—and that settles it.

BRIDE'S EVENING GOWN.

Yet one constitutional cry of many thousand frequented streets dulls the beauty of the lower two inches of the skirt, tags out the skirt braid and causes the lashing to hang in rags. A few neat and ingenious women have overcome the difficulty by binding the gown with velvet and facing it with oil cloth, which can be obtained for such purposes. This arrangement greatly lessens the otherwise attendant slovenliness.

Glimpses of early spring goods are already to be seen in the show windows. The spring styles are not fully revealed to the expectant world of women, but mysterious peeps are permitted to the watchers of a wait there, much sooner as eagerly and impatiently as the small boy watches for the curtain to go up at the show.

The shop windows, as now seen, are but the prelude to what is to come later —the orchestra to the opera—and there is nearly time for the real display of the season.

If one bright note any special characteristic of the materials displayed, it would be the peculiarity of tint. Decided shades are rarely seen. They are lous the hat to suit. The fur band with which it is to be trimmed is always selected after the hair and prettily contrasted before being put upon the hat.

NEW STYLES IN HAIRDRESSING.

For a wedding that is to take place early summer, the following are among the gowns ordered:

An evening dress of white crepe de Chine, trimmed with strings of pearls and pearl embroidery. There is a bertha train. The sleeves are prettily opened from the shoulders and caught in two places with pearl clasps. A long pearl girdle hangs at the side.

The wedding gown is of ivory Duchess satin, trimmed with chiffon and point lace. Orange blossoms are embroidered from the shoulders down to the front of the pointed bodice. White satin feather trimming extends around the front and sides of the foot of the skirt. The court train is entirely abandoned and is nearly three yards in length measuring from the waist.

There is a travelling gown in electric blue cloth, trimmed with gold and blue passementerie. A band of brazer edges the neck and revers of the bodice, and also trims the dress skirt. Velvet forms the material for the bodice, cuffs, collar and band around the skirt above the braver.

As the bride elect is to marry an amateur sportsman, a dress has been ordered for tramps over fields in muddy and all kinds of weather. It is not a sportswoman's dress precisely, but will be very nicely for honeymoon expeditions. It is of thick, soft, brown tweed. A horizontal skirt extends down to the ankles. Underneath are knickerbockers, and leggings buttoning to the knee to meet the former. A plain, brown cloth waist is worn and, over it, a zouave jacket, double-breasted, with high sleeves. With this goes a little toreador hat, with brown silk pom pons. Mosquetaire gloves of tan color, stitched with black, are worn beneath white linen cuffs.

A SIMPLE EXPERIMENT.

With a Little Care You Can Make It Very Interesting.

Choose six keys of graduated sizes, says the Boston Globe, which we will number from one to six, so as to facilitate explanation.

Place on the table the bits of the two larger keys, No. 1 and No. 2, and put into the ring of key No. 1 the ring of key No. 2, as shown in the illustration. These two keys, 1 and 2, will form a very wide eagle, and in passing your hand on the rings whom you must be sure that they stand firmly; for if they will not slip on the table, as they are to serve as a fulcrum. Then put the bit of key No. 3 into the ring of key No. 2; after that, in succession, the bits of Nos. 4, 5 and 6 into the rings of 3, 4 and 5, as in 2. Look from the top to see that the axis of your several keys are in a vertical position. If the hooking of the bits in the rings has been carefully done, there should be none of the trembling on the last key (No. 6) nothing will be more simple than to place on the rings of keys No. 5 and 6 (the last one being horizontal and almost flat) sundry articles of the most fragile kind, so as to make an effective display of porcelains, plates, bowls, decanters, bottles, etc.

MANTLE AND BONNET.

If a bottle, it must be half full of water to add its center of gravity may not be too high, which increases the steadiness of the combination, or, rather, decreases its unsteadiness.

To Test the Quality of Suiting.

A London journal says that to test the quality of bolting, a sure method is to take a piece, say 6x1 inches, and cut it down the middle into two strips, each one inch wide, and submit the leather to a tearing strain. If the grain breaks with more than the quality of hide and quality of tanning and currying, it will have great power of resisting wear; but if torn, then most of the fibers will not pull out, but will break, being thoroughly saturated with oil and each other by greasy oils and it, in the tearing strain, the fibers pull out to a great extent, that is an indication of imperfect or incomplete currying, though the original quality of the tan, hide of the leather may be very good. Poor pieces of leather tears easily and a majority of the fibers break short off. A final test is to moisten a piece of leather in testing the fibers themselves, by rubbing it with the fingers at first dry and then with soapy water, as the fibers become soft and pulpy from the effects of a breaking strain. In a piece of material which is of really poor quality the fibers have little strength, and this is easily perceptible.

The Proper Thing.

Mrs.—Darling, suppose I should be killed in a railroad accident, and you should be called before your husband's dead body, crushed and mangled body, should you thought out the proper thing to do?

She—Order a low-cut

JACK'S FAIR SWINDLER.

Fair Beauty Robbed an Innocent of a Neat Sum.

IT WAS commencement day at Union College, and the little town of Schenectady had for the time thrown off its accustomed lethargy. Jack Hammonds, a graduate, was awaiting the arrival of his friend who he met in the Sophomore class, and was standing along in the dark entrance. The figure was slight and graceful, the hair short and prettily curled, the hands and feet small and dainty.

SHE PLACED THE NOTES IN HIS POCKET-BOOK.

"That's no man," said Jack to himself. "It's a chance for a lark. I'll speak to her."

A few rapid steps brought him beside the figure, where the falsity of the dainty mustache was plainly detectable.

"Good-evening," said Jack, boldly.

The figure shrank away.

"Don't run from me," he continued, "because that wouldn't be manly, and when a girl attempts to masquerade she should not feel herself in her part."

"You have penetrated my disguise," said the girl, "and now that you know I am a woman you will, I am sure, treat me courteously."

"But you will allow me to escort you home?" pleaded Jack.

"Please, sir, let me pass."

"Is he your escort? If so I'll make the request," argued Jack. "Your disguise is to think that anybody can see through it with me unless obliged to do so. Won't you please take it and send it to me at home in a draft, or something of that kind?"

Taking from her pocket a roll of bank notes, she handed them to Jack.

"What is the amount?" he asked.

"Seven hundred and eighty dollars," she replied, writing her address upon a card.

He placed the notes in his already well-filled pocket-book.

"My roll looks insignificant beside yours," she said, laughingly.

"That because yours is in higher notes," explained Jack. "My roll really contains nearly one hundred dollars less than yours. When do you leave?" he said, with a voice.

"To-morrow, certainly," answered Jack.

"You have, possibly, prevented me from getting into serious difficulty, for I should have been arrested for impersonation. I am very grateful for your kindness and will, under pledge of secrecy, explain my position."

"I promise," said Jack, unhesitatingly.

"If fear I shall bore you; but you will, I am sure, excuse it. Do you know Harry Greenhall, of the freshman class?"

By sight, not personally."

"What is my brother, and the only son of my widowed mother. To say that Harry is the dearest object on earth to me would be to express my love for him. Imagine my grief, then, to hear that he is getting wild and dissipated. I do not, I believe it, but could not rest until I knew the truth. I resorted to cards have myself—for the dress skirt. Velvet forms and myself. Fearing, however, that Harry would see me, I disguised myself as you will see now, completely, but my neck was completely hidden. You have proved that I was mistaken, and have put me to great trouble and expense, for which I can not suitably thank you."

Here the beautiful girl gave her hand, in token of thankfulness, and Jack's pulses bounded at the gentle pressure.

"The gratitude is mine," he explained, "that it has given me the pleasure of your—or, at least—"

"And I hope," said she, kindly com

DON'T RUN — THAT WOULDN'T BE MANLY.

ing to rescue him from his jumble, that my unlady-like costume has not lessened you in your estimation."

Jack assured her very warmly to the contrary; and then the conversation turned upon the brother, about whom his girl seemed so solicitous.

"Yet I did not surprise you?" she shyly said, a little later.

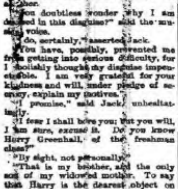
"If will do any thing to aid you," said Jack, gallantly. "I will myself investigate the facts regarding your brother, and report to you here to-morrow night. In the meantime, you can unfold yourself to which I will be a check. Your prompt rejection of my suit is a merited rebuke to my audacity. I have been rightly served to soften the blow by the reflection that I was only premature—that I took you sooner—as I expected you. And you say I did not?"

"You did not."

"Then, Pinkie Billmore," he exclaimed, "have you been trifling with me? Have you not artfully led to a declaration for the sole purpose of expecting me scornfully? I never breathed your name in the whole world, and have studiously concealed my feelings. How does it happen," he went on, holding her hand in both of a chair as if to steady himself, "that my sudden burst of passion did not take you by surprise?"

"Because, Mr. Longshot," gently replied the young woman, in whose lovely blue eyes there was a tender sympathy, these shone the clear light of truth itself, "because I saw when you came in that you had a tremendous jag on."—Chicago Tribune.

USED TO PUBLICITY.



Uncle Si Lowe—Well, well, Parthy! Ain't it funny how folks gettin' pretty much used to havin' their business spy everybody kin see right into 'em, like that.

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 WEEK	2 WEEKS	3 WEEKS	1 MONTH	2 MONTHS	3 MONTHS	6 MONTHS	1 YEAR
1 in.	$1.00	$1.50	$2.00	$3.00	$5.00	$7.00	$10.00	$15.00
2 in.	1.50	2.00	3.00	5.00	7.00	10.00	15.00	25.00
3 in.	2.00	3.00	4.00	7.00	10.00	15.00	25.00	40.00
4 in.	3.00	4.00	5.00	10.00	15.00	20.00	35.00	50.00
5 in.	4.00	5.00	6.00	12.00	18.00	25.00	40.00	60.00
6 in.	5.00	6.00	7.00	15.00	20.00	30.00	50.00	75.00
7 in.	6.00	7.00	8.00	18.00	25.00	35.00	60.00	90.00
8 in.	7.00	8.00	9.00	20.00	30.00	40.00	70.00	100.00
9 in.	8.00	9.00	10.00	25.00	35.00	50.00	80.00	120.00
10 in.	9.00	10.00	12.00	30.00	40.00	60.00	90.00	140.00
11 in.	10.00	12.00	15.00	35.00	50.00	70.00	100.00	160.00
12 in.	12.00	15.00	18.00	40.00	60.00	80.00	120.00	180.00

All Electro's must be solid metal.
Limit of "Everything" column, 3 cts. per line.
Locals 10 cts. per ct. advance of above rates.

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors. A. L. FORCE

DEMOCRATIC.

A Texas editor proclaimed the genuine doctrine of the Democratic party when he wrote as follows:

"The way to get plenty of money for this or any other country is to produce and offer for sale something other people need. Open the markets of the world to foreign producers and American goods, then continue to make something which others want and all the chemists of wealth will blossom forth and munificently fructify instead of stagnating."

The truth well told.

Furnish raw materials free to all manufacturing and fabricating interests.

Open the markets of the world to American products of every kind.

Levy import duties for revenue and adequate protection, based upon strict equity, to all classes and pursuits.

Restrict public expenditures to actual wants.

Thrust aside Mr. Kinley tariffism, Chase prohibition, monopoly favoritism and corrupt partisan jobbery.

Then would commerce revive, agriculture obtain a new lease of life, labor, industry and enterprise thrive, and real wealth find a natural resting place among the toiling masses.

That is the Democratic plan, fortified by justice and enlightened business intelligence.

AMITY.

General Johnston, the ex Confederate, acting as a pall-bearer at the funeral of General Sherman, the distinguished chief-tain, was a beautiful exemplification of the return of national amity.

Those two men, eminent as military commanders, had crossed swords with each other until the roar of battle, and when the conflict ended, they both accepted the result as final and grasped friendly hands at the altar of blessed peace.

General Sherman and Johnston knew and acknowledged years ago that the war was over, and earnestly desired that nothing should perpetuate the spirit of sectional animosity.

In that patriotic fraternity confusion, we believe, soldiers of the Republic generally concur.

The only disturbers of national brotherhood who now would fan the embers are a set of venomous politicians, with whom pelf is superior to patriotism and power, unscrupulously attained, the goal of their ambition.

The people ought to remand all such political war-lors far to the rear. Precious few of them went to the army front when duty called, and few indeed would ever brave the perils of martial combat did the necessity arise.

Away with fighting politicians.

The country needs peace and prosperity.

WASHINGTONIAN.

A service in commemoration of the 159 h anniversary of the birth of George Washington was held 22 d ult., in St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church, New York, and a special thanksgiving for the occasion closed the

"We wish that in his administration of our civil affairs he set an example of wisdom, prudence, incorruptible integrity and forgetfulness of self in his love for country and loyalty to his conscience and his God; and we earnestly pray that his pure principle at the beginning of our National life may be more faithfully followed in the future than in the past."

That fervent supplication is surrounded with truthfulness the character of Washington, and no richer legacy could the people of this nation ever receive as an augur for its fulfilment.

Wisdom.

Prudence.

Incorruptible Integrity.

Perfect Forbearance.

What a galaxy of splendid virtues? Their practical observance by Washington, as Commander, Council or and President, made his name illustrious and his official services a national blessing.

Would that all public men of the present and future, regardless of party, an affinity, were swayed by the Washingtonian example!

Then indeed would a political millennium dawn.

Congress adjourned on March 4, and it is to be hoped that the country will never again see assembled such a Congress. Wm Reedham and McKinleyism the past session has been a disgrace to the country.

The House of Representatives has passed the bill, previously passed by the Senate, refunding to the several Northern States the $17,009 000 raised in direct taxes during the war for the support of the government. The House has added an amendment which requires, as a condition precedent to the payment of the money, the passage of a law accepting the amount appropriated as a full payment for all claims up to the act. This amendment must yet be adopted by the Senate, and the bill approved by the President. In the present arrangeuny of funds in the national treasury, it would not be surprising if the bill, in either one or the other of those necessary actions such delay as will throw the matter over to the next Congress.

Before This Louisa.

There is an application before the Council for a liquor license, dated March Day. Day should be granted a license then it is not kept in an orderly manner. The Press, therefore, would suggest that the application of Day be rejected.

Published Anonymous Buried Abroad.

[From The New Brunswick Fredonian.]

A few weeks ago some of the musical people of this city thought they would like to attend the concert given by the Philharmonic Association, of Plainfield. One of the members wrote to a friend at that place and received the following reply:

"You can have your musical friends at our house, but they must understand that every seat in the house was sold before the first concert was given and there is a standing offer of $5 a night for any one of the seats. They would better remain at home, for they could not get inside the Opera House at $10 apiece."

Such appreciation is refreshing to the people and most encouraging to a society which cultivates so commendably and creditably its art. The Monitor would suggest that this be communicated to the members of the Plainfield fire de.

Uncertainty any amount realizes vexatious and subscription; but it never surrounds the prisoner who has taken Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Price 25 cents.

"My sore throat is thought, and my cough is relieved by the use of Piso's Cure. Your fellow of course is did. Piso's Cure for Consumption Oil. Only 25 cts.

THE VOICE OF THE SIX.

The Diverse Action of the Democratic Conference, Says Mr. Schenck, and Each Member Does His Duties.

A congressman has completely filled the bill. He listened to the sermon of the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Sunday night, on "The Voice of the Six Mighties that Shall Be Heard in the Land of Ham," delivered in the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn. He was attracted by the remark that against the action in this high-handed scheme he entertained no hostility, personal or political. He was correct he might be in his address, he should cherish no ill will. Such a feeling would be entirely out of place in a pulpit discourse, especially in a Christian minister. He reserved to himself the right, however, to criticise the action of a body of men which he believed to be possessed of strong and wicked disregarded public sentiment and the rights of the Christian church.

His text he took from 2 Kings, xii: 8-11, telling the story of how the young king Rehoboam had disregarded the appeals of his people to make their burdens no heavier, and had, instead, threatened to add one did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke: my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions."

This was—said Mr. Schenck—was very like that of the Six of Council. The representatives of the people were before them in person, and presented the miserable appeals that their burdens should be made no heavier. The unheeded prayer of the Israelites to Rehoboam was that of the Israelites to the Christian people to their rulers. The Six had acted on the advice of foolish men, and their reply to the people was equally foolish. Instead of the reply of Rehoboam, "Though your yoke was grievous, it shall be still heavier; though ye were afflicted with whips, ye shall be afflicted with scorpions," the Christian fathers cursed ye with four saloons and two hotels within a radius of fifty yards, we shall smite you with five saloons and two hotels." And the voice of the multitude, of scores, of hundreds, of 2,000, was not so mighty as the voice of the Six. The Christian people were disregarded and defied. Look out for the result and the retribution!

Had a census been taken,—continued the preacher—with respect to this matter of licensing the saloon at 10 West Second street, it would have shown that fully eight-tenths of the people were opposed to the granting of the license; and of the remaining two-tenths one-tenth would have taken the same stand if they were free. But their names would not appear in public and thus work injury to their business through withdrawal of saloon patronage. Even the saloon men, in their public platform, public sentiment had expressed itself against licensing this saloon. Of public addresses there had been 15 or 20 and of petitions there were 12 or 15, and each speaker had represented large constituencies in proclaiming opposition to the liquor traffic in general and to this saloon in particular. The Press protests as there were—multiplications of appeals! They came from an educational institution where young men were coming to develop honest character; from reformatory institutions, including the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and Reform Club, whose members were men rescued from the curse and curse of strong drink. That appeal, if no other, from such men, ought to have made an impression on the Six. There was also an appeal from such representative citizens as ex-Mayor, V F Randolph, whose orderly administration of Music Hall for years had made it a model; from ex-Mayor Van Winkle. The petitioner claimed that since the money had been raised by assessment on them for the New Second Ward Station House, and from such men as Charles Hyde, with all his wealth, J. R. Myers, L. o Bull, Wm. Hood, and others. There were was the appeal from the Netherwooders, addressed particularly to one Councilman, appealing to him as their representative to vote for the interests of the community. Then there was the appeal of the property owners of the immediate vicinity, saying: "We have a right to expect rights and do that which will decorate the value of our estates". Then there were appeals from the lodges and societies in the very edifice where this session was proposed to be, stating that a saloon there would interfere with the growth of the orders and would ruin property. Then there was the appeal from the Sunday-schools and Christian churches in massmeetings assembled; and this church itself. These appeals were not unreasonable. They challenged any man of the Six to affirm in the papers or anywhere else that the saloon was not unreasonable. No: the appeal was highly reasonable, and the granting of the asked-for license was an invasion, an intrusion, nearly six hars where it was given. God knows there was no need of that.

The appeals before the Six were unheeded, disregarded. That of the helpless widow and orphans' was as little to be regarded as that of the strong business men of the neighborhood. In the Board of Excise the matter would interfere with the growth of the orders and would ruin property. That appeal from the Netherwooders, addressed particularly to one Councilman, appealing to him as their representative to vote for the interests of the community. Then there was the appeal of the property owners of the immediate vicinity, saying: "We have a right to expect rights and do that which will decorate the value of our estates". Then there were appeals from the lodges and societies in the very edifice where this session was proposed to be, stating that a saloon there would interfere with the growth of the orders and would ruin property. Then there was the

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - City Editor.

—Scotch Plains has two new mails. One arrives from the West and is open at three o'clock and the other closes for New York only at 9 a. m.

—The first lightning flashes of the season were witnessed Saturday night, on Plainfield's horizon. They were reflected from a distant thunder storm that did much damage.

—There was an accession of seventeen members to the Trinity Reformed church at the Communion service Sunday morning—ten by letter, and seven on confession of faith.

—A large corpse-doll in the butcher shop of Lewis & Co on Park avenue Saturday night, and the blazing oil set fire to the wood-work in several places. With difficulty was a serious fire prevented.

—Hatfield will not play with the Crescent Leagues this season, and it is rumored that Martin has not been consulted, either. The former will play second base for the West Ends of Somerville.

—The people of this city are warned against two ill-reputable girls of this city who are soliciting help for "the Hines family." The police have the names of the girls and will probably arrest them in a day or two. In the meantime this warning will protect the people from being imposed on.

HYMENEAL.

Burley—Bain.

A quiet home wedding took place, Feb. 25, at eight o'clock in the evening at the home of the bride, 79 West Muster-field street, New York city. The contracting parties were Albert N. Morley, Jr., of Brooklyn, and Miss Minnie C. Bell only daughter of Mrs. P. E. Bell, and granddaughter of Mrs. Cornelius Bogue of this city.

The bride was becomingly attired in her mother's wedding dress of heavy white silk and duchess lace. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Ketcham. The bride was given away by her uncle, J. Joseph B. Coward. The best man was J. Mickleroy, of Brooklyn.

Among those present were Albert N. Morley and family, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Coward and family, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Cook and family, Mr. and Mrs. George Underhill, the Misses Clark and Miss Boice, of this city, the Misses Smith, of Newark, and Mr. Wilcox, of Elizabeth, Miss Spencer, Miss Dunham, Mr. Bothwell, Mrs. Barnes and others of New York city. The young couple received many handsome presents.

It's Full Surely, Without Him.

A New York paper says: "Yesterday's market was so dull that even the large tra'es took no interest in it. Mr Kirkner seemed to prefer the out side air and a cigar: the board-room."

Half-a-Million Over.

New Jersey's receipts during the last fiscal year were $1,796,000, which, added to the amount on hand, made a total of $2,836,694. The disbursements for the year were $2,602,283, leaving a balance of $433,761.

Death of a Good Wife and Mother.

Sarah R. Clark died at the home of her husband, Edgar Clark, on Park avenue, Orchard place, Monday. She leaves four children. Mr. Clarkson is the janitor of the Franklin and Stillman schools, the pupils and teachers of which sympathize with him in his bereavement.

Ten Children Recently wedded.

Sadie, age 9, and Agatha, age 7, daughter and son of George R Rock-fellow of 103 West Front street, were terribly scalded at eleven o'clock Friday morning. They were standing beside a kitchen stove when one of the legs gave way, the stove tipped to one side, and a boiler full of hot water was emptied over on them. The scalding caused large blisters to break on the legs and bodies of the two children, and though Dr. Probasco was summoned and did all in his power to relieve their pain they suffer greatly.

A Wheaman, Worsing.

The pupils of Miss Jutta Ketcham, and their friends enjoyed a thoroughly entertaining affair at her home, Saturday. It was a mock musicale entirely devoted to the work of Robert Schumann.

The programme was followed by a review of the life and works of the great composer, by Miss Blair. It was highly interesting and instructive, reflecting much credit upon the pupils and showing the depths of research and appreciation it displayed. Miss Ketcham's singing was the principal feature of the programme, and the singing of "The Gypsies" by a sextette, also deserves special commendation. The improvement evidenced at every point, was a source of universal remark by all who had ever heard them before. All sang with unusual taste and unexpected intelligence. The complete programme was:

1810—Robert Schumann—1856.
The Life of Schumann[a]..... Miss Blair
Piano Solo—Novelette[a]..... Miss Ketcham
(In Way?)
Evening Song..... Miss Ketcham
Of the Unknown Land..... Mr. Edsall
Harmony Nut..... Miss Glen
Piano—Solo—Nocturne[a]..... Miss Ketcham
Moonlight..... Miss Blair
(Not get up light).
Piano—Solo—Fantasie[a]..... Miss Ketcham
(I Dreamed but Now).
The Gypsies[a]..... Misses Glen, Blair, Bowning, Ketcham, Dewey and Ketcham, accompanied by Miss Schuman.

Still Peddling Abstract History.

He tinkles from Somerville, and Somerville that he was a "journalist," and boasted before the Court that never would he publish sensient history in his paper. Yet up to last Thursday the paper bore the legend at the head of which was old news a dozen years ago, and published a startling tale, made glaringly prominent with big "scare" heads and "Editor's leading article, of a "grand fire" at "Primrose's Hotel", "on the mountain top near Round Brook", where "a man, horses and cattle were burned to death."

Although the fire took place—as near as old inhabitants can remember—from fourteen to eighteen years ago, he had not yet been informed whether the name of the man who was killed, but contented himself with giving him a fictitious name next day.

One man—a stranger in town—drank in the story. His family and friends live in the neighborhood where the fire was reported to have occurred, and, as per ig norant of the unreliability and irresponsibility of the obscure sheet, he at once worked himself into a great state of mind and rushed to great alarm homeward, fearing that his own family might have suffered. Now he appreciates the lack of confidence felt by others towards the "journalist."

If you don't see it in The Press it isn't so, and if you see it in The Press you see it for the first time.

A Wedding.

Mary A. Clark, of South Plains, and Lewis C. Anderson, of Plainfield, were united at the residence of the bride's parents in South Plains, by the Rev. J. H. Parks, Tuesday, Feb. 17. The bride is a sister of Miss Frank Clark, of Somerset, between Second Street and New Market. The presents were numerous and costly. The couple spent their honeymoon in Washington and Mount Clarmont.

THE TROLLEYS ALL RIGHT.

Encouraging Speech, the Most Extensive Solicitor of Patents in the County, Knows as and Says So.

The following in relation to the trolley system of propelling street cars by electricity, will be of interest to every reader of The Press in view of the possibility that one of the companies applying for a street railway franchise in this city may prepare to use such motive power.

The writer of the communication is ex-Councilman L. W. Serrell, the best-known and most experienced of patent-solicitors in this country. He knows all there is to know of the matter he writes of, and coming from him no one will doubt a word he says.

There are today 169 cities throughout the land that have been through the experience Plainfield seems now actively entering upon, and that is the proper consideration of public safety and economy has when the "deadly trolley system" is brought before the public attention as a means of propulsion, and to the thinking citizen of our beautiful city perhaps a word absolute some of the expert news would be of benefit in considering the possibilities from a home standpoint.

In all of the cities referred to, some of the best citizens who have had the interest of the city and citizens at heart, have, after careful investigation and study, come to the belief that the electric railway was what was needed to give life and development to their city, heretofore unknown.

In each and all of these cities the indignant cry of the uninformed citizen was that the deadly and powerful electric energy used to propel the heavy cars, the unsightliness of the overhead structure, and the danger to human life, have been altogether insurmountable obstacles in their some. These people felt the same as two people in Plainfield feel now, that the institution had been in good faith, and what they did they had no alternative to for the best good of the city, but the word promises means onward, and amidst much opposition electric railways have been put in, and in millions of cases are 267 made either in operation or under course of construction, operating 2 550 miles of track and over 30,000 motor cars. [Here the writer quotes letters from the Mayors of Nashville, Tenn., Louisville, Ky., Denver, Col., Akron, Ohio, Scranton, Pa., and Dayton, Ohio, approving of the system.]

These letters are unanimous in saying that, 1st, Great opposition was experienced on account of the supposed danger and unsightliness of the trolley line. 2d, That this was overcome and the electric road is giving great satisfaction, and the people would not do without it, and 3d, That the subscription is felt as its being dangerous.

As to its being dangerous to life, the electric railroads are required to be operated with a standard pressure of 500 volts. I have frequently taken the full amount of current used to operate 15 or 20 cars at the climax of the trolley line, and I am willing to take the full amount needed to operate a road of 1,000 cars. I would not feel it any more than that needed to operate one car. Every man his man will admit that if the electric railway could be operated by an underground conductor or storage battery. It would be better for the safety of the system, but neither has been accomplished as yet, although hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent in experimenting to develop these systems so that they will operate successfully. The storage battery is as yet blind, and has never been anything like an approach to it. It is like a maiden of 34 Summers, the years roll on and she still remains 24 Summers. So with the storage battery the years have rolled on and it is still as blind and imperceptibly from its origin-l conception. It has been tried in many places and everywhere found wanting. I have talked with several parties who have been to Maine, who have been through the storage battery experiment, and the only thing I ever heard any of them say in favor was "that is a gravity road for running down hill it was a great success." For present consideration and for some time to come, it is out of the question to consider other than the old-fashioned system. If Plainfield is to have a street railway, it must either use horses, steam or electricity, and the latter is the system being more dangerous and costing nearly $200,000 per mile.

A small "guard wire" is placed above the trolley wire, to be bonded to telephone and electric light wires from coming in contact with the trolley wire, in case they break when heavily loaded with ice or snow. This is also a great protection by the lightning arresters, and an electric car is as safe a place as there is in a thunder-storm. The rails are connected together for the current to return to the power station and it is impossible for a man or a horse to receive a shock by stepping on the rails when proper ground connections are made with the rails. The cars run over a trolley wire, and enters the motors through the trolley arm on top of the car, causing them to revolve, and enters the rails through the wheels, and then returns to the power station. The electric cars when running at twenty miles an hour can be stopped in from twenty to thirty feet. The same overhead trolley system is used by the Westinghouse, Thompson-Houston, Sprague, and other systems, the only difference is in the construction of the motors. The new improved slow speed electric motors should be allowed in Plainfield, as they are noiseless. The Sprague motor makes a great deal of noise, which is very unpleasant.

The overhead system is now built through some of the principal cities in the world. Euclid avenue, Cleveland, for instance. The United States Senate, after investigating the overhead system, adopted it and built a road in Washington, D. C., and this it has been in every city where the citizens gave time to it- careful consideration. The tracks laid in the streets, if the right kind of rail is used and properly laid, will be no disfigurement and will be no menace to carriages. Since electric cars have come to be so extensively used, the T rail has been more required to carry the increased weight of the cars, the old tram rail is no longer used. In the T rail the joints that should be permitted in our macadam street is the "T" rail, laid with a single row of paving blocks on each side, paved flush with the rail, and the joints are so edged, that no stone being chipped away to allow the passage of the flange of the car wheel; over this road bed carriages can drive without wrenching the wheels.

LIMITED, W. SERRELL.

Borough Property Changes Hands.

Recent real-estate transfers recorded at the County Clerk's office at Somerville include the following from North Plainfield:

John W. Moore to Annette Moore, North Plainfield, 1.

Mary B., and Edwin Lincoln to John F. Wilson, North Plainfield, $5,000.

L. M. Cornelius, Sheriff, to Patrick McGonnell, North Plainfield, $350.

Francis Hand and wife to David Angenbaner, North Plainfield, $1,776.

David Angenbaner, to Eugenia Hand, North Plainfield, $1,750.

Henry Taylor to Daniel O'Connor, North Plainfield, $1,000.

Mary Tay-lor to Mary O'Connor, North Plainfield, $600.

Eugene Moore sold wife to Fireman A. Long, North Plainfield, $3,000.

—The Board of Street Inspection is now connected with the Fire Department of Plainfield, and can be used at any time.

"THE ELKWOOD" LICENSED.

WATSON'S AND CROWLEY'S APPLICATIONS THE ONLY ONES REFUSED.

Consolidation Ordinance Absolutely Annuls the Saloon Liquor Traffic, and Council, men Rollett, Roberts, Smith, Spangenberg Patently for "All or None".

Other Councilmen Varying—Mr. Schenck Makes a Speech, and Proffitt Smiles Sage "Call the Roll"—The Vote 6 to 2—The Water Supply Company Getting Ready to Lay Mains—Other Business Attended to.

(From The Press of Feb. 27.)

Sixteen liquor licenses were granted by the Common Council last night, and among them, as had been expected, despite the public protest, was one to Joseph B. Miller to keep a saloon at "The Elkwood," on West Second street. Two license applications were refused—those of Michael F. Walker and Daniel Crowley.

All of the Councilmen were present at the meeting, and a full vote was polled on each individual license.

Before any action was taken, however, the Council listened to another list of protests, in addition to what had already been presented to the Committee.

PROTESTS AND REMONSTRANCES.

The first communication was from Wm. Rose, John Bodine and Lest C. Kline, a committee representing Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., urging the Council not to grant a license to Joseph B. Miller to keep a saloon at No. 10 West Second street, as such a saloon would be a constant nuisance to the lodge members congregating in the building, would blight manhood, and would wreck the happiness of families.

David W. Frost and a number of other property-owners of Grant avenue and vicinity protested against granting either a whole-sale or a retail license to Michael F. Watson at South Second street and Grant avenue.

From the Consistory and congregation of the Trinity Reformed church was read a protest aged at locating "The Elkwood." The reasons given were the same that were indorsed by the Ministers' Association and published in The Press, the signers and that they voiced the sentiments of the entire free hundred people of the church as against the voice of a few.

Another protest against licensing "The Elkwood" was received from the property-owners of the neighborhood, all owning real estate within 500 feet of the building, and holding that the opening of a saloon there would be an injury to the neighborhood.

From L. V. F. Randolph, J. K. Myers, George Lisslgrodo, Leo Daft, and other citizens of similar prominence, came a remonstrance against granting any license in the Fond Machine Tool Works neighborhood.

Again—Licensing "The Elkwood" Central Lodge, A. O. U. W., protested, through its Recorder, Lewis H. Berdine, against the granting of license.

Another protest against licensing "The Elkwood" was received from the property-owners of the neighborhood, and bore the signatures of the applicants, and he assumed that the estate had no right to sign the application, and if granted, would be a nuisance to the neighborhood generally. The petition was unanimously carried.

MR. SCHENCK'S SPEECH.

Mr. Schenck thanked the Council for its courtesy, and made a brief and earnest appeal. He said:

"Representing the Trinity Reformed church, with its membership of five hundred people, I protest against licensing this place because it will be hurtful to us the Christian church. It is only seventy-five feet away from our house of worship, and the larger part of our congregation pass it whenever they go to the house of God. It will injure our property, which is worth at least $30,000, and be injurious to our work. We have a large number of young men interested in our church, and we entreat you not to throw a stone of stumbling in their way. In this building are nearly or more than 1,000 men who climb the stairs to their lodges, and you surely cannot afford to place so near to the Fatherland such a temptation and entice them and possibly lead to their ruin. Our protest is re-enforced by these petitions, and some perhaps have been more careful observers of the rapid change and progress of the city during the last few years. It seems quite impossible that there can be room for all the deceased as the writer to give a fair estimate of his character, and yet my own admiration is so generally shared that I feel quite reluctant in expressing my convictions.

"There are three relations that a man sustains to his fellows—the commercial, the domestic—broadening into the social, and the religious. The points of contact of these various relations are the mart, the home and the church. It is impossible to get the true measurement of men until we have considered them in these three relations. What are they at the store or shop? What are they in the family? What are they in the church. Consider one of the questions to the neglect of the others, and your estimate will be false and unjust. It is also, too true that integrity behind the counter does not always mean affection at home. On the other hand, success in any particular regularly break out into brusqueness in the street, and the devoutest saint on Sunday is the biggest rogue on Monday. By a process not unlike would be wiped from the tombstone of the man it memorialized if the whole truth could be told.

"The character of Thomas Worth will not suffer by the application of this threefold gauge. In business he was a self-made man in the highest sense of that term. He was honest to a fault. His word was scrupulously exact. He was upright—simply fair in every transaction. If the possibilities of his home life only could be brought to bear upon his methods of dealing during the last thirty years I doubt not they would be true to the perpendicular. He was elevated to a position of "One thing" was his motto, and while business were caught in the maelstrom of wild speculation and seductive investments, he kept true to the line of "one thing." In the home he was affectionate without effusiveness, genial without lavishness, and strong without severity. He always allowed the advancing years to chill the buoyancy of youth in his own nature. The husband and father that keeps the heart with youth will always have the heart throbbing with young impulses is a light in any home whose bright-ness when once extinguished can never be replaced. In the church he will be best known as a teacher, in an official sense, not as a character of dazzling brilliancy, not as a man whose Christianity was the synonym of religiousness in any one direction, but intent way. But he will be missed as a quiet and yet earnest Christian man whose loyalty to Master dates back to the Winter of 1873, when the writer of we will remember how deeply the truth as it is in Christ took root in his heart.

"I have said nothing about your desire to eulogize calmly, but I have said them because they are true; and while thoughts of the past are thronging into the minds of friends I desire to express this little tribute into the chaplet that adorns his memory.

CHARLES E. DUNN.

Albany, N.Y.

Her Father Pounded Calomine.

Caroline Eudora Sullivant, who died at her home, corner of Somerset and Second street, Sunday, was a daughter of the late Jacob Hunnis and Ann Louise Sutton of New York. Her father was the founder of the city of Columbus, O., on which place the deceased will be buried to-morrow. Interment will be made beside the body of her late husband, Wilson Sullivant, who died in Plainfield about two years ago. Deceased was a niece of Mrs. Lander, resident on Putnam avenue.

The death of Mrs. Sullivant was very sudden, and created a profound sensation in Plainfield. She retired in seemingly good health Saturday night, and was found dead in her bed Sunday morning.

Funeral of Peter G. Kline.

Funeral services over the remains of the late Peter G. Kline were held Feb. 26, from his late residence, 72 Summit avenue, and from the Trinity Reformed church. Members of Farmersville Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 29, F. and A. M., and of the Order of Heptasophs, attended in a body. The Rev. Cornelius Schenck preached the funeral sermon. The church was well filled with mourners. Interment was made at Hillside Cemetery.

The Location of the Washington Park Home Club.

Despite what it has appeared in The Press, a Plainfield paper republishes from the Newark News the item from these columns concerning the formation of the Washington Park Home Club. But the Newark paper adds that the location is "near the First Baptist church."

The site of the new club house will be on Washington avenue, just at the left as you step off the bridge over North Plainfield. The porter's lodge of the Rhome homestead now stands on the lot secured by the club.

Criminal Divorces for Scrupulous Catholics.

A bill affecting the divorce laws of this State is now in the hands of Governor Abbett, and needs only the Executive signature to go on the statute books. It seeks to make divorce easy and palatable for a class of people who have hitherto regarded it with abhorrence.

The bill allows a "nominal" divorce to be granted when the Court of Chancery is in doubt as to whether or not a decree can be granted without wrecking the petition-r's conscience. The bill is intended for scrupulous Catholics, who dread estrangement from the Church more than merit for obtaining a divorce. The "nominal" divorce decrees that the respondent shall have no further right to bed and board with the petitioner. Infidelity or desertion are the only causes for which it can be granted.

Gold Meats.

Gold meats are generally found more easy of digestion than warm ones.

Set a dish of water in the oven with fruit when baking and they will seldom scorch.

Eggs the broken backs are helpful in this utilitarian age. They are excellent for cleaning kettles.

Put old rubber rings of cans into weak ammonia water, and they will remove black elasticity.

The proprietors of Hires' Cough Cure certainly do make it for the benefit of a bushel. They know they have a good thing, and they are willing to tell the world know it. They adhere in printers' ink, and printers' ink believes in Hires' Cough Cure.

PUBLIC SALE

OF

H. HAND, Auctioneer.

The undersigned will sell at public auction on the premises, on Saturday, March 7, 1891, at 1 o'clock p. m., the following property, to wit: 1 large 3-use, stanned on South avenue, one mile from Plainfield; 1 large 2-horse wagon, 1 Concord harness; piano, plain parlor suit, 11 bedroom suits, 2 bureaus, 1 wash-stand, 1 set of chairs, 1 cottage, 100 yards Brussel carpet, and 100 yds ingrain carpet, 1 kitchen cabinet, 1 set of dishes, 2 mattresses, bolster sets, sheeting, 1 sewing machine, 1 lounge, 1 set of parlor chairs, and kitchen tables, settees, library, dining room and kitchen chairs, 1 set of parlor curtains, 1 bedroom set, 1 range, pictures, lace curtains and other articles.

Also, 1 cow, 1 heifer, 1 calf, 1 sow, 1 leather top phaeton, nearly new, 1 spring wagon, 1 platform spring wagon, 1 set of single harness, blankets, 2 load of hay, 1 load of corn, 1 plough, 1 cultivator, 1 harrow, and all other garden tools in variety. 25 Positively no postponement. Terms cash.

H. HAND, Auctioneer.

C. H. JIMERSON.

—For particulars see sale bills, which may be obtained at the South Plains and Netherwood Post Offices, or of HAND & WOOD, Feb. 16 East Front street, Plainfield, N. J.

Union County Orphan's Court.

In the matter of the sale of lands of Peter Dunn, deceased, for the payment of his debts.

By virtue of an order of the Orphan's Court of Union County, entered in the above stated matter, on the 3d day of February, A. D. 1891, the undersigned, Executor of the last will and testament of said deceased, hereby gives notice to all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit the same under oath or affirmation to the subscriber at his residence in the township of Fa-ir, all the following described lands and tenements, situate, lying and being in the county of Union, and state of New Jersey, and more particularly described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point in the middle of the Old Road leading from Plainfield to Rahway, at the corner of Sarah Bowne's land, and running thence (1) along the middle of said road, south 70 degrees 30 minutes west 4 chains and 50 links; thence (2) south 19 degrees 30 minutes east 20 chains to the middle of the road leading from Plainfield to Scotch Plains; thence (3) along the middle of the last mentioned road, north 70 degrees 30 minutes east 4 chains and 50 links to the corner of Sarah Bowne's land; thence (4) along the same north 19 degrees 30 minutes west 20 chains to the place of beginning. Containing nine acres and one hundred and twenty-five perches of land, more or less. Being the same premises conveyed to the said Peter Dunn by deed of Sarah B. Coward and wife, dated September 11, 1880.

WM. M. STILLMAN, Executor.
Dated, March 3, 1891.
Fees—$12.00. 3-5wt.

AUCTION NOTICE

OF

Horses, Cattle, Carriages, Harness, Etc.

Beginning at a point in the middle of Somerset street, at the corner of Sarah Bowne's land, and running thence (1) along the middle of said street south 70 degrees 30 minutes west 4 chains and 50 links to a point; thence (2) south 19 degrees 30 minutes east 20 chains to the middle of the road leading from Plainfield to Scotch Plains; thence (3) along the middle of the last mentioned road north 70 degrees 30 minutes east 4 chains and 50 links to a point; thence (4) north 19 degrees 30 minutes west 20 chains to the place of beginning. Containing nine acres and one hundred and twenty-five perches of land, more or less. Being the same premises conveyed to the said Peter Dunn by deed of Sarah B. Coward and wife, dated September 11, 1880.

WM. M. STILLMAN, Executor.
Dated, March 3, 1891.
Fees—$12.00. 3-5wt.

AUCTION NOTICE

OF

Horses, Cattle, Carriages, Harness, Etc.

Beginning at a point in the middle of Somerset street, at the corner of Sarah Bowne's land, and running thence (1) along the middle of said street south 70 degrees 30 minutes west 4 chains and 50 links to a point; thence (2) south 19 degrees 30 minutes east 20 chains to the middle of the road leading from Plainfield to Scotch Plains; thence (3) along the middle of the last mentioned road north 70 degrees 30 minutes east 4 chains and 50 links to a point; thence (4) north 19 degrees 30 minutes west 20 chains to the place of beginning. Containing nine acres and one hundred and twenty-five perches of land, more or less. Being the same premises conveyed to the said Peter Dunn by deed of Sarah B. Coward and wife, dated September 11, 1880.

WM. M. STILLMAN, Executor.
Dated, March 3, 1891.
Fees—$12.00. 3-5wt.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION

OF THE

First National Bank,

At Plainfield, in the State of New Jersey, at the close of business February 26, 1891.

RESOURCES.

Loans and Discounts	$347,151 60
Overdrafts, secured and unsecured	1,000 00
U. S. Bonds deposited to secure circulation	50,000 00
U. S. Bonds deposited to secure U. S. deposits	50,000 00
Stocks, Securities, etc.	10,000 00
Banking-house, Furniture, and Fixtures	12,299 54
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)	2,000 00
Due from State and Private Banks and Bankers	1,000 00
Due from approved reserve agents	46,000 00
Checks and other cash items	1,000 00
Exchanges for Clearing-House	2,000 00
Bills of other Banks	4,000 00
Fractional Paper Currency, nickels and cents	1,000 00
Specie	1,000 00
Legal Tender Notes	24,000 00
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent of circulation)	2,250 00
Total	$606,301 14

LIABILITIES.

Capital Stock paid in	$200,000 00
Surplus fund	50,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	46,301 14
National Bank notes outstanding	45,000 00
State Bank notes outstanding	1,000 00
Individual Deposits subject to check	263,000 00
Demand certificates of deposit	1,000 00
Certified checks	1,000 00
Cashier's checks outstanding	1,000 00
Due to other National Banks	1,000 00
Due to State Banks and bankers	1,000 00
Total	$606,301 40

State of New Jersey, } ss.
County of Union. }

I, D. FITZWORTH, President of the above named Bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

D. FITZWORTH, President.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 4th day of March of 1891.

DAVID M. REMINGTON,
Notary Public of N. J.

Correct—Attest,
WM. M. STILLMAN,
E. A. HAND, } Directors.

JOHN W. LAING'S HOTEL,

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

For sale, the old established property known as JOHN W. LAING'S HOTEL, corner of Front street and Park avenue, Plainfield, N. J., for over 30 years; doing a good business, and can be made to do a much larger one. Has 30 rooms for lodging and accommodations, and is good location for a first-class hotel. Will be sold at a bargain, as the present owner wishes to retire from business. Apply to the present owner, JOHN W. LAING, Plainfield, N. J. 2 12 4w

CATARRH

ELY'S

CREAM BALM

Gives Relief at Once.

It Cleanses the Nasal Passages, Allays Pain and Inflammation, Heals the Sores, Restores the Senses of Taste and Smell.

A particle is applied into each nostril and is agreeable. Price 50 cents at Druggists; by mail, registered, 60 cents. ELY BROTHERS, Owego, N. Y.

HAY-FEVER

CURE.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

BERNHARD MEYER,

Successor to A. D. Thompson.

Riverside Stock Farm,

AT FINDERNE STATION,

On Central Railroad of New Jersey, will always have for sale a large assortment of Horses of all Kinds and for all Purposes. Also Mules and Fresh Cattle.

Everything warranted as represented or money refunded.

WM. C. SMITH, Superintendent.

Sale Stables, No 238 Palisade Ave., and Nos. 11 and 13 Ogden Ave., JERSEY CITY.

Having contract to furnish Horses to New York Railroads, I am obliged to take their old Horses, which I sell cheap. 2 12 4f

"CONFIDENCE BEGETS LOVE."

CHILD. "Grandma, kiss me good-night. Sister is asleep, but as for me I see no home but self of all the ladies that call you Mother."

MRS. PINKHAM. "Yes, darling, when you are older perhaps you may do as I have done."

CHILD. "Everybody loves you, grandma; I'm sure I could love you."

MRS. PINKHAM. "Everyone will love you, my child, if they can confide in their mother."

The above dialogue tells its own story; even the little child, without knowing why her grandmother is so universally loved, sees in her form a flash of intellectual sympathy that satisfies her. That sympathy has extended itself all over the world, for wherever civilized women exist, Mrs. Pinkham is known and reverenced. Send stamp for "Guide to Health and Etiquette."

LYDIA E. PINKHAM MED. CO., LYNN, MASS.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Is the most Perfect Cure and Legitimate Remedy ever discovered for the peculiar weaknesses and ailments of women.

It cures more than any other medicine, that Bearing-down Feeling, Weak Back, Falling and Displacement of the Womb, Inflammation, Ovarian Troubles, and all Irregularities of the Menses. It dissolves and expels Tumors from the Uterus in an early stage, and checks any tendency to Cancerous humors. It removes Faintness, Flatulency, Destroys all craving for Stimulants, and strengthens and tones the entire system. Cures Headache, General Debility, Indigestion, Dizziness, Sleeplessness, Nervous Prostration, and relieves Pain. It is under the Constant Test of Thousands of Women in every part of the country.

All Druggists sell it, or it will be sent, in form of Pills or Lozenges, on receipt of $1.00. LYDIA E. PINKHAM MED. CO., LYNN, MASS.

NOTICE. FEBRUARY 5th, 1891.

Estate of Jasper G. Cadmus, deceased.

Pursuant to the order of George T. Farrell, surrogate of the County of Union, made on the application of the undersigned, Executor of the last will and testament of said deceased, notice is hereby given to the creditors of said deceased to exhibit to the subscriber under oath or affirmation all claims and demands against the estate of said deceased within nine months from this date, and that all persons indebted to said deceased are required to make payment to the subscriber without delay.

ISAAC D. HUBBARD, Executor.

SHERIFF'S SALE.—By virtue of writs of fieri facias issued out of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, and to me directed, there will be exposed to public sale, at the house of Peter Kelly, in the township of Scotch Plains, in the county of Union, on SATURDAY, THE EIGHTH DAY OF APRIL, A. D. 1891, at 10 o'clock in the afternoon of said day, all the right, title and interest which the defendants, Mary Kelly and Peter Kelly, his wife, had on the 3d day of February, A. D. 1891, the day the writs of fieri facias were delivered to me at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of the same day, of, in and to all that certain lot, piece or parcel of land and premises hereinafter described, or so much thereof as will satisfy the moneys commanded to be levied by the said writs of fieri facias, and all the costs and charges thereon to be levied, and which said lot, piece or parcel of land and premises is described as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a point in the middle of the road leading from Plainfield to Rahway, at the corner of Sarah Bowne's land, and running thence (1) along the middle of said road south 70 degrees 30 minutes west 4 chains and 50 links to a point; thence (2) south 19 degrees 30 minutes east 20 chains to the middle of the road leading from Plainfield to Scotch Plains; thence (3) along the middle of the last mentioned road north 70 degrees 30 minutes east 4 chains and 50 links to a point; thence (4) north 19 degrees 30 minutes west 20 chains to the place of beginning. Containing nine acres and one hundred and twenty-five perches of land, more or less. Being the same premises conveyed to the said Peter Kelly by deed of Sarah B. Coward and wife, dated September 11, 1880.

Taken as the property of the said defendants, Mary Kelly and Peter Kelly, his wife, and will be sold by H. C. BECKS, Sheriff.

Dated, February 26, 1891.

JOHN S. DARCY, Attorney.

Fees—$12.00. 3-5wt.

Three Kinds of Men.

It takes, they tell us, all sorts of people to make a World. We'll just name one or two kinds.

There's the foolish man who buys his clothing from cheap, burnt-cat-clothing stores.

Next comes the thoughtless man, who patronizes the high and mightily expensive merchant tailor. He wants good goods and a first class fit and he gets it. But at what a cost!

The wise man is he who buys from stores that deal only in reliable clothing. He knows that make their own goods and know what they are talking about when they sell them.

We have the unreliable in clothing. So do you, but price sometimes tempts you to dabble in it. Good quality and good workmanship, that's the foundation of our success. The reliable, style, and a fair price for that. We never mean any patron of our House to have the change to say: "They fooled me in this suit."

McGREGOR & CO.,

850 and 852 BROAD ST.

NEWARK, N. J.

J. Wm. Lloyd,

Profe-sional Nurse and Masseur.

Invalid Compounds a Specialty.

Strong intelligent, gentlemanly, good table.

Highest re-ference—Plainfield, Westfield, Elizabeth, New York on application.

Permanent address, WESTFIELD, N. J. 2 12 3m

NOTICE. FEBRUARY 26, 1891.

Estate of Eliza Johnson, Deceased.

Pursuant to the order of George T. Farrell, surrogate of the County of Union, made on the application of the undersigned, Executor of the last will and testament of said deceased, notice is hereby given to the creditors of said deceased to exhibit to the subscriber under oath or affirmation their claims and demands against the estate of said deceased within nine months from this date, or they will be forever barred from any action therefor against the subscriber.

JOHN WESLEY JOHNSON,
PETER C. JOHNSON, Executors.

EXECUTOR'S SETTLEMENT.—Notice is hereby given, that the account of the undersigned, executor of the last will and testament of Thos. Smith, deceased, will be audited and settled by the Orphans' Court of the County of Union, and reported to the Orphans' Court of the county of Somerset, on the 7th day of April next.

Dated February 10th, 1891.

JOHN H. VANWINKLE.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY

To George Green, Defendant:

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, on the day of the date hereof, made between Mary Green as Petitioner, and you as Defendant, you are required to cause an appearance to be entered in the said cause to be prosecuted by the Complainant against you, and in default thereof you will be taken as confessed, and your bill will be taken for a decree as prayed.

A full statement of the said bill is filed in the office of the Clerk of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, at Trenton, and a copy thereof may be seen and obtained by you on application to the said Clerk.

The said petition is filed against you for a decree from the bond of matrimony.

Dated January 19th, 1891.

WALTER I. HETFIELD,
Solicitor of Petitioner, Plainfield, New Jersey. 2 12 6w

DEATHS.

BUND—At Dunellen, March 1, Ellen D. Bund, aged 70 years.

SULLIVANT—Suddenly, in Plainfield, N. J., March 1, Caroline Eudora Sullivant, wife of the late William C. Sullivant, of Columbus, Ohio, and daughter of the late Jacob Hunnis and Ann Louise Sutton, of New York. Funeral on Columbus, ohio.

A. M. RUNYON & SON,

UNDERTAKERS, EMBALMERS,

AND

PARK AVENUE.

Telegraph Office.

RESIDENCE—46 MADISON AVENUE.

Telephone Call 39.

Orders at Middle Road Dairy.

WANTS AND INFORMATION.

FOR SALE, or to let, house with ten rooms, with new repair, and additional land. Inquire of Mrs. Dr. Bird, Somerset, or Mrs. Dr. Bird, Plainfield, on main corner of Somerset and Second streets. 2 12 3m

FOR SALE—41 New Shetland, N. J., a small farm of 10 acres, with house, barn, and other buildings, and a good well of water. Inquire of Mrs. Dr. Bird, Somerset, or Mrs. Dr. Bird, Plainfield, on main corner of Somerset and Second streets. 2 12 3m

Cut Showing Specimens Improperly Set.

Having taken a thorough course in optics under Dr. Risley, of Cincinnati, I am prepared to fit glasses to the eyes in the most scientific manner to the open property.

A full line of new and artistic designs for the Gold Spectacles and Eye-Glasses always on hand at

CALEB DICKINSON'S,
12 Park Avenue, Plainfield, N. J.

A TWILIGHT STORY.

"Auntie, will you tell a story?" said my little niece of three,
As the early winter twilight fell around us silently.
So I murmured to her pleading: "Once, when I was very small,
With my pack and my mamma I went out to make a call;
And in both I seemed to see no, gave me quite a large teaspoon,
Which I carried somewhat proudly, never smiling at mamma.
"Soon I met two other children, tied in rags at each end and at band,
Who grew strangely, wildly joyous as I neared their standing place.
"Twas no use to offer them the flowers! Give no one—oh, one! they cried.
But I pressed them closer, speaking; left them with their wish denied.
But the sight of nothing haunted me by night and day,
Give no one! I heard them saying, even in my morning play.
"Still I mourn, because in childhood I refused to give a flower;
But don't wonder why others happy when I had it in my power."
Suddenly I ceased my story. Tears were in my darling's eyes
Tears of tenderness and pity—while she listened for a reverent moment.
"I will send a flower to-morrow to those little girls," she cried;
Could I tell her that their sentiment had been gone this many a year?
—Mary J. Porter, in Harper's Bazar.

TOLD BY A FAKIR.

The Many Tricks in the Street Man's Life.

Last evening, says a writer in the New York World, a man stood in a buggy selling pipe packages by the blaze of a huge paraffine lamp. He wore a frock coat, a shiny silk hat, clean linen, a benevolent smile and half a dozen buckles.

"I've been faking for twenty years," he confided to a reporter after he had replaced pipe packages with $40 and thrust it into his inside pocket.

"I've traveled the country from Maine to California," he continued, "and I know every city, town and village where there's a dollar. I either get a permit or a license at each place, and so I'm known to all the mayors and chiefs of police from Florida to Oregon. I'm 46 years old, and have been a street man just half my life.

"No, it doesn't matter what a fakir has to sell, he'll sell it if he only knows how. It's the gift of the gab, a solid front, nerve and a determination to succeed; and the goods have nothing to do with it. To be successful you must be gramatical, sober and brief. If a man will only wait until I get through talking I'll have his opinion when I leave. He goes home he misses my breezy conversation, and his wife gets the money; mine does not go home at all.

"In prohibition States I advocate free license, and in Chicago high license for oleomargarine. I retire a town the time has recently been an elopement I tell them an elopement story, and get 'em laughing. If it's a prison town I tell austere; tell sober, pathetic stories, and stealthily wink at the policeman, who usually grows red and chokes. If a town is Democratic I talk Democracy, or if Republican I advocate the principles of the party. I'm a Prohibitionist in Democratic company.

"Sleight-of-hand. I have worked with a carriage and pair and with a colored driver. At hour later, in the same town, I am selling to a different crowd, mounted on a soap-box, with a soft felt hat, a blue flannel shirt and overalls. I sell the same goods to both crowds, but out of the carriage I get a quarter and off the soap-box I only get a dime. However, I clear as much money in an hour from one crowd as from another, as the stuff I sell does not cost me over three cents a box, for I sell 50 boxes at 10 cents, and 50 at 25, I have done well, even after paying for the carriage, which cost me a small bonus. I also handle almost every thing, but medicines pay best. I once got on a train with a big stock of jewelry and could not work it off. I thought if I only had some medicine to sell I could pass the hotel bill. I went out skirmishing and found a sawmill where they cut up a good deal of wood, and also a planing colony. I got a paper bagful of the dark sawdust and soaked it all night at the hotel. We had a big crowd assembled next day, and my wife bottled it while I went to the printer's and had some labels struck off. The bottle was the size of your little finger, and cost 10 cents a dozen, the labels 50 cents and the sawdust nothing. I sold 89 worth at noon at 25 cents a bottle, and that night I took $37 in cold cash. People who felt all kinds of things at noon had gone home, taken some, felt better and returned cured. See?

"The first street man I ever saw was 'Dr.' McBride, the original 'king of pain,' who resided in Chicago up to the time of his death. He made many thousands of dollars, and at one time showed me his bank book with $40,000 to his credit, but he died penniless. Charlton, the original 'silent shaver,' became wealthy, and old man Clark, the pioneer street industrialist pen man, is still selling on the street at the age of 76. Charlton, the impression-paper man, became a minister, and is now pastor of a New England church. By the way, Clark the pen man recovered heavy damages for injuries received while Ashland's gas master in Ohio, and enjoys the distinction of holding a life-pass over the road on which he was injured. As he is now 76, it would be interesting to know how old he might have become if he had not received those injuries.

"Every lawyer and broker downtown will remember Smith, the soap-stamp man, who was recently buried with Masonic honors. Prescott, the man who bamboozled Chicago out of settled in Maine in good circumstances, but although 70 years of age, the old nonsalic spirit is strong in the old man and he lights his big lamps and talks at country cross-roads as glibly as ever. Highaw, the street man who sold patent medicines for years, is now connected with a very large patent-medicine house in New Haven. Dr. Tompson, the cutter man was C. H. Thompson, now in the insurance business in Boston.

"Old man Dow, who made a specialty of novelties, is still on the road with a big Cheap-John notion wagon in Massachusetts, and Marvin, the razor-paste man, is prosperous and happy. Boston King still sells blacking in summer and juggles with paper at the dime museums in winter.

"As for myself, I commenced on bird whistles in the street. They cost me $4 a thousand, and made 1,000 per cent, and I whistled like Mrs. Shaw, so I readily sold a gross a quarter of an hour, now you may buy them anywhere for 1 cent each.

"After that I sold cheap jewelry—six pieces for a quarter, including brooch, ear-rings, finger-rings and a scarf-pin. I cleared 400 cents per week last. Later I sold steel pens, buying ten gross lots and carrying with me samples of the pens and testimonials of manufacture. After that I sold 25-cent packages of stationery. Each package contained six sheets of note-paper, six envelopes, three Faber lead-pencils, a penholder, a rubber ring, a rubber top; six pens (brass), a nickel penholder, a pair of cuff-buttons, one dollar-bill, a gold ring, a gold watch and chain, one toy-ring, six magic parlor tricks on paste-board, a box of blacking, a bottle of ink and a bottle of mucilage, with a brush. On this 25-cent package I realized 8 cents profit, and sold the same as fast as I could hand out the goods and make the change.

"Notwithstanding all of that, I often clear more than I wanted to sell something that was all profit. One day in Sarnia, I met a fakir in a dime museum who talked me into the purchase of a dozen of his hands and feet. He offered them at 10 cents each, and in a rash moment I bought a dozen. Then I went to work to sell them. I walked up to every one I met, and, with a sympathetic look, would say: 'Excuse me, but I see you have lost your hand. Allow me to offer you a substitute.' Then I would produce a hand and offer it for sale. I sold them all, and cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to the museum man and bought a dozen more, and he said: 'Why, I thought you had sold them all.' I told him I had, and he said: 'Well, I'll be d——d!' I sold them to him at 5 cents each, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal.

"Then I went to Detroit and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Toledo and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Cleveland and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Buffalo and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Rochester and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Syracuse and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Albany and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Troy and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Utica and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Rome and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Oswego and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Binghamton and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Elmira and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Corning and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Hornellsville and bought a dozen more, and sold them to a museum man there, and he sold them at 10 cents each, and I'll bet he cleared $1.20 on the deal. Then I went to Dunkirk

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
M. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 1891. No. 11.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well in its limitations as in its authorities."—MADISON

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 W	2 W	3 W	1 M	3 M	1 Y
1 In.	$1 00	$1 50	$2 00	$3 00	$7 00	$10 00
2 In.	1 50	2 00	2 50	4 00	10 00	15 00
3 In.	2 00	2 50	3 00	5 00	12 00	20 00
4 In.	2 50	3 00	3 50	6 00	15 00	25 00
¼ Col.	3 00	4 00	5 00	8 00	20 00	30 00
½ Col.	5 00	7 00	9 00	15 00	35 00	50 00
1 Col.	9 00	12 00	15 00	25 00	60 00	90 00

4th Estate's most beautiful stand.

Lists of Everybody's Advertising, 1 cts. per line.

Quotes cash, 50 per ct. advance of above rates.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON.
Counsellors-at-Law,
Solicitors in Chancery, Supreme Court of Errors and Appeals, Notaries Public, Commissioners of Deeds, Masters-in-Chancery for Union County, and Counsellors and Solicitors of Plainfield Banking and Building Associations.
Office, Park and North Avenue. 5-30-tfm

W. V. STEELE,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner of Deeds, &c.
Office, Park and North Avenue. 5-30-tfm

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P.O. Box 118, Dunellen, N. J., or Plainfield, in care of Constitutionalist. Terms reasonable.

D. CHARLES H. TRIBUS,
Dentist,
20 West Front street, where local anæsthetic or gas for extracting teeth without pain. Gold fillings a specialty. 5-30-tf

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 31, Scotch Plains, N. J. Orders left at F. J. Cheney's Grocery Store, 20 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention. 5-30-tf

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
247 Broadway, New York city. Rooms 32 and 33. (Elevator and Steam.) Both Building.) Residence, Plainfield, N. J. 5-30-tf

J. E. FOSTER,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office in A. M. Seguine's livery stable, corner Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Day or night calls promptly attended. Residence, No. 16 Cleveland place, Plainfield, N. J. Horses will receive the most attentive care. Residence, at Reed's restaurant, corner Main street. 5-30-tf

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.,
Residence and Shop No. 26 East 2d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 6-27

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds.
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON.
No. 24 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
L. LUTKINS. L. A. HUMMER. 6-6-tf

TO THE PUBLIC!
We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of
LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.
It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice.
A. D. COOK & BRO.
1m1y1

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE,
[Formerly Dare's.]
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.
Repairing neatly and promptly done.
6-27

FOR BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS
In Furniture
GO TO
23, 25 and 27 PARK AVE.
Garret Q. Packer,

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND Monumental Headstones,
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments
ALL WORK GUARANTEED AS REPRESENTED. ESTIMATES CHEERFULLY GIVEN. ALL ORDERS PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO.
Factory on...ST. to M. E. CH., PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Monuments erected in Evergreen Cemetery, N. Y.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No. 4 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of desirable goods always on hand. Repairing done neatly.

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
Is now the sole proprietor of the old established market at
NO. 14 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the finest grades of Fresh and Salt Meats. Full of all kinds, Oysters, Clams, Game in season at reasonable prices. Goods delivered to any part of the town. A share of the public patronage is kindly solicited. 6-27

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR D. L. & W. STATION,)
JAS. R. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Rooms Neat. Free-class Furnishing.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-16-tf

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Chalk Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. BOYCE, Proprietor.
Permanent and transient board, at fair rates. First-class stabling and sheds attached. Meals at all reasonable hours.

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President,
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER, Treas.
ELIAS R. POPE, Treasurer. adtf.

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS, BEST IN THE WORLD.
ALEXANDORF DELIVERS PARCELS FREE OF CHARGE. adtf

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C.E. & J.W. BROWN,
(Successors to G. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.,)
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tiles, Anaglypta, Hard, Leather Enamel Floor Papers, &c. Designs for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades. 5-15-tf

LIVERY.
A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Leigh.)
Laing's Hotel Stables

Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure drives. Special attention given to boarding horses by the week or month. Orders solicited.
TELEPHONE CALL, NO. 16.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
opposite Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to answer demands in the kinds of turn-outs he is noted for, and we are confidence of satisfaction. The best of horses can be found at his stables.

Accommodation Express.
ALBERT RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderbeek's Eagle Livery, Park avenue. The Accommodation Express is authorized to be general livery business of the city, delivering goods and packages and from the depot, or from place to place. Moving of furniture a specialty. Orders left with Vanderbeek's will be promptly attended to. 6-27

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The following companies are the strongest and best in the world, and are represented by
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York.
As progress to grant a reasonable amount of insurance at the lowest rates consistent with safety. Office in the Post-office building.
NATHAN HARPER

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represents other first-class fire insurance companies. Agents of the Home Mutual Building Association. Drafts on London, Paris and Berlin. First and City National Bank Stock Bought and Sold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for Sale.
OFFICE:
6 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS R. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
IN THE HENRY STREET, NORTH PLAINFIELD, Orders called for and delivered. A share of the public patronage is solicited.

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET,
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling, Drawing and Cooking. 9-11-tf

PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass.
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
adtf

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
(Successor to E. D. Maynard.)
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 26 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting done at their residences. Shaving, Shampooing, &c., satisfactorily performed. (1)tf

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—MADISON AVENUE AND PUTNAM PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Carey,]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—68 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 208, Mr. Fisher serving a specialty. 12m7

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Best Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 6-13-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
30 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J. mch25tf

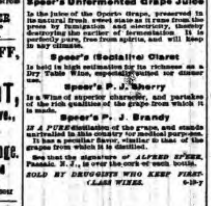
SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion, excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.



Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the blood drop Grape, grown on the hills of Speer's vineyards, and left hang until they shrink and obtain their highest degree of perfection. For invalids it is invaluable.
Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal physicians and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child can take it with safety, and the aged find it to be a true cordial to the blood and debilitated and relied on the various ailments that effect each.
It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the juice of the Sporto grape, preserved in its natural fresh state as it comes from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the ferment of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's (Sedative) Claret is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially for dinner use.
Speer's P. J. Sherry
is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medical purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, and is obtained by the grape from which it is distilled.
For sale by the proprietor, ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., or over the counter of such bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 6-19-7

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The most convenient in the State, and made on the premises from the finest Havana.
CLEAR HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
A full representation of the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars. Cigars to suit families always on hand.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety.
1y1y

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMESTIC
—SEGARS!—
No. 20 PARK AVE., (next door to RECORD OFFICE.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials, of every description.
Discriminating "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, which is recommended and especially adapted. 6-27

SANITARY PLUMBING.
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc. Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above branches in a thorough and workmanlike manner.
Persons contemplating repairs will find it to their interest to call and get my prices. Every job guaranteed to be satisfactorily done. Shop on Somerset street, near Park avenue.
D. W. LITTELL,
Box 1, North Plainfield, N. J.

ECHOES OF LONG AGO.

A Section Where the Old Mill Songs Are Still Heard.

The Rockies' "Quarters" as a Desolate Plantation—The Old Stand Mill as Worth—The Song and Poetry of Home Days.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

Many are the plantation relics of the "old regime" to be found in the "black districts" of southern Colorado. Wherever the whites are in the majority, progress has modernized the customs; new ideas and new discoveries have been adopted, and the days of old Dixie have become only a memory. But on many of the old estates and plantations in the "black districts" of Colorado, the slaves founded by their former owners, but still compelled by a force stronger than law to remain with their children and their children's children, the condition of affairs is very different. There these has been no progress, and in the opposite, indeed—and here many of the primitive usages of thirty years ago are still in force.

But before speaking further of the relics, a word for the old plantations on which they are found. The old plantations are interesting enough, because of their former beauty and the luxury of the life there formerly enjoyed, because of their present dilapidation and the wild picturesqueness that surrounds them. To begin fittingly, there is the "big gate" at the entrance of the long avenue, bordered by moss-grandiloquent cedars, which, as the gate—to-day it is gone like the fencing, for only a zig-zag ridge of rotten plank and post winds in and out among the tangled undergrowth—is flanked by two huge live-oaks, the oaks are fettered by grape vines, dropping under tons of moss, and from their branches hang like a mantle heavy bunky-headed glands drawn up in battle array against the gantt of the weird solemn moss which hangs from the branches. The dwelling at the end of the avenue is tottering to the fall; shorn of steps, shutters, window-panes, the pillars of every portable ornament, rotting and ruined. The smoke-house, with its hundred hams depended, and through which clouds of smoky smoke were wont to come, after enveloping the fresh-salted meats hanging from the beams, is now lonely inside, and thus helping to "cure" them; the kitchen, wherein three hundred and sixty-five feasts per annum were prepared in "the good old days;" the slides that once harbored many a sable cook, are now broken and the rankings of the house servants—all leaning, falling or fallen.

Say that a stranger is approaching the "quarters" (which in slavery days meant that long row of negro cabins far afield in which the black folks dwelt). He would see a quaint little settlement of diminutive, dilapidated houses, patched and propped in a most inconceivable fashion, and surrounded by little patches of turnips, cabbages and potatoes, a few fowls and pigs, and a host of gaunt curs, piles of oyster shells, stacks of fodder, potato banks fenced in with rails, or occasionally with a pear tree—all these, with the inhabitants, he would see at a glance and while approaching.

Not long since the writer, accompanied by a photographer and two friends, blacks to carry the camera and pull the oars, journeyed far into the country, over waded creek land, for the purpose of obtaining a picture of the only ante-bellum stone mill within many miles of any city that diligent inquiry could locate.

Let us examine it in detail.

Until the large square frame over which the two men are standing supports two heavy circular stones. Their surfaces are rough, like those used on paper; the bottom stone is stationary, the top stone movable. In the center of the latter is a round hole, through which there is a "scoop," like the impression of a horse's hoof on the soft earth, chiseled there to fit closely over an iron spindle. This cone is attached or fits loosely over the top of an iron rod, which runs loosely through the center of the lower stone, and on downward through the heavy wooden floor beneath. The top stone is "threaded" and "nutted" both above and beneath the wooden bar, making it possible to lower or raise the cone, for a purpose which will soon appear. The sides of the cone are grooved to facilitate the grinding process. In the center of the upper stone there is a round hole which, after passing half way through the entire thickness of the stone, widens into the "scoop" before mentioned, to fit loosely over the cone. Through this hole the grain is "fed" to the mill, a handful at a time, the grain passing through the grooves to the sides of the cone, and on between the two stones, to be ground into grist or flour, and then, as the two stones are separated by perhaps the thirty-second part of an inch of space, the two rough surfaces act doubling. The fineness of flour may be increased or diminished by manipulating the nuts already described.

Near the outer edge of the upper stone there is a notch an inch deep and an inch or more in diameter. Into this notch fits the wooden bar, which is grasped by the hands of the grinders. The top of this pole runs through a hole in a horizontal bar, which is supported by uprights at a distance of about four feet above the stone. The hole through the pole is made large enough to allow a leaving plenty of room for the "play" which is necessary.

And now, when all is ready, let it be remembered that the cone fits loosely over the bar of the iron rod, the upper mill-stone fits loosely over the cone, and the bar runs loosely through the lower stone.

The rest is plain. The men as they stand erect their strength upon pushing the pole, and the upper stone revolves, slowly at first, for it weighs several hundred pounds, then faster and faster, until it rushes around with a speed that would take it across the country at twenty miles an hour, did it but have the chance.

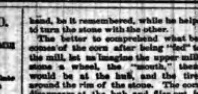
Then the grain is fed in, and the entire torn from at the proper angle.

"Let 'em grind hard and fast," said "Bill." "Only that way can we adapt your machine to try it, for the speed of the rushing stone is never discovered at the moment while the mill is being used. With the utmost care and grace the scoop is filled with grain, and the grain into the hole in the top of the stone, and the upper stone—without altering the rapidly revolving pole to strike its corresponding mate below—is allowed to crush and grind the blow of a sledge hammer. Then the men step back, and the work with each hand, be it remembered, while he helps to turn the stone with the other.

The latter to comprehend what becomes of the grain after being "fed" to the mill, let us imagine the upper millstone a wheel, and some grain thereon would be at the hub, and the flour around the rim of the stone. The cone disappears at the hub and fits down in the shape of grist, at the tire, from between the stones, being showered against the four sides of the mill-frame and also flows from a rapidly moving wheel.

But what of the mill-songs?

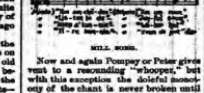
From the long, long ago, there comes to me even as I write, that rushing sound which nothing can imitate, and that energetic accompaniment. With the eye of memory I see again the old quarters and the old mill, and Minda, Minda, Sleeper and Peter—the names sound to-day as natural, they are singing; as usual, Minda leads, and this is what they sing:



MILL SONG.

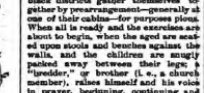
Now and again Pompey or Peter gives vent to a resounding "whooper," but with this exception the doleful monotony of the chant is never broken until the corn sack is empty, or until there is a reason to change the tune for another equally as dismal and monotonous.

Another chant which comes to mind is one that better suits the mortar and pestle for "beating" rice. To this tune I can not recall any fixed set of words, but as all negro ballads sung to beguile the hours of labor invariably contain some reference to the work of the moment, the following words will come very closely to the mark. The tune, however, is a bona fide "black district" song:

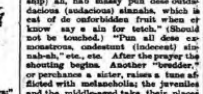


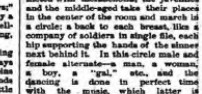
MORTAR AND PESTLE SONG.

I take it for granted that few, if any, of our Northern friends have ever seen the negroes stock. Come, I do not mean that a "shoot" such as Mr. Webster dedines may be seen, nor do I refer at all to Mr. Webster's shoes. To shoot, according to the colored country folk, is to engage in a religious dance, and to this dance alone is reference made. The act of shouting is grotesque enough. Of certain nights of the week and often on Sunday, during the day the inhabitants of the plantations in the black districts gather themselves together by prearrangement—generally at one of their cabins—for purposes pious. When all is ready and the attendees are about to begin, when the aged are seated upon stools and benches against the walls, and the children are snugly packed away between their legs or "brodder," or brother (i. e., a church member), raises himself and his voice in prayer, beginning, continuing and ending (with slight variations) much in the wise: "O' glow good whoppered (shepherd) whom we wash up (worship) ah, hah massy pen dese outdacious (audacious) sheahs, which is eat of de onforbidden fruit when er know say s ain for tetch," (should not be touched.) "Fin all de enemastrous, endestunt (indecent) sin nahah," etc., etc. After the prayer the shouting begins. Either a hymn, song or perchance a sister, raises a tune affected with melancholia, the juveniles and the middle-aged take their places in the center of the room and march in circles; a back to each person, like a company of soldiers in step file, each hip supporting the hands of the sinner next behind it. In this circle male and female alternate—man, a woman, a boy, a "gal," etc., and the dancing is done in perfect time with the music, which latter is furnished by the voices and the handclapping of the shouters. To describe the dance is beyond me, the contortions of body, legs and arms being simply indescribable. The only further odd some specimens of the shouting hymns, and here they are:

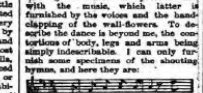


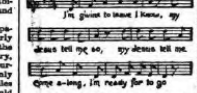
Another that I remember well runs thus:



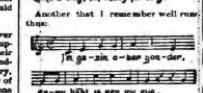


Something awfully methetic, and which is sung by the young bucks in the field or on the hunt, was pathetically as follows:

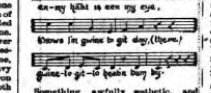




But of all the old plantation songs that must die like an echo of the past, the following boat song is perhaps the most worthy of consideration. Whether it has rhyme or not, there is poetry in them, and there is religion and pathos in them. I quote several of the lines and give the tune below:



But all of the old plantation songs must pass like an echo of the past, and the following boat song is perhaps the most worthy of consideration. Whether it has rhyme or not, there is poetry in them, and there is religion and pathos in them. I quote several of the lines and give the tune below:



Letter Headings,
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memoranda,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Public or Private Circulation.
Everything

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST.

DAILY PRESS

(Chautauqua Building).

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

JUST THE MAN FOR THE PLACE.

The wealthy man is often the most burdened. Sometimes I wish I could get a mile to take the responsibility and duties of my fortune off my hands.—Rockwell Hogan, in a recent interview.

If you have a friend worth saving,
Who should either thrive or die
By the glance of the morning's dawning
With a glorious sunset tint;
Or should either thrive or perish
In the shade
Of the night and of a deathless fame;
Or if you intend not to find him, well, I'll confess
I would like to oblige, but tread have no interest.
For he's not very numerous just now.

But you took a notion when he'd write a song
That I would edit and publish the same;
Of your assertion I know full well,
I know him—I know him, and hasten to state
He is ready to take all your burden and care,
Do your work about as well as you will find him at home.
Envy accept and won't stop to decline.
Just write us the fellow who wrote this poem—
He will tell you a man who is qualified.
—E. W. Peck, in Peck's Sun.

JACK'S MOTHER-IN-LAW.

The Pathetic Tale of a Victim of the Old Joke.

Jack's mother-in-law was coming to make them a visit. Jack had married Alice down in the country, where he had gone on missions for the bishop. He had been in such in love with Alice that he had not paid much attention to her mother during their courtship, and, to tell the truth, he had almost forgotten about her since. She seemed to Jack a good old soul, but rather tiresome and prosy. Now, there was nothing prosy about Jack's set. Even the old bachelors with whom he were "up-and-scorning," as he used to say, so Alice's mother with her quiet ways and almost Hindu devotion to her pretty daughter had impressed him more as an adjunct to Alice than any thing else. And now she was coming to visit them. He had not thought of her since five months before, when he had made some excuse to get out of accompanying Alice down to see her.

Alice was one of those selfish little women who often make the most devoted of wives. Just as her mother had worshiped her father, Alice, who she adored and petted Jack, but there was no room in her heart for any one else except her self. They had been married a year now, and a little Jack had recently come to them—a red-faced, bald-headed baby—but Alice was very proud of him, and she wrote for his grandmother to come and see him.

Jack was the best-hearted fellow in the world, but he had been brought up very differently from these simple country people. Sometimes he was a little bored even by Alice, although he loved her deeply; but he knew that he was sure he could not stand that, and so he planned to be at home as little as possible during her stay.

The gentle old lady felt strange and out of place in Alice's home. The busy city doctor, the maid-of-all-work, the servants were all so different from the people she had known, and Jack—she was terribly in awe of Jack. Alice was full of plans and projects for the baby, and Jack's mother felt a great deal to herself. The poor old lady strayed about lonely and homesick in the great rooms, being afraid to touch any thing Alice seemed like strangers to her—all but little Jack. Babies are babies, rich or poor, city or country—and the old nurse had a good many of them in her day and she did not feel shy with little Jack. And he was only her—her grandson. She wished that they would send the nurse away and let her care for him. She held him in her arms and rocked him and crooned an old song in a cracked little voice, quite forgetting that the dignified nurse was in the room. And the nurse's heart softened toward the dear old lady as she heard the song—for her own mother had sung just such songs over her years before.

It happened to be this time of year of between seasons for the funny men on the newspapers—that is, too late for the annual joke about the coal-dealer—too early for the ones about the coal-dealer—so they ran in all the old mother-in-law jokes for the little sheet that Jack's mother read the daily papers from end to end. There was much in them that she neither liked nor understood, but reading helped to pass the time, and she had so much time. She had always been careful to let the little sheet that came out at "Grece's Corners" every Saturday for forty years, but that was purely a habit. Another man in town told for trade there, but old Johnson, the "Ed," had told him that he had furnished the brains for that town and had set his own type for forty years and that neither his brains nor his fingers showed any signs of giving out for some time yet. So the Bulletin went on in the old way, giving the deaths and marriages and town topics, and the mother-in-law joke had never penetrated to the editorial sanctum. It came that to one reader these paragraphs were a novelty.

She pondered much over them, poor woman. She knew that there were many of them, and Judge Gilmore's wife at the "Corners" was a terror, and the report was that Joe Jones' mother-in-law made it so hot for Joe that he had to leave. But then Lucy was shiftless and Joe was a drunkard. It seemed cruel to her that Alice should be made the papers rated all mothers-in-law with such as they, and she grew so sensitive about her daughter's home that she hardly dared address Jack less he think her a meddler.

Jack read these funny stories too and the fellows joked him, and he began to come to them as a man with a mother-in-law, for men amongst like to see something and be tired of being simply a "good fellow." So he began to look upon her as a terrible old ogress down-town and study out late at night, telling Alice and her mother that his business troubles, but he talked about them a great deal, and got a lot of sympathy at home.

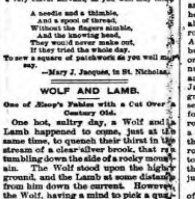
One day Alice's mother went down to her home on a business errand. It was rather a mysterious affair, but as Alice was too much taken up with baby to notice her mother's nervousness, and Jack was paid no attention to it, he left at night she returned, pale and tired, with a little chokin in her pleased scarcely to speak.

Jack did not come home that night, he telephoned Alice that business was pressing and that he had to go to the city and would not be home for the night. He would breakfast down town and be home in time to see her mother off.

The next day the old lady prepared for her departure. She kissed Alice and her daughter Alice, so she left—all alone with her self-respect and a high old sense of honor, and she knew that she had been guilty of a deception in a degenerate and corrupt age. She had been guilty of deception in a degenerate and corrupt age. She had been guilty of pulling down the wool over the head of him that she loved best on earth, and she suffered terribly and smiles are in combination with power nothing is so easy as for him to be a good husband and father, innocents and exercise all manner of infanticide.

THE OLD STONE MILL.

THE WOLF AND THE LAMB.

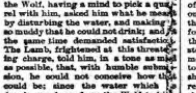


Now one more little answer,
Through the table,
Does both the others' bidding
Very faithfully,
But she eats me no meat,
And she drinks me no drink.
A very clever servant, as you well may think.
Another little answer,
On my finger sits,
She the others' bidding serves
Very neatly this;
But she eats me no meat,
And she drinks me no drink,
A very clever servant, as you well may think.
A needle and a thimble,
And a spool of thread,
Witness this my finger nimble,
And the knowing head,
Which I've not mentioned yet,
If they tried the whole day,
To new a square of patchwork as you well may say.
—Mary J. Jacques, in St. Nicholas.

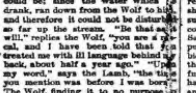
WOLF AND LAMB.

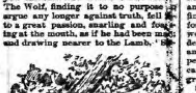
One of Aesop's Fables with a Cut Over a Hundred Years Old.

One hot, sultry day, a Wolf and a Lamb happened to come, just at the same time, to quench their thirst in the stream of a clear silver brook, that rushed tumbling down the side of a rocky mountain. The Wolf stood upon the highest ground, and the Lamb at some distance from him down the current. However, the Wolf, having a mind to pick a quarrel with him, asked him what he meant by disturbing the water and making it so muddy that he could not drink; and for the same time demanded satisfaction. The Lamb, frightened at the hideous raving charge, told him, in a tone as meek as possible, that, with humble submission, he could not conceive how that could be; since the water which he drank, ran down from the Wolf to him, and therefore it could not be disturbed so far up the stream. "Be that as it will," replies the Wolf, "you are a villain, and I have been told that you treated me with ill language behind my back, about half a year ago." "Indeed, my word," says the Lamb, "the utmost mention was before I was born." The Wolf, finding it to no purpose to argue any longer against truth, fell to a great passion, snarling and foaming at the mouth, as he left him, and said drawing nearer to the Lamb, "Sir,



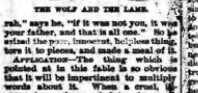
Another that I remember well runs thus:





Something awfully methetic, and which is sung by the young bucks in the field or on the hunt, was pathetically as follows:

But of all the old plantation songs that must die like an echo of the past, the following boat song is perhaps the most worthy of consideration. Whether it has rhyme or not, there is poetry in them, and there is religion and pathos in them. I quote several of the lines and give the tune below:



JOHN LIKED FUN.

A Horse That Made Sport of His Poor Master.

John was tricky. Those who thought him a "hearty," smart and obedient, found that he was mischievous and full of his "jokes."

John certainly did have a love of fun in his make-up. He would give him a lolly companion for four boys who in turn did like to "plague the poor old boy," the family horse.

John was black-coated, strong and intelligent. His tricks were not vicious ones. He never kicked, balked nor ran away, being sober and well conducted generally, except by the senior members of the family.

He had a fondness for his master who petted him a great deal. The women could drive him. He brought them home in just the same condition they started out.

THREE FOUR BOYS ARE HUNTING FUN.

It was only with the boys of the family that John ventured to "joke."

There were four of them—Ernest, Walter, Henry and Albert—a bright young fellows who delighted to tickle John's nose with a fragrant smelling apple, and thus bring a way when he prepared to enjoy it.

John was a pig in his love for mellow ripe apples. The boys thought it fun to tease him a little and make him anxious to get it, before giving it up to him.

They really did teach him to play "hide and seek" with them.

One of his tricks was to sight and sneak up his body when being saddled, if one of the little boys was about to ride him.

Of course the saddle was invariably turned after they had ridden a little distance.

Another trick was snatching a rap from their heads and galloping away with it, to the delight of the boys, bringing defiance to the capless youngster.

One May afternoon as I sat beside a window sewing I heard a voice say, "We are going to ride out to Muddy Fork. John is lazy—don't have enough to do."

John looked at me, and I plainly saw fun in his eyes. He made a nip at an old gunnysack and then went along as sober as judges are said to be.

His expression plainly said to me: "Just wait, boys scamper soon my back are hunting for fun—I'll help find it."

Ernest and Albert whistled gayly. Henry and Walter urged "lazy bones" along.

"Such a good horse as he is. It isn't every one that would carry such a load of restless boys," was my comment as John slowly crept along, head down, apparently meditating deeply.

The boys, wearied and muddy, walked in at the gate, angry and ready to "have it out with that sly old horse."

"What had John been up to?" inquired.

"Done!" chorused an indignant quartette of boyish voices. "He poised along as if he was asleep, and threw us over his into the water. All at once he laid down, spilled us off his back and just walked off home."

"He did it on purpose, of course he did. He thinks we can play forever as his little boys. He don't dare try 'em with the men."

"It likes to pound his back," said one.

We went to the back gate and saw him standing there, looking meek and innocent, only—I detected a twinkle in his eye.

He received a scolding which he did not deserve, for we could plainly see him in the stable-yard with four boys perched upon his back.—Ella Guernsey, in The Farmer.

Proof of Biting Off Noses.

A missionary, writing of the degraded condition of the people of the Gilbert Islands, tells how he settled a dispute.

"The further you go north in the Gilbert islands the less you see of the horrible custom of biting off noses and ears, or any thing, indeed, distinguish all the male sex. But at the same time, as you go north, there is more inclination to kill than at the south, where the intention seems to be to lacerate and injure. I have been sent to the men of those who will produce the greatest amount of misery. One shipmate produced a bottle of rum, and proposed that we should all drink together, and then, as the liquor had taken effect, we should bite off noses. This accounts for the great number of noseless persons one meets. A few years ago one of these men with his chum climbed up and bit off the nose from the figurehead of the Morning Star. It has since been restored with one of lead.

Why Story of Sand Was Told.

In a curious old book entitled "The Curiosities of London," we find the following particulars concerning a unique entertainment given in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Mark Scarlett, Westminster, made a lock consisting of eleven links, each link consisting of six rings, all of which, together with the key, weighed but one dram. He also made a chain of gold, consisting of forty-three links, which after fastening it to the neck of a common flea, the whole being so minute that the little animal drew it after him with ease. He also made a silver cup, with a cover to it, so complete with perfect ease. All of these together, lock and key, chain and flea, cup and cover, did not weigh above one grain and a half."—Chicago Journal.

The Top and the Ball.

The more the girls plan for some young man, the more sprains they have to make.—Ex.

The Constitutionalist.
W. L. FORCE, A. L. FORCE
Editor and Proprietor. Publisher.
DAIL COLUMBIA.

The people of the United States have valid cause to be thankful that the fourth day of March has been reached, and with the ending of the most unscrupulous partisan House of Congress that ever blurred the annals of national legislation.

Regardless of equity, economy, precedent and even common decency, the majority of that body arrogate to consolidate party supremacy at the expense of honor, justice and the public welfare, and notwithstanding the fact that their doings had been so sternly rebuked by the judgment of an aroused and outraged people rendered the end of their selfish reign of the country by November 4th.

Fortunately some of their most ominous schemes were finally defeated with the aid of a few Western Republican Senators, who, acting in the hand-to-hand conflict, rendered the last days of the Congress of 1890-91 memorable by defying the dictation of the party caucus and voting according to the dictates of their own judgment and conscience.

Such a Congress never before sailed American history, and it is to be sincerely hoped that a like one will never again be permitted to exist.

As a significant sign, the murky clouds rolled away and smiling sunbeams greeted the land on the 5 h of March.

The reign of Reed, McKinley and Lodge was over.

Hail Columbia! Hap py Land!

SLIP-SHOD LEGISLATION.

Legislation ought to be a work of patient deliberation, each proposed measure being thoroughly considered in detail, and, without needless delay, decided upon its own merits.

That is the business like and most conducive to the general public good.

But a contrary plan prevails.

After being in session three months, wasting time, and dawdling during the very best hours of its life hurriedly passing appropriation and other bills involving millions of the people's money, sending them to conference committees, and then with railroad speed and mad confusion and midnight drowsiness converting into law crudely formed injustice.

In the face of such slip-shod legislation it is not wonder that the McKinley tariff bill was enrolled, with a bogus clause inserted.

More practical business methods and fewer political intrigues and shams would prove a saving benefit to honest men of all parties.

THE NEW APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The new Congressional Apportionment bill, which has passed both Houses, gives New Jersey an additional member. It fixes the number of Representatives at 356. The present House numbers 332 members, and no State suffers a loss of membership, while the twenty four new members are distributed among eighteen different States. The States receiving more than two members are Nebraska, which is raised from three to six Illinois, Pennsylvania, Minnesota and Texas are each allotted two additional members; and Alabama, California, Colorado, Georgia, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, Oregon, Wisconsin and Washington, one each. The new Electoral College will be made up of 444 members, requiring 223 votes to elect a President and Vice President.

The number of votes new 8 states in the last two years will increase the number of Congressmen from 325 to 356 and the number of Senators from seventy six to eighty eight, which will make the number of Electoral votes 444 to 356, instead of 401 to 325. The politicians have calculated upon all of the additional votes, but it is doubtful now if they will get half of them. Politics are mighty queer in.

The Legislature is announced to adjourn March 23.

Speaker Bergen is receiving praises from the press of the State, for the efficient manner in which he controls the affairs of the Assembly.

WON'T LEGALIZE BOOKMAKING.

The Jersey Race-Track Bills to be Smothered in Committee.

A leading Democrat said at Trenton, Thursday, what THE PRESS said a week ago—that the race track bills would be smothered in the House Committee on Revision of the Laws. If racing is to be continued on the tracks in this State, the managers will have to take the risk of interference on the part of the authorities, and the bookmakers will re subject to arrest and punishment as heretofore. Early in the session certain members of the Legislature were in a mood to pass the bills, believing that such courses as Lincoln and Monmouth Park would be tied to prove of benefit since such a fuss and cry has been raised against the betting evil to Legislature has decided that bookmaking shall be legalized.

There is a story that the Legislature will pass the bills next week, in order that Gov. Abbett may veto them and pose as other saint who has refused to be coerced by party wishes.

Leading members of the Legislature deny this, however, and predict that the bills will be killed by the open and direct methods should they emerge from the hands of the committee.

North Plainfield Potentates Viewed From Abroad.

[From The New York World.]

Counselor Charles A. Reed, of North Plainfield, in whose behalf the unseemly but unavailing attempt was made to unseat Senator William J. Sewell, was a visitor at court to-day, in a tall, slender, black-mustached young man, and a son-in-law of Amos Clark, Jr., Somerville's distinguished Democrat. His failure to grasp the State senatorial prize was a bitter disappointment, but he has got over it by this time, and is as full of ambition as ever.

Mayor Carpenter has been hugely loving what hair he has left on his head in taking care of North Plainfield. Nevertheless he is an enthusiast on the subject of borough government and recently helped to Round Brook to the end of its petitions existence as a village. Now he is attending the same fatherly aid to Wee Gait.

To Build up South Plainfield.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad Company will soon begin the erection of a large station at South Bound Brook, and also of the new fixtures to make Bound Brook the terminus of the local New York trains. Gen. Wm. A. Morris and the Lehigh officials came upstairs to New York they were going to enlarge the South Bound Brook depot. Mr. Morris and the Lehigh officials were also very busily engaged in looking over the ground with Landdowners to Plainfield which will be known as the Plainfield branch of the L. V. R. R.

SUBURBAN SPRING ELECTIONS.

REPUBLICANS FIND THEIR USUAL MAJORITIES GREATLY REDUCED.

A Pretty Hard Day for Officers Down in Elysee, but Charles Pinet, the Elysee Constable, Comes Out Ahead—The Democratic Majority in Fly Flavora.

The neighborhood elections Tuesday were very quiet affairs. The victories were Republican, as usual, but the majorities did not run very much above those form of odd-time majorities, and during the day the contest was very on. Averaging for Democratic success. For a North Plainfield election, Tuesday's contest often was a very light one. The feature of the Borough contest was Fred. Slater's splendid run for the Mayoralty. Rewen ignored absolutely, and he polled just as popular and successful a worker as ever, and rolled up a big majority where others of his party barely got elected. When the hour for closing the Borough polls arrived there were seven belated ones who had to be refused the privilege of casting their ballots. The count of votes could not be completed till half-past four o'clock next morning. The official figures of the returns are as follows:

North Plainfield Borough.

FOR MAYOR.

Charles Pinet (Rep.)	324
Frederick M. Slater (Dem.)	289
Pinet's majority	35

FOR COUNCILMEN.

Henry E. Needham (Rep.)	321
E. C. Shann (Dem.)	291
Needham's majority	30
Lewis A. Hummer (Rep.)	320
Charles Bennett (Dem.)	290
Hummer's majority	30

FOR COLLECTOR.

H. Newton Spencer (Rep.)	323
Augustus J. Bowne (Dem.)	288
Spencer's majority	35

FOR ASSESSORS.

Jacob Long (Rep.)	324
Jacob Vreeli (Dem.)	288
Long's majority	36

FOR STREET COMMISSIONER.

George Conover (Rep.)	327
Henry Bodenheimer (Dem.)	284
Conover's majority	43

FOR BOROUGH MARSHAL.

William N. Pangborn (Dem.)	306
Thomas Rathbun (Rep.)	302
Pangborn's majority	4

FOR COMMISSIONER OF APPEAL.

Johnathan Clawson (Rep.)	332
Ralph Conover (Dem.)	280
Clawson's majority	52
Jacob E. Lanyon (Rep.)	324
George Hart (Dem.)	288
Lanyon's majority	36
Randolph G. Silvers (Rep.)	323
John A. Thickstun (Dem.)	288
Silvers's majority	35

APPROPRIATIONS.

All Borough tickets, of both parties, bore this inscription:

Appropriations for roads $4,000, $1,000 of which for use on Somerset street.

For Surveyor and Engineer, $1,500.

For Board of Health, $300.

Elected.

North Plainfield Township.

FOR TOWN CLERK.

	1st. 2d.	Dist. Dist.	Total
Horace J. Martin (Rep.)	204	174	378
Frank C. Kvenson, (Dem.)	185	167	352
Martin's majority	19	7	26

FOR ASSESSOR.

Justus H. Codington (Rep.)	196	180	376
John Vetterlein, (Dem.)	177	171	348
Codington's majority	19	9	28

FOR COLLECTOR.

H. Newton Spencer, (Rep.)	203	177	380
A. J. Winckler, (Dem.)	182	167	349
Spencer's majority	21	10	31

FOR COMMISSIONER OF APPEALS.

George W. Bullions, Rep.)	204	177	381
Charles Shepherd, (Dem.)	186	177	363
Bullions's majority	18	0	18

FOR OVERSEER OF THE POOR.

J. W. A. Bonnell, (Rep.)	197	178	375
Thomas Newman, (Dem.)	164	173	337
Bonnell's majority	33	5	38

FOR JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

John W. VanHorn (Rep.)	198	182	380
Wm. C. Baldwin, (Rep.)	198	182	380
A. W. Sperry, (Dem.)	167	165	332
Alfred Wells, (Dem.)	167	178	345

FOR TOWNSHIP COMMITTEE.

Abram P. Voorhis (Rep.)	207	177	384
Wm. C. Smith (Rep.)	201	186	387
Ira F. Hilton (Rep.)	201	186	387
John T. Case (Dem.)	169	167	336

FOR COMMISSIONER OF HIGHWAYS.

John Gerrebrandt (Rep.)	208	178	386
Michael Powers (Rep.)	208	178	386
Henry Bodenheimer (Dem.)	172	174	346
Henry T. Harris (Dem.)	173	168	341

FOR CONSTABLES.

Randolph G. Silvers (Rep.)	208	178	386
Johnathan Clawson (Rep.)	208	178	386
Wm. H. Lilinger (Rep.)	208	178	386
John A. Thickstun (Dem.)	169	167	336
George Stewart (Dem.)	169	178	347
Ralph Conover (Dem.)	169	178	347

FOR CORPORATORS.

Thomas MacDonald (Rep.)	212	180	392
Wm. C. Baldwin (Rep.)	208	178	386
Samuel C. Payne (Rep.)	208	178	386
William Jackson (Dem.)	154	172	326
Thomas Pendleton (Dem.)	154	172	326

FOR FOUR REPEIVERS.

Samuel Hudson (Rep.)	208	178	386
Samuel Tagmire (Rep.)	208	178	386
Gilbert Cox (Rep.)	208	178	386
John Stine, (Rep.)	208	178	386
Johnathan Clawson (Rep.)	208	178	386
Samuel Hudson (Dem.)	169	168	337
Godfrey Reich (Dem.)	169	168	337

FOR SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

For repair of roads outside of Borough, $1,000, $400 to be left in the hands of Town Committee.

For support of poor, $1,200, $900 to be left in the hands of Town Committee.

For salary of Town Committee, $50 each. Elected.

Fanwood Township.

In Fanwood Township only one ticket was in the field, and of the 115 ballots cast the Republicans had the following:

Township Clerk—Edward L. Rand, 114.

Township Committee, 3 years—Georges Kyte, 105.

Assessor—John Robbins, 115.

Collector—Daniel E. Terry, 112.

Justice of the Peace, 5 years—Hezekiah Rand, 114.

Commissioner of Appeal—William H. Lake, 114; Harvey Cook, 114; Augustus D. Osborn, 114.

Surveyors of Highways—John Cook, 112; Jas. E. Goodhouse, 112.

Overseer of the Poor—Silas M. Parse, 113.

Constables—Wm. G. Cook, 112.

Pound Keeper—Wm. G. Kelley, 113; Myron Young, 113; Daniel L. Allen, 113; Edward Terry, 113.

For repairing roads, $1,000; for crushed stone, $1,500; for support of poor, $600; for survey of roads, $100; for salary of Clerk, $4.50; for day's work in roads for men, $2.

Piscataway Township.

FOR TOWN CLERK.

	Dem. New	Rep. New
	poll.	poll.	Total
Nicholas R. Manning, (Rep.)	203	151	354
Charles H. Ward, (Dem.)	151	203	354
Manning's majority	52	52	52

FOR ASSESSOR.

Abner L. Conlon, (Rep.)	202	151	353
Stanley Day, (Dem.)	151	203	354
Conlon's majority	51	52	1

FOR COLLECTOR.

Martin D. Norton, (Rep.)	204	151	355
Wm. J. Schenck, (Dem.)	151	203	354
Norton's majority	53	52	1

FOR COMMISSIONER OF APPEAL.

Samuel S. Allen, (Rep.)	202	151	353
Samuel Runyon, (Dem.)	151	203	354
Leonard G. Dale (Rep.)	202	151	353
John S. Cox, (Dem.)	151	203	354

FOR COMMISSIONER OF HIGHWAYS.

Peter Runk (Dem.)	151	203	354
Calvin Dunn (Rep.)	202	151	353

FOR CONSTABLES.

A. L. Sheppard (Rep.)	202	151	353
Leonard G. Manning (Dem.)	151	203	354
Leonard G. Dale (Rep.)	202	151	353
John S. Cox (Dem.)	151	203	354

FOR JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

R. Dunham (Dem.)	92	58	150
Alexander Runyon (Dem.)	92	58	150
Hiram H. Riley (Rep.)	127	93	220

FOR JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Hiram H. Riley (Rep.)	127	93	220
Riley's majority	35	35	70

FOR CONSTABLES.

Adam Hoffer (Dem.)	92	58	150
John F. Dunham (Dem.)	92	58	150
Adam Hoffer (Dem.)	92	58	150
Allen When (Dem.)	92	58	150

PLAINFIELD TO BE GLORIFIED.

ANOTHER PROGRESSIVE CITIZEN SHOUTS "DOWN WITH THE OBSTRUCTIONISTS!"

Sterrie Cox To Have Street Named After Him—Theatre of the Future Now—The Populous Will Have to Walk to Six Corners—Other Interesting Items.

[From the Daily Press of March 7.]

The Boss ugh Council of North Plainfield held another struggle over the street lighting problem last night. All of the members present and the mild Councilman Sampler were present. Councilman Hedden introduced a resolution that the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps be authorized to erect twenty additional lamps on the north and south sides of the Somerset street and Johnson drive bonds, and new people were likely to come in and help the growth of the place. Bah! The streets were going to pile up the taxes the way they would drive people away. Such a proposition indicated bad management.

Councilman Smalley said that he would be pleased to have such changes made in the location of lamps as were thought necessary, and stated that if the committee would meet at his office on Monday evening the number of lamps he should be glad of it.

Councilman Smalley asserted that he was so well pleased with the new light that he was anxious to have his taxes increased by the erection of additional lamps. He said the committee on lamps and fires had refused to act on the committee. This last statement Mr. Emmons denied point-blank, and said that the balance of the committee had misrepresented things to him.

Councilman Needham hesitated about committing himself on the matter of erecting additional lamps. He said he knew what he had to say about it. Finally he announced, in a smooth, conciliatory tone of voice, that he had great confidence in the committee on Fire, Water and Lamps, and consequently would indorse the resolution.

Councilman Hopeman had all this while been nursing a feeling of righteous indignation, and he was very determined and emphatic in his subsequent remarks.

He said he was a plain-thought-out man—he said—for Mr. Needham to want to distribute, blindly, through the committee, the new light is wholesale failing. Councilmen, Hopeman said, had a right to know what the committee had been doing. They—he added—had not lamps been put in "Bull Frog City" where there had been lamps before? Lamps had been squandered on the east side of Somerset street, and on the other side, while "Bull Frog City" has been left in worse darkness than before. The resolution of Mr. Smalley was for business men, and was for the interests of the people. It was in the interests of the Public Electric Light Company of North Plainfield that Councilman Hedden magnified light. If the company would keep up the voltage and continue to give the full 35-candle power the borough could afford to erect all the lamps the town needs. When—he concluded—a man hires a splendid new servant that takes the place of two other servants, he doesn't go and hire a lot of other help for the sake of having them around and getting rid of his money; so why should more lamps be ordered when proper gas and desired result. Why had extra lights been put in certain places where they were not needed, and why should those not needed be removed to places where they were required?

Councilman Emmons also was of the opinion that the erection of lamps in "Bull Frog" and Greenbrook road should be lit up," and moved to table the resolution.

Councilman Needham, however, were the ayes and nays called for the motion ordering 30 more lamps was adopted by the following vote:

Aye—Councilmen Needham, Sebring, Hedden—3.

No—Councilmen—Emmons and Hopeman—2.

Councilman Hedden was absent.

Mr. Hopeman then moved that the Mayor and Committee on Fire, Water and lamps together go over the borough to remove to more urgent places such lamps as were not absolutely necessary in present locations. This was carried. Councilman Smalley stood voting no. Councilman Hopeman then moved that the leased back to his chair, and wiggled his thumbs in the armholes of his vest as he voted yes.

The ayes having it would be for him and Councilman Smalley, with perhaps the Mayor's assistance, to overrule the opinion of Councilmen Emmons as to the necessity of lamps in Bull Frog City.

P. M. French was elected a member of the Borough Board of Health for four years. David J. Allen was made a special policeman. All special policemen were ordered to supersede their boys of the police force to the new lockups in the basement of the Borough Hall. The new lockups are to be ready for occupancy by the 15th inst.

The Mayor and Committee were made a committee of Warner Engine Company. The new borough building was referred to the Mayor and Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

Clerk Warner was authorized to advertise for bids for the erection of a new hose house.

VOTING AWAY BOROUGH MONEY.

Councilmen Legislate in Favor of Sterrie Cox—Other Matters Considered by the People Voted to Be Improved—Councilmanic Trotter Totally Spoiled—But He Continues to Enjoy Life.

[From the Daily Press of March 7.]

The Borough Council of North Plainfield held another struggle over the street lighting problem last night. All of the members present and the mild Councilman Sampler were present. Councilman Hedden introduced a resolution that the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps be authorized to erect twenty additional lamps on the north and south sides of the Somerset street and Johnson drive bonds, and new people were likely to come in and help the growth of the place. Bah! The streets were going to pile up the taxes the way they would drive people away. Such a proposition indicated bad management.

Councilman Smalley asserted that he was so well pleased with the new light that he was anxious to have his taxes increased by the erection of additional lamps. He said the committee on lamps and fires had refused to act on the committee. This last statement Mr. Emmons denied point-blank, and said that the balance of the committee had misrepresented things to him.

Councilman Needham hesitated about committing himself on the matter of erecting additional lamps. He said he knew what he had to say about it. Finally he announced, in a smooth, conciliatory tone of voice, that he had great confidence in the committee on Fire, Water and Lamps, and consequently would indorse the resolution.

Councilman Hopeman had all this while been nursing a feeling of righteous indignation, and he was very determined and emphatic in his subsequent remarks.

He said he was a plain-thought-out man—he said—for Mr. Needham to want to distribute, blindly, through the committee, the new light is wholesale failing. Councilmen, Hopeman said, had a right to know what the committee had been doing. They—he added—had not lamps been put in "Bull Frog City" where there had been lamps before? Lamps had been squandered on the east side of Somerset street, and on the other side, while "Bull Frog City" has been left in worse darkness than before. The resolution of Mr. Smalley was for business men, and was for the interests of the people. It was in the interests of the Public Electric Light Company of North Plainfield that Councilman Hedden magnified light. If the company would keep up the voltage and continue to give the full 35-candle power the borough could afford to erect all the lamps the town needs. When—he concluded—a man hires a splendid new servant that takes the place of two other servants, he doesn't go and hire a lot of other help for the sake of having them around and getting rid of his money; so why should more lamps be ordered when proper gas and desired result. Why had extra lights been put in certain places where they were not needed, and why should those not needed be removed to places where they were required?

Councilman Emmons also was of the opinion that the erection of lamps in "Bull Frog" and Greenbrook road should be lit up," and moved to table the resolution.

Councilman Needham, however, were the ayes and nays called for the motion ordering 30 more lamps was adopted by the following vote:

Aye—Councilmen Needham, Sebring, Hedden—3.

No—Councilmen—Emmons and Hopeman—2.

Councilman Hedden was absent.

Mr. Hopeman then moved that the Mayor and Committee on Fire, Water and lamps together go over the borough to remove to more urgent places such lamps as were not absolutely necessary in present locations. This was carried. Councilman Smalley stood voting no. Councilman Hopeman then moved that the leased back to his chair, and wiggled his thumbs in the armholes of his vest as he voted yes.

The ayes having it would be for him and Councilman Smalley, with perhaps the Mayor's assistance, to overrule the opinion of Councilmen Emmons as to the necessity of lamps in Bull Frog City.

P. M. French was elected a member of the Borough Board of Health for four years. David J. Allen was made a special policeman. All special policemen were ordered to supersede their boys of the police force to the new lockups in the basement of the Borough Hall. The new lockups are to be ready for occupancy by the 15th inst.

The Mayor and Committee were made a committee of Warner Engine Company. The new borough building was referred to the Mayor and Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

Clerk Warner was authorized to advertise for bids for the erection of a new hose house.

Cole, trustee and all other workers for the relief in a case like this, are to be congratulated on the success that has attended their efforts.

ordering borough properties printed without throwing the contract open to competition. The sign board "Willow avenue" was ordered removed from the corner of Washington avenue, and "Myrtle avenue" substituted in its place. Willow avenue ends in Myrtle avenue, while Myrtle runs on to Washington.

MAYOR PLACE'S VALEDICTORY.

The Council adjourned without day, ending on the following from Mayor Place:

Gentlemen of the Council:

As this is the last regular meeting of the Borough Council for the fiscal year ending the first Friday in April, before its adjournment I desire to thank all the members of its two branches for the uniform courtesy and consideration they have extended to me personally, but all who are interested in the welfare of the city of Plainfield. When I came here I located within easy walking distance of the station, but I soon discovered that I not only endangered my health by so doing, and that to all intents and purposes my family were still living in the city.

While like many others I came to the country for the benefits of the country—to wit: room and fresh air—at the first opportunity I moved out of a crowded locality where I could secure much of both. But I soon found this necessitated a horse, carriage and a coachman, the care and annoyance of which more than counterbalanced the satisfaction derived from a country home. I have two or three times been upon the point of returning to the city, as many others have done and are doing, but something has not accomplished in the introduction of an electric railway.

The fact that vast sums of money have been and are being invested in electric battery does not make it commercially valuable, and in my opinion it must be born ag in before it will become so for as the horse railroad is concerned. I am constantly in your fullness in discussing the t chnical reasons, etc. Turning to the underground or conduit systems in cities where they have been in use for a time, they have been abandoned. In looking to the horse car advocates we find they have vanished, and we have but one thing left, to wit: an overhead system.

Dangerous? Well yes, about as dangerous as going to New York once a year on a steamer. The danger arising from the use of the motor who exposes such inexcusable ignorance before the public. The current is not dangerous to human life, but it is certainly fatal to the careless or ignorant. Where several days are huddled together at night, breathing the same air, there is great danger of illness and when a disease once appears, it is apt to spread.

The artist has made a sketch of the simple kennel that I think is the best that can be made, and I have seen almost every kind of dog-kennel that has ever tried in this country. It is a little house about four feet long, two feet wide, and three feet high. It has a good roof, sloping on two sides. It has an adjustable bottom that can be removed when the kennel needs cleaning and disinfecting. It should stand on four posts, about six inches from the ground. In front of the kennel, ten feet from a post, there should be a snub wire, about fifteen feet long, and six inches from the ground. It should be about three feet from the door of the kennel. On this there should be an iron ring, and to this the dog's chain should be attached. The dog can run up and down the wire, and be kept from going out of the kennel, at will. This gives him exercise, and keeps him confined within limits. In the same letter I should have said before that the kennel ought to be divided in the center by a partition. In the inner room the dog sleeps, and in the outer he eats. In cold or cold, a piece of carpet might be hung over the outer door.

PLANS FOR A DOG-KENNEL.

So much for a kennel itself, now a word about its location. It should be set upon dry ground, where the sun is quite free, and should, if possible, face the south, so as to be better protected from the winter winds. Every good chicken-house has a kennel over, the bottom removed, and the interior thoroughly disinfected. Some good chicken-men wash an inferior of mercury, should be applied with a brush to every crevice in the building, and it should be left with the kennel exposed to the sun to air and dry. The best bedding for summer-time is made of cedar or pine shavings. In the winter-time nothing is better than rice straw. The kennel I have described for a dog of large size. For a smaller, such as a fox-terrier, a smaller kennel will answer.—Harper's Young People.

A TAME CAT STORY.

Some of the Remarkable Tricks Performed by Bixby's Pet.

I am going to tell you a story of my cousin's pet cat, Bixby.

He is two years old and is named Paddy. I gave him this name myself when he was only little kitten.

My father and mother and I think that Paddy is a very bright, cute cat. He will know his own name.

He jumps through a hoop, and over the back of a chair, and over a cane, and performs the remarkable trick of He really stands straight upon his hind legs and "begs" as you may have seen a dog do. Then he catches the meat in his mouth as paws. It is real fun to see him. I have never seen any other kind of cat that I think I love better. I have lived five years and a half.

The picture I send is one that my cousin took. You will see that Paddy is grumbled cake.

Her sister Marjorie would tell the force of good example, said: "Elsie, my pussy's my cake."—Harper's Young People.

Marjorie: "Mamma, I'm going to be a missionary when I grow up."

Mamma: "Why, my child, what do you think she is now?"

Marjorie: "Why, mamma, I'm a missionary to papa."—Life.

Teacher: "Now, children, I will tell you a story. Pay attention, and you will learn how to behave yourselves. Once there was a little girl who went out into the woods to pick flowers, and she met a bear. What do you think she did?"

Little Tommie: "Run home and tell her mother."

"You must always be polite to your elders, my son," said a father to his boy. "Now, when you see a man with a bald head, you must take off your hat to him."

"Yes, papa," said the boy, "I understand. It's like the sign in front of the barber's shop."

ANOTHER EXPERT'S OPINION.

"THE SOONER IT'S ACCOMPLISHED, THE BETTER."

The Overland System Perfectly Safe, And the Only One Practicable for a Short Railway.

[From The Daily Press of Yesterday.]

The Press is proud to-day to be able to publish the following letter from probably the most expert and experienced electrician that has ever been a citizen of Plainfield. He had to be coaxed into print, and still declines to have his name published.

To the Editor of The Press:—Since the recent action by City Council in regard to establishing a franchise for a street railway in this city, I have been repeatedly asked for my views of the subject. I have invariably expressed my satisfaction at the prospect of a permanent and agreeable means of transportation being introduced, as I believe it will not only benefit me personally, but all who are interested in the welfare of the city of Plainfield. When I came here I located within easy walking distance of the station, but I soon discovered that I not only endangered my health by so doing, and that to all intents and purposes my family were still living in the city.

While like many others I came to the country for the benefits of the country—to wit: room and fresh air—at the first opportunity I moved out of a crowded locality where I could secure much of both. But I soon found this necessitated a horse, carriage and a coachman, the care and annoyance of which more than counterbalanced the satisfaction derived from a country home. I have two or three times been upon the point of returning to the city, as many others have done and are doing, but something has not accomplished in the introduction of an electric railway.

The fact that vast sums of money have been and are being invested in electric battery does not make it commercially valuable, and in my opinion it must be born ag in before it will become so for as the horse railroad is concerned. I am constantly in your fullness in discussing the t chnical reasons, etc. Turning to the underground or conduit systems in cities where they have been in use for a time, they have been abandoned. In looking to the horse car advocates we find they have vanished, and we have but one thing left, to wit: an overhead system.

Dangerous? Well yes, about as dangerous as going to New York once a year on a steamer. The danger arising from the use of the motor who exposes such inexcusable ignorance before the public. The current is not dangerous to human life, but it is certainly fatal to the careless or ignorant. Where several days are huddled together at night, breathing the same air, there is great danger of illness and when a disease once appears, it is apt to spread.

The artist has made a sketch of the simple kennel that I think is the best that can be made, and I have seen almost every kind of dog-kennel that has ever tried in this country. It is a little house about four feet long, two feet wide, and three feet high. It has a good roof, sloping on two sides. It has an adjustable bottom that can be removed when the kennel needs cleaning and disinfecting. It should stand on four posts, about six inches from the ground. In front of the kennel, ten feet from a post, there should be a snub wire, about fifteen feet long, and six inches from the ground. It should be about three feet from the door of the kennel. On this there should be an iron ring, and to this the dog's chain should be attached. The dog can run up and down the wire, and be kept from going out of the kennel, at will. This gives him exercise, and keeps him confined within limits. In the same letter I should have said before that the kennel ought to be divided in the center by a partition. In the inner room the dog sleeps, and in the outer he eats. In cold or cold, a piece of carpet might be hung over the outer door.

PLANS FOR A DOG-KENNEL.

So much for a kennel itself, now a word about its location. It should be set upon dry ground, where the sun is quite free, and should, if possible, face the south, so as to be better protected from the winter winds. Every good chicken-house has a kennel over, the bottom removed, and the interior thoroughly disinfected. Some good chicken-men wash an inferior of mercury, should be applies with a brush to every crevice in the building, and it should be left with the kennel exposed to the sun to air and dry. The best bedding for summer-time is made of cedar or pine shavings. In the winter-time nothing is better than rice straw. The kennel I have described for a dog of large size. For a smaller, such as a fox-terrier, a smaller kennel will answer.—Harper's Young People.

A TAME CAT STORY.

Some of the Remarkable Tricks Performed by Bixby's Pet.

I am going to tell you a story of my cousin's pet cat, Bixby.

He is two years old and is named Paddy. I gave him this name myself when he was only little kitten.

My father and mother and I think that Paddy is a very bright, cute cat. He will know his own name.

He jumps through a hoop, and over the back of a chair, and over a cane, and performs the remarkable trick of He really stands straight upon his hind legs and "begs" as you may have seen a dog do. Then he catches the meat in his mouth as paws. It is real fun to see him. I have never seen any other kind of cat that I think I love better. I have lived five years and a half.

The picture I send is one that my cousin took. You will see that Paddy is grumbled cake.

Her sister Marjorie would tell the force of good example, said: "Elsie, my pussy's my cake."—Harper's Young People.

Marjorie: "Mamma, I'm going to be a missionary when I grow up."

Mamma: "Why, my child, what do you think she is now?"

Marjorie: "Why, mamma, I'm a missionary to papa."—Life.

Teacher: "Now, children, I will tell you a story. Pay attention, and you will learn how to behave yourselves. Once there was a little girl who went out into the woods to pick flowers, and she met a bear. What do you think she did?"

Little Tommie: "Run home and tell her mother."

"You must always be polite to your elders, my son," said a father to his boy. "Now, when you see a man with a bald head, you must take off your hat to him."

"Yes, papa," said the boy, "I understand. It's like the sign in front of the barber's shop."

The Best Things In Cookery

Are always made with the ROYAL BAKING POWDER. It imparts that peculiar lightness, sweetness and flavor noticed in the finest rolls, biscuit, cake, etc., and which the most expert pastry cooks declare it unobtainable by the use of any other raising agent.

The ROYAL BAKING POWDER, besides rendering the food more palatable and wholesome, is, because of its higher leavening power, the most economical. The ROYAL makes more and better food than any other baking powder because it is the purest.

SERVICEABLE KENNEL.

Plans Which Any Intelligent Youngster Can Easily Master.

Now a word about kennels. Of course, house dogs do not require any; pets, that is, but a good deal of kennel is a basket made for the purpose, with a rug or carpet bed. The basket should be kept over night in the kitchen, as a dog that has the free run of a kitchen is apt to get more than is good for him. It should be kept out-of-doors. It should have a kennel. There are a great many different kinds of kennels, but more than one dog is kept on a place, as is the case with dog fanciers, the kennels are usually almost as big as a small barn. A few of my readers own a large number of dogs. I will pass this kind of kennel by with a word of advice: It is always best to give each dog a separate sleeping-place. Where several dogs are huddled together at night, breathing the same air, there is great danger of illness and when a disease once appears, it is apt to spread.

The artist has made a sketch of the simple kennel that I think is the best that can be made, and I have seen almost every kind of dog-kennel that has ever tried in this country. It is a little house about four feet long, two feet wide, and three feet high. It has a good roof, sloping on two sides. It has an adjustable bottom that can be removed when the kennel needs cleaning and disinfecting. It should stand on four posts, about six inches from the ground. In front of the kennel, ten feet from a post, there should be a snub wire, about fifteen feet long, and six inches from the ground. It should be about three feet from the door of the kennel. On this there should be an iron ring, and to this the dog's chain should be attached. The dog can run up and down the wire, and be kept from going out of the kennel, at will. This gives him exercise, and keeps him confined within limits. In the same letter I should have said before that the kennel ought to be divided in the center by a partition. In the inner room the dog sleeps, and in the outer he eats. In cold or cold, a piece of carpet might be hung over the outer door.

PLANS FOR A DOG-KENNEL.

So much for a kennel itself, now a word about its location. It should be set upon dry ground, where the sun is quite free, and should, if possible, face the south, so as to be better protected from the winter winds. Every good chicken-house has a kennel over, the bottom removed, and the interior thoroughly disinfected. Some good chicken-men wash an inferior of mercury, should be applies with a brush to every crevice in the building, and it should be left with the kennel exposed to the sun to air and dry. The best bedding for summer-time is made of cedar or pine shavings. In the winter-time nothing is better than rice straw. The kennel I have described for a dog of large size. For a smaller, such as a fox-terrier, a smaller kennel will answer.—Harper's Young People.

A TAME CAT STORY.

Some of the Remarkable Tricks Performed by Bixby's Pet.

I am going to tell you a story of my cousin's pet cat, Bixby.

He is two years old and is named Paddy. I gave him this name myself when he was only little kitten.

My father and mother and I think that Paddy is a very bright, cute cat. He will know his own name.

He jumps through a hoop, and over the back of a chair, and over a cane, and performs the remarkable trick of He really stands straight upon his hind legs and "begs" as you may have seen a dog do. Then he catches the meat in his mouth as paws. It is real fun to see him. I have never seen any other kind of cat that I think I love better. I have lived five years and a half.

The picture I send is one that my cousin took. You will see that Paddy is grumbled cake.

Her sister Marjorie would tell the force of good example, said: "Elsie, my pussy's my cake."—Harper's Young People.

Marjorie: "Mamma, I'm going to be a missionary when I grow up."

Mamma: "Why, my child, what do you think she is now?"

Marjorie: "Why, mamma, I'm a missionary to papa."—Life.

Teacher: "Now, children, I will tell you a story. Pay attention, and you will learn how to behave yourselves. Once there was a little girl who went out into the woods to pick flowers, and she met a bear. What do you think she did?"

Little Tommie: "Run home and tell her mother."

"You must always be polite to your elders, my son," said a father to his boy. "Now, when you see a man with a bald head, you must take off your hat to him."

"Yes, papa," said the boy, "I understand. It's like the sign in front of the barber's shop."

ANOTHER EXPERT'S OPINION.

"THE SOONER IT'S ACCOMPLISHED, THE BETTER."

The Overland System Perfectly Safe, And the Only One Practicable for a Short Railway.

[From The Daily Press of Yesterday.]

The Press is proud to-day to be able to publish the following letter from probably the most expert and experienced electrician that has ever been a citizen of Plainfield. He had to be coaxed into print, and still declines to have his name published.

To the Editor of The Press:—Since the recent action by City Council in regard to establishing a franchise for a street railway in this city, I have been repeatedly asked for my views of the subject. I have invariably expressed my satisfaction at the prospect of a permanent and agreeable means of transportation being introduced, as I believe it will not only benefit me personally, but all who are interested in the welfare of the city of Plainfield. When I came here I located within easy walking distance of the station, but I soon discovered that I not only endangered my health

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—The telephone connection is now built between here and Elizabeth.

—The new tables for the Crescent League's ballroom are ordered.

—DeVoe predicts an early Spring, one month earlier than last year. He also predicts a severe storm of snow between March 10 and 18.

—Easter this year will fall on March 29, the earliest date it has since 1883. With the exception of 1894 this will be the only coming March Easter in the present century.

—James Donohoe on Saturday cut down the large tree that has stood for half a century at least, in the middle of the sidewalk of the place between Front street and the brook.

—Edgar Sheppard, a thirteen-year-old pupil of the North Plainfield public school, contributes a creditable essay on the excellence of Plainfield as a place for homes, to a New York newspaper competition contest.

—A careless driver swung around the corner of Second and Somerset street, on Saturday, and nearly killed a little lady that was being pushed across the street in its carriage. The baby was knocked out in the road and badly bruised.

—Mrs. Jonathan Dunham of New Market fell from a haymow the 16th of last October and fractured a hip so severely that it has not yet healed so she can walk about the house. He is now able to walk with crutches, and hopes soon to discard them.

—All persons desiring to unite in the organization of a Scottish Clan in Plainfield, under the jurisdiction of the order of the Royal Scottish Clans, are invited to attend a meeting at the old Lyceum on E. 3d, 26 West Second street, this week Friday evening, at 8 o'clock.

—A novelty this year (and an unprecedented novelty in that line, too) is important bed bugs. The native bed bug does not appropriate annually on Easter Monday, but this year the venders of imported beer have stolen a march upon the native beer bugs, and are a full month ahead of them.

—The Young Ladies' Mission Band of the Crescent Avenue church will hold a reception Saturday evening in the parlors of the church from 8 to nine o'clock. The admission will be twenty-five cents, which will include ice and refreshments. There will also be an Easter sale.

—A very pleasant coming event is the bazar and supper to be given under the auspices of the Ladies' Christian Work Society of Trinity Methodist church, in the store formerly occupied by S. C. Peck, 26 West Front street, Thursday evening and Friday afternoon and evening, March 19 and 20. The admission fee will be but 15 cents for adults and 10 cents for children. All friends of ladies ought to attend, and help along their worthy cause.

THE SAFETY BRAKES WORKED.

A Train Breaks Apart and the Rear Cars Stop Then and There.

The passengers aboard the 5 o'clock P. M. West-bound express train on the Central Railroad of New Jersey from New York to this city, Monday afternoon were treated to an experience. Drawing four comfortable cushioned coaches, the combination and a baggage car, locomotive No. 373 bowled along through Jersey City and Bayonne at the rate of thirty miles an hour. At the latter point the train neared the East Front street-end of Centerville station a series of sudden jolts was felt and the front car and the rear forward coach was drawn from its fastenings.

The train had hardly parted before the automatic safety brakes caused the four cars to stop suddenly with a quick shock that gave the passengers a rousing shaking-up and almost dislocated their bones. The locomotive and baggage car sped forward about half a mile before it were brought to a stop in front of the station.

After the passengers in the forward cars were transferred to the other coaches and the car was shoved back a siding, the train proceeded. The accident delayed traffic over the road a half an hour.

Getting Busier Plainfield Again.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, began a series of revival services at Plainfield last Monday night. The meetings will be held in the Armory, and will be held in the various churches. Great preparations were made to receive him. A choir of sixty voices, under the leadership of Thomas H. Ely, are one of the attractions at the meetings.

Carelessness That Is a Crime.

C. E. Hotz, Chief Clerk in the Bureau of Religious Statistics of the National Census, loaned in this city, slipped on a piece of orange peel the other evening, fell to the sidewalk and so strained the ligament of his leg that he is laid up. Mr. Wild there were some way of convicting every person who throws slippery peelings on the walks, and some appropriate penalty therefore that would fit the crime.

Almost Cost a Man Their Now.

The Plainfield Street Railway Company filed articles of incorporation with the Clerk of Union county at Elizabeth yesterday. The capital stock is named at $500,000, of which Silas S. Ward, of Newark, Thomas Nevins, of Orange, and Chandler W. Riker, of Clinton Township, own 1064 shares each. The other incorporators are John B. Brown, Levi Hatfield, James Jackson and John T. Fritts, all of Plainfield, and each of whom own six shares. The object of the road is $50,000, and it is expected to have the railroad built and in operation operation by next Fall.

City Court Cases.

Michael Cox, a young man, was sentenced by Judge Codington, Tuesday afternoon, to pay a fine of $25 and to spend 60 days in jail, for using profane and indecent language to a lady in the street.

Two men were fined for intoxication Wednesday—one $6, the other $10.

Two tramps who were taken to the county jail Tuesday, as told in THE PRESS, will be imprisoned 60 days, for vagrancy and disorderly conduct, and will be held after the expiration of their term to await the action of the Grand Jury on the charge of larceny.

Miss Sweeney Teaches Reader Keith a Lesson.

Quite a razzle-dazzle scuffle of a few minutes' dur-tion took place at the railroad telegraph station, Tuesday afternoon, between Miss Mary Sweeney, the expert and spelling operator, and Michael Keefe, one of the messenger boys.

Miss Sweeney made some remarks that displeased Keefe, and he retaliated by striking her with a wet cloth. Miss Sweeney sprang at the boy so quickly that he was thrown to the floor, where, although he is a strong and unusually boy, his strength was of no avail. He was completely overpowered and completely subdued. Miss Sweeney, after the battle was terminated, had Keefe wet somewhat flatter and. He won't strike another woman as long as he remembers last evening's lesson.

Pleasant to the taste, surprisingly quick and efficient, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is recommended that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is the leading preparation of its kind.

PERSONALITIES.

R. M. Stelle left Saturday for Denver, Col.

Miss Martin is visiting friends in Cincinnati.

Dr. C. M. Judd is about to sell for Dunsdale, for the benefit of his health.

Miss Mabel Woodruff of East Second street is visiting friends at Rahway.

Mrs. and Mrs. George S. Chappell of Fifth street and Central avenue have removed from Plainfield.

The Rev. Jas Clark, of West Seventh street, arrived home from St. Louis, Yesterday evening. He reports a delightful Winter there.

A. Stewart Patterson, of Sixth street, has loaned the Knowland residence on West Seventh between Sycamore street and Broadway.

David Quedon, formerly of this city and a prominent member of the Crescent Baseball nine, is dead of consumption. His funeral took place at Woodbridge.

The Sir Knights of Trinity Commandery will regret to learn that Sir George W. Taylor, of West Second street, expects shortly to take up his residence in Philadelphia.

Henry B. Wells has recently purchased through R. C. Mulford, the home the former has been occupying since their arrival at Washington and Rockview avenues.

That celebrated organ in Anchor Lodge room, undoubtedly the finest and sweetest instrument of its size and kind in the city, has been purchased for the Park Avenue Baptist church.

Wilson Graydon, of Central avenue and Sixth street, has purchased of George A. Chapman the latter's handsome residence on Eighth street. Mr. Graydon and family will make their home there in the future.

Carmon Parvin is home from Thomasville, Ga., feeling first-rate after the long journey of seven days and nights. Georgia field is good enough for him, and he is glad to get back from a climate that in 80 degrees above zero one day and making ice the next.

On Wednesday of last week at the home of the bride's parents, Mount Horeb, the marriage took place of Miss Eliza Manta and Peter Neuman. The Rev. W. H. Haggerty officiated. The groom is a member of the firm of Estelle, Tarpley & Neuman, Broadway and Fifth street.

Charles Bullman, of Third place, has left the Sandwich Islands. There he will locate permanently. He will then be an Easter visitor.

The Plainfield mini-tens' association was delightfully entertained by the Rev. and Mrs. Schenck on Monday. The paper read by the Rev. E. M. Bodman was on "Prayers for the Departed." A general discussion of the subject followed. The Rev. Messrs. Todd and Newell were welcomed.

Chief Deane, Second Assistant Murray, and Assistant Martin, of the Plainfield Fire Department, were the guests of District Chief Breslin in New York city, Friday. They visited the new Franklin engine fire boat and Chief Breslin's patent inside distribution nozzle, to the long called horse and the Old Homestead.

The hosts of those in this city who love the name of Mr. Mitchell, the Scotch humorist, will regret to learn that he is suddenly sick to Westfield by next Monday evening in such numbers as to overflow the town with a multitude of goodly folk the like of which Mount Ararat has never seen before and never will again. Mr. Mills will only remain in Westfield four days, Saturday to Wednesday.

Among the prominent guests at the Rochester University Alumni tangnet in New York, Saturday evening, were Professor Benjamin B. Rigler of Westfield, and William J. Leonard and Oliver B. Leonard of this city. O. B. Leonard, who was graduated with the Class of '61, was appointed a member of the Executive Committee to prepare the next re-union.

At the house of the bride's mother in Newark, at 6:30 o'clock last Wednesday, the marriage took place of Miss Belle Reed, daughter of Mrs. Reed, and Forman G. Leighbor, son of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Leighbor, of East Front street. The Rev. Mr. Wright officiated. The happy couple is connected with the Standard Oil Company Mr. and Mrs. Neighbor will make their home in this city.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills is just now holding a series of meetings at Elizabeth, N. Y., several churches co-operating in the work there. At the close of these special services only seventeen persons had rose at his home, Providence, R. I., preaching daily at the Plymouth Congregational church, of which his brother, the Rev. Theodore A. Mills, is pastor. His next place of labor will be Westfield, where he will begin March 14.

Senator Marsh's bill providing for the adoption of Thomas Freshoborn by election directors there for such district and one at large—has created consternation in the Republican Board of Freeholders of Union county, they knowing full well that if the bill passes the Democratic county of Union will be controlled by a Democratic Board of Freeholders. Senator Marsh is looking after the interests of his constituents, and will receive the commendation he deserves for his actions in that direction.

Past Master C. M. Goddard, of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, who recently left Plainfield to take up his residence and business at Boston, is very successful in his new field. He was appointed a local examiner of the New England Insurance Exchange, which appointment has given that Company considerable satisfaction. As such he has associated to himself a number of reliable ability, and has shown qualifications which seem to fit him for the important duties devolving on him as secretary of the Exchange.

The Town Talk of Newark, has the following to say of a happy event already noted in these columns: "On Wednesday evening, a quiet home wedding took place at the residence of Mrs. Jane Scott, No. 96 Wright street, the contracting parties being her daughter, Miss Belle, and Mr. Forman G. Leighbor, of Plainfield. The Rev. J. Lester Wells, of the Jersey City Tabernacle, performed the ceremony. The attendants were Miss Mabel Reed, of Plainfield, and Mr. Walter Marth. After the ceremony the happy couple started for Plainfield, their future home."

Miss Alice Isabel Murray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Murray, of the borough of Plainfield, were married in the Metropolitan Baptist church, at Washington, D. C., last Wednesday evening, by the pastor, the Rev. Geoge Clay Smith. The bride wore a gown of white satin. She was attended by two bridesmaids, her sister, Miss Blanche Murray, and Miss Katherine Cobb, who wore gowns of white silk. Thomas Miller, of Washington, was best man. A reception at the home of the bride followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Murray left the city on a wedding journey, after which they will make their home at Plainfield.

After four months spent in sending the pictures of the gems of Rochester, Fay, Rufus, Marvin, Vincent, Stearns and Bird, Bishops John Vincent, Hurst, Foster, Hendrix and many other noticed divines, and the unusually large number of subscribers obtained, Henry E. Parrell, LL. D., presents in the succeeding number of The Rochesterian a fantastic symposium. The contributors are a score of the organizations that have resulted from the John Wesley movement, and the influence of that movement on other christian bodies. The Rochesterian is published monthly, and probably never will again with such an array of talent. It published in book form it will occupy a place in most places in every library.

A SAD SUCCESS.

BOPLE shivered in their seats on Monday when the second private concert of the Plainfield Choral Society opened with Gade's "Spring's Message," and A. Plain's ballad endorse: I always cold in enthusiasm, but Thursday they were cold in body —their knees turned towards the chorus singing, "Oh! welcome, welcome, ye balmy Spring," but chills crept up and down their backs.

This discomfort, however, was soon forgotten in the excitement of expectancy and the comfort of realization. THE PRESS had disclosed the secret that a young girl yet unknown in the more public musical circles, was to be heard, and such a treat was in store for all. She warmed that audience thoroughly, before she left them.

This lady, Miss Ella Wernig, was well received. She is very young; which fault—if it be one—time will remedy. Her voice is of good, very good quality. Her first selection, Poionaise, "Mignon," by Ambroise Thomas, displayed her powers of execution. Her articulation and rhythm is excellent and her tone is pure, so was especially evident after a succession of difficult intervals and runs without accompaniment. She was encalled, and sang very sweetly, "Winds in the Trees," by the same composer.

Miss Marion Wood, who has won many friends since her first appearance here over a year ago, became more of a favorite than ever, last evening. She sang with pure and mellow tone, and her solo, "The Heart's Spring Time," by Wickede with its encore "Swing, Robin, Swing," by Neidlinger, were among the most enjoyable selections of the evening. Her appearance also adds greatly to her charm. Her solos, as Armida, in The Crusader, were also well rendered, though the absence of continuous hard singing very slightly affected the intonation toward the end.

Wm. J. Lavin was on the whole, satisfactory. His solo, Romanza, "Celeste," by Verdi, was rendered quite dramatical ly, but he spoiled the ending by taking the last note falsetto. His voice is light, and he sang with forced tone, which, after Rinaldo's many solos in The Crusaders, told upon his voice.

Carl E. Duft was as fine as ever. The only disappointment expressed in him was that his only solo in the first part of the programme was the one from Lohengrin, which was not of his own selection. He sang, however, in that and as Peter the Hermit in The Crusaders, with rich and even tone and was altogether pleasing. For the way, Prof. Frye's Lohengrin did not come up to what was expected of it. The quintette was out of tune in the first place. The chorus did very well, but there was a feeling of unrest lately throughout.

"Still as the Night," by Bohm, arranged and adapted by Mr. Fitzhugh, with humming accompaniment, was very pretty and well rendered. "When Love and I went Maying" showed that the Choral Society can sing again quite well. Part III. it was given with a lightness and delicacy unusual.

Gade's "Crusaders" at its third appearance, was better executed than ever. The attacks were good—notably in the midst of Armida's and Rinaldo's solos and duette. The Chorus of the Spirits of Darkness and the Spirits of Light, the songs of the Sirens and the Crusaders, were also very good, together with the "Jerusalem" chorus.

The orchestration was excellent throughout. The Crusaders, though, of a sure, too loud at times, and though the horns were sometimes noticeably false. The accompaniments of the soloists in the first selections were very enjoyable.

MANGLED BY THE CARS.

A Young Husband Lays the Good Right Hand on Which His Livelihood Depended.

The bleeding and senseless body of John Wilson Young was found lying beside the railway track near Great avenue Sunday evening. His right hand was mangled, and his head had a cruel gash in it so wide that one could have thrust in a thumb. He was taken to the Muhlenberg Hospital, where, under the care of Dr. and Matron Walrod and the staff of physicians, he was restored to consciousness and his wounds were tenderly dressed.

Young's story of how he suffering less pain than at first, but his head was not yet clear, and he could not collect its thoughts sufficiently to tell the story of his misfortune. It gathered, however, that he jumped from a moving passenger train, in his hurry to reach home, rather than wait to go to the station. He caught The wi cele had passed over his arm, and his head had had a cruel blow.

His right fore-arm had to be amputated, and the operation was performed. Young has been a stenographer in the employ of The Food Machine Tool Company, and the loss of a good right hand will be severe to him. It is thought, however, that he jumped from a moving passenger train, in his hurry to reach home, rather than wait to go to the station began.

The wi cele had passed over his arm, and his head had had a cruel blow.

His right fore-arm had to be amputated, and the operation was performed. Young has been a stenographer in the employ of The Food Machine Tool Company, and the loss of a good right hand will be severe to him. It is thought, however, that he jumped from a moving passenger train, in his hurry to reach home, rather than wait to go to the station began.

Lasts Catches a Hand.

A steel trap, set by Louis Schutt and baited with a deceased fowl, caught a large hawk a few days ago back of the Chapman place, under the supervision of Washington-ville near North Plainfield. The bird was subsequently caged after a fierce struggle.

Will They Build a Little Town of Their Own?

A PAR a reporter has discovered that the same firm which recently purchased the Shackleton works at Bound Brook have bought the old "Yellow Tavern" property and the Crater, the Lochlee and the Lochlee Brook Park. As the firm is full of employing 800 men eventually, probably they will build a town for them on this new property.

Borough Property Changes Ownership.

Among the transfers of real estate just recorded in Somerset county are the following:

Ann M. Noyes to Gelloni Mills, property in North Plainfield, $295.

James D. Cleaver and wife to Gelloni Mills, property in North Plainfield, $1.

Alfred A. Wagner and wife to Helen Ingalls Hubbard, property in North Plainfield, $500.

James Hardy and, wife to Hugh B. Reed, property in North Plainfield, $4,000.

A Close Shave for the Crescents.

The score of the game March 4 between the bowlers of the Plainfield Crescent League and the Westfield Union League is as follows:

CRESCENT LEAGUE.		UNION LEAGUE.
Van Blarcom	197	Bunker	159
Hall	162	Eaglen	161
Vail	193	P. S. Smith	142
Williams	169	Hall	153
Williams	197	O. Dennis	115
Davis	171	Jones	155
Wood	154	Wilson	152
Thorn	159	Wood	163
Van Winkle	147	Bailey	161
Total	1,552		1,460

Crescents—197 201 159 169 171 154 159 1310 1310 2405
Unions—159 161 142 153 115 155 152 163 1460 2405

Plainfield May Have Seven in Spite of the Lineboro.

The following officers of the Knights of Honor, will celebrate its third anniversary by giving a complimentary entertainment to its members and friends, Tuesday evening, April 14, in Music Hall:

Messrs. C. J. Taylor, R. S. Rogers, F. P. Wells, Jas. Van Liew and Dr. R. Nagg, constituting the committee of arrangements, have secured the services of the Brooklyn Comedy Company, composed of members of the Mendelssohn Glee Club of the Amaranth Society of Brooklyn, who will appear in "Confusion," a farcical comedy in three acts.

I HAVE NO connection with the firm of Dr. Scott, Electric Belt Co., 842 Broadway, New York, who have been using my name and testimonial in their advertisements. I have never worn one of their belts, and do not consider them worth the paper they are printed on. I have worn the Owen Electric Belt, and can recommend it to all who are afflicted with nervous debility, lame back, rheumatism, etc. Call and see me, or write for pamphlet. Owen Electric Belt Co., 841 Broadway, New York.

THE PRESS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Some of your correspondents may think, by reading C. E. B.'s letter, published in your paper last Saturday, that I am unduly prejudiced against the Lineboro Improvement Company. Permit me to say that I have no prejudice at all. My opinions are merely the result of personal experience. I have had a deal of unnecessary fuss with its instructions to keep them running. I have succeeded in keeping them running; but after they shut down on the road a few times, the stockholders had to be replaced at the end of nearly every trip, the shaking of the car having destroyed them. Then I had under the present charge ran only from three to six months before every battery had to be replaced.

The worst experience for the men is the fearful trolley road at Bound Brook, the storage-battery be used, and as it is the motor that drives the car it is rather curious that the storage-battery should receive the greatest amount of power, by electricity from the overhead wire, as it is the same motor driving the car which is to receive.

I cannot see that there is any advantage to be gained by a storage car being able to go around obstructions. The place for such a car is on the track, and if your corre-spondent had ever tried to run a street car, with its two tons of storage-battery, over the cobbles, he would probably be glad to get back to the horse car street that the one he was trying to avoid.

Your correspondent says that the reason why the 307 roads now using the trolley system do not use the storage-battery system is because they do not like it. It is enough to note that a great many of the roads now using the trolley system have first tried the storage-battery, which has been put on the road and subsequently, free of charge, by the same companies, by its own advocates. The railway companies have wanted the storage-battery, and yet after giving its friends every opportunity to prove to their claims, have contracted for, and put in the overhead system.

The electrical business is a large factor for its age than any other of its business kin, and nearly every valuable invention is a subject for law-suits. Yet these law-suits have not kept the article off the market, nor stopped its use. The storage-b ttery is one of the old st of the electrical inventions, and I cannot quite see why "temporary litigation" should keep it out of the market for street rail-y purposes, if it had proved successful in that field, for it certainly is wanted eagerly enough, and has been tried long enough, to have given Yank e ingenuity opportunity of devising some means of beating the devil around the bush" in the worst beating.

LEMUEL WM. SERRELL.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN CHORAL AND MELOPOIA.

Clementina DeVere is Coming, and if You Don't Like Her You Can Say So.

The engagement of Clementina DeVere to appe r in this city at the last concert for the Plainfield Choral Society, is accomplished. The date, however, is not announced; has been changed from May 14 to 28. The programme is to be that grand oratorio, The Crusaders. By this engagement at a great expense, the Society again evidences its intent to give its subscribers the best that can be obtained.

There is a difference between a very commendable effort to do better than the Melopoia. The latter society brought Emil Fischer here, and the Choral Society with Dr. Carl Martin and Mr. Rieger. The Melopoia introduced to us the supremely beautiful Mary Howe, and now the Choral Society is to even excel the Melopoia.

The r lative merits of these soprani are merely matters of opinion; but in the case of the latter, if you don't entirely approve of Miss DeVere's voice you will be permitted to say so without calling down on your head the bills spite of Wm. Shakspeare, under the direction of certain members of the Melopoia. In fact they will gleefully applaud you and with alacrity join in criticism of conductor Plimpton Gage. Get whipped a word, as has THE PRESS, concerning conductor Ch-pman's plainly apparent ignorance at time and key signatures, and a change is many respects, or find in Miss Howe's voice, as has THE PRESS, only something to wonder at and nothing to love—when!

Lasts Catches a Hand.

A steel trap, set by Louis Schutt and baited with a deceased fowl, caught a large hawk a few days ago back of the Chapman place, under the supervision of Washington-ville near North Plainfield. The bird was subsequently caged after a fierce struggle.

Will They Build a Little Town of Their Own?

A PAR a reporter has discovered that the same firm which recently purchased the Shackleton works at Bound Brook have bought the old "Yellow Tavern" property and the Crater, the Lochlee and the Lochlee Brook Park. As the firm is full of employing 800 men eventually, probably they will build a town for them on this new property.

Borough Property Changes Ownership.

Among the transfers of real e-tate just recorded in Somerset county are the following:

Ann M. Noyes to Gelloni Mills, property in North Plainfield, $295.

James D. Cleaver and wife to Gelloni Mills, property in North Plainfield, $1.

Alfred A. Wagner and wife to Helen Ingalls Hubbard, property in North Plainfield, $500.

James Hardy and, wife to Hugh B. Reed, property in North Plainfield, $4,000.

A Close Shave for the Crescents.

The score of the game March 4 between the bowlers of the Plainfield Crescent League and the Westfield Union League is as follows:

CRESCENT LEAGUE.		UNION LEAGUE.
Van Blarcom	197	Bunker	159
Hall	162	Eaglen	161
Vail	193	P. S. Smith	142
Williams	169	Hall	153
Williams	197	O. Dennis	115
Davis	171	Jones	155
Wood	154	Wilson	152
Thorn	159	Wood	163
Van Winkle	147	Bailey	161
Total	1,552		1,460

Crescents—197 201 159 169 171 154 159 1310 1310 2405
Unions—159 161 142 153 115 155 152 163 1460 2405

Plainfield May Have Seven in Spite of the Lineboro.

The following officers of the Knights of Honor, will celebrate its third anniversary by giving a complimentary entertainment to its members and friends, Tuesday evening, April 14, in Music Hall:

Messrs. C. J. Taylor, R. S. Rogers, F. P. Wells, Jas. Van Liew and Dr. R. Nagg, constituting the committee of arrangements, have secured the services of the Brooklyn Comedy Company, composed of members of the Mendelssohn Glee Club of the Amaranth Society of Brooklyn, who will appear in "Confusion," a farcical comedy in three acts.

LOCAL PATRONS OF GENUINE SPORT.

Plainfield Contributes Liberally and Their Liberal Patronage Is Appreciated by Boxers.

The members of the Plainfield Bicycle Club are proving themselves more and more enthusiastic patrons of all true, manly sport. One of the latest evidences of the club's good interest in athletic matters is the announcement, now made for the first time, that an excellent boxer will also be to be dismissed from associate instructions this Spring to any society amateur games, of especial local interest, during the season, probably on Park avenue grounds.

A meeting of in-door baseball, such as has been played so successfully this winter at the Seventh Regiment Armory in New York, was held under the auspices of the club and the Crescent League for Thursday evening, March 19, in the Crescent.

Other interesting sporting events are promised.

At the annual meeting of the club Monday evening, officers were elected as follows:

President—Thomas A. Barr.
Vice President—Harold C. Adams.
Secretary—Jas. Tomlin.
Treasurer—Roger F. Murray.
Trustees—Dr. J. H. Conley, Robinson Perry, Hedrick A. L. D. Shaw, Townsend Bushmore.

The Manhasset Island Library.

The number of Plainfield citizens who have been active in starting the "Manhasset Island Library" and who are still interested in its success, will find the following report by Mrs. Cox very gratifying:

More than three years have passed since an effort was begun by a few friends interested in the beautiful Island of Manhegan, Me., to establish a library for the benefit of the people of the place.

The "ten cent" (10c) system, so successful in many places, it was hoped might be ample to secure a fair number of books to begin and a room or small building to contain them and from which they could be distributed. After much effort however, this plan proved an entire failure, no small sum the amount of money received. Books were generously sent every year and contributions received in money from per-onal friends and others.

Last Summer the number of books had so increased that it seemed impossible to find on the Island a room or even the large closet that could be spared, in which to keep them. Our Island Librarian came to the rescue and offered to come in her neat little sitting-room for a book-case. This has been purchased and placed there, and is nearly full of books, and under the care and supervision of the Librarian, Mrs. Hattie M. Davis, the book case has been paid for and a small surplus remains which will be spent in the interest of the Island. We are to a building, be it ever so small, only to result, we are glad and grateful to have accomplished so much. We heartily thank every one who has sent books, or money to the Island Circulating Library. During the first year we could ascertain the names of those who contributed and thanked them in the Report-by-post. We have a way of ascertaining to whom we are indebted for three box-s of books which were received a year since, but are most grateful for them. We regret to be the fact that the number of books read on the Island increases every year, and that the usefulness and popularity of the project of the Library is no longer a question. Last Summer more books were loaned than ever before.

We still hope to secure money sufficient, although the prospect is not encouraging, to erect a small building on the site which Mrs. Davis has given us, that the books may have a permanent place on the Island, be a comfort and satisfaction to the people there and to all interested.

ANN J. COX.

Plainfield, N. J., Feb. 12, 1891.

Model Mollie Power.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has recently placed in service on its line between Washington and Chicago, between New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, three new engines which are doubtless the finest and fastest ever built. The engines are of the 4-4-0 pattern, have driving wheels six feet, six inches high and cylinders 20 inches by 24. The boiler will carry 200 pounds of steam, and the power and the hi-h drivers protect the machinery from the rack and strain incident to driving smaller engines at great speed. The engines guarantee a speed of the speed to which those new marvels may be driven, and they skim over the rails as smoothly as a swallow over a lake.

Another recent addition to the motive power of the company is a consignment of eight powerful, ten-wheel passenger engines, designed for service on the mountain divisions. These are the heaviest ten-wheel engines ever constructed, weighing sixty-seven and one-half tons. They have driving wheels six feet two inches high and cylinders 21 inches by 26. One of these machines performs the work hauling and requiring the power of a consolidation freight engine. Also three new heavy eight-wheel passenger engines, having driving wheels four feet eight inches, and cylinders 20 inches by 24. These engines are now doing excellent work; they are very powerful and susceptible of great speed.

In addition to the foregoing the company has now under construction at its Mt. Clare shops ten powerful ten-wheel engines designed for fast freight service and for heavy passenger trains on coal roads, also twelve consolidation freight engines of great power.

The latest addition to the motive power are in line with the other great improvements constantly being made in the general betterment of the B. & O. property by its energetic management. While here mentioned by the press from time to time, and the rapid augmentation of the passenger traffic of the company indicates that the public is rapidly recognizing the present and constantly increasing efficiency of its train service.

New Officers of the Young People's League.

The following officers of the Young People's League of the First Baptist church, were elected Tuesday night:

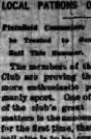
President—Miss Lizzie Bell.
First Vice President and Chairman Devotional Committee—Miss Lizzie Bell.
Chairman Invitation and Reception Committee—H. Hamilton.
Chairman Lookout Committee—William Thomas.
Chairman Social Committee—L. Warren Barnes.
Secretary and Treasurer—Miss Mary Sutphen.
Director of the "Boys' Club"—J. H. Sperling.

The year just closed has been the most successful in the history of the League. Seventy-five members were reported and the membership has more than doubled.

Heavy expenditures, beyond the power of the locomotive, and the consequent wear and tear of the machinery, have been the principal reasons for the abandonment of the old system.

WORKED HER OWN RUIN.

A Canine of Discriminating Taste Causes Mischief—A Dog Story.



Sarah Wiley's Dalmatian.

Mobwell—Would it be presuming too much for me to attend for you, Mrs. Wellbred?

Girlish Mother of Ingenue Twins—This is rather abrupt, Mr. Mobwell, but if you can answer me that great question nations are good, I don't mind if you take Edith Myrtle is already engaged.—Judge.

Inside.

Mr. Bingo—Tommy, did you bring home to your mother the pear I gave you to-day?

Tommy—Yes, sir.

Mrs. Bingo—That's strange. I never saw it.

Tommy—I know you didn't; but it was there.—Wide Awake.

Had an Excuse Ready.

Irascible Old Party—Why you accumdeal, you, told me you didn't have a cent. I just saw you take out a quarter.

Tramp—I know that; sir, but I don't want to spend that piece. I carry it for good luck.—Boston Herald.

A Matter of Form.

Arlright—I see that you have shot off all the powder in your gun without using nothing but sandies. What is that for?

Starlight—Merely out of curiosity. I want to see if it will make any difference in my gas-bills.—Puck.

What Doubled Her.

Mand—Which do you prefer, the study—French or German?

Ethel—French.

Mand—Like French better than you do German?

"No, but I like the French professor better."—Yankee Blade.

Empty.

Mrs. Borrowell—Now don't feel in the wrong pocket, Henry, and then tell me you haven't any money.

Borrowell—My dear, I'm afraid that all my pockets are wrong pockets to-day.—West Shore.

The Hackneyed Term.

First Reporter—Why are you so nervous; got a hard job?

Second Reporter—Yes: I'm writing an article on oysters, and I was told not to use the hackneyed phrase, "succulent bivalve."—Boston Herald.

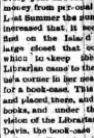
Operatic Note.

"Patti sang on the stage at the age of seven."

"As early as that?"

"Yes, but she did not begin her farewell tour until she was twelve."—Munsey's Weekly.

AN APPLIANCE OF SAFETY.



Officer (at 1 a. m.)—What's goin' on here?

Clubman—My wife's in the habit of throwing things out of the window in her sleep, and I'm trying to catch 'em.—Life.

A Mere Caricature.

Sympathetic Invalid—Well, old man, what kind done of whisky did the doctor prescribe?

Disgusted Invalid—Humph! Only has a wine-glassful a day.

Sympathizing Friend—Too bad. The bad; rabbit! a homeopathic dose, isn't it?

Disgusted Invalid—Humph! More like the faith cure.—Life.

He Must Be Paid.

"Those who dance must pay the fiddler," quoted Miss Blockley.

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne, of Boston; "the individuals who indulge in terpsichorean exercises must defray the expenses connected with the engagement of a violinist."—Judge.

A Reversible Proverb.

She—Riches take wings.

He—Do you mean the wings you wear in your hat take riches.—Munsey's Weekly.

Who would feed children with mey phine? and yet, a great many cough mixtures contain it. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Cough Cure is absolutely free from poison, and is an absolutely safe remedy for children.

CONVERSATIONAL INTELLIGUDS.

Presidigitateur Waring furnished an abundance of fun. The birthday cake of Master Sallie was covered with fifteen rose buds, in very pretty token of the day, and of the fact that in earlier years "Rose Bud" was his nickname.

Unconscious. With a Letter from Wm. D. Murray of This City, in His Pocket.

A man was found lying unconscious on the sidewalk in front of 357 West Twenty-fourth street, New York city, early Saturday night. He had evidently fallen and struck his head against the stone stoop He is in the New York Hospital. He was about sixty-five years old, had gray hair, and a stubby mustache.

A letter was found on him. It was addressed "Mr. McDermott," and asked him to serve a summons on a defendant in H. C. de Rivi-ra, Treasurer, at 349 West 1230 street. It was signed by William D. Murray, of this city. Mr. Murray has had no such a client as another law office near his, and he used to send the man to do small services for him. The letter found Mr. Murray says, was written months ago.

The Pastor Must Go When the Boss Comes.

The verdict of the Presbytery in the trial of the Rev. A. Cushing Dill, of Stirling, has just been rendered. The Presbytery follows him to remain at Stirling until June 1.

As related at some length in THE PRESS of Monday the charges against Mr. Dill were those of indifference to his pastoral duties wrong-doing. He is a young man, and has manifested a decided preference for the society of young people. He is an enthusiast in this direction being apparently decidedly reciprocated. He is accused of sensational preaching and of having delivered on one occasion a sermon described as a "love talk." When approached on the subject he has declared himself inspired by the Holy Ghost, a statement which has caused some to think his mind affected.

Rebuilding Ancient History.

The somerville Messenger, referring to the story told by the Somerset street "journalist" concerning the "recent" burning of "Primrose's House" on the mountaining mountain top, says that the facts stand as follows:

In 1877—14 years ago—a man called Primrose built a house, and began to maintain a mile northeast of Bound Brook. One fine night, in that year, the hotel, a small frame building, was burned, and the most prominent part of its contents (a lot of very bad liquor kept for the celebration of Sunday visitors—the principal patrons) was supposed to have been destroyed with it. None of the inmates were burned, and Primrose had no horses in the barn, which is still standing. He still lives in the mountains, and the company believing that he had himself started the fire, and disappeared. Over 10 years ago Chester Cleaves built the house still standing on the site of the old Primrose Hotel.

The feeble attempt of the "journalist" to work up a sensation out of material that was old news a dozen years ago, and stating his sheet more than ever a laughing-stock throughout the State.

—A number of athletes assembled at Bound Brook a few nights ago and among other strength-testing exercises tried holding up a 56-pound weight. In endeavoring to accomplish the feat Joseph Flynn, a carpenter engaged on the canal lock repairs, dislocated his shoulder. Drs. Fisher and Compton put the joint in place, and Flynn returned to his home in Plainfield, where he will remain for another month.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

BERNHARD MEYER,

Successor to A. D. Thompson.

Riverside Stock Farm,

AT FINDERNE STATION,

On Central Railroad of New Jersey, will always have for sale a large assortment of Horses of all Kinds and for all Purposes. Also Mules and Fresh Cattle.

Everything warranted as represented or money refunded.

WM. C. SMITH, Superintendent.

BRANCH STABLES, No 338 Palisade Ave., and Nos. 11 and 13 Ogden Ave., JERSEY CITY.

Having contract to furnish Horses to New York Railroads, I am obliged to take their old Horses, which I sell cheap.

2 12 tf

MELLIN'S FOOD FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS.

THE ONLY Perfect Substitute for Mother's Milk.

INVALUABLE IN CHOLERA INFANTUM AND TESTHING.

A Quickly Assimilated Food FOR CONSUMPTIVES, DYSPEPTICS AND CONVALESCENTS.

A PERFECT NUTRIENT AT ALL WEATHERS.

REQUIRES NO COOKING. KEEPS IN ALL CLIMATES.

SEND for our book, "The Care and Feeding of Infants."

Mellin's Food Co., BOSTON, MASS.

3-13-prow

"A LIFE'S EXPERIENCE."

Upon the occasion of the death of Mrs. Chas. H. Pinkham, "Mr. daughter, you have spent years in aiding me to compile these records. As many of you are aware of Lydia E. Pinkham's disease ever brought to my notice in here: this will aid you in benefitting my work. Here is a life's practice of a Woman and every Woman, and contains Facts that cannot be found elsewhere! It is the largest collection the world has ever known."

Mrs. Pinkham's records are available to the Women of the world. Personal attention is given to confidential letters, and correspondence is solicited from suffering women. Send stamp for "Guide to Health and Etiquette."

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Is the Positive Cure and Legitimate Remedy for the above Troubles.

It cures the worst forms of Female Complaints, that Bearing-down Feeling, Weakness, Inflammation, Ulce

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WAYS.

Rev. Dr. Meredith Interestingly Describes Them.

He Lays the Lessons Before the Children's Class—Much Valuable Information Given by the International Lessons and Chautauqua Pupils.

Rev. Dr. R. D. Meredith is an authority on the modern Sunday-school. For hope he is the most generally recognized authority in the country. His experience long influence in Sunday-school work dates back from a dozen to fifteen years. In Tompkins Avenue Church, one of the city of Chautauqua, great audiences of Sunday-school workers have gathered every Tuesday evening to hear his discussion of the lesson for the succeeding Sunday. Without regard for denominational lines, people of all creeds and of both sexes fill his enormous normal class, which thus becomes, probably, the most forceful agency in the country for the training of Sunday-school teachers; Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists alike finding matter of interest in his clear-cut, luminous and intensely practical Christianity. Questions and answers fly fast, and persons especially interested in Sunday-school work from all parts of the land, even from other States, come to attend.

REV. DR. R. D. MEREDITH.

Dr. Meredith's Sunday-school connected with the Tompkins Avenue Church is one of the largest in the country, numbering over 1,000 attended. With the very large branch school belonging to the Park Avenue Church and presided over by the assistant pastor, there is brought under his supervision probably the greatest number of Sunday-school pupils influenced by any man in any country.

These circumstances give especial interest to his opinions on Sunday-school methods, the more so that the quarters occupied by his Sunday-school—the successors of the Tompkins Avenue Church, having compelled it to put up new and imposing buildings—are called the most modern. And many of the most carefully considered with respect to their success of any Sunday-school in the country; but are, indeed, the last word in the Sunday-school architecture.

"What is the best teaching method, I found myself constantly to ask him a few days ago. "of housing a Sunday-school? Does experience point to the value of a considerable number of smaller ones?"

"Both," he answered. "The well regulated modern Sunday-school of any size requires the one large room for preliminary assemblage and the smaller rooms for class work in the different departments.

"In our Sunday-school we have the large main hall with auto-rooms, and about it on three sides are rooms for class division, even of half the height only of the large room, so that we get two stories of rooms. The partitions are arranged to shove up and down or to one side, and all are on a line with the open of the main room, so that when the school opens every thing is thrown into one great assembly chamber, without the slightest delay or to hearing. Afterward the partitions are drawn and each class has full liberty for its own work, and the children can ask their questions aloud instead of whispering.

"This separation is absolutely necessary, for the teachers ought not to have less than forty-five minutes with the older pupils, while thirty or twenty-five minutes enough to tire the little ones.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL ROOM.

"In my Sunday-school we have on one side, off the main floor, one large room for the primary department, which includes what people used to call the infant classes, that is children who have not yet learned to read. We throw all these into one great class and teach them together. They have rising seats arranged in concentric semicircles, so that all may see the black-boards. We give them object teaching an interest them and call out their intelligence, and we make great use of large colored cards and pictures."

"At how early an age do you think it profitable for a child to come?"

"Many mothers bring children of three and sit with them. I approve of this because the child gets used thus opens from the very first and the right surroundings. The Sunday-school room seems home to it, and there is a good deal of value to be attached to these first impressions on the conscious ness.

"The room above the primary department begins to fill with children of six years old. The juvenile department occupies one room only, but it is divided into two by a sliding partition under as many teachers. It is the aim to keep the classes small so that each pupil may get individual attention. Some classes include as many as twelve children but the most not above nine. For my own class I prefer seven as the best number.

"The room is furnished with thirty-five tables, at each class gathers with the teacher about one of them.

"The main hall of the Sunday-school hall is given to the intermediate department, broken into seventy-four classes of pupils ranging from nine to fifteen years, or eighteen years. This also is furnished with tables supplied with maps, reference books, etc., and about these sit classes and teachers.

"All the work of the Sunday-school library is attended to outside the session. We do not allow any running about of librarians to distract attention.

"One end of the Sunday-school hall opens on I said, upon the auto-rooms, and about the other two sides are the Bible classes, arranged also in two stories of three, twenty-eight in all. The rooms vary in size, according to the prices front of the classes are about, in others the seats are separated. This is an advantage where we have no rails. Some of the classes are taught by men, others by women, the former being the more thought very successfully by a young man."

"The large majority of Sunday-school teachers are women."

"No, a full half of mine are men; I have just about as many men as women in my Bible classes."

"But before we drop Sunday-school architecture, let me say that the present system of the International Sunday-school lessons was originated by a Dutch architect of Akron, O., who came from Rotterdam. He planned the first Sunday-school for Louis Miller, of the Chautauqua Association, when Miller was settled at Akron about twenty years ago. Dutch ideas have been largely developed and modified, and I myself have introduced innovations, but never thought of, but for the system, as now in use in many of the largest Sunday-schools the world besides.

"How many Sunday-school workers are there in Atlanta?"

"About 1,000, I should say, not to speak definitely of keeping the primary department all by itself, and the rest of the school with separate administration. But I believe in getting for a short time all pupils together, for the sake of the spirit de corps, and to let the little ones early realize that they belong to a great body."

ARRANGEMENT OF CLASSES.

"What do you regard as a Sunday-school teacher's most essential qualification?"

"A teacher must have average intelligence and common sense; more than this is desirable but not necessary. The one thing which can not be dispensed with is the consecration to do soul-saving for God. It is not that you do it for your own soul's sake or even that you do it for the good of the children, but that you do it for God. This carries every thing else with it; whatever you do for Him you must do well, and so the consecration carries with it the study, the constant effort, the concentration of the powers."

"You do not attach importance, then, to the higher education of Sunday-school teachers?"

"I have had in my school at the same time two comparatively uneducated working women and a brilliant young man fresh from college, and the woman were far beyond the other in the ability she obtained because her heart was warmer to the work; if the college man had the fervor and love of God added to it his education he would, of course, have been more effective than, as things stood, was either of them.

"You can't stand out for classical scholarship. I've got to have upper in a hundred and eighty teachers and if I have that number of classical scholars in my congregation I don't know where to lay hands on them.

"But Sunday-school teaching is growing all the time more and more intelligent. The Sunday-schools have fully purged themselves, I think, of the complaints that used to be made, and in some cases with justice, against them. I attribute this largely to the public schools. Such a public school system as that of this country trains a body of clear-headed, intelligent citizens.

"The International Lessons, against which so much is said, have also been a good deal to do with it. With all their disadvantages the lesson sheets give the average teacher far more than she would be in any way likely to get for herself. They do such a preliminary work of study and exposition that she has no excuse for going before her class without full, intelligent comprehension.

"The International series has won its way. Not a religious paper in the country would dare ignore it, and the secular press finds itself obliged to give it progressively more and more attention.

"In your Tuesday evening normal class do you apply the same principles of reasoning for teachers in Oriental history and customs?"

"Some of the teachers do so themselves for their pupils. My aim in popular exposition is to make the Bible text plain. Of the parts of the book it is written on except for what it can do for us to-day. I don't care any more about what happened to Jonah than I do about what happened to Julius Cæsar except as far as Jesus is a living force to enter into our lives now; boys and girls must take Him home and have Him with them Monday morning."

"What do you think of present methods of teaching the Chinese in Sunday-schools?"

"I am not say any thing about them except as I have seen them in one city, Boston. There I was for a time in familiar with the work of Miss Carter, who had as many as two hundred and sixty under instruction. She knew about among the poor lamdries and so entered into the views of the poor creatures that they felt toward her as to a mother, and they came to her with every trouble. She did infinite good; but she was a very judicious woman and very careful in her selection of teachers.

"I do not believe the present system of assigning a teacher to every Chinese pupil can be changed; the Chinese can not be taught in classes. But the teachers should be mature women, not young girls. The Chinaman makes love to his teacher, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it's the teacher's fault. He loves her blindly and ought to have inspired him with very different feelings. She needs tact and—prays."

INFANT CLASS ROOM.

"Has there been a perceptible advance of late in Sunday-school music?"

"Indeed, yes! If in the primary somewhere there may be schools still singing 'Hold the Fort,' and other such jingles, I have not met with them. Better words, but all the new music is of a much higher order. In our school we use the 'Lessons,' finding that teaching the children the same hymns that are sung in church and prayer meeting."

"The appointment of a position must be becoming, in the larger schools, of more and more importance?"

"In my own school the superintendent will be engaged at a high salary to give his entire time. There will be two assistant pastors, and I shall have pastors' assistants. The superintendent will be an executive officer, and as such he ought to be the best business man in the church, five thousand or six thousand dollars will be too much to pay him. He will work throughout the week among the congregation for the Sunday-school. The South Church, in New Britain, Conn., has a salaried superintendent, and the practice is sure to be followed. Only here and there are becoming great and complicated organizations."

ELIZA PUTNAM HEATON.

Its Name.

"Aunty, what name you brought me?" is Freddy's first question when visitors come.

His mother took him severely to task about it, and the little fellow promised not to do so any more. A day or two after one of the visitors called and asked Freddy, with a triumphant glance at his mother, exhibiting a—

"Aunty, what name you brought my little brother?"—Jury.

Try It for Yourself.

The time required for a journey around the world is 80 days. Sleep eight hours each day and night, without resting, would be six days; an express train, 40 miles an hour, would require 125 days; a cannon ball, 500 miles an hour, 8 months; a comet, 1,000 miles an hour, 1 month; a comet, 1,000 miles a minute, 2 weeks; light, 192,000 miles a second, 1/7 of a second; the earth, 68,000 miles an hour, 1 day; a thought, 1,000 miles a minute, 1 hour and 20 minutes.

COMFORTING GRANDMA.

Grandma sat in her old arm-chair,
Our baby on her knee;
And baby knew every grandma's pain,
Dearest baby fairy ever knew.

The baby's fingers were chattering
As first we heard the cry:
Of things she meant to have and do
Before she came to die.

"And many I'm half-past free," she cried,
And tossed her yellow curls,
And when I'm five I'm so old
As all wisdom and riches."

Then grandma wore grave and said that "Dearest, when I'm five I'm old
I'll be so old I suppose can walk,
And talk as well as you."

Our baby's face that shadowy fell
Of waiting, disappointed;
But soon she brightened, she had found
The comfort that she sought.

"Why dearest one, don't cry, dear," she cried,
With kisses on her face,
Yet when we can't walk any more
God's better part is ours."

—Carrie Blake Morgan, in West Shore.

TO SETTLE A QUARREL

Story of a Distracted Lover Hoping for Happy Results.

The train was late and the engineer was evidently trying to make up time. Ronald McAllister turned his face for the twentieth time to the darkened pane by his side and stared into the blackness. How sad than the shadowy form of each object showed for a moment as the car whirled along over the rails, and how desolate some dotted the gloom with its cheery lights.

But, if the truth be told, Ronald's mind was occupied by these fleeting visions of the outer world. The glass acted as a mirror, and he could look at his own face and study it as the re fection of a dainty figure in an opposite seat.

Rather grave eyes, a sauey nose, a sweet, tired mouth, rebellious whips of soft brown hair straying down under a stylish hat plain as a slight, pretty figure in a simple brown travelling suit, with a weary droop that appealed to his manly young fellow and made him rebel fiercely against the social conventionalities which rose like an icy barrier between the two travellers—this is what McAllister saw in the glass.

He had been able to perform one or two slight services for the girl—had raised her window, and brought a glass of water for her when the dainty girl he met, "oh, my air you are very kind;" and had caught sight of her ticket, thus learning that her destination was the same station beyond his home, to which he was returning after a hard business trip.

Their eyes had met so frequently, after this, that she had flushed, and he had been quick to look in her direction, lest she should think him a boor. anxious to scrape a "railway acquaintance," which the dainty girl he met.

The tired head under the brown hat drooped until it rested on the back of the seat, when the lashes fell softly.

The train rushed onward through the night faster and faster, until the car fairly rocked as it flew around curves and over resounding bridges.

"We must be close to Moorville at Moorville before No. 19 freight comes in," Ronald heard the conductor say to the brakeman as he passed out of the car.

Faster—faster Ronald idly counted the rails and glanced at the second hand that he used to time paper in and in some cases with justice, against them. I attribute this largely to the public schools. Such a public school system as that of this country trains a body of clear-headed, intelligent citizens.

"The International Lessons, against which so much is said, have also been a good deal to do with it. With all their disadvantages the lesson sheets give the average teacher far more than she would be in any way likely to get for herself. They do such a preliminary work of study and exposition that she has no excuse for going before her class without full, intelligent comprehension.

"The International series has won its way. Not a religious paper in the country would dare ignore it, and the secular press finds itself obliged to give it progressively more and more attention.

"In your Tuesday evening normal class do you apply the same principles of reasoning for teachers in Oriental history and customs?"

"Some of the teachers do so themselves for their pupils. My aim in popular exposition is to make the Bible text plain. Of the parts of the book it is written on except for what it can do for us to-day. I don't care any more about what happened to Jonah than I do about what happened to Julius Cæsar except as far as Jesus is a living force to enter into our lives now; boys and girls must take Him home and have Him with them Monday morning."

"What do you think of present methods of teaching the Chinese in Sunday-schools?"

"I am not say any thing about them except as I have seen them in one city, Boston. There I was for a time in familiar with the work of Miss Carter, who had as many as two hundred and sixty under instruction. She knew about among the poor lamdries and so entered into the views of the poor creatures that they felt toward her as to a mother, and they came to her with every trouble. She did infinite good; but she was a very judicious woman and very careful in her selection of teachers.

"I do not believe the present system of assigning a teacher to every Chinese pupil can be changed; the Chinese can not be taught in classes. But the teach-older pupils, while thirty or twenty-five minutes enough to tire the little ones.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL ROOM.

"In my Sunday-school we have on one side, off the main floor, one large room for the primary department, which includes what people used to call the infant classes, that is children who have not yet learned to read. We throw all these into one great class and teach them together. They have rising seats arranged in concentric semicircles, so that all may see the black-boards. We give them object teaching an interest them and call out their intelligence, and we make great use of large colored cards and pictures."

"At how early an age do you think it profitable for a child to come?"

"Many mothers bring children of three and sit with them. I approve of this because the child gets used thus opens from the very first and the right surroundings. The Sunday-school room seems home to it, and there is a good deal of value to be attached to these first impressions on the conscious ness.

"The room above the primary department begins to fill with children of six years old. The juvenile department occupies one room only, but it is divided into two by a sliding partition under as many teachers. It is the aim to keep the classes small so that each pupil may get individual attention. Some classes include as many as twelve children but the most not above nine. For my own class I prefer seven as the best number.

"The room is furnished with thirty-five tables, at each class gathers with the teacher about one of them.

"The main hall of the Sunday-school hall is given to the intermediate department, broken into seventy-four classes of pupils ranging from nine to fifteen years, or eighteen years. This also is furnished with tables supplied with maps, reference books, etc., and about these sit classes and teachers.

"All the work of the Sunday-school library is attended to outside the session. We do not allow any running about of librarians to distract attention.

"One end of the Sunday-school hall opens on I said, upon the auto-rooms, and about the other two sides are the Bible classes, arranged also in two stories of three, twenty-eight in all. The rooms vary in size, according to the prices front of the classes are about, in others the seats are separated. This is an advantage where we have no rails. Some of the classes are taught by men, others by women, the former being the more thought very successfully by a young man."

"The large majority of Sunday-school teachers are women."

"No, a full half of mine are men; I have just about as many men as women in my Bible classes."

"But before we drop Sunday-school architecture, let me say that the present system of the International Sunday-school lessons was originated by a Dutch architect of Akron, O., who came from Rotterdam. He planned the first Sunday-school for Louis Miller, of the Chautauqua Association, when Miller was settled at Akron about twenty years ago. Dutch ideas have been largely developed and modified, and I myself have introduced innovations, but never thought of, but for the system, as now in use in many of the largest Sunday-schools the world besides.

"How many Sunday-school workers are there in Atlanta?"

"About 1,000, I should say, not to speak definitely of keeping the primary department all by itself, and the rest of the school with separate administration. But I believe in getting for a short time all pupils together, for the sake of the spirit de corps, and to let the little ones early realize that they belong to a great body."

ARRANGEMENT OF CLASSES.

"What do you regard as a Sunday-school teacher's most essential qualification?"

"A teacher must have average intelligence and common sense; more than this is desirable but not necessary. The one thing which can not be dispensed with is the consecration to do soul-saving for God. It is not that you do it for your own soul's sake or even that you do it for the good of the children, but that you do it for God. This carries every thing else with it; whatever you do for Him you must do well, and so the consecration carries with it the study, the constant effort, the concentration of the powers."

"You do not attach importance, then, to the higher education of Sunday-school teachers?"

"I have had in my school at the same time two comparatively uneducated working women and a brilliant young man fresh from college, and the woman were far beyond the other in the ability she obtained because her heart was warmer to the work; if the college man had the fervor and love of God added to it his education he would, of course, have been more effective than, as things stood, was either of them.

"You can't stand out for classical scholarship. I've got to have upper in a hundred and eighty teachers and if I have that number of classical scholars in my congregation I don't know where to lay hands on them.

"But Sunday-school teaching is growing all the time more and more intelligent. The Sunday-schools have fully purged themselves, I think, of the complaints that used to be made, and in some cases with justice, against them. I attribute this largely to the public schools. Such a public school system as that of this country trains a body of clear-headed, intelligent citizens.

"The International Lessons, against which so much is said, have also been a good deal to do with it. With all their disadvantages the lesson sheets give the average teacher far more than she would be in any way likely to get for herself. They do such a preliminary work of study and exposition that she has no excuse for going before her class without full, intelligent comprehension.

"The International series has won its way. Not a religious paper in the country would dare ignore it, and the secular press finds itself obliged to give it progressively more and more attention.

"In your Tuesday evening normal class do you apply the same principles of reasoning for teachers in Oriental history and customs?"

"Some of the teachers do so themselves for their pupils. My aim in popular exposition is to make the Bible text plain. Of the parts of the book it is written on except for what it can do for us to-day. I don't care any more about what happened to Jonah than I do about what happened to Julius Cæsar except as far as Jesus is a living force to enter into our lives now; boys and girls must take Him home and have Him with them Monday morning."

"What do you think of present methods of teaching the Chinese in Sunday-schools?"

"I am not say any thing about them except as I have seen them in one city, Boston. There I was for a time in familiar with the work of Miss Carter, who had as many as two hundred and sixty under instruction. She knew about among the poor lamdries and so entered into the views of the poor creatures that they felt toward her as to a mother, and they came to her with every trouble. She did infinite good; but she was a very judicious woman and very careful in her selection of teachers.

"I do not believe the present system of assigning a teacher to every Chinese pupil can be changed; the Chinese can not be taught in classes. But the teach-

SUNDAY-SCHOOL ROOM.

ORIGIN OF DOLLS.

The Meaning of the Word "Doll" Related at Length.

It is a safe assertion to make that every girl has at some time or other played with dolls; in fact, it is almost impossible to imagine a girl's life with-out a doll. Of course, the older ones have outgrown their dolls, and only keep the old friends as relics of their childish days and pretty playthings, and it is quite likely that they would be puzzled to explain why they call the little image a "doll," and not, as the French do, a "poupee," or, with the Italians, a "bambino," or baby.

What is the meaning of the word "doll?" Its origin is very curious, and go back to the middle ages, when it was the fashion all over the Christian world for mothers to name their little girls after the name of a patron saint. Some saints were more popular than others, and the name of the most popular one became popular than all.

Dorothea, or Dorothy, as the English have it, means "a gift from God." But Orothea or Dorothy is much too long a name for a little baby, and so it was shortened to Dolly and Doll, and from giving the babies a nickname it was an easy step to give the name to the little images of which the babies' eyes so fond.

Poor and Lonely.

The heartrending loneliness of the scientific spirit, with its passion for exact statement, its modest reserve, its more modest hopes, its no less modest fears, its sense of the vanity of many of their powers, and nothing else.

"What is your last name, my little friend?" said a visitor to a child.

"Tommy."

"Tommy what?"

"Tommy Jones."

"Tommy Jones is your last name?"

"Yes, sir; that's my last name. When I was born my name was Johnny, and they didn't give me the other for more than a year."—Youth's Companion.

An officer was sent by the Provincial Government to Kingston to make inquiries into the unexplained deaths of the Northern Pacific. Upon reports his discovery was that the deaths were caused by eating of the flesh of pigs, geese and other valuable animals with excellent appetites.

THE NIGHT HAWK.

Naturalist Creasey Has a Bird of Valuable Habits.

The night hawk is the subject of no special sympathy and the public at large many learned Germans have written volumes and volumes for their sake. The "jar" is merely a guttural note of alarm, like the rattle of a rattlesnake. The "boom" is heard within a few feet of those birds before being discovered. At the first appearance in the presence of a human being, the bird crouches in the "jar" before flying. It is natural to suppose that the "boom" is a love song, but I do not propose to say why, either will I tell why the night hawk selects his perch on a white mantelpiece and lays upon it. He does it reluctantly and heedlessly and seems to enjoy himself.

NIGHT HAWK ON THE WING.

The night hawk's habits fall right about electric lights. It is the only known species of birds of which it can positively be said that the attraction of insect life at dusk. Its sleep by day was a matter of choice for some years after the Bird's Nesting Street now, when its hereditary tendencies are strongest, it feeds most by day on such summer flying insects as most plentiful. It is a creature of the most irregular habits known to any ornithologist.

The brain of the night hawk is very small, not twice greater in quantity than a "scrooching owl's." The greatest part of the cranium is occupied by eye sockets. The gizzard is of enormous size comparatively, and occupies more than one-half of the abdominal cavity. One that was examined contained the remains of one thousand insects by actual count.

CAMERA FOR CHILDREN.

An Entirely New Article That Exactly Now Fills a Long-Felt Want.

The boys and girls who have wistfully gazed at the expensive photographic apparatus exposed for sale in the shop windows have probably never thought that a camera was within their grasp by a little labor and a very small expenditure of money.

Procure a wooden box of about the dimensions shown in the cut with a cover fitting tightly over one end.

The box must be large enough inside to admit a plate of glass 5¼ by six inches and a narrow piece of wood must be fastened just inside the cover to prevent the plate falling from the bottom of the box.

In the center of the end opposite the cover make a very small round hole, not larger than would be made by a steel knitting needle. A match smoothed down to exactly fit into this hole will be your "lens cover."

Now, as your box does not admit a single ray of light when the cover is on and the match inserted your camera is finished.

Glass plates 5¼x4¼ inches, coated with a preparation ready to receive your picture, can be obtained of any dealer in photographic materials for forty-five cents per dozen. It is not necessary to have a slow plate, such as Carbutte No. 16. These plates can not be exposed to either daylight or gaslight, and must be opened in a dark room.

A sheet of orange or ruby paper can be purchased for a trifle and pasted over the front of a box, within which a candle may be lighted, and you have a light in which the plates can be exposed.

You will notice that the plates are smooth on one side but have a white coating on the other. Place the coated side facing the hole in the front of your box and just on the cover, which must be securely fastened.

You are now ready to take a picture. Do not try one indoors, but outside on a clear day. Stand about fifty to one hundred feet from the object you wish to photograph, and, resting the camera on some object, hold it steady while you count the matches—for about thirty seconds if a clear day and for one or two minutes if cloudy—carefully replacing same. A little experience will enable you to judge the time necessary for a proper exposure.

THE CAMERA.

There are many places in every city where your box may be taken and the plate developed, picture printed and mounted on a card for ten cents.—N. Y. World.

A Long Neck and a Short Leg.

"Charlie," asked his mother whether it's the neck or the leg that you are fond of."

"What is it—a goose?"

"Yes."

"Then give me the neck, please."—Harper's Young People.

Giving Them a Chance.

Father (to four-year-old son)—Bobbie, why don't you get ready for kindergarten? This is the last warning.

Bobbie—Why, pop, the other scholars are so dumb I thought I'd stay home and wait to let them catch up with me.—Judge.

An Observer's Opinion.

"What do you think the most notable feature of American literature to-day?"

"Uneut edges."—Puck.

Indians as Smokers.

Every Indian worships tobacco. Give the Indian a couple of pounds of beef and tobacco and there will be no more war between him and the white man. They do not get any tobacco from the Government in these days, so they sell their annuities for it, and it is one of the principal articles of trade. Some of the older fellows still mix the willow bark with their tobacco, but the "pale face" has taught the younger men to take the tobacco straight. Their love for tobacco has become almost a passion, and yet the Indian is master of himself in the use of it. He never gets drunk on tobacco. He smokes cigarettes to kill every dude on the face of the earth, go on the war path for a few months, and then settle down and turn up with a physique that seems unimpaired. The suggestion that unlimited tobacco would be the best way to settle these faults to the ground and become ralnolent.—Washington Star.

The Speed of Thought in Dreams.

The ticking of the Postal Union's new telegraph operator was receiving a message from some distant station, and he had just commenced. In it Prince Bismarck's name was frequently repeated. Words cut from these days' newspapers, with the same names, were pasted along the poor operator took down the "file" of the old warrior's name, and then he left the office. He went to bed dreamed that he visited the scenes of his childhood's day; went hunting with Bismarck through the forests of Pomerania; fought battles with him in France, and had interviews with him in Berlin, and finally dreamed that the whole interview was a dream, and that he had been asleep for six minutes.

Then he awoke and looked at his watch. When I was born my name was Johnny, and they didn't give me the other for more than a year.—Youth's Companion.

NEW DEMANDS OF SCIENCE.

Large Opportunity for Scientific Research.

Every large undertaking which follows in the development of modern science and mathematics is compelled to add new and specially organized lines of investigation in order that the special invention shall have the benefit of the progress in the various sciences. This is equally true of the most universal, the most practical inventions of modern times as it is of the most progressive and scientific. Prof. Lyman Abbott, in a recent address in Cleveland, O., said that universities do not yet offer wide enough opportunity for study. Such a thought in Cleveland is like that of the Atlantic Monthly. His plea is for a greater recognition of the claims of industrial physics, which embrace the problems on which we consider the land, the ocean and the atmosphere, respectively, as whole, or as parts of the greater unit which astronomers call the earth." The branches of the subject comprise many interesting and important modern scientific research. Already the conditions of the interior of the earth and the question of their influence upon the surface are the subjects of experimental work. The crust of the earth forms an important branch of study. Geologists may observe phenomena, but it has not been explained whether the present conditions of the features of the continents and ocean beds have always been as they are, and what the causes have been of the rise and fall of mountain chains. The subject of earthquakes or seismology has not yet been satisfactorily studied. Nutation and rotation of the earth and the mysterious forces of terrestrial magnetism are still unexplained by nature. The relation between the ocean and the land, and the problems which the ocean, which forms a branch of oceanography, offer a series of particularly interesting problems. The geography of the earth, and the law of its great progress will be made in the future in the prediction of daily weather, of extensive effects of rainfall and droughts and floods. Our signal service of climate weather will be vastly undoubtedly be improved by collegiate support. In this rapid review of the opportunities made in an important city like it may be seen that quick and lively scientific demands are pressing for the accomplishment of work in the fields of study. The day of exclusive devotion to ancient literature and the classics has passed away. It is only a question whether the universities will maintain an equilibrium between science and the arts. Modern learning is unbounded, and the world holds great secrets for the earnest student.—Boston Journal of Commerce.

Accustoming Lightning Fears.

A singular phenomenon of the lightning flash is that its chief effects are observable only at the points of its entrance and exit. Thus a flash which entered a school-room injured only the first and last child on the form, those between escaping unhurt. The most effective treatment of lameness and other ailments due to lightning is the application to the affected part of the trunk and limbs of a large resonant shock. In case of a quite recent stiffening should the flash be instantaneous, the patient will with the head high and quietness and fresh air should be secured. A considerable time will return the head should be exposed to a stream of cold water.

Railroads.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.
THE STANDARD RAILWAY OF AMERICA.
PROTECTED THROUGHOUT BY THE
Interlocking Switch and Signal System.

TRAINS FOR THE WEST:

On and after Dec. 28, 1890, trains leave Elizabeth as follows:

7:45 A. M. Fast Line, with Pullman Vestibule parlor and sleeping cars, daily for Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago, except Sunday, for Chicago and Toledo.

12:01 P. M. Western Express, daily for Pittsburg, sleeping cars, dining car to Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago, and Sleeping cars Saturday, for Chicago and Toledo.

4:25 P. M. Pacific Express, with Pullman Vestibule parlor and sleeping cars, daily for Chicago and Toledo, daily except Saturday, for Chicago.

7:45 P. M. Southwestern Limited, daily, for Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago.

For Pullman tickets, apply to Ticket Agents.

For Fast Line, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Western Express, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Pacific Express, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Southwestern Limited, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

FOR ATLANTIC CITY.

7:45 P. M. Through sleeping car for week-days. Pay Car: Mail, 3rd side City and Ocean City, 12:30 or Trenton—1:45, 2:45, 7:10, 7:30, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Lambertville, Flemington and Belvidere via Trenton—7:30 A. M., 2:45 and 5:15 P. M.

For Lambertville and Phillipsburg only, 2:45 P. M.

For Bristol, 7:30 A. M. and 5:15 P. M.

For Morrisville, 7:30 A. M., 2:45 and 5:15 P. M.

For Yardley, 7:30 A. M. and 5:15 P. M.

For Langhorne, 7:30 A. M., 2:45 and 5:15 P. M.

For Newtown, 7:30 A. M., 2:45 and 5:15 P. M.

For Hulmeville, 7:30 A. M., 2:45 and 5:15 P. M.

For Penndel, 7:30 A. M., 2:45 and 5:15 P. M.

For Bristol, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Morrisville, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Yardley, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Langhorne, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Newtown, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Hulmeville, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

For Penndel, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01, 1:45, 2:45, 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, 6:45, 7:45, 8:45, 9:45, 10:45 A. M., 12:01 P. M.

Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Station in New York foot of Liberty Street. Time Table in effect, Dec. 28, 1890.

PLAINFIELD AND NEW YORK.

Leave Plainfield 3:27, 5:30, 7:30, 8:45, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 A. M., 12:30, 1:30, 2:30, 3:30, 4:30, 5:30, 6:30, 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 P. M., 12:30 night. Sundays 3:27, 5:30, 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 A. M., 12:30, 1:30, 2:30, 3:30, 4:30, 5:30, 6:30, 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 P. M.

Leave New York from foot of Liberty street, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 A. M., 12:30, 1:30, 2:30, 3:30, 4:30, 5:30, 6:30, 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 P. M., 12:30 night. Sundays 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 A. M., 12:30, 1:30, 2:30, 3:30, 4:30, 5:30, 6:30, 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 P. M.

Passengers for Newark change cars at Elizabeth.

PLAINFIELD AND SOMERVILLE.

Leave Plainfield 7:30, 8:45, 9:30, 10:30 A. M., 12:30, 1:30, 2:30, 3:30, 4:30, 5:30, 6:30, 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 P. M. Sundays—8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 A. M., 12:30, 1:30, 2:30, 3:30, 4:30, 5:30, 6:30, 7:30, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 P. M.

PLAINFIELD AND EASTON.

Leave Plainfield 7:45, 10:45 A. M., 1:30, 4:30, 7:30 P. M. Sundays—7:45, 10:45 A. M., 4:30, 7:30 P. M.

PLAINFIELD AND LAKE HOPATCONG.

Leave Plainfield 8:45 A. M., 4:30 P. M.

WESTWARD CONNECTIONS.

At Junction, Allentown, Bowling Green, Washington and Scranton.

At Bound Brook, Somerville, Flemington, Manville, Whitehouse and Scranton.

At Dunellen, Bound Brook, Somerville, Flemington, High Bridge Branch, Manville, Whitehouse and Scranton.

At Junction, Bound Brook, Somerville, Flemington, Manville, Whitehouse, Bethlehem, Easton, Phillipsburg, Belvidere, Delaware, Water Gap, Stroudsburg, Manunka Chunk, Delaware Water Gap, Scranton, Wilkesbarre, Mauch Chunk, Reading, Harrisburg, Williamsport, Sunbury, Shamokin and Pottsville.

At Junction, Bound Brook, Somerville, Flemington, High Bridge Branch, Manville, Whitehouse and Scranton.

At Junction, Bound Brook, Somerville, Flemington, Manville, Whitehouse, Bethlehem, Easton, Phillipsburg, Belvidere, Delaware, Water Gap, Stroudsburg, Manunka Chunk, Delaware Water Gap, Scranton, Wilkesbarre, Mauch Chunk, Reading, Harrisburg, Williamsport, Sunbury, Shamokin and Pottsville

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
M. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1891. No. 12.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well as its limitations as to its authorities."—MADISON

Rates of Advertising.

Space	1 WEEK	2	3	4	5	6	13 WEEKS	26	52
1 Inch	$						$
2 Inches
3 Inches
4 Inches
5 Inches
6 Inches
7 Inches
8 Inches
9 Inches
10 Inches
11 Inches
12 Inches
13 Inches
14 Inches
15 Inches
16 Inches
17 Inches
18 Inches
19 Inches
20 Inches
21 Inches
22 Inches
23 Inches
24 Inches

All Notices must be solid metal.

"Links of Everything" column, 5 cts. per line.

Double rule, 30 per cent. advance of above rates.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & GOSSINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Notaries Public and Conveyancers, Office corner of Park avenue and Second street, opposite.

W. V. STERLE,
Counsellor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner of Deeds,
Cor. PARK AND NORTH AVES. 1-26-92

GEORGE W. HAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box 154, Orient st., E. J., or address in care of CONSTITUTIONALIST Office.

DR. CHARLES S. TERRIS,
Dentist,
38 West Front street. A new local anesthetic administered painlessly when natural teeth filled without a specialty.—3-5

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
Office, Liberal, Lock Box 71, Scotch Plains, N. J. Orders left at C. J. Carey's second-hand store, 48 East Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—3-5-92

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
247 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 39 and 40, [Insurance and Trustees' Safe Deposit Building.] Residence, Plainfield, N. J.—3-5-92

J. S. FORSTER,
Veterinary Surgeon,
Office in A. M. Seguine's livery office, corner Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Diseases of horses and cattle promptly attended to. Telephone No. 1, Box 134. Orders may be left at the office or at my residence, Randolph, 73 East Fifth ave., opposite.

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VAN ARSDALE,
PIANO TUNER.
Is succeeding to the Chauncey music business. Pianos and Organs for sale and for hire. Tuning by special contract, $3 per year. Leave orders at Mr. Hale Store, No. 5 Park avenue, or receive prompt attention. Residence, 21 West Front street, corner Elm street.—3-12-92

JOHN CHANDLER,
JARPENTER AND BUILDER.
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Residence and shop No. 36 East 2d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 4-9-92

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
Sutter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds,
CRUTTENED VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON.
NO. 34 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
L. A. HUMMER, Clerk
A. LUTKINS.

TO THE PUBLIC!

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,

Fresh from the Mines.

Coal under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Hemlock and Hard Wood Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
Depot.

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
(Formerly Clerk's.)

Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.

Repairing neatly and promptly done.

FOR BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS
In Furniture
GO TO
23, 25 and 27 PARK AVE.
Garret Q. Packer,

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones.
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels
Large variety of Granite Monuments
at ALLWORK furnished in the most skillful manner, at very reasonable prices. All orders promptly executed. E. MANNING,
Office, Depot, cor. Front st. & Cen. R. R. Co., Plainfield, N. J.
Monuments erected in Greenwood Cemetery, N. Y.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
NO. 2 PARK AVENUE,
Plainfield, N. J.
A full assortment of Gentlemen's goods always on hand. Repairing done to order.

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
Is now the sole proprietor of the old established and well-known
No. 14 NORTH AVENUE.
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the best grades of Fresh and Salt Meats, Fish, Oysters, Clams, Game in season, as the market affords, and will also keep a full stock of Smoked Meats, Sausages, etc.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, [Near D. L. & W. STATION.]
JAS. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat. Fine cuisine throughout.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-31-92

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset Avenue and North Plainfield N. J.
RICHARDS & BOYCE, Proprietors.
Permanent and transient board, at fair rates. First-class stables and sheds attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours.

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice " NATHAN HARDING, "
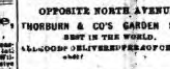
ELIAS R. POPE, Treasurer.
4-9-92

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS, SENT IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED PER GO CHARGE. 4-9-92

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
[Successors to G. F. & C. E. Noyes & Co.]
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tiles, Anaglypta, Hand, Leather' Painted Floor Papers, &c. Borders for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
3-31-92

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables


Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure driving.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Carefully safe drivers for shopping calls or sleigh-ing drives. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day, week or month. Telephone Call—No. 26.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to answer demands for all kinds of first-class horses and carriages. Horses boarded by the day, week or month at reasonable rates. Telephone connection.

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderbeek's Meat Store, Park Avenue.
The Accommodation Express will attend to the general carrying business of the city, including goods of all kinds, and will be on hand at the place at all times. Leaving of Packages. Please note, which are carefully transported to and from the depot.

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The undersigned are now appointed agents for the
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the
City of New York,
as prepared to assume insurance risks on all descriptions of property on favorable terms. Office corner of Plainfield avenue and Second street.
NATHAN HARPER.

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also representing other first-class First assurance Companies. Agents of the Issues Guaranty Line. Dwellings insured for sale. Plate and Other Sectional Bank, stock Bonds and Gold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale.
OFFICE:
5 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS R. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
NO. 108 SOMERSET STREET, NORTH PLAINFIELD.
Orders left at my residence, No. 108 Somerset street, or at my store, No. 2 Somerset street, will receive prompt attention.

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
IN LeGrande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET,
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 23, 1891.
The regular course will include Modeling, Drawing and Carving. 9-17-92

PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass.
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 8 North Avenue, Plainfield.
4-9-92

I. D. WOOLSTON. J. F. BUCKLE.
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTERS' SUPPLIES. 20 NORTH AVENUE
4-9-92

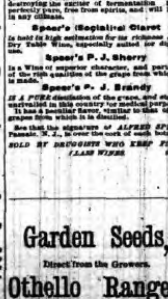
MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Carey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—28 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 28. Piano moving a specialty. 3-5-92

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools.
Best Timothy Seed.
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 3-12-92

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman.
20 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females. Weakly persons and the aged.



Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the finest ripe Sweet Grape, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left long until they clarify and become highly valued before each ripe. It is invaluable
Tonic and Strengthe ing Pr perties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being prescribed under Mr Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuine-ness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalid can take it without injury. It is particularly beneficial in the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that afflict the weaker sex.
It is in its native state, and TO BE RELIED ON.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
Is the juice of the Concord Grape, preserved in its unchanged state, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the ferment or fermentation. It is pleasant to take, from from spoiling, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's (Sophisticated) Claret
Is held in high estimation for its richness as a dry Table Wine and highly recommended for dyspepsia.
Speer's P. J. Sherry
Is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivaled in this country for medicinal purposes. It has a delightful flavor, similar to that of the grape from which it is distilled.
Each bottle bears the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., across the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 4-9-92

FOR SALE, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The continued success of the finest and most popular 5c. Cigar in the market.
OLEAN HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
A large assortment of the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars, Cigarettes and Tobaccos always on hand.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety.
Trade Solicited.

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMESTIC
—SEGARS!—
No. 30 PARK AVE., (OPPOSITE SECOND ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials, of every description.
Manufacturer of Old Judge Smoking Tobacco, without the poisonous chemicals used in other brands.

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
[Successor to H. B. Maynard.]
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 30 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies and Children's Hair Cutting done at their residence. Gent's Shampooing, &c., satisfactorily performed.
(1892)

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Eastern Avenue, cor. Fifth St., Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

CARNEY BROS., Ag'ts,
11 SOMERSET ST.
TINNERS,
PLUMBERS,
GAS FITTERS.
PARLOR STOVES,
COOK STOVES,
HEATERS.
Grates and Backs for all kinds of Stove can be found here or Jobbers' prices. Bring your Tinware needing to us. The best Tinners, the best Plumbers, and the best Gas-fitters in the country. We can more than the very best of the market, and our work always gives satisfaction.

Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.
Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

WHATEVER form of printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings,
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memorials,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Publication or Private Circulation.
Everything

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST.

DAILY PRESS

(Chautauqua Building).

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING.
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING
Etc. Etc.
Garden Seeds,
Direct from the Growers.
Othello Ranges,
Choice Clover and Timothy Seed.
House Furnishing Goods,
Hardware, Plumbing and Tinning.
A. M. GRIFFEN,
128 North Front Street.
TELEPHONE CALL, 5. 11-14-91

A LITTLE KING.

Mother will quit her work to-day,
Dress in her handsome gown,
And to the station she will go
When the baby comes.

Father will lay his paper down
And on his coat will brush,
But mostly see the baby's town,
When the baby comes.

Sister will leave her school early,
And her self-same baby carriage take,
To bring the baby home,
When the baby comes.

Brother will leave all the boys,
And run all the way home,
And count it one of the greatest joys,
When the baby comes.

And he he rules we one and all,
Before his throne he takes no toll,
And so the baby comes.

And so the baby rules us all,
Our every thought and power,
And should it die, our hearts would break,
And may he be your's my.

And if the world does not know,
But discover your mistake,
Just kindly say so, if you please,
And let them see.
—Lucy A. Hamilton, in Western Rural.

A SMALL BOY'S PRANKS.

Some of the Bits of Mischief He Can Think Of.

HERE is no time at which a small boy of from four to five years of age, is ripe for mischief than when he is all alone. In fact, the small boy's hell is better than half a dozen small boys in a crowd are in mischief are to be wrought. The small man is left alone he will smoke or read; if a woman is left alone — we don't mean alone in the house with no one to talk to, but in private on the phone, or work the ends of her fingers off embroidering impossible animals and birds on a tidy.

But with a small boy it is entirely different. He can only pass the time pleasantly by getting up a series of pursuits that are as full of fun to him as they are totally devoid of it to his parents. A boy will do this, and ages has a very queer appreciation of what constitutes fun; but if he can enjoy what to him is the height of pleasure, what difference does it make to him if older people are pleased to reg ard it in a different light?

It is difficult to understand the mental process by which the small boy conceives it to be thoroughly pleasant and mirth-provoking to mix a lot of lath nails, keys and buttons in his father's shaving-brush. Yet the small boy does it, even when he knows a possible whipping is his reward. A grown person would never think of indulging in such a freak when the contents of his shaving-brush are considered, and he would not do it unless the risk carried with it a pretty good chance of realizing a broken neck.

Having mixed the nails, buttons and keys with the tobacco, about as thoroughly as a cook mixes plums with her pudding, the small boy proceeds to the kitchen, and turns his attention to something else.

Noticing the feather duster on the table he thinks he can clip the dame in the stink, and, having got it thoroughly saturated, begins swabbing it around on top of the hot stove, just to dry it some. This affords him rare sport, and causes his features to break into a series of pleasant smiles, and he continues to smile until the aroma of the consuming feather duster is a little too much for him. Then he beats off the charred feathers, and the cat appears. The cat does not come too near, for only the other day he latheted her face with his father's lathering brush, and got so much soap in her eyes that she nearly strangled from his kind intention to cook begin the operation of shaving her with the safety razor. He finally gets the poor quadruped into the butler's pantry, and, having closed both the kitchen and dining-room door, wonders how a black cat will look whitewash with flour. So he thrusts the feather duster into the flour, and, attempting to execute a few fancy flourishes, he gets the feather so loaded down with flour that it will not work, and he has to throw it away. He then gets a dish-pan full of water, and, having got it thoroughly saturated, he begins washing it around on top of the hot stove, just to dry it again. This affords him rare sport, and causes his features to break into a series of pleasant smiles, and he continues to smile until the aroma of the consuming feather duster is a little too much for him. Then he beats off the charred feathers, and the cat appears. The cat does not come too near, for only the other day he lathered her face with his father's lathering brush, and got so much soap in her eyes that she nearly strangled from his kind intention to cook begin the operation of shaving her with the safety razor. He finally gets the poor quadruped into the butler's pantry, and, having closed both the kitchen and dining-room door, wonders how a black cat will look whitewash with flour. So he thrusts the feather duster into the flour, and, attempting to execute a few fancy flourishes, he gets the feather so loaded down with flour that it will not work, and he has to throw it away. He then gets a dish-pan full of water, and, having got it thoroughly saturated, begins washing it around on top of the hot stove, just to dry it again. This affords him rare sport, and causes his features to break into a series of pleasant smiles, and he continues to smile until the aroma of the consuming

MAKING IT INTERESTING FOR THE CAT.

SANITARY PLUMBING.
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING
Etc. Etc.

A SLIGHT CHANGE.

Irate Father—Now some right along with me. I'll allow no lukewarm books worm of a school-teacher to thrash my boy of mine. I'll teach him a lesson he won't forget for many days.

Father. Did you lick this boy of mine this morning?
Teacher (with angelic smile)—I did, sir.
Father—Well, I just came down to say I'm much obliged to you. You see I have an affection of the spine which that weakened me so that I am unable to give him the necessary chastisement when he needs it. Good-day.—Judge.

THE STYLISH WOMAN.

She Appears in Either of Two Varieties of Dress.

New Designs in Braiding Can Be Bought So Perfect in Design as to Deceive Beholders—Imitation Pattern Gowns—A Lesson in Color.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

Gowns of two varieties are seen upon the streets. Gowns lively and gowns severe. The former are furbelowed as to the bodice and flounced as to the skirt, and are set off with natural flowers of the gaudiest variety. The latter are plain to the last degree of modesty in the waist and are so contracted in the skirt that the wearers justly complain that they run the risk of getting knees in their skirts.

The former are in all the new shades of green, violet and cafe-au-lait. The latter are in subdued tints of the old colors, wrought out in homespun or English tweed.

The former are worn by women with more money than position. The latter by those who regard economy in dress costume as the sign mark of the Four Hundred.

A street dress which would, however, have been more appropriate as a driving gown was of the new shade of warm, sympathetic brown. The skirt was a plain habit skirt with short demi train. The bodice was very short in the hips and ended in a point in front. It was shirred at neck and waist, material of the skirt and black silk in plain stripes. The skirt is of the plain material. The right side opens back of gray cloth outlined with silver braid. The collar is gray with silver braid. The lawyer's cuffs are faced with silver. With this gown is to be worn cut silver stick pins and girdle, and, albeit on, thanks that I should be planned thus deliberately a prayer book and hymnal with the initials of the owner wrought out in cut silver. The general effect cannot but be pretty, quiet and in good taste.

Another Easter gown is in two shades of green nicely combined and is to be worn with a flower buff of red roses. The roses are of the natural sort, to be renewed at each wearing. The delicate little green tones which accompanies this is trimmed as to the front with the natural red roses, arranged closely together to form a little pyramid just over the front locks. Those roses must also be natural.

WHO HE DIDN'T.

Dry Doolan—Hurry up and give me a drink, barkeep. I haven't had one for six months.

Barkeeper—He just keep off as long as he could. I wouldn't offer you through none.

Dry Doolan—Keep off? I had to keep off. I've had six months on the island, with water, and every where but, but not a drop to drink.?—Boston Herald.

Didn't Use One There.

Tramp—Don't call me lazy, madam. I assure you I only take great pleasure in using the plow.

Lady—Well, there's one in the barn you can use to clear the ice from that path.

Tramp—It isn't the right kind, lady.

Lady—Why, what kind of a pick do you mean?

Tramp—A tooth-pick.—Boston Herald.

The Latest Plague.

Fashionable Dame (who summered it Europe)—Help that scratching; the silence will soothe it.

Husband (in a parquette seat)—But I can't stand those fleas.

Dame—Hear it still the curtain falls, and then go out between the acts. Then people will think you are only on a spree.—Life.

Adding Insult to Injury.

Van Dusen (indignant)—You have made me desperate! My death will lie at your door. Ere the sun-to-morrow shines I shall blow my brains out!

Amy—Oh! I don't think there's the slightest danger of that!—Life.

The Limit of Taste.

Fond-yourself—He is my right hand, isn't it, papa?

Father—Yes, my dear boy.

Fond-yourself—Then its must be my wrong hand!—Boston Herald.

Balance of the Business.

"What is Fogg doing since he left the signal-service?"

"Oh, he's writing whether indications to order for Western newspapers."—Life.

THE EFFECT WAS GOOD.

The effect was good. Throughout during the day, but more especially it looked much better in the evening. A certain purple figures upon the lavender ground appeared black by artificial light.

To remedy this peculiar, awkward combination—one of many things which have been done. Either the black set should have been replaced by white to match the general tone of the shallie, or the shallie should have been exchanged for one with a black ground and purple or lavender figures if desired. The ribbons might then have been of lavender and purple, and some should have been in much better harmony.

This mistake is frequently seen and often accounts for the despairing cry which one hears from the possessor of a new gown: "I thought those two shades would sometime well; I saw them last season and it was lovely."

Upon investigation it will generally be found that some law of combination has been violated to produce the ugly third and unpleasant. It is not generally known as this: Many colors are pretty only when combined with another contrasting color, in limited quantities. Pink and blue, for example, make a pretty, accepted Persian combination. But with this rule the "blue" must dominate. A blue dress relieved by pink is chic and becoming. But how timid and unpleasant is a pink dress trimmed with blue. All pink does beautifully. But let off with blue, as Heaven forbid!

Cafe-au-lait collected by brown is charming. But brown with cafe-au-lait trimmings is insipid. A bellegrope gown worn with orange satin lining and ribbons is unique, startling and fascinating. It was Bernhardt's own idea, carried out by herself, for a boudoir robe. But fancy the horror of an orange satin dress trimmed with bobbinet. Lavender and old rose kills each other prettily. But never, oh never, must old rose and lavender be worn together.

WORTH DESERT GOWN.

The designer runs no wedding breakfasts is no longer the fegulation black or ruby velvet. A recent wedding saw the bride's mother dressed in olive plush with court train. A border of white Russian fox fur finished the bottom of the skirt and outlined the low-cut bodice. Diamonds and emeralds formed the ornaments. Long suede gloves stitched with olive were worn.

Easter dresses are already planned. Women from past experience have found the difficulty there is in finding a modiste to construct a gown the wear of which is satisfactory. So a few of the wiser ones have taken time by the hang and are getting their Easter gowns ready.

An exquisitely-planned church dress is as follows: The basic skirt and waist material are of gray and black silk in pin stripes. The skirt is of the plain material. The right side opens back of gray cloth outlined with silver braid. The collar is gray with silver braid. The lawyer's cuffs are faced with silver. With this gown is to be worn cut silver stick pins and girdle, and, albeit on, thanks that I should be planned thus deliberately a prayer book and hymnal with the initials of the owner wrought out in cut silver. The general effect cannot but be pretty, quiet and in good taste.

Another Easter gown is in two shades of green nicely combined and is to be worn with a flower buff of red roses. The roses are of the natural sort, to be renewed at each wearing. The delicate little green tones which accompanies this is trimmed as to the front with the natural red roses, arranged closely together to form a little pyramid just over the front locks. Those roses must also be natural.

WHO HE DIDN'T.

Dry Doolan—Hurry up and give me a drink, barkeep. I haven't had one for six months.

Barkeeper—He just keep off as long as he could. I wouldn't offer you through none.

Dry Doolan—Keep off? I had to keep off. I've had six months on the island, with water, and every where but, but not a drop to drink.?—Boston Herald.

Didn't Use One There.

Tramp—Don't call me lazy, madam. I assure you I only take great pleasure in using the plow.

Lady—Well, there's one in the barn you can use to clear the ice from that path.

Tramp—It isn't the right kind, lady.

Lady—Why, what kind of a pick do you mean?

Tramp—A tooth-pick.—Boston Herald.

The Latest Plague.

Fashionable Dame (who summered it Europe)—Help that scratching; the silence will soothe it.

Husband (in a parquette seat)—But I can't stand those fleas.

Dame—Hear it still the curtain falls, and then go out between the acts. Then people will think you are only on a spree.—Life.

Adding Insult to Injury.

Van Dusen (indignant)—You have made me desperate! My death will lie at your door. Ere the sun-to-morrow shines I shall blow my brains out!

Amy—Oh! I don't think there's the slightest danger of that!—Life.

The Limit of Taste.

Fond-yourself—He is my right hand, isn't it, papa?

Father—Yes, my dear boy.

Fond-yourself—Then its must be my wrong hand!—Boston Herald.

Balance of the Business.

"What is Fogg doing since he left the signal-service?"

"Oh, he's writing whether indications to order for Western newspapers."—Life.

MODERN LOVE SCENE.

It Ends, of Course, in a Triumphant Victory for "Mash."

He (with dignified composure)—Why are you so disagreeable, Helen?

She (artlessly surprised)—Disagreeable? Am I?

He (as before)—Always—to me.

She (carelessly)—Indeed? But, luckily it is a grievance you are not obliged to bear.

He (resignedly)—You certainly seem any thing but kind and polite.

She—There's no use in my straining.

He (restlessly)—Oh, I don't know that it is your fault. Of course people spoil you when they flatter your vanity.

She—Am I vain, too?

He (warming to the subject)—Are you? How could you be otherwise in the frivolous, worldly life you live—the poor little round of dancing and dressing you have so chosen to live but to vain and worldly.

She (smiling slightly)—Dear me!

He (throwing prudence to the winds)—Yes—just—that is right. You are too selfish, too cruel, to care whom you hurt. Go on, Helen.

"YES—JUST—THAT'S RIGHT."

She (curiously)—But if I hurt you so, why do you seek this pain? Why did you come up to-night, for instance?

He (impatiently)—I came because—Helen, you well know why—because I can't stay away! And I love you so, Helen! Darling, I am willing to wait—but, give me hope—just a little.

She (opening her eyes on him)—Hope of what?

He (desperately) — That you will sometime be my wife.

She (thoughtfully)—Disagreeable, impolitic, unkind, vain, worldly, selfish and cruel. (With tenderness) You poor boy, is that why you are so sorry you would like to marry? Do you mean it, Arthur?

He (clutching her hand)—Yes, oh, yes! May I hope, Helen?

She—I am afraid you will. I could never live up, that is, down, to your ideal, but if you like to take me, hampered with virtues you can't dream of, perhaps I may acquire, by degrees, the faults you love me for.

He (rapturously)—Oh! Helen, dear, you are quite bad enough—I mean I am quite good enough—I mean—

She (interrupting)—I know you do, dearest. I know it from the first.—Madeline S. Bridges, in Life.

A Dog with Legal Instincts.

A Boston lawyer who resides in the suburbs is the owner of a dog that certainly possesses the instincts of an attorney. The dog has made it a business to construct excuses the week before Thanksgiving and Christmas. So a few of the wiser ones have taken time by the hang and are getting their Easter gowns ready.

An exquisitely-planned church dress is as follows: The basic skirt and waist material are of gray and black silk in pin stripes. The skirt is of the plain material. The right side opens back of gray cloth outlined with silver braid. The collar is gray with silver braid. The lawyer's cuffs are faced with silver. With this gown is to be worn cut silver stick pins and girdle, and, albeit on, thanks that I should be planned thus deliberately a prayer book and hymnal with the initials of the owner wrought out in cut silver. The general effect cannot but be pretty, quiet and in good taste.

Another Easter gown is in two shades of green nicely combined and is to be worn with a flower buff of red roses. The roses are of the natural sort, to be renewed at each wearing. The delicate little green tones which accompanies this is trimmed as to the front with the natural red roses, arranged closely together to form a little pyramid just over the front locks. Those roses must also be natural.

WHO HE DIDN'T.

Dry Doolan—Hurry up and give me a drink, barkeep. I haven't had one for six months.

Barkeeper—He just keep off as long as he could. I wouldn't offer you through none.

Dry Doolan—Keep off? I had to keep off. I've had six months on the island, with water, and every where but, but not a drop to drink.?—Boston Herald.

Didn't Use One There.

Tramp—Don't call me lazy, madam. I assure you I only take great pleasure in using the plow.

Lady—Well, there's one in the barn you can use to clear the ice from that path.

Tramp—It isn't the right kind, lady.

Lady—Why, what kind of a pick do you mean?

Tramp—A tooth-pick.—Boston Herald.

The Latest Plague.

Fashionable Dame (who summered it Europe)—Help that scratching; the silence will soothe it.

Husband (in a parquette seat)—But I can't stand those fleas.

Dame—Hear it still the curtain falls, and then go out between the acts. Then people will think you are only on a spree.—Life.

Adding Insult to Injury.

Van Dusen (indignant)—You have made me desperate! My death will lie at your door. Ere the sun-to-morrow shines I shall blow my brains out!

Amy—Oh! I don't think there's the slightest danger of that!—Life.

The Limit of Taste.

Fond-yourself—He is my right hand, isn't it, papa?

Father—Yes, my dear boy.

Fond-yourself—Then its must be my wrong hand!—Boston Herald.

Balance of the Business.

"What is Fogg doing since he left the signal-service?"

"Oh, he's writing whether indications to order for Western newspapers."—Life.

HOUSE DECORATIONS.

"A neat boarder for a dining-room."—Life.

All Hope Abandon.

Poet (meekly)—I should like to leave this little poem with you for criticism. I suppose a good many poems are left here.

Editor (gruffly)—Yes, and so are the fellows who want us to buy them.—Life.

LITERATURE AND ART.

BOSTON has a school the object of which is to teach models how to pose.

IT is reported that the Pope intends to establish a printing press in the celebrated fresco, "The Last Judgment," which is the glory of the Sistine chapel.

THE venerable James Parton works six hours a day at his home in Newburyport. His desk is his place of rest and study, and it is said to be what literary occupation means to him.

W. CLARKE RUSSELL, whose sea stories have a remarkable fresh, breeziness and out-of-door freedom, has long been a hopeless and well-nigh helpless invalid, and to an in-door existence in an inland town.

MISS K. T. MCKINNON, of Detroit, at present in Washington, D. C., announces, says that the historian, through correspondence with letters and telegrams of congratulation on every birthday, scrupulously replied to every solitary one by letter.

A MONTREAL citizen has purchased for $400 a landscape painting that he would be willing to sell it's discount. The other value of the picture was in the signature, "D. Teniers." In order to prevent Mrs. Stanley pronounces it a forgery.

THE Russian press imaginously laments the death of Gregory Petrovitch Danilefsky, editor of the official Russian gazette, who successfully wrote for a city and uninteresting record of official acts into a journal of distinct literary attractions.

THE royal Saxon collection of china, the finest lot of Dresden chinaware in the world, has been greatly increased by the addition to it of the 14,000 pieces of Dr. Gustav Spitzner. The number now contains about 30,000 pieces from the Meissen factory.

FRANKLIN W. SMITH, of Boston, is the architect selected by the Lotos club to build an immense temple of the fine at Washington. It is to cost $1,000,000 and will be completed in three years. Mr. Smith has had the plans drawn, it is said, and hopes to raise enough money in the next five years to begin the work.

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE, } A. L. FORCE,
Editors and Proprietors

GOVERNOR'S APPOINTMENTS.

Governor Abbott on Tuesday appointed for the vacancies in the State Board of Assessors, Ferdinand H. Wemer, of Essex, a present member of the Board, and Daniel P. Cross, of Gloucester county, and Clifford G. Miller, of Passaic, in place of A. M. Reynolds, of Newark, and A. G. Cattell, of Camden. Mr. Cross is a well-known and popular young leader of the South Jersey democracy. He is at present sojourning in North Carolina for the benefit of his health. Mr. Kelly is ex Collector of the Port of Perth Amboy.

Mr. Cattell, Rep., who retires from the Board of Assessors, was continued as a member of the State Board of Education, together with John H. Scudder, Dem., of Mercer; Jas. H. Dostler, Dem., of Middlesex; John P. Brothers, Dem., of Hunterdon; and Chas. S. Butler, Rep., of Passaic; James L. Hayes, Rep., of Essex; William W. Yarick, Rep., of Hudson and William R. Barrickle, Dem., of Hudson. This, it is believed, will make a deadlock in the Board.

James M. Seymour, of Essex, of the firm of Seymour & Whitlock, machinists, got the nice berth of Supervisor of the State Prison, which Henry M. Bottle, of Passaic, has occupied for seven years. The Democrats tried to relieve him of the office two years ago, but through the failure of Senator Mallon to stand with his fellow Democrats the scheme failed.

Gottfried Krueger, the wealthy Newark brewer, was appointed a Lay Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals, to succeed the late Judge Kruegor, of Essex County. Richard J. Byrnes was reappointed Lay Judge of Atlantic County, and William M. Force, of the Sixth Congressional District, Visitor to the State Agricultural College.

For the term of the Reform School, he appointed David Schleimer, of Union; Jeremiah O'Rourke, of Essex; James N. Pidcock, of Hunterdon; George Richards, of Morris; Ferdinand Ehrhardt, of Hudson; Fred. Walter, of Mercer and Dr. James W. Smith, of Paterson. Ex Congressman Pidcock's appointment, it is believed, insures the selection of Stanley Everett Hunt, of Belleville, Boonton, as Warden of the Morris Plains Asylum. The Reform School Trustees are Nathaniel S. Rue, of Monmouth and Moses Bigelow, of Essex.

SIX DISTRICTS DEMOCRATIC.

The Congressional District lines of the State have been finally fixed at last. The plan agreed upon is substantially that proposed by Speaker Bergen. It makes five safe Democratic districts and leaves another the Fifth with a nominal Democratic majority of about 800. The districts are as follows:

First District—Camden, Gloucester, Salem, Cumberland, Cape May.

Second District—Atlantic, Ocean, Burlington, Mercer.

Third District—Middlesex, Monmouth, Somerset.

Fourth District—Hunterdon, Warren, Sussex, Morris and the following townships of Essex: Belleville, Bloomfield, Caldwell, Orange, Franklin, Montclair, Livingston.

Fifth District—Passaic, Bergen and the Tenth Assembly District, Hudson County.

Sixth District—Newark.

Seventh District—Jersey City, Hoboken, Harrison and Kearney.

Eighth District—Union County, Bayonne, Secaucus, South Orange, West Orange, Clinton, Milburn.

The people breathe freer and feel more safe when Cleveland comes to the law making power at Washington. Thanks for March fourth.

The Republicans in the Legislature of Maine have settled down to a proposition to secure honest State elections. What are they afraid of?

Between firing at live ducks and caring for dead ones at the cook, the executive stamina of President Harrison must be taxed to the uttermost.

The election of John M. Palmer to the Senate of the United States from Illinois is not only a just recognition of personal worth, but of real statesmanship.

With Governor Hill, of New York, ex-Postmaster General Vilas, of Wisconsin, and General Palmer, of Illinois, in the National Senate, the Democratic side of the boat will be ably reinforced.

The Democratic party has ever battled for equal and exact justice to all branches of legitimate industry and enterprise, and under that same banner the future will find it marshaled for conflict.

With free raw materials the manufacturers of this country could soon enlarge the field for steady and remunerative home labor and command for their varied productions world wide markets. Naught else will accomplish such a desirable effect.

It is a grand thing to stand firmly by the side of principles. The 101 Democratic members of the Illinois Legislature evidenced them by their unbroken and long balloting for U. S. Senator not a man of them wavered for the support of Palmer, and their fidelity finally obtained the victory.

The people of the United States, with herculean might, last November, cast the Republican majority in the House of Congress into the ditch and chilled the Democrats to take command. Why such clearing of decks? It was because of the reckless extravagance, arrogant bearing and mercenary greed of the Republican record. That sent most of them heading into the surging gulf of public odium. The American people are sovereign and patient, but, when angered, are fickle, fearful and destructive. They can as readily unmake as make Congressmen. Political leaders should note that fact in their logbooks and steer accordingly.

The joint resolution now before the Legislature authorizing the Governor to receive the amount due New Jersey from the National Government as her share of the dividend of the direct tax imposed in 1862, will place in the State Treasury over $350 000. The tax in 1862 was apportioned among the counties as follows:

Atlantic County, $2 900 07; Bergen, $20 571 91; Burlington, $32 426; Camden, $21,571; Cape May, $2 673; Cumberland, $11 661; Essex, $1 000 000; Gloucester, $13 985; Hudson, $93,343; Hunterdon, $23 276; Mercer, $59 894; Middlesex, $31 000; Monmouth, $37 000; Morris, $21,673; Ocean, $3 900; Passaic, $14 000; Salem, $19 000; Somerset, $19 938; Sussex, $17 300; Union, $19,579; Warren, $19 000;

Our Republican friends are prone to criticise the action of the present Democratic Legislature as ultra-partisan in the extreme. Remember that it was Republicans who first set the example, when in legislative control a short time ago they arbitrarily took from a Democratic Governor, for party use purposes, the appointment of minor municipal officers and vested such authority in a Republican joint meeting. There is virtue in the adage—"They who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

THEY ARE FIGHTING THE "BEUCS".

Mr. Sorrell Shows That It Is Not the Electric Street Railway Motor of Today That the People Find Fault With.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The remarks and criticisms my letters recently published in THE PRESS, on the trolley system, have called forth, as they were intended to do, a great deal of discussion. I am in no way interested in the proposed electric railway for Plainfield and am not thinking of becoming so, but simply from my study in endeavoring to secure a franchise. The attacks made upon the electric railway are made in good faith, but human nature is such that we almost invariably dislike faculty of picking up the bad quicker than the good. It is my business, in this particular instance, to hunt for the good, and my only interest in the matter is to see Plainfield have the best, if she is to have an electric railway at all. I do not want to see our streets disfigured by tracks that will almost break the wheels off of a light buggy, when, if tracks are to be laid, they can be laid so as to be scarcely noticeable when driving on the road.

I stated in my first letter that I knew the overhead system was objectionable, but maintained that it was the best system yet developed, and I shall maintain my position until something proves itself better. I am hunting for this something every day, and have failed to find it as yet, though I have examined and experimented with everything the opponents of the trolley system have cited as being good and practicable. I am also quite sure the people who have spent some twenty million dollars in the last fourteen or fifteen months in buying horse railways and changing to the trolley line equipment, do not know that every endeavor possible has been been made to find something better, which as yet has not proved successful. Why do these people spend money this way? Because there's money in it. The enrichment of roads so changed increase from 30 to 100 per cent.

Now why don't some of the advocates of the storage battery try the same thing? They talk big, but they won't put on the shoe, though they have their coat in pinches. We are not afraid to wear the trolley line shoe, even though the street we have to travel is often paved with cobble stones. I don't get much confidence in a man who can't take his own medicine. I would like to see some of those people who claim such things for the storage-battery, come out and show their nerve. If they want the storage-battery let's see them take their money in such an enterprise, and I will believe they are sincere. Those who have kept in motives hidden and written anonymous letters. I am interested in an electric railway in a city of half a million inhabitants, and I am not interested in a city of 7,000 inhabitants. I am interested in an electric railway in a city of half a million inhabitants, and I am not interested in a horse railway. The railway ran in front of their property and they used the means to fight the enterprise. The bill was published so it should have been.

It is only a few years since the electric motor was considered a toy at best. When it was first suggested street railway men laughed at the idea of an electric motor driving a street car, and it was only by the most persistent work and by the evidence of what it might and according to the laws and Constitution of this State ought to be done that the first electric road was built Tuesday, June 2, but in order to prevent so long a delay Counselor Craig A. Marsh, representing the City, and Counselor Rogers, for the Company filed at Trenton to-day, and this afternoon sought permission to argue the case at once before the Court, so that a decision might easily be reached.

The Supply Company seeks to wipe out the new ordinance, and if they succeed in that will prosecute immediately the work of laying water mains. If they fail, they will try other measures.

In connection with the arrest of the Company's contractors and their Italian workmen on the charge of carrying concealed weapons, it may be stated that Contractor Thomas Dodd was released on his own recognizance. The effort of Counselor Marsh to go bail for him was made merely as a bit of friendly by-play.

FORGER AND FUGITIVE.

His Wealthy Parents Will Pay His Worthless Checks, and He Will Escape Arrest.

J. M. Rose, a blonde young man of charming manner and surfeit of tongues, has fled from Plainfield leaving a very bald record behind.

He came from Brooklyn, some time ago, and acted as nurse for A. D. Mellick, Jr., at the house at 173 Broad way.

Last week, it is reported, he and the cook, an Irish girl, were detected in unseemly behavior, and both were promptly given the grip.

Since then various checks have been presented at the First National Bank, for payment, purporting to have been drawn by Mrs. A. D. Mellick, the lady who lives with Mr. Mellick, in favor of Rose.

Acting Cashier Runyon promptly pronounced the signatures of Mrs. Schuyler as forgeries, and such they proved to be. Rose had had the checks cashed by business men in town. They were for small sums. His parents, wealthy people in Brooklyn, will, it is said, make good all losses.

Rose can not be found.

Another Week of Revival Meetings.

The union revival meetings in Westfield will be continued for another week, being conducted from now on by the Rev. Ford Hall Hoyt, assisted by pastors of all the church. Tuesday was Mr. Mills's last in Westfield. The interest taken in the meetings has been wonderful, the churches being crowded to the doors. The meeting next Tuesday the Westfield public school was closed, and most of stores suspended business during the hours of service. Many people have been turned away from places in attendance at these services, and will be glad to know that they are to be kept up for another week. Mr. Ottman has had very great success in this line of work, and the Westfield people are hoping that his efforts among them will be wonderfully blessed.

Stab by a Telegraph Messenger.

Miss Motley, a young lad living at 167 Manning avenue, was shot in the ankle, on Plainfield, Saturday afternoon, while they employed by the Western Union Telegraph Company in this city. Drs. Bedell and Cochran were called to the injured girl's assistance, and found that the bullet had penetrated the ankle in a dangerous manner. Dr. Bedell is now carefully handling a revolver at the time of the accident, when it accidentally exploded in his pocket and fired the shot.

Suspended Sentence.

The case against Fred Hall, charged with the theft of a watch from the store of the Hall Carriage Company, Westfield, was disposed of in the Police Court on a first offense in this city.

The Catholic Young Men's Lyceum purchased Boucicault's "Colleen Bawn" at Music Hall, Tuesday, and every seat in the house was taken early. The object of the entertainment was to increase the building fund of the Association, and the members are gratified at the result. After the performance the Lyceum corps of St. Mary's Temperance Cadets came before the curtain, and the audience was much surprised and delighted at the manner in which they acquitted themselves.

What the applause that followed the youthful performers had signified, the curtain rose on the first act of the "Colleen Bawn," and from that moment until the curtain fell on the third act, nothing occurred to mar the perfection of the performance. The audience was an appreciative one, and manifested its approval and delight by continued rounds of applause.

Miss May Finnigan, as Eily O'Connor, acted her part in a manner that challenged her many friends, and her beautiful singing of the popular old-time melodies. Miss Julia Field is her perfect impersonation of the dashing Anne Chute, held the audience spellbound. Mrs. Ronan made an excellent Mrs. Cregan, and well served the dignity of the character throughout, while Sheelah kept the audience in continued good humor.

Mr. Tobin as Myles was inimitable, and he must feel proud of the commend tions showered upon him. Mr. Winn interpreted the character of Hardress in proficional style, while Mr. Word in his impersonation of Kyrie could not be excelled. A great part of the credit of the performance is due to the efforts of Miss Lyons, as he gave to the cast the benefit of his many years' experience in theatrical affairs. Mr. Whelan acted the part of Father Tom with skill and almost broke his mould not be surprised to hear that he had entered a seminary. Mr. Mack made a fair Danny Mann, and Mr. Lynch as Corrigan was the quiet, sly villain that make the fellow of bailiff so repulsive to the Irish tenant.

Miss Lizzie Burns and Messrs O'Rourke, Traynor, Higgins and Lynch proved to the audience that he other parts than those assigned could have been safely entrusted to them. Over all, the play was a success, and THE PRESS congratulates the Lyceum and the management and hopes to see them soon again.

THE WATER-WORKS WAR.

The Supreme Court to Decide Between the Supply Company and the City.

The suit of the Supreme Court has been instituted by the people of the Plainfield Water Supply Company in their endeavor to construct and operate in Plainfield a system of water-works under their old charter and in spite of the fact that they have received no franchise from the city Common Council.

Monday, at the solicitation of Frank Burgess, President and counsel for the Supply Company, Chief Justice Mercer Beasley and Justice Bennett VanSyckel granted a writ of certiorari in the case. The writ, in the name of the State, commands the Plainfield Water Supply Company, Prosecutor, vs. The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, providing that the legality of the recently-adopted ordinance prohibiting the tearing up of the streets for the laying of water pipes without the consent of the Common Council be investigated before the Court, and demands that the ordinance and all matters pertaining thereto be submitted to the Court at the earliest moment, and in order what of right and according to the laws and Constitution of this State ought to be done in the premises. The writ is returnable Tuesday, June 2, but in order to prevent so long a delay Counselor Craig A. Marsh, representing the City, and Counselor Rogers, for the Company filed at Trenton to-day, and this afternoon sought permission to argue the case at once before the Court, so that a decision might easily be reached.

The Supply Company seeks to wipe out the new ordinance, and if they succeed in that will prosecute immediately the work of laying water mains. If they fail, they will try other measures.

In connection with the arrest of the Company's contractors and their Italian workmen on the charge of carrying concealed weapons, it may be stated that Contractor Thomas Dodd was released on his own recognizance. The effort of Counselor Marsh to go bail for him was made merely as a bit of friendly by-play.

FORGER AND FUGITIVE.

His Wealthy Parents Will Pay His Worthless Checks, and He Will Escape Arrest.

J. M. Rose, a blonde young man of charming manner and surfeit of tongues, has fled from Plainfield leaving a very bald record behind.

He came from Brooklyn, some time ago, and acted as nurse for A. D. Mellick, Jr., at the house at 173 Broad way.

Last week, it is reported, he and the cook, an Irish girl, were detected in unseemly behavior, and both were promptly given the grip.

Since then various checks have been presented at the First National Bank, for payment, purporting to have been drawn by Mrs. A. D. Mellick, the lady who lives with Mr. Mellick, in favor of Rose.

Acting Cashier Runyon promptly pronounced the signatures of Mrs. Schuyler as forgeries, and such they proved to be. Rose had had the checks cashed by business men in town. They were for small sums. His parents, wealthy people in Brooklyn, will, it is said, make good all losses.

Rose can not be found.

Another Week of Revival Meetings.

The union revival meetings in Westfield will be continued for another week, being conducted from now on by the Rev. Ford Hall Hoyt, assisted by pastors of all the church. Tuesday was Mr. Mills's last in Westfield. The interest taken in the meetings has been wonderful, the churches being crowded to the doors. The meeting next Tuesday the Westfield public school was closed, and most of stores suspended business during the hours of service. Many people have been turned away from places in attendance at these services, and will be glad to know that they are to be kept up for another week. Mr. Ottman has had very great success in this line of work, and the Westfield people are hoping that his efforts among them will be wonderfully blessed.

Stab by a Telegraph Messenger.

Miss Motley, a young lad living at 167 Manning avenue, was shot in the ankle, on Plainfield, Saturday afternoon, while they employed by the Western Union Telegraph Company in this city. Drs. Bedell and Cochran were called to the injured girl's assistance, and found that the bullet had penetrated the ankle in a dangerous manner. Dr. Bedell is now carefully handling a revolver at the time of the accident, when it accidentally exploded in his pocket and fired the shot.

The officials of North Plainfield are: The Rev. T. Logan Murphy, the Rev. Bedell and Cochran were called to the Rev. S. Bradley, J. H. Carman, M. D., Sol Coddington, Inspector. Post Office address of all, North Plainfield, N. J.

No Saturday for Plainfield Banks.

The banks of this city have determined not to observe the Saturday half holiday during the summer months. The change on that day. It is decided that such a closing would have a bad effect on business.

The National banks at Elizabeth and Somerville will also remain open until the usual hour on Saturday.

HOW ANOTHER CITY IS BUILDING UP.

Electric Railway in Syracuse, N. Y., Has Taken Up Lots of Land and Made Great Values Prevail.

Syracuse, N. Y., resembles Plainfield in its topography, being a broad basin city surrounded by hills. The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad winds around these hills, and through the city. The electric street cars start in the business centre and proceed in all directions to the suburbs. Before the cars were made thoroughfares, and the finest residences are those located on the streets which have been made popular by electric street car connection. Especially the hill streets are favored and progressive in their ideas, and their beautiful city has become a model of enterprise which has developed the intelligent spirit of enterprise which has directed its development.

With these explanations the following letter will be taken understood. It is a story in other respects like Plainfield ought to be and will be. Its progressive citizens secure the things they are determined to have because they are determined to have them. Its hill streets are lined and provided with electric cars and its suburbs are provided in just the narrow middle.

OFFICE OF THE SYRACUSE
RAPID TRANSIT RAILWAY COMPANY.

DEAR SIR:—Yours of the 6th inst., asking for information relative to operation of electric railways, is duly received. One of the lines owned by this company has been in operation about two years with electricity as a motive power, using the Thomson-Houston System, with overhead wire construction. So well are we pleased with it that we are now replacing the balance of our horse lines with electricity. The citizens all like the power, and universally want it on all our lines. In fact there was great opposition among horsemen, but our experience in that horses soon become accustomed to our car and pay no attention. Improved speed is being built by the leading companies, so also are with much of the noise, and we are now laying one that makes no more noise than a horse car.

We enclose you herewith a map of our electric road with former horse car routes depicted thereon, as that line was built new for this power. We believe, however, that the receipts are 30 per cent greater than they would be by use of horses, as we make more rapid transit and people cannot afford to walk. You ask what effect does our electric road have upon the value of property along and near its line? Our road here passes over some of our finest residence streets, and all along the line, and in all adjacent streets, property has greatly advanced in value since the building of this electric road. We are now building a line which reaches another excellent section of the city, and in anticipation of electric cars running there property is selling at better figures.

Very truly yours,

T. L. POOLE,
Secretary.

Syracuse, March 10, 1891.

NOT MARRIED, EVEN IN FUN.

Wall Street Discusses a Flirtation Between Mr. Carll and a Fair Unknown.

Last January Howard F. Frothingham, a stock broker, of 4 Wall street, who married Miss Julia Bolton, of Plainfield, ordered George Carli, his head clerk, Carli told people to whom he applied for a situation that Mr. Frothingham had dismissed him because he was going to get married. This gave rise to a sensational story, involving an alleged mock marriage, in which the grounds and details circulated freely in Wall street Thursday. It was much exaggerated. The facts appear to be as follows:

Mr. Frothingham and Mr. Carll were clerks together in the same house years ago. When Mr. Frothingham got his start he gave Carll employment, and during the summer months Carll was accustomed daily to ask summer house on Lake Hopatcong, where many Plainfielder- have been entertained. Early in October, or late July he met a young woman at Mr. Frothingham's. She was something of a prisoner of Mrs. Frothingham's, and is a ward of that strong woman's family. She about Carll's age. The two began a vigorous flirtation at sight, and the next afternoon after they met they joined a large driving party. Carll was the driver of a Catholic priest of the neighborhood, was one of the party.

The young woman, a member of the dock before Mr. Carll exclaimed: "Now, May, we can get married. We've got Father Brady aboard with us" The young woman was willing enough, and the final declaration of indulgence followed, in which Father Brady joined. They carried this further, and announced to the rest of the party that they had been married. The priest, to which the joke was being carried never. Mr. Frothingham, and he told them to "drop it."

The young woman reopened the subject when the party had returned to the house, and she said Carll talked so: being very much in that mood of the party thought there was something in it, after all. At the dinner table a young girl fell to crying, and, when questioned, said:

"May said she was going to hell George to it."

The evening did n't pass pleasantly for anyone, and finally Mr. Frothingham pacified the excited Carll to his satisfaction. He gave him some sharp advice. The next morning they returned to New York, but not before Mr. Frothingham had talked to the young woman after a fashion which caused her to go home

In New York Carll kept up a correspondence with the young woman, and ran up a bill of $6 for telephone messages to Yonkers. Mr. Frothingham paid the bill. Carll seemed for a time uncertain whether he was married or not, and finally asked his employer for an increase of salary, saying he was engaged and was going to be married in the spring. The young woman's parents were much alarmed, and vainly begged their daughter to end the affair, and Mr. Frothingham, who was greatly vexed, finally discharged Carll.

Assignment of a Former Plainfielder.

Daniel A. Woodhouse, formerly of this city, Thomas V. Foster, and Jacob G. Bothwell, composing the firm of Woodhouse & Co., dealers in fire department, railway, and mill supplies at 12 Barclay street, New York, made an assignment to Edward Lauterbach, Jr., without preference. They have a factory at 144 and 15 Plymouth street, Brooklyn, and a branch at Philadelphia.

The judgments entered against the firm before the assignment in favor of John J. Bothwell for $2,345. The liabilities are said to be $50,000. Mr. Woodhouse, formerly one of the supplies for the Plainfield and North Plainfield fire departments. The last bill of loss in both the city and the borough were purchased of him.

Plainfield's Fashion Centre.

The Weed, the favorite paper of the spring fourwheeler, has the following to say of a well-known Plainfielder:

Mrs. Dr. Hall, of Plainfield, N. J., who is one of the most fashionable women of that city, has a very pretty turnout. Her coachman is a handsome fellow, and wears a livery to match the carriage. Mrs. Hall is a very fine driver, and is often seen on the avenue with her fine team. She is a member of the Plainfield Driving Club, and is very much interested in the success of that organization.

I was troubled with catarrh for many years. Ely's Cream Balm has done me more good than all other remedies I ever used. I cheerfully recommend it to all sufferers.—Rev. E. B. Hubbard, Pastor Presbyterian Church, Ravenna, Ohio.

Ely's Cream Balm is worthy the confidence of every sufferer from catarrh. It is not a liquid or snuff, but is easily applied into the nostrils. Price 50 cents. Sold by druggists or by mail. Ely Brothers, Owego, N. Y.

A GRAVE ON THE MOUNTAIN.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER BURIED TOGETHER IN A LONELY SPOT.

The Husband's Own Hand Prepared Their Last Resting Place, and It Is Quite Near Yonder Deserted Bedside of Quiet Slumber Disposed of the Dead.

When Jarard Underhill dug his wife's grave in the wilds of the Watchung Mountains back of North Plainfield, every tongue in Washington Valley was set wagging, and strangers in the thriving and progressive little borough and its more sedate municipal neighbor, concerning the man's despondency. All his days, back in the country stores the old-time loungers, trembling with nervous excitement, shifted uneasily about from cracker box to sugar barrel, and talked over every move, one to the other, the queer tales that were afloat, and gazed at Underhill, every time he passed in view, with bigeyed wonderment and awe.

It was not that Underhill was doing anything he had no right to do; nobody denied his privileges of making his entire farm a shared place, providing there were naught of mystery or crime connected with each interment; but to everybody in general, and to the conservative-minded country people especially, the action of the man had in it something of cruel-heartedness, selfishness, gross inhumanity.

Underhill has been a dairy farmer in the Valley several years. He land he occupies is supposed to belong to his mother, who lives with him. His father, a gray-haired, white-bearded, kindly-faced old gentleman, sometimes rambles out to the old place, but his home is with his sister, Mrs. Lydia E. Wyl, at, 130 Park Avenue, Plainfield, Plainfield farmer days he was known as a school teacher. Underhill was at one time a farmer near New York, but, preferring the more healthful and independent life of a dairyman, he came to the mountains. He kept many cattle, and served large numbers of customers in Plainfield and the neighborhood. The farm is a fine one, and the house is of the old-time style, with a wide hall and spacious rooms, and is surrounded by a grove of elms.

Just about four weeks ago Underhill lost a daughter, Hattie, two years old. His wife also was very ill, and at her earnest request the body of the child was temporarily laid in the receiving vault at Hillside Cemetery, Plainfield, not to be buried until the warm summer months.

"I have such a horror of having people buried in the cold, wet ground in winter," she said.

Mrs. Underhill urged that a family plot, in a beautiful part of Hillside, be purchased, and that her child and herself be buried there, the husband seemed ready enough to fulfill her wishes, but he did not do what she had asked on her death-bed would all be granted, she died content. The death occurred last week.

Shortly was the funeral when Underhill and his eldred man, with pick and shovel, trudged across the sloping fields to the foot of Second Mountain, and clambered up the hill side, and dug a deep hole in the frozen earth.

Not many hours had passed before it was noised about that Underhill was going to bury his wife in the wildest woodland spot on the farm. To a people who were accustomed to sober-minded conventionalities, to whom the dead are held sacred by the usages of centuries, and who reverenced time-honored customs, especially in matters pertaining to burial of the dead, this was a horrifying innovation. Public feeling against the burial and displeasure at Underhill's action was freely expressed. Some good people went so far as to propose that Underhill personally and to suggest that interment of the departed be made in orthodox fashion, in an orthodox burying-ground, but they were told that the husband would need if the husband wished to bury his dead on the farm. His mother—it was asserted—desired to find a family burying-ground on the homestead, and was indignant in many rural localities.

But when Sunday, the day of the funeral, came, numbers stayed away because they knew a grave was to be formed in the mountain side, and the cortege, with the dead, was face was sealed from earthly sight forever. Not a word of Scripture was read, not a prayer was uttered. To those who had their own ideas about Christian burials the service seemed disgraceful, almost heathenish. Mr. Underhill's direction several neighbors carried the coffin to a wagon, and, amid injunctions from the husband to the drivers of the vehicle to proceed slowly, and to be careful how they drove around, and to be sure not to cut up the sod on his land, the wagon was drawn across lots, rattling over mounds and gullies, to the foot of the mountain near the waiting grave.

Those who went to the hill-side were only enough to make a small group, and stumblingly up the mountain to their final resting place. A few rain drops fell on the caskets, as they were lowered, one after the other, into the grave. These tears from heaven were the only ones visibly shed. The damp earth was hastily shoveled in, and the funeral was over.

Underhill is a man about forty years of age, and is well known to the people of the Valley. And they gazed in wonderment at the husband, and thought how little he seemed to mourner, and how queer he was to bury his dear ones in such odd fashion.

"Brutal, inhuman, shameful!" exclaimed the excited townsfolk, during the succeeding days openly used the same and stronger language in speaking of the event.

When they learned what Underhill's wife's wishes had been, and were told that he had acted in direct opposition to her dying requests, they became still more violent in their denunciations of the man, and began to talk of violence. Some of the more excitable people of the Valley began to wondering if there were no way to have the man arrested. But they could find no law that he had offended, except, perchance, the law of common and humanity, and had to content themselves with glaring at him on the highways and biting their fingers and casting scornful utterances.

"She was such a nice lady!"—they said of the dead woman. Everybody loved her, and performed various neighborly offices in her behalf. One kind-hearted young woman spent day after day by her bedside during the last few weeks, and ministered to her with gentle hands.

Pleased to take: perfectly safe, even to the most delicate. Ripans Tabules cure. There are five good attributes of these tabules—they are prompt, they do not sicken, they are safe, they are pleasant, they cure. Ripans Tabules cure biliousness, sick headache, bad digestion, constipation, dyspepsia, and all disorders of the stomach. Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists. One gives relief.

AN EDITORIAL NOTE OR TWO.

The request of the Corporation Counsel that the appropriation be increased to $1,000 per year, is all right except that he put the figure too low.

Mayor Gilbert's veto of the ordinance prohibiting the barrooms to keep open until midnight, was perfectly just and proper. If the saloon keepers continue in their demands for more privileges than are now enjoyed it is time to put the grip to a no-license Council elected the next time the citizens get an opportunity of voting.

In speaking of the Choral Society's concert last night, the Central Times says: "The young protege of Mr. Fitzhugh, whose name for some unknown reason was kept in the background until the evening of the performance, is a remarkable little lad." This proves that the Times does not read THE PRESS as closely as the rest of Plainfield's intelligent citizens do. In giving Master Bigelow's name and other information about her, was published in these columns days before the concert.

It has become necessary for us to say that the practice of using the name of no one are allowed as airing in THE PRESS except through the medium of a communication. If a professional musician, like Bigelow, has no such to say against it! 'Tis true, some of the obstructionists, like poll parrots, say nothing but what somebody else has said about some kind of a trolley or horse car system, and yet we also read an editorial opinion in the Central Times that "The trolley system is not desirable because it is dangerous to property, unsightly and unhealthy noisy." The fact of the matter is, the trolley system of "to-day" has wonderfully progressed, and there is no record of ever a life or a bit of property destroyed by it.

SAYING A STREET'S GOOD NAME.

Notorious People Ejected from a Neighborhood They Were Ruining.

Because of unsavory stories that have for some time been afloat concerning their doings, a family occupying a house on East Front street are to be ejected. Gossips have long connected the name of a certain man about town with the name of the woman of the household, and the fact that the latter is alone in the place, coupled with the fact that the husband seemed to possess full knowledge of just what was going on, has led the opponents to sanction the affair, gave color to the unpleasant stories afloat. So notorious was the neighborhood becoming became that a petition was started whether the man's name should be erased from the list of guests of the house, that the neighbors as a matter of self-protection felt compelled to call in the aid of the law. As a quiet way to bring about use of the husband wished to bury his the affair, it was decided mere-ly to have the objectionable parties legally removed from the premises. With the aid of the agents of the property, who were astounded to learn the truth, this was readily accomplished. A local justice of the peace promptly issued a writ of ejectment, and the case to be formed into a writ of the things told to him, aside from the story concerning the woman of the house and the man about town, was that the couple had been living beyond their means, solely demure and modest French lady's maids were within call as an attraction for the well-heeled, generous-handed, easily-fleeced young business men from New York. The disreputable establishment is to be promptly broken up, but already parties have been found in another part of the city is to be afflicted with the obnoxious presence. The police will be ready to take a hand at a any fresh outbreak of the nuisance.

Champion Players to Shuffle the Cards.

The best whist players of the Plainfield Crescent League will meet in the club room to enter a whist tournament in which Fanwood, Westfield and Elizabeth will be represented. The tournament, the first game of the tournament will be played at an early date.

To Simonize City Pigeons in the Bastile.

The Plainfield Crescent League contemplate establishing shooting matches on their new base-ball grounds in North Plainfield. James H. Ladd, T. M. Foster and Seymour G. Smith have charge of the arrangements, and as soon as suitable weather comes, trap shooting, at inanimate targets, will be begun under their direction.

Take Your Evidence into Court.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I would like to know if in fashionable circles of this State or county that allows pool rooms to be kept open until two and three o'clock Sunday morning, then from Monday to the same hours Monday, and what is the penalty for selling intoxicating drinks without license.

SCOTCH PLAINS.

An Aged Woman Injured.

A serious accident happened to and aged woman on Front street, on Thursday. Mrs. Aaron Johnson, aged 85 years, a resident of No. 80 East Second street, while descending the stairs from the second story of her home, fell to the bottom of the stairs, sustaining severe bruises and a fracture of one of her ribs. Mrs. Johnson is a sister of "Uncle" Isaac Brower, of Scotch Plains. Dr. Ladd was attending the case. The fall is supposed to have been caused by an attack of vertigo.

Gas Stoves at Mr. Stokes's Wrought.

The New York World says: "The Republicans made a clean sweep in North Plainfield, N. J., on Tuesday, the town having gone Democratic by a majority of only 7, the opposition party by a majority of only 7, but he was opposed by Fred M. Slade, a popular member of the Crescent League, who drew many votes through personal popularity.

Pleased to take: perfectly safe, even to the most delicate. Ripans Tabules cure. There are five good attributes of these tabules—they are prompt, they do not sicken, they are safe, they are pleasant, they cure. Ripans Tabules cure biliousness, sick headache, bad digestion, constipation, dyspepsia, and all disorders of the stomach. Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists. One gives relief.

Some Baking Powders Lose Their Strength Quickly.

For twenty-five years the Royal Baking Powder Company has refused to be controlled by the mania of its competitors—to produce a cheap baking powder at the sacrifice of quality or wholesomeness. Some lower-cost brands are now being pushed on the market, which are made of inferior materials and lose their strength quickly after the can is once opened. At the second or third baking there will be noticed a falling off in strength. It is always the case that the consumer suffers in pocket, if not in health, by accepting any substitute for the Royal Baking Powder, especially when the substitute is offered on the ground that it is cheaper.

The Royal Baking Powder is the embodiment of all the excellence that it is possible to attain in an absolutely pure powder. It is always strictly reliable. It is not only more economical because of its greater strength, but will retain its full leavening power until used, and make more wholesome food.

Was there ever any article of human consumption that has so many friends among housekeepers as the Royal Baking Powder?

MENTAL KITCHEN SCALES.

Not Clothed.

THE command ranged eggs weigh one pound.

Sorry butter, no size of an egg weighs one ounce.

One pint of coffee A sugar weighs twelve ounces.

One pint of tea brown sugar weighs thirteen ounces.

TWO TEACUPS (level) of granulated sugar weigh one pound.

One and one-third pints of powdered sugar weigh one pound.

One pint (heaped) of granulated sugar weighs fourteen ounces.

TWO TABLESPOONS of powdered sugar or flour weigh one ounce.

One tablespoon (well rounded) of soft butter weighs one ounce.

TWO TEACUPS (well heaped) of coffee A sugar weigh one pound.

Two teacups of soft butter (well packed) weigh one pound.

One quart of sifted flour (well heaped) weighs one pound.

One tablespoonful (well heaped) granulated coffee A or best brown sugar weighs one ounce.

Four teaspoons are equal to one tablespoon. Two and one-half teacups (level) of the best brown sugar weigh one pound.

Teaspoons vary in size, and the most accurate kitchen set has the old-fashioned spoon of thirty years ago. A medium-sized teaspoon contains about a drachm.

Miss Parloa says one generous pint of liquid, or one pint of finely-chopped meat, or one pint of sifted flour, or one pound of butter, or two pounds of powdered sugar, or two pounds of granulated sugar, or two pounds of best brown sugar, or two pounds of the best yellow sugar, or two pounds of the best white sugar, or one pound of loaf sugar, or one pound of coffee A sugar, or one pound of coffee B sugar, or one pound of tea, or one pound of rice, or one pound of corn starch, or one pound of arrowroot, or one pound of tapioca, or one pound of sago, or one pound of macaroni, or one pound of vermicelli, or one pound of oatmeal, or one pound of cracked wheat, or one pound of Indian meal, or one pound of rye meal, or one pound of graham flour, or one pound of buckwheat flour, or one pound of rice flour, or one pound of dried fruit, or one pound of nuts, or one pound of candied peel, or one pound of citron, or one pound of preserved ginger, or one pound of jelly, or one pound of jam, or one pound of marmalade, or one pound of mixed pickles, or one pound of chopped pickles, or one pound of chopped suet, or one pound of dried beef, or one pound of salt pork, or one pound of lard, or one pound of dripping, or one pound of salt, or one pound of mustard, or one pound of pepper, or one pound of ginger, or one pound of cinnamon, or one pound of cloves, or one pound of mace, or one pound of nutmegs, or one pound of allspice, or one pound of mixed spices, or one pound of saleratus, or one pound of cream of tartar, or one pound of soda, or one pound of sugar of lead, or one pound of alum, or one pound of copperas, or one pound of blue vitriol, or one pound of borax, or one pound of saltpetre, or one pound of sulphur, or one pound of camphor, or one pound of gum arabic, or one pound of gum camphor, or one pound of isinglass, or one pound of glue, or one pound of beeswax, or one pound of spermaceti, or one pound of tallow, or one pound of resin, or one pound of pitch, or one pound of turpentine, or one pound of linseed oil, or one pound of castor oil, or one pound of sweet oil, or one pound of olive oil, or one pound of cocoanut oil, or one pound of palm oil, or one pound of train oil, or one pound of whale oil, or one pound of seal oil, or one pound of cod liver oil, or one pound of shark oil, or one pound of sperm oil, or one pound of lamp oil, or one pound of kerosene oil, or one pound of benzine, or one pound of gasoline, or one pound of naphtha, or one pound of alcohol, or one pound of ether, or one pound of chloroform, or one pound of laudanum, or one pound of paregoric, or one pound of morphine, or one pound of opium, or one pound of quinine, or one pound of strychnine, or one pound of arsenic, or one pound of corrosive sublimate, or one pound of calomel, or one pound of castor oil, or one pound of sweet oil, or one pound of olive oil, or one pound of cocoanut oil, or one pound of palm oil, or one pound of train oil, or one pound of whale oil, or one pound of seal oil, or one pound of cod liver oil, or one pound of shark oil, or one pound of sperm oil, or one pound of lamp oil, or one pound of kerosene oil, or one pound of benzine, or one pound of gasoline, or one pound of naphtha, or one pound of alcohol, or one pound of ether, or one pound of chloroform, or one pound of laudanum, or one pound of paregoric, or one pound of morphine, or one pound of opium, or one pound of qu

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—The robins are here.

—Mosquitoes are already making themselves felt. They appear indoors very frequently, and in departing leave many a sting behind.

—James W. Davis, of the firm of Hallock & Davis, has purchased the interest of his former partner in the coal business of J. S. Elliz & Co.

—At the indoor base-ball game of the Crescent League against the Bicycle Club, next Thursday evening, in the Crescent rink, the audience will be protected by netting.

—Mary Agnes McCarthy, a 14-year old pupil at the Plainfield High School, has written a temperance poem in response to a story to the composition contest of a New York paper.

—Dr. O. L. Jenkins has very successfully removed a cancer of three years' growth from the person of Mrs. Samuel C. Terry of Richmond street, without the aid of surgical instruments.

—The old elm tree that has long been a landmark on West Second street, in front of George Meil's residence, and opposite the Trinity Reformed church, has been cut down by Contractor Chrysler.

—A fine team of horses owned by Benjamin M. Day, of Rockview avenue, ran away on Front street on Saturday. Mr. Day's carriage was badly damaged, but neither horses nor driver was hurt.

—Stephenson, the caterer, of North avenue, has added the making of fine candies to his establishment. Creamed nuts, delicious bon bons and other confections for the table, are a specialty.

—Alexander Willett sprained his left ankle at the corner of Somerset street and Craig place, on Sunday evening, while on his way to church, and is in consequence confined to his residence on Craig place.

—Arthur Titus came from over the mountains Friday, couldn't stand Plainfield whisky, and was whooping things up at a high old rate on the street when arrested. He paid Judge Golding ten a fine of $6.

—John McIntyre, owner of the Chetola building and many other valuable pieces of property in this city, celebrated St. Patrick's Day by hoisting a bright green windmill to the roof of one of his apartment houses on North avenue.

—A mustang drawing a wagon of D. I. Sedam & Co.'s fruit establishment, on Tuesday forenoon, dished the wheel of a farmers wagon at the corner of Park avenue and Second street, and wrecked the own wagon near the Trinity Reformed church.

—Saturday, by a recent law, which is now in force, has been made a half holiday. This will be of interest to the business men, and notes or drafts falling due on Saturday cannot be protested until the close of banking hours on Monday following.

—This Thursday evening in the Crescent rink the public are to be introduced to the latest and most exciting of Winter sports—bicycling. The club having a car at run in New York city, where a series of games for the championship are being played, will have a team.

—A game of young men and boys congregated on the sunny side of the old church works Sunday afternoon, built a rousing bonfire, and had a high old time playing poker. The police are on the outlook-out for just such gambling nests, and will probably raid the next one.

—Tickets are already selling fast for the first indoor base-ball game between the Crescent League and the Bicycle Club teams, at the Crescent, Thursday evening of this week. Boxes will be opened at seven o'clock, and the game commences at eight. The Bicycle Club's nine are very confident of winning.

—A team of horses belonging to Thomas H. Taylor, of Washington Valley, ran away on Tuesday, threw their driver out and dragged him some distance. The horses were stopped at Somerville, as the loss was over on the Johnston drive. The frightened animals ran all the way to this city, turned into Front street and collided with a wagon in front of the post office where they were stopped.

—Gov. Abbett signed a big batch of laws on Monday, and among them is the one which fixes the terms of office of township collectors and assessors at three years, so those officials elected last Tuesday hold office for three years instead of for the regulation two. This is a good law, as no Collector or Assessor can give or take favors to be kept in office.

—The recent big $300,000 fire at Buffalo destroyed the buildings adjoining the C. I. S. C. offices, and came near burning up that building also. The Chautauqua Literary, many of whom are from this city, were greatly alarmed, but did not lose their cool-headedness. They stowed away valuables in the safes, and hooped her things together, and had a high old time playing poker. The police are on the outlook-out for just such gambling nests, and will probably raid the next one.

—Tickets are already selling fast for the first indoor base-ball game between the Crescent League and the Bicycle Club teams, at the Crescent, Thursday evening of this week. Boxes will be opened at seven o'clock, and the game commences at eight. The Bicycle Club's nine are very confident of winning.

—A team of horses belonging to Thomas H. Taylor, of Washington Valley, ran away on Tuesday, threw their driver out and dragged him some distance. The horses were stopped at Somerville, as the loss was over on the Johnston drive. The frightened animals ran all the way to this city, turned into Front street and collided with a wagon in front of the post office where they were stopped.

—Gov. Abbett signed a big batch of laws on Monday, and among them is the one which fixes the terms of office of township collectors and assessors at three years, so those officials elected last Tuesday hold office for three years instead of for the regulation two. This is a good law, as no Collector or Assessor can give or take favors to be kept in office.

—The recent big $300,000 fire at Buffalo destroyed the buildings adjoining the C. I. S. C. offices, and came near burning up that building also. The Chautauqua Literary, many of whom are from this city, were greatly alarmed, but did not lose their cool-headedness. They stowed away valuables in the safes, and hooped her things together, and had a high old time but the fireman stayed the flames that threate ed them.

—From present indications, it is evident that the Field Day to occur under the auspices of the Ladies' Christian Work Society of the Trinity Reformed church will be a grand success. The ladies have their lodge rooms engaged, and a large number of tickets have been sold. They only need the patronage of their friends and Field Day will make it a complete success. Go take tea with them, and thus help them in their worthy object. Charges are very reasonable, and the table is first-class.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Cook have gone South.

G. Harry Squires of Broadway, starts to-day on an extended Western trip.

Mrs. Phineas Lawrence and family have moved into a new home on Prospect avenue.

Miss Ella Van Derveer, of New Brunswick, spent Sunday with Miss Fannie Stamp of West Front street.

Ex-Mayor Rockfellow and wife left on Tuesday for a Southern tour, by the advice of the former's physician.

Col. John Dietrich, of Arlington place, reached the birthday anniversary summered three-score-and-ten, Sunday.

Among Plainfield's most recent arrivals is Miss Hunt, from Riverside Drive, N. Y., daughter of Miss Laing, of West Fifth street.

Edward Nelson has recovered from his illness, and is again able to attend to his duties at ticket agent at the North avenue railway station.

Mr. and Mrs. James C. Field, with their son, James C., Jr., will return to this city about two weeks. Their residence will be on East Fifth street.

G. E. Cave, of Dunellen, has purchased through Mul ord's real estate agency, a fine lot on Bradford avenue and will erect a handsome residence thereon.

John Mortimer of East Fifth street, has leased through the Mulford real estate agency, the new Mills' house, 29 Sandford avenue, and will move into it in a few days.

Ex-Councilman and Asst. R. R. Newbold have gone to Atlantic City. Mrs. Newbold, although not thoroughly well, has much improved in health within the last few days.

Miss Phillips of Jersey City Heights is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Phillips of West Fourth street.

Mrs. Minnie Edgerton is at home again from Spring Grove Plantation on Grand Field street, after a visit at the Grand Field, New York city.

Sergeant Patrick Lynch very creditably performed the duties of Police Captain Sterling at his request, in behalf of Captain George W. Grant, Jr.

"Christ Exalted" is the title of a very pretty service of scripture and song for Easter tide prepared by the Rev. Robert Lowry of this city.

Henry Liefke, the West Front street baker, is making arrangements to take a trip to Europe on or about April 1. He expects to visit England, France, Germany and Italy.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster Milliken, of Central avenue, who sailed for Bermuda last week on the same steamer as Dr. G. M. Field and Mrs. Peter Field, of this city, are expected home again by next Sunday.

Dr. Edward Rushmore left Plainfield Saturday for a few days, to accompany his brother Howard Rushmore to North Carolina. During the former's absence his patients will be left to the care of Dr. T. D. Davis.

Miss Kate Kimball has been invited to address the annual meeting of the Brooklyn C. L. S. C., in that city, Thursday evening of this week. She has accepted, and will spend the Sunday following at the home of her parents in this city.

The oldest son of the Rev. P. Koechl, is under consideration by Dr. Kipp, the specialist, of Newark, for cataracts over both eyes. This surgeon says his patient will have to undergo different operations on each eye and that an entire cure will take a year or more.

The members of the Woman's Home Mission of the Crescent Avenue church, have cause to be proud of themselves. They have raised and paid out all the money that was necessary for the advancement of their work, and have still a balance in the bank.

P. S Bristol, father of the Rev. Cornelius Gardner Bristol, who was married to Miss Caroline Elizabeth Lowrie, of Park avenue, Plainfield, on the 5th inst., died this morning, at Milford, Conn. Mrs. S. C. Peck, Jr., who is a relative, has gone to the house of mourning.

A sealed petition, numbering about forty, attended a fancy dress sociable at the residence of A. B. Carpenter, 230 East Front street, Thursday. All had a very enjoyable time, thanks to the efforts of a committee consisting of C. D. Pearson, E. V. Taynor, F. Kesselring and A. B. Carpenter.

Senator Winton has proved a valuable legislator this year. He knows how to push his bills through, and has had a number of them. On the Committee on Appropriations he has done very efficient work. Though not a frequent speaker Senator Winton can talk very effectively when he so desires.

The sad news has been received by THE PRESS of the death of E. Cortell Boice, of this city. He died of consumption at Los Angeles, where he and his mother have been living the past eighteen months. He was in the twenty-first year of his age and the son of the late L. D. Boice who also died of consumption.

At the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Tuesday, Dr. John Osborne Polak, of this city, was awarded the Dudley memorial gold medal, presented by H. W. Maxwell of the Board of Regents, for the best history of a surgical case treated there. The occasion was the graduation of the class of '91 of young doctors from the Long Island College Hospital.

Captain J. Frank Hubbard, of West Seventh street, has bought of A. Venino the latter's handsome residence at the corner of Madison and Sixth street. Captain Hubbard now owns the entire block on Madison avenue from Seventh to Sixth street. His daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Newton VanSickle, will make their home in the new purchase.

Great interest is felt in the next plays to be given by the "Pyramus and Thisbe" dramatic club, on the evening of the second of April, at The Casino. THE PRESS is told by one who knows, that the parts translated from the French and given in Louis the XIVth dress will be very brilliant, the farce following will be very laughable, and altogether a very delightful evening is promised.

Dr. William A. Dunning, a graduate of the Plainfield public schools, and now a professor in Columbia College, has begun a course of lectures before the Department of Political and Economic Science of the Brooklyn Institute, in Association Hall on Monday afternoon. The general topic of the course is the relations of England and Ireland, and the lecture Tuesday was devoted to "The Establishment of English and Ecclesiastical Supremacy Over the Church of Ireland."

A number of Plainfield ladies have been invited to meet socially Mrs. J. K. Barnes, of Providence, R. I., National Superintendent of Prison and Jail Work, at a parlor meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, at the residence of Mrs. Charles Purdy, 327 Second street, Thursday afternoon, March 19, at three o'clock. The committee having charge of the affair are Mrs. Purdy, Mrs. Dr. Hall, Mrs. McNaughton, Frances W. Cooley and Dora H. Werling.

P. W. Morse, formerly of this city, has been re-appointed to fill his resignation as Superintendent of the Ore Dock at Ore Co., at Carthage, N. Y., because of the bad effect upon his lungs from breathing the dust of the mines. The company very loath to accept the resignation but Mr. Morse is compelled with regret to insist. He may return to his former position with the Standard Oil Co., at Bayonne, and in such event will probably make his home in Plainfield again.

The sister of W. V. Steele—who is the Prosecutor of Somerset county but who has his office in this city—is the author of the bill that passed the Assembly at Trenton, Monday night, making women eligible to appointment as Commissioners of Deeds. Assemblyman Nash made an eloquent plea for the measure, and 200 women listened approvingly. He said women are better to have commissioners than must be great mothers, and this could be best attained by giving women all the advantages possible.

The Trenton True American thus speaks of Senator Marsh, the same useful and indefatigable worker in the Senate that he was in the House. He is never idle. He is constantly looking after the best interests of his county. In the House Mr. Marsh was taking a good part of the time, but in the Senate he is seldom found. He has settled down to the quiet routine of his work, and is doing it well. Always in his seat, ever ready for action, always on the alert, ever watching, there is no more valuable Democrat in the Legislature than Senator Marsh."

At "The Gables," Netherwood, Sunday, occurred the death of John Ferdinand Lowrie, from consumption of the lungs. The funeral services and interment at Milford, Conn., were held at his late home, Wednesday afternoon, at 12:30 o'clock. During his residence here of the past two years he had a host of friends. Mr. Lowrie has been one of the most diligent in advancing the interests and prosperity of that community. He was highly respected by all who knew him, and his untimely demise causes deep sorrow. He was engaged to be married to Miss Caroline Elizabeth Bristol, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Bristol, of Plainfield, on the 5th inst., and was expectantly looking forward to a great activity in that line within the next few months.

Why would Reed children with pure blood and good appetites suffer from boils, when Hood's Sarsaparilla will bring them? Why should you suffer from that tired feeling, when Hood's Sarsaparilla will give you strength? Why endure dyspepsia, when Hood's Sarsaparilla will cure it? Why not buy Hood's Sarsaparilla today? Why not be benefited?

WHAT MORE CAN BE ASKED?

PLAINFIELD'S STREET RAILWAY COMPANY WILLING TO BE JUDGED BY ITS ENEMIES.

Pullman Tenth-in-One to Run With Nine Cars Running Through Our Streets at Five Cents Fare for the Nickel and Seven Cents for School Teachers and Scholars.

At a meeting held March 11, at which were present the following members of Councilmen Gallup, Hatfield, Modest, Roberts and Spangenberg, the directors of the Plainfield Street Railway Company stated in detail what they proposed to do for this city in the way of electric transportation.

Said Director Rike, "We are willing to submit our system now running on Central and Washington avenues, Newark, to a verdict of its foes. We already have the best cars of the kind in service, and will be turning out a fleet of them before long. Our system is the Pullman Tenth-in-One, which is conceded by those who have ordered a separation to be the most perfect car in use. We have already ordered nine of these cars, and will have them here within two months. Each one will seat about forty persons, and will be provided with a motor of sufficient power to run it at a speed of twenty miles an hour. Of course the appearance and cleanliness of the cars will be of the highest order, as they are indeed gifted with the genius of song in voices of wondrous beauty, and in the exquisite harmony with which they sing. The use of harsh blasting organs is brilliant, shattering and discordant. Operatic selections are noted for the great dramatic action of her singing, and her ballads, which are exceptionally varied and extensive, including the finest and most desirable concert selections, are rendered with the most perfect ease. Their list of songs seems endless, some of the most noticeable being Sweet Bye and Bye, Glory, Alet, Dolliss, Motes, Toast, Fraus, Gounod, Schubert, Robinson, Molloy, Cowan, Sullivan, Richmond street, and Robert C. Barnby, Oggogans, Hullah, Foster, etc., etc.

Miss Kingsley, a pupil of Plainfield, New Jersey, and are the daughters of Mr. Joel D. Manning of that place. The family is one of the oldest residents of Rahway, and is of English ancestry. The Misses Manning have resided in this city for two years, and have been in possession of the Manning family over two hundred years, it being part of the original tract of land chartered by Queen Elizabeth to Queen Elizabeth, Mr. Henry Wolfenden is the present young Englishman and may be addressed for unlisted dates at 32 East 16th street, N. Y.

CALLING IN THE MONEY.

Work on the Y. M. C. A. Building Speedily to be Begun.

The Building Committee of the Plainfield Young Men's Christian Association have issued, under date of March 2, a circular letter calling for the payment on subscriptions to the Building Fund. The letter to each subscriber is as follows:

Referring to your subscription to the Building Fund of this Association, we desire to inform you that the total subscription to date amounts to $28,361.15, being over seventy-five of the estimated cost of $37,500 of the property and the permanent building.

In view of the growing work of this Association, and of the pressing need of larger and better facilities for doing the work more effectively than can possibly be done in our present inadequate quarters, the Committee has let the construction of the building should be commenced this spring, and in order to place ourselves in funds wherewith to meet contractors, we hereby give notice in accordance with the terms of subscription, that thirty days from date, the second of the four equal payments on your subscription will be payable.

Remittances may be sent to R. St. John, Treasurer, or otherwise may be handed to any member of the Committee.

In sending this notice we recognize the fact that a few subscriptions are given conditional on the whole amount being raised, and to such we would say that we feel that the work of the Committee will be facilitated if the condition under which such subscriptions were made should be met at once. Payment on account of subscriptions will be accepted as a waiver of the special condition.

Committee.

W. D. MURRAY,
C. W. MCCUTCHEON,
HERBERT E. HALE,
H. OTIS WARNER,
D. R. THOMPSON,
C. T. KIRKAM,
E. ST. JOHN,

ANOTHER VICTORY.

The Crescent League Bowlers Have Won Their Every Game This Season.

At Somerville, Monday night, the bowling team of the Crescent League rolled their eighth game of the season and won their eighth victory. It was Somerville's second defeat at Plainfield's hands and was brought about by the latter's magnificent bowling in the last three frames. Somerville started with a lead of 38 pins and it seemed a sure victory for them from the beginning. But the Crescents' grit was too much for them. H. L. Emerson was umpire, and A. V. Kline scorer. The result was as follows:

CRESCENT LEAGUE.		SOMERVILLE.
VanEmburgh	135	VanArsdale	125
Hatfield	138	Hoagland	118
Haven	139	Brown	139
Vail	148	Rohrer	145
Hagaman	155	Hagaman	138
Reed	132	Hagaman	129
Vail	148	Mulford	171
Davis	163	Miller	129
Pederson	162	Brokaw	126
VanWinkle	148	Mulford	144
	1449		1374

BY FRAMES.

139	290	421	560	681	841	980	1135	1286	1449
157	267	435	590	668	819	959	1096	1234	1374

It is a report of the Crescent League to stand up to date for 1890-91. It is as follows:

	Won.	Lost.	Pins.
Dec. 16—Crescents	1,056	Elizabeths	1,350
Dec. 23—Crescents	1,052	Elizabeths	1,523
Jan. 6—Crescents	1,307	Somervilles	1,241
Jan. 13—Crescents	1,401	Bayonnes	1,341
Jan. 20—Crescents	1,388	Bayonnes	1,341
Jan. 27—Crescents	1,388	Bayonnes	1,341
Feb. 3—Crescents	1,388	Jersey City Mon.	1,290
Mar. 5—Crescents	1,408	Westfields Un.	1,390
Mar. 13—Crescents	1,449	Somervilles	1,374

Plainfield Has the Rabies Already.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—A "Plainfield Subscriber" made some valuable suggestions in the columns of one of your contemporaries, in favor of an electric railway to run by water power, a locality with the citizens of Plainfield should be grateful. "There is many a truth spo-ken in jest." A road of this kind can be supplied without calling for any outside assistance. Cars so propelled can be had very cheap from horse railway companys in many cities where electric over-head trolley railways are being substituted. We have in Plainfield a large and varied assortment of mules; first we have the breed which crossed for so much trouble when the Central Railroad of New Jersey tracks through the city were elevated, but this ot is probably too antiquated for service; next, we have the mules modern breed which were so noisy when it was determined to macadamize our streets in spite of their braying. And we have the present stock, which is evidently vigorous. Judging by the kicking qualities they display in opposition to the proposed electric railway, they would be capable of motive power enough to run the cars, but not fast enough to occupy all the streets, and don't propose to run in all directions. By all means let us have the proposed mule railway, and the motto adopted "Fast mule" would wants to "go slow," and have his cars propelled by "sausage battery," which is generated by the extended ears and long tail of the mule, to be lighted along Each Front street, to his neighborhood. As his "sausage battery" the mule is a recognized success everywhere, and judging by the kicking and braying displayed by our Plainfield mules, doubtless how he will have all the fun there is going.

Nothing could be more exhilarating than to see Brother Shepard rising him town from Scotch Plains, on such a mule car.

Well suggest, however, that the front platform should better be made of steel better plate about one quarter of an inch thick and that the driver be provided with a cage for the "fast mule" to kick against, and a battery shall break loose and go off in the dust.

Mules Forever.

The Mule Fanatic.

P. S.—We might also have on this line a Mule Car Shoeing Establishment.

SHOT OFF HIS HEAD.

Horrible Suicide of a Farmer at Chimney Rock.

The story comes from Round Brook that James Schenker, of Chimney Rock, committed suicide Sunday night in a shocking manner.

He had had a dispute with his wife, and had threatened to kill himself. At 10 o'clock he left the house, loaded an old muzzle-loading shot-gun, went to the barn, set the muzzle against his throat, and pressed the trigger with a stick.

The charge tore off his head. The gun exploded, and tore his head from his body.

He was otherwise terribly mutilated.

The family buried the corpse without ceremony.

Where the Kops Are.

In a few days signs posted on the poles above the fire alarm boxes, will tell where to find keys to open them. But Tom Reed's readers are not told of these signs—cut this out and paste it up in your home or store:

Keys for Box No. 12 may be found at Shaw's pharmacy, Smith's saloon, Telephone Co's central office, Central Times office, and French Bros.' mills.

Box No. 13—DAILY PRESS office, Cook's barber shop, Hall, McVay's restaurant, Roberts' livery stable and Bolder's coal office.

Box No. 14—Corner Second street and Park avenue, Dr. Gettlen, 23 East Second street, and John Bloem, 33 East Third street.

Box No. 15—C. E. Bond, 108 East Front street, Rev. W. R. Richards, 132 East Front street, T. Conrad Thompson, 201 Second street, and Robert C. Barnes, 180 East Second street.

Box No. 21—Scott Printing Machine Works, Muhlenberg Hospital.

Box No. 22—J. Brooks, 97 Broadway, A. V. Nolan, 103 Broadway, A. B. Cook, 2 Ledlard avenue, and Dr. Murray, 117 Broadway.

Box No. 23—R. Livingston, 149 Broadway, and S. A. Gluss, 132 Broadway.

Box No. 24—L. Spangenberg, 2 Woodlawn avenue, J. Johnson, 260 South avenue, J. L. Anthony, 49 Belvidere avenue, and Netherwood Railroad Station.

Box No. 25—E. Ackerman, 22 West Seventh street, R. M. Titsworth, 21 West Seventh street, and Union County Club House.

Box No. 26—T. O. Doane, 40 West Fifth street, W. Mundy, 46 West Fifth street, and the Rev. H. L. Sharp, 42 West Sixth street.

Box No. 27—C. Schipper, 118 West Seventh street, and E. Woltmann, 101 West Seventh street.

Box No. 32—C. Schopflin, 74 West Front street, Mrs. Kenyon, 58 West Front street, and C. T. Carey, 39 West Front street, and A. Stephens, 50 West Front street.

Box No. 33—A. Swain, 59 West Front street, A. T. Gallup, 153 West Front street, and M. A. Gallup, 155 West Front street.

Box No. 45—Potter Press Works, Muhlenberg Hospital, and F. A. Miller, druggist, 267 South Second street.

Box No. 47—Pond Tool Works, and F. Cullen, 320 South Second street.

All the police and night watchmen have keys also.

All Ready for Their Victims.

The Crescent League ball team for this season has been signed as follows: Captain Lufbery, second base; Simmonds from last year's Rahways, and Jones, pitcher; Hammitt and Gregg, pitchers; Davis, first base; Cary, of the N. Y. Athletics, short-stop; Lee, third base; McIndoe, left field.

The Administrators Made Receivers Also

Chancellor McGill March 11, appointed Elias R. Pope and John W. Harrison, receivers of the estate of Benjamin A. Mallet. Mallet at the time of his death. The former appointment of these same gentlemen as administrators, in which office they have to do with the personal property. Now they have charge of the entire estate, real and personal.

Another Beneficial Organization.

Saturday evening last a number of the employes of Scott's Printing Press Works, met in the rooms of the Democratic Association, on Park street, and perfected an organization to be known as the "Scott Press Works Mutual Aid Society" by the selection of the following named officers and committees:

President—Louis H. Brown.
Vice President—George H. Carpenter.
Secretary—John Wilson.
Treasurer—Henry C. Norner.
Finance Committee—Frank S. Temple, Wm. Neumiller, Daniel J. Randall.
Committee on By-Laws—Webster Grant, Geo. H. Carpenter, Daniel Livingston.

The object of the society is to protect and relieve workingmen in case of sickness or accident.

Caught Three Blackbirds, and Got Cute Used

A shivering crowd of tramps became covetous of the fleecy, warm blankets dispi-pedon the clothes line of Mrs. Martin Geacan, at 250 West Front street. Saturday night, and sought to appropriate the bed coverings to shelter them during their night's repose. Mrs. Geagan, however, detected the attempted theft, and snatched one of the blankets by the solid and shi-k him until his teeth rattled like castanets and his head seemedalin danger of flying off. The other tramps attempted to render assi-tance, but Mrs. Geagan's lusty cries for help brought Mr. Geagan with a revolver, to the scene of conflict, and the tramps, on the weapon, the tramps fled precipitately.

"Come around here again,"—shouted Mr. Geagan—"and you'll get bailed instead of blankets."

To Thought There was no Danger of His Being Good.

Said a New York paper, yesterday, "Plainfield, N. J., is the most straight-laced town in the St-te. A well-known New Yorker was visiting Frederick Swift, the cheerful undertaker, the other day, and he is used to having candy after dinner, according to the fashion at one up-town hotel. But the candy stores were closed and the druggists had nothing better than cough drops. The New Yorker tried all the druggists, and at last heard that here was a Seventh Day Baptist keeping store in a d-ug store, and that his faith permitted him to sell candy on our Sunday. There the candy was bought. But in the course of the search the New Yorker was derided. 'I have no candy,' said one druggi-t, 'and if I had I would not sell it.' The New Yorker protested. 'I don't care in the least for your conscientious,' said he; 'in fact, I don't want to be good at all.' 'Well, I guess there's no danger,' said the druggist."

A Peculiar Trait of a Plainfield Woman

[From The New York Press.]

There is a woman in Plainfield whose big gray eyes can make a small boy quake or fill him with unspeakable delight. As pri-cipal of the public schools she wields many powers, but her influence does not last long. Her figure is slight and her hair an iron-gray. As a teacher she was noted for discipline, and rose from the ranks to be principal of schools which are now regarded as models of their kind. There was secret and bitter opposition to Miss Bailey's appointment at the time, but it died out after she had proved her fitness and firmness by failing ill of brain fever from overwork. After that she systematized her work. She made improvements and started a normal school. She raised the standard of scholarship so that now the leading colleges take in graduates of the high school on certificate. Another idea of Miss Bailey's is a Greek scholar and an enthusiast in the language and history of the classic. Several summers she has spent in Greece and Rome and the Holy Land. This year she paid the salary of a principal to take her place while she went abroad and made an exhaustive study of the schools of Europe. She returned with the determination of her study the Plainfield schools are getting without charge.

Head Master, who is superintendent of the Sunday-school of Rev. Cadi, of Park Presbyterian church, and a prominent Mason, is a purely business-like man. He will take a friendly interest in the welfare of his pupils, but he is not a man to be approached with familiarity. He is a man of few words, and is not given to the use of slang. He is a man of strong character, and is a man of strong character, and is a man of strong character, and

MY SCHOOLDAYS.

I am not forgot them, I can not forget,
Though for ages to come I am doomed to exist;
They're as bright and as fresh in my memory yet,
As the rose blushing red that the sun has just kissed.

It seems like a day past, it seems like a day,
Though nearly an age has passed on into years,
Since I was a scrawler—and shocks of the day,
Not the least the laughter still ring in my ears.

Oh, the days they were long then, the days they were fair,
Like a beautiful mead! Like a mermaid asleep!
The grass then was greener, the sky was more blue,
The birds sang more sweetly than now on the steep.

Oh, the future I planned then, the future I dreamed,
Indeed it was grand! Indeed it was grand!
And the forms of my schoolmates—the happy and fair—
I see in their places around me once more;
Oh! could I but greet them again as of yore,
They have taken their places as women and men
In the battle of life they are not in the rear;
And one's whole life is a battle, a life to be won,
Then let's strive ever here, then its close ever here!

My heart it was lighter, much lighter 'twas then,
Than 'tis since ever here, than its close ever here!

Oh, the battles we fought then, the battles we won,
The pinnacles we mastered, 'twas really sublime!
We could tell very easy how well we had done,
By the way we marched by the noble eyed time.

'Twas much that I knew then of Profit and Shares;
'Twas with that I knew then of Grammar and all,
But 'twas little I knew of life's labor and cares,
'Twas little I knew of life's trouble and toil,
And songs my sweeter never fell from the lips
Than the songs that we sung then, the songs that we chanted,
And the master, whose voice was a sentence of death,
Or whose words were repeated and treasured for days,
To the culprit who trembled in front of his desk,
By his wife, whose efforts he greeted with praise.

I remember them all, and I think with a smile
Of the punishment ever awarded to one
Who seated me on the first side of the aisle,
Where I was in full view of the visitors' gaze;
I have not forgot him, nor will I forget,
And I think if I met him I'd punish him yet.

Oh, that very same school-house now stands on the hill,
And the very same bell gives a warning as then,
With the same 'aft of urchins surrounding it still
As when I was there best!
With little here best!
But then, 'tis not the same boys that were there,
Nor is the same voices thatwring in my ears;
And I know do we my pen with a feeling for them,
Nearly blinded with tears! Nearly blinded with tears!
But perhaps I will meet them, God willing, sometime,
In a life nearer Home, in a far better clime.

—A. E. Van Vranx, in Good Housekeeping.

HER CORRESPONDENT.

She Makes Running Comments on She Reads.

[Jack's room, with Jack in it. He is tramping up and down, hands in pockets, jerks, kicks, stuff of his wardrobe, perviously smoking a perfectly empty pipe.

Jack (savagely soliloquizing between puffs)—Glad I wrote it. Glad I sent it. Glad I've broken with her. Only sorry didn't do it sooner. Pitch, Thought I'd a fool for answering. Wonder if letter's reached her yet? Hope it has. No; it don't. Hope it hasn't. Ethel! (Dashes down pipe, looks at watch.) 3:45, and she'll get it by the five, o'clock delivery. Even now I've time to run and post a new one before it comes—time enough. But what do I want to do that for? Haven't I say strength of mind? (Tears off jacket.) Or firmness? (Puts on coat.) Or resolution? (Knocks hat on head, brushes hair.) (Or determination? (Hurries into ulster and settles.) Or a decent amount of self-respect? (Puts on pistol (snatches hat.) No; by Jove, I haven't (Exit, running.)

[Ethel is playing. Jack, slightly heated and tremendously agitated, to whom enters Ethel.

Ethel (fondly smiling and not at all conscious)—Why, dear

Jack (in disgust)—Ah!—hum!—good afternoon, Miss—Ethel!

Ethel (instantly comprehending)—O Jack! what is the matter? You, Jack, quick-tempered stupid you are! You're the most ridiculous being that ever was; and sometimes you're too funny to death, and sometimes you're too funny for any thing. This time you're funny! Ha, ha, ha, ha!

Jack (attempting dignity)—May I ask—

Ethel (laughing)—Oh, yes; you may ask—but whether I can get breath enough to answer is another matter—ha, ha, ha, ha!

Jack (with a sort of shame-faced haughtiness)—If you can do anything but jeer at me, I'd better—(moves to go.)

Ethel (pulling him down into the chair)—Don't be silly, Jack. You know you don't mean to go—you're only pretending—and you wouldn't be able to, if you meant it—goose!

Jack (sulkily)—Ethel, I love—

Ethel, it's because I love—

Ethel (delighted at this victory)—Of course it is, Jack; and you're a goose to waste me at the very next, wasn't it? Jack, confess, it's all a mistake, and tell me; I'll tell you something. It was my uncle!

Ethel—Yes, Uncle Joe, just from California. He's papa's younger brother, whom you've never seen, and who is quite evident from your behavior—ha, ha, ha, ha! If you'd only waited, dear, you'd have learned all about it and—

Jack—O Ethel! what a donkey I am! (Seizes her hand.)

Ethel (unresisting)—Not quite that, but possibly some other kind of big, strong, masculine animal, from your actions. I should say a bear. Good old jealous Jack! (Fence breaks out with great violence.)

Servant (entering letter)—Th' letters, Miss. (Exit Servant.)

Jack (suddenly recollecting)—Great Heavens!

Ethel (examining letter)—Only one for me. Why, Jack, what ails you? You're absolutely white! Are you ill? You're not? Well, what is the matter? (Glances at address on envelope). Ah!

Jack (apart)—I'd forgotten all about it!

Ethel (with very piquant air of being mistress of the situation)—Jack, is this man this he from? The hand is a man's—very much like yours, Jack. The resemblance is quite strong.

Jack (apart)—What a horrible scrape!

Ethel (leisurely opening letter)—Haven't the newspapers this year been full of the paper. (Reads.) "Miss Fay: Must be from some Miss Fay—Another woman. (Reads.) "When you read these lines I shall be outside of Sandy Hook—" Well, really! What do you think of that, Jack?

Jack (perspiring with agony)—I don't see—

Ethel (thoughtfully)—Do you suppose this person is really where he said he should be by now? Jack, what do you think?

Jack (sinking)—Merciful powers!

Ethel (resuming)—"outside of Sandy Hook, bound for Europe again." At any rate, this isn't from a shipwreck, surely. (Reads.) "You have stood me out—" I don't know but that it may be, though. (Reads.) "—and I warn you forever—I don't mean you, Jack. You don't appear interested. I'll read it and you acknowledge. (Jack groans again.) (Ethel go on, though, for your life. (Reads.) "—forever, not to remember—dear me, I should hope not. (Reads.) "—which you are incapable of doing. Jack!

Jack (apart)—I wish I were dead!

Ethel (continuing)—And I am. My correspondent seems rather severe, doesn't he, Jack? (Reads.) "—but I do leave him to one thing for your especial benefit—no doubt. No doubt, truly. My sweet person would be (Reserved person, Jack!) Ethel continues.) "—and I am certain he is in good fortune—" how very considerate and patronizing my correspondent is, Jack! (Reads.) "—to have found—(read) now than I love you now—(reads)

Jack (wildly)—Ethel! Please don't!

Ethel (quietly)—My correspondent is a bit of a little severe, isn't he, Jack? (Reads.) "—but you will not care. What is your opinion about that, Jack? (Reads.) "—my beautiful girl—" do hear my correspondent spout, Jack! "and never think about me. Oh! could I but greet them again as of yore, They have taken their places as women and men

In the battle of life they are not in the rear;
And one's whole life is a battle, a life to be won,
Then let's strive ever here, then its close ever here!

My heart it was lighter, much lighter 'twas then,
Than 'tis since ever here, than its close ever here!

Oh, the battles we fought then, the battles we won,
The pinnacles we mastered, 'twas really sublime!
We could tell very easy how well we had done,
By the way we marched by the noble eyed time.

'Twas much that I knew then of Profit and Shares;
'Twas with that I knew then of Grammar and all,
But 'twas little I knew of life's labor and cares,
'Twas little I knew of life's trouble and toil,
And songs my sweeter never fell from the lips
Than the songs that we sung then, the songs that we chanted,
And the master, whose voice was a sentence of death,
Or whose words were repeated and treasured for days,
To the culprit who trembled in front of his desk,
By his wife, whose efforts he greeted with praise.

I remember them all, and I think with a smile
Of the punishment ever awarded to one
Who seated me on the first side of the aisle,
Where I was in full view of the visitors' gaze;
I have not forgot him, nor will I forget,
And I think if I met him I'd punish him yet.

Oh, that very same school-house now stands on the hill,
And the very same bell gives a warning as then,
With the same 'aft of urchins surrounding it still
As when I was there best!
With little here best!
But then, 'tis not the same boys that were there,
Nor is the same voices thatwring in my ears;
And I know do we my pen with a feeling for them,
Nearly blinded with tears! Nearly blinded with tears!
But perhaps I will meet them, God willing, sometime,
In a life nearer Home, in a far better clime.

—A. E. Van Vranx, in Good Housekeeping.

HER CORRESPONDENT.

She Makes Running Comments on She Reads.

[Jack's room, with Jack in it. He is tramping up and down, hands in pockets, jerks, kicks, stuff of his wardrobe, perviously smoking a perfectly empty pipe.

Jack (savagely soliloquizing between puffs)—Glad I wrote it. Glad I sent it. Glad I've broken with her. Only sorry didn't do it sooner. Pitch, Thought I'd a fool for answering. Wonder if letter's reached her yet? Hope it has. No; it don't. Hope it hasn't. Ethel! (Dashes down pipe, looks at watch.) 3:45, and she'll get it by the five, o'clock delivery. Even now I've time to run and post a new one before it comes—time enough. But what do I want to do that for? Haven't I say strength of mind? (Tears off jacket.) Or firmness? (Puts on coat.) Or resolution? (Knocks hat on head, brushes hair.) (Or determination? (Hurries into ulster and settles.) Or a decent amount of self-respect? (Puts on pistol (snatches hat.) No; by Jove, I haven't (Exit, running.)

[Ethel is playing. Jack, slightly heated and tremendously agitated, to whom enters Ethel.

Ethel (fondly smiling and not at all conscious)—Why, dear

Jack (in disgust)—Ah!—hum!—good afternoon, Miss—Ethel!

Ethel (instantly comprehending)—O Jack! what is the matter? You, Jack, quick-tempered stupid you are! You're the most ridiculous being that ever was; and sometimes you're too funny to death, and sometimes you're too funny for any thing. This time you're funny! Ha, ha, ha, ha!

Jack (attempting dignity)—May I ask—

Ethel (laughing)—Oh, yes; you may ask—but whether I can get breath enough to answer is another matter—ha, ha, ha, ha!

Jack (with a sort of shame-faced haughtiness)—If you can do anything but jeer at me, I'd better—(moves to go.)

Ethel (pulling him down into the chair)—Don't be silly, Jack. You know you don't mean to go—you're only pretending—and you wouldn't be able to, if you meant it—goose!

Jack (sulkily)—Ethel, I love—

Ethel, it's because I love—

Ethel (delighted at this victory)—Of course it is, Jack; and you're a goose to waste me at the very next, wasn't it? Jack, confess, it's all a mistake, and tell me; I'll tell you something. It was my uncle!

Ethel—Yes, Uncle Joe, just from California. He's papa's younger brother, whom you've never seen, and who is quite evident from your behavior—ha, ha, ha, ha! If you'd only waited, dear, you'd have learned all about it and—

Jack—O Ethel! what a donkey I am! (Seizes her hand.)

Ethel (unresisting)—Not quite that, but possibly some other kind of big, strong, masculine animal, from your actions. I should say a bear. Good old jealous Jack! (Fence breaks out with great violence.)

Servant (entering letter)—Th' letters, Miss. (Exit Servant.)

Jack (suddenly recollecting)—Great Heavens!

Ethel (examining letter)—Only one for me. Why, Jack, what ails you? You're absolutely white! Are you ill? You're not? Well, what is the matter? (Glances at address on envelope). Ah!

Jack (apart)—I'd forgotten all about it!

Ethel (with very piquant air of being mistress of the situation)—Jack, is this man this he from? The hand is a man's—very much like yours, Jack. The resemblance is quite strong.

Jack (apart)—What a horrible scrape!

Ethel (leisurely opening letter)—Haven't the newspapers this year been full of the paper. (Reads.) "Miss Fay: Must be from some Miss Fay—Another woman. (Reads.) "When you read these lines I shall be outside of Sandy Hook—" Well, really! What do you think of that, Jack?

Jack (perspiring with agony)—I don't see—

Ethel (thoughtfully)—Do you suppose this person is really where he said he should be by now? Jack, what do you think?

Jack (sinking)—Merciful powers!

Ethel (resuming)—"outside of Sandy Hook, bound for Europe again." At any rate, this isn't from a shipwreck, surely. (Reads.) "You have stood me out—" I don't know but that it may be, though. (Reads.) "—and I warn you forever—I don't mean you, Jack. You don't appear interested. I'll read it and you acknowledge. (Jack groans again.) (Ethel go on, though, for your life. (Reads.) "—forever, not to remember—the widow showed her heroism, for she caught him by the heels and dragged him out. He had seated the unfortunate kitten, and clung to the door, drowned creature as he stood up and gasped for breath, looking more miserable than ever before in all his life. Finally he managed to gasp:

"B-E-S-S-I-E 'HOME-C-O-COMFOUNDED CAT!"

"If-I-here 'whore c-e-e-confounded cat!"

She clasped the dripping kitten to her breast, and chuckled him again and again so effusively, and expressed such regret for what had happened, that his anger disappeared, and he came nearer smiling than he had for ten years.

It was about two weeks after this that Mr. Hyrtle asked to see Proprietor, and his assistant cutter ventured to ask him how his salary and whispered in a very confidential manner, but loud enough for every one in the shop to hear him, that he was engaged to be married. This proved a thunderbolt for those who knew him, and they wondered who it could be he was going to marry, but he made no boxes of telling she was a widow, and a very plump and handsome one at that. For all of the happy prospect, Beckenham did not lose his air of melancholy, although the appearances of dejection seemed to pass away in a measure.

At length the wedding occurred, but the very next morning after the event Beckenham was presented at the door looking ten-fold more miserable and wretched than ever before in all his life. When his cutter asked him the cause of the sudden and unexpected change, he confided to him 'that his pilgrim and handsome' wife had literally "taken herself all to pieces," from her false teeth and hair, to the padding that was bought at the grocery advance. The shock had quite unnerved him, and he was tortured by the suspicion that she had thrown the kitten into the hogshead of water for the express purpose of killing him into her clever matrimonial trap, which she had baited with smiles.

"He is happy again," said the cutter, aside, "for he has now acquired a genuine misery that will be continually with him."—New York Blade.

FOREIGN NOTES OF INTEREST.

THE coal fields of Tonquin are turning out so well that it is thought that M. Ferry may be restored to popular favor upon that issue alone.

Five hundred applications have been made to the Department of the Interior at Toronto, for the privilege of buying for oil in the Kootenay country.

The press and land-owners of Portugal are incensed over the lack of zeal of cultivators, and demand that the Government shall put a stop to emigration, as hurtful to the prosperity of the country.

It is proposed in Paris to do away, as far as possible, with hostile asylums and to place the insane among people who are not prone to violence in the homes of country people, who will be suitably remunerated for their care.

In Japan the act of flirting is a penal offense. Serious complications arise under the law when the young people of both sexes know that they can not wink and blink and giggle at each other in the streets.

The centenary of the birth of Anastasia's representative, poet, Franz Grillparzer, was celebrated on January 15 in Vienna, with performances in the theatres and the opening to the public of an exhibition including about six hundred personal relics of the poet.

An English syndicate for the construction company has offered the Dominion Government to lay a submarine cable connecting Halifax and Bermuda. Sir Sandford Fleming has been sent to operate it for ten years for an annual subsidy of $12,000 a year, the cable to become the property of the Government at the expiration of the ten years.—Railway Review.

The Paris Daily Commercial Bulletin says that, since 1869, Germany has reduced her stock of silver coin from $45 to $4.67 per capita, while England's stock is only $22,000,000, and the average coinage of silver by Germany and England combined averages only some $4,000,000 out of the world's average coinage of $74,000,000.

Hard to Believe.

Mrs. Browning (of Boston)—Well, how do you like Chicago, Mrs. Gotham?

Mrs. Browning (just returned from Chicago)—Oh, I didn't like it. There's not much rustic and bustle there to suit me.

Mrs. Browning (quite shocked)—But, my dear, you have been there before, and those were the things you—

Mrs. Browning (quite shocked)—But, my dear, you have been there before, and those were the things you—

An Inexhaustible Supply.

Mrs. Brown—I heard to-day that Mr. Gotham gives away a gas well, but I don't believe it.

Mr. Brown—You would be quite right, my dear, if you had ever seen how much his wife talks.—Mooney's Weekly.

And Therefore to be Told.

A boy—You shouldn't tell such things about your father.

His sister—Why not? Charlotte gave me the most positive assurance that it was true.

FUN BY FIRELIGHT.

How the Children Entertain Themselves.

Long winter evenings are a trial to many mothers. As to amusements, they must be. Invention not to be behind in that. The men must stay closed nightly to the cares of business, and the children must be entertained in the best society, where they can be found, by the firelight and lamplight. Then, too, the mothers must do a certain amount of sewing, and the children must be furnished with light and warmth, but the amount should be a certain quantity and not a little more than the most sparing mother can allow.

Besides these slightly gatherings there are different kinds of society for the children. Some visit one another, some come in for an evening's amusement, and some of them make a business of the thing. In many of them the women join, but the women's chief entertainments are knotty or quilting parties at which they have very good picknicques these spinning parties are.

The first time a little girl is invited to a knotting is the large porcelain stove that stands out into the room, and that is the only time it is ever visited. Around this stove a bench runs, making a delightfully warm seat, the back being at that time cold.

But heating this stove, in the older houses there is in the wall a hole with a chimney, where a particular sort of pine, that burns brightly without smoking and sparks, is burned at night for the benefit of the light it gives. At such times, when such luxuries as lamps were unthought of, it was often the only source of illumination. Children will use them constantly; others keep them only for knotting parties. A man (generally the host) sits beside it to keep it replenished. The ladies sit around it, knitting, wheels or knitting, and the men sit in the darker corners; and there are always some children. The boys are either playing on the varied faces old time-worn furniture as bright firelight alone can.

One man has a guitar, and two young girls sing "Lynn Waltzin." Then comes the positions of one of the men present pleasantly together. At last advantage of different kinds of cake (no pies or liqueurs) and delicious coffee, with home-made cake, are handed-round, and the evening ends with hearty farewell greetings.

WHEN A KNOT IS NOT A KNOT.

Something About the Use of the Much-Abused Word.

To the average landlubber, and in fact to many seamen, the knot is the same thing as the geographical, nautical, or sea mile, and that is said solely to prevent confusion with the statute land mile. This use of the word, however, is improper, and the authorities in naval and marine matters almost have taken the subject in hand of late, and are sending out the true meaning and usage of the salt-flavored mile.

The knot, they announce, is simply a unit for measuring speed at sea, and has nothing to do with distance, which is measured by the nautical mile of a little over 6,080 feet, says the New York Times. Their exact definition of a knot is "a speed of one nautical mile an hour," so that one knot is a speed of a little more than 101 feet a minute. Therefore, on a log line with a half-minute glass or time interval, the distance between the knots would be nearly fifty-one feet. The word is derived from the knots on the log line, and the number of knots that run out over a ship's rail during the half-minute or other measurement give the speed of the vessel.

In late years, through an exaggerated desire to be exact, even in matters marine writing, the expression "knots per hour," which from the above explanation is merely a nautical barbarism, has jumped into use to express the speed of a ship. So the proper word still has been practically displaced, and it is a common thing to read that "the City of Paris' daily run was 500 knots." This would be about 14 miles, which would be slow going even for a raft.

The word knot is also used incorrectly in speaking of coal endurance, as in "the Growler's coal endurance is 20,000 knots at a 10-knot speed." One might as sensibly say "the vessel lay within two knots of her dock." Chief Engineer Isherwood of the United States navy, in his reports on speed trials, goes so far out of his way to avoid these errors that he uses the lengthy expression "geographical miles per hour" or "knots per hour" rather than use the simple, but much abused term, "knot."

The Size of Canada.

The area of the Dominion of Canada is estimated at 3,370,000 square miles, or, including its water surface, 3,510,000 square miles. It is the last part of the area of the British possessions, constituting 40 per cent, of the Empire, the total area of which is 8,500,000 square miles. Indeed Canada lacks only 227,000 square miles of being as large as the whole continent of Europe. It is nearly thirty times as large as Great Britain and Ireland, and is 200,000 square miles larger than the United States, exclusive of Alaska. Canada covers more than 3-14 part of the whole North American continent and 1-36 part of the population of the world.

Went Out by Blazing.

A striking instance of the effect of tattoo on reputed ghosts is recorded in the statement that a large quantity of the metal on the feet of the famous statue of St. Peter's, at Rome, is worn away by the frequent kisses of pilgrims. In order to prevent further injury, the foot of a statue of the Saviour in the Minerva has been protected by a brass plate, but the feet of the bronze statue of the Saviour has frequently been kissed away in the course of years.

Ill-Assorted Guests.

Big dinner parties of ill-assorted guests are the most unsatisfactory affair from point of view. A fireside, or a table, round if possible, and, say, four or five friends, is the ideal dinner party. More will break up into separate groups, and fewer mean a tete-a-tete. "I had," said Mrs. Partington, "three sons and my house—one for solitude, two for friendship, three for society." The latter was when the man who looks for a wife in Portland Place, whose wife inflicted large parties upon him, succeeded in very different conditions leading against the chimney piece. A gentleman who was up to his eyes in debt, as satisfied of it, was quietly quenched with any of the people here I would like to hear go home to their friends most and consider the great chasm among them to talk well. She must be a man of many accomplishments indeed who can discourse with persons who has disappointed her. Nothing has been known in a lot of tattoo who prevented his being buried in the grave of those how hot it was.—Gentleman's Magazine.

Power of Wit.

The influence of a powerful will in arresting or retarding the progress of a disease is illustrated by the fact of the recovery of all members of a family but one. A person of feeble frame, but of determined and hopeful spirit, succumbed to the disease after a few months, even years, and finally, in defiance of the doctors, the whole family, except the old one and patient, were stricken down. The old one, with a will, a purpose, and resolution to live, nursed them all back to health, and then, with a sigh of relief, gave up the ghost. Another instance is recorded of a man who, when he was told that he had but a few days to live, declared that he would live to see his son, who was on the way from a distant city, and who was expected in a week. He lived to see his son, and then died.

Wit and Answers.

Jason—"Much left in his will?" Wags—"All his relations." Town Topics.

Jack—"What's the best way to get hold of fresh news?" Jim—"Dig, of course." Life.

Harry—"Say how people get what they deserve in this world." Miss Cantankerous—"Don't you pay your debts?"

Someone when you see a man who is always talking about himself to women, you can't help wondering when he finds the means of the women to possibly listen to.

It makes the best man in the world mad if his wife begins to talk or work for a reform. She is willing and anxious that the world should be better, but he don't want his wife to have her hands in it.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TELEPHONE COMPANY!

SPEAKING CONNECTION WITH OVER 15,000 SUBSCRIBERS—PROTECTION FROM FIRE

Central Office, Cor. Front st. and Park Row, N. Y.

Central Office cor. Front st. and Park row, N. Y.

Address:

Adams Express Co.
Agnew, C. S. ..... 13 Cranmer ave.
Allen, Wm. ..... Nethermead.
Allen, Wm. ..... Nethermead.
Ames, Olin ..... Hollister ave.
Ax—Rose Co., No 1 ..... Hollister ave.
Ax—Rose Co., No 2 ..... 26 Rose st cor Ann
Bates, D O ..... 68 Grove st
Bidwell, W ..... 7 Commerce st
Blodgood, W ..... 31 Hillside ave
Bostick, H ..... 845 42d Cross st.
Bostwick, Ass't Cashier ..... 845 42d Cross st.
Bower, W. G., M. D. ..... Cor. Front & Central Av.
Brandt, John ..... Central ave, and 9th st.
Brandt, John ..... Central ave, and 9th st.
Burg, Jos F, M D ..... 10 E 59th st
Board of Revenue ..... 8th st, 5th ave, Union ave 6th & Liberty, 6th & Monroe
Clark, H B ..... West Front street.
Clifford, Wm ..... 1 Hillside ave.
Clinton, James T ..... Richmond and Front sts.
Conservatory ..... 1 Sherman ave.
Cook, A D & Bro ..... Park ave and 8th.
Cooley, Dr J H ..... Manning and Wesperpoint ave.
Cox, Jas ..... Hollister ave.
Chapman, Mrs. F. A ..... 9 Third Place
Chittenden, R. H ..... 158 Carlton avenue
Carman, J. H., M D ..... 1 Hillside ave.
Clarke, F P M ..... Rose cor st
Cooper, Peter ..... 17 Cranmer ave.
Cooper, Mrs. E. H ..... 18 Cranmer ave.
Daly, Frank ..... 93 W. Fourth st.
Dana, Chas. A ..... Cor 8th st & (Park) av
Day, S. S ..... Rockville ave
Dean, Dr. J ..... 37 Hollister ave.
Dumont, John R ..... 19 Cranmer ave.
Day, Richard H ..... North av
Dorland, Wm. ..... Wendell, N J
Dodroff, Anton ..... 32 E 9th st
Dennis, T O—Office ..... 36 W 9th st
Dodmer, S R ..... Madison av
Endicott, Dr Geo W ..... Pine ave, and 4th st.
Evening Sun ..... 17 N. Harrison, Editor's room
Engine No 1 ..... West 3d st.
Engine No 2 ..... Somerset st
Engine No 3 ..... Somerset st
Estate of D. T. Baker ..... Park ave. & Railroad.
Estate of Wm. Bard ..... 23 W Fourth st
Force, W L & Bro ..... 3 North ave
Freight House ..... C. R R. Depot.
Fitzsimmons, Jas ..... 1 Hillside ave.
Fritts, Dr J ..... 73 Park ave.
Field, Dr C. W ..... Peace and Fifth street.
Fleming, Howard ..... 18 Park avenue
Fox, Thomas ..... 104 W 9th st
French, C Frank ..... 60 Somerset st
Grant, Gen'l, Chief of Police ..... 30 W 8th st
Gardner, A. & Sons ..... 1 Park Place.
Griffin, A. M ..... 18 E Front st.
Gannon, R. F ..... 132 E Broadway
Gilbert & Bacon ..... North Avenue
Howell & Hardy ..... North Avenue
Hoyt, Jas ..... 62 & 65 Somerset street.
Hoyt, Jas ..... Somerset ave and 8th st.
Hyde, Dr. Billy W ..... 42 East Front st.
Hyer, Chas ..... 141 Front avenue.
Hendrix, Albert ..... 418 st. near Park ave.
Higgins, M. A ..... Nassau bd
Hubbell Bros ..... 6 and 8 Front st.
Harder, Francis G ..... 12½ Madison av
Jacobus, Samuel H ..... 174 East Front street
Jones, Dr. O. L ..... 54 N. Second st.
Jones, Isaac ..... 33 Kensington st
Jones, Wm. ..... 103 East avenue
Kaufmann, W T ..... 65 W 7th st
Kline & Co ..... Grant av and Front st
Kenyon, Mrs. Mary ..... Madison av and 8th st.
Lovell, L. B ..... Cranmer ave
Lord, Wm A ..... 4 Hillside ave.
Lincoln & Rice ..... 764 st Broadway
Mercuer, John ..... Putnam avenue.
McDonnell, Hugh ..... 65 st
Moore, Henry A ..... Willow ave.
Moore, Jas. H ..... 1 Hillside ave.
Moore, Jas. H ..... 1 Hillside ave.
Moore, Geo. A ..... 28 E. Front st.
Moore, Geo. A ..... 28 North ave.
Moore, Benj. F ..... Park ave. and 8th st.
Mahaleberg Hospital ..... North ave.
Murray, Dr. Wm. H ..... 87 Front street.
Mott, Jas. ..... Somerset ave.
Miller, Frank, Prop ..... Somerset ave.
Matthews, Chas. ..... Cor. Front & Madison.
Morris, Mrs C. D ..... 138 37 Cranmer ave
Morrison, Jas ..... 120 Central ave
Morrison, Jas ..... 120 Central ave
Morrison, Jas ..... 120 Central ave
Morrison, T W ..... 7 Somerset st
Mott Planing Mill Co. The ..... Park ave
Mountford, Dept. ..... Somerset
Newsall, Henry B ..... 16 E 7th st.
Ostrom, A. B ..... 1 Hillside ave.
Ostrom, A. B ..... Rockwell ave
Pierson, Joseph C ..... 42 West Front street
Plainfield Gazette Co ..... 69 East Fourth St
Plainfield Hall & Fire Co ..... Park ave. and 7th st.
Plainfield Electric Light Co ..... Madison avenue
Plainfield Press Co ..... Park ave near 8th st.
Plainfield Seed Co ..... 86 and Washington av
Police Station—Chief's office ..... Front st
Police Station ..... Park ave and 8th st.
Potter, Col ..... 158 and Invinton ave.
Potter, Wm ..... 158 and Invinton ave.
Potter, Jas J ..... 42 Front st.
Perkins, Edward G ..... Clinton ave, cor 4th st
Pierson, Jas ..... Park ave and 8th st.
Plinth, Thomas ..... 124 Central ave
Randolph, Mrs. Mary ..... 3d and Madison ave.
Randolph, Henry C ..... 3d and Madison ave.
Rasmussen, L. A ..... 30 Broadway
Rose, Jas. M ..... Park ave and 8th st.
Runyon, H. P ..... Washington avenue
Roberts, H S ..... 21 North avenue.
Rockwell, Jas ..... Park ave and 8th st.
Rockwell, A. L ..... Prospect ave.
Sampson, A. D ..... 14 Union
Sampson, A. D ..... Somerset ave.
Smith, Jno A ..... 13 W 21 st n y
Terrill & Smith ..... 1 Hillside ave.
Thompson, A. D ..... 29-31 So th st
Thompson, Mary P Miss ..... Somerset ave.
Thomas, M. A ..... Madison av
Titsworth, Jas. B ..... 16 w, 7th st.
Titsworth, Jas. B ..... 16 w, 7th st.
Tomlin & Scudder ..... 31 North st
Tracy, J. Arthur ..... 363 and Division st
Tracy, Mrs. ..... 363 and Division st
Tuttle, Mrs. ..... 1 Hillside ave.
Tuttle, C. E ..... 37 Cranmer ave
Tuttle, Mrs. Jas. ..... 37 Cranmer ave
Union Hotel ..... Park ave and 7th st.
United States Express Co ..... 3 North ave
Van Arsdale, A ..... 10 and 12 E 8th st
Van Arsdale, A ..... 10 and 12 E 8th st
Van Wagoner, Mrs. ..... 8th and Liberty ste
Van Wagoner, Mrs. ..... 8th and Liberty ste
Vanderbeek, Jas. ..... cor. 8th and 5th st av
Vanzee, S. Ann's Cake ..... 36 st Near Washington av

TELEPHONE TOLL RATES.

FOR FIVE MINUTES CONVERSATION.

PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY

Asbury Park, N. J. 50c
Asbury Park, N. J. 50c
Bound Brook, N. J. 25c
Bound Brook, N. J. 25c
Dunellen, N. J. 25c
Dunellen, N. J. 25c
Elizabeth, N. J. 25c
Elizabeth, N. J. 25c
Elizabeth Port, N. J. 25c
Elizabeth Port, N. J. 25c
Elizabethport, N. J. 25c
Elizabethport, N. J. 25c
Elizabethport

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1891. No. 13.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as set to its limitations as to its authorities."—Madison

Rates of Advertising.

Space	1 Week	2	3	1 Month	2	3	6	12
1 Square
2 Squares
3 Squares
4 Squares
5 Squares
6 Squares
7 Squares
8 Squares
9 Squares
10 Squares
11 Squares
12 Squares

All Notices must be sold out.
"Lists of Everything" column, 5 cts. per line.
Double rate on position of choice.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & DODINGTON.
Counsellors-at-Law,
Solicitors of Bonds, Mortgages and Commercial Paper. Corner of Park avenue and Second street.

W. V. STERER,
Counselor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner,
No. 2 Park Place, North Avenue. 8-26-3m

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box 118, Dunellen, N. J. Residence in rear of Christ Church. Telephone connection.

Dr. CHARLES B. THURE,
Dentist,
20 West First street. A new local anesthetic applied to the gums will extract without pain. Hours 9 to 4.

H. HARD,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 71, Scotch Plains, N. J. Orders left at N. J. Carr's Lumber Yard, store, or at my residence, Scotch Plains, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—1y

OSCAR D. TEALL,
Architect,
247 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 43, 44 and 45, Mutual Life Building.] Residence, Plainfield, N. J.—1y

J. R. FOSTER,
Veterinary Surgeon,
Office in A. R. Barber's livery stable on Somerset street. Residence, Plainfield, N. J. Calls promptly attended. Telephone connection. Horses to board by the day, week or month. Satisfaction guaranteed. 12 East Fifth street.—1y

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VanArsdale,
PIANO TUNER.
Orders left at the Constitutionalist Office, Plainfield, N. J., or addressed to Box 1, Dunellen, N. J., will receive prompt attention. Terms, $2 per tuning. P. O. Box 100 or left at Residence, Somerset street, Plainfield, will receive prompt attention. 10 Years' experience. Leave this street.—1y[illegible]

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Residence and Shop No. 26 East 2d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. apay

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds,
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES IN THEIR SEASON.
NO. 24 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
A. LUTKINS. L. A. HUMMER.
Manly

TO THE PUBLIC!

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.

It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
Depot.

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
(Formerly Clerk's.)
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.
Repairing neatly and promptly done.

FOR BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS
In Furniture
GO TO
23, 25 and 27 PARK AVE.
Garret Q. Packer,

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones.
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments to select from.
All work solicited in the most skilful manner at as low a rate as possible. Estimates furnished on application.
D. MANNING,
Factory on rear of N. H. Ch., PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Monuments erected in Greenwood Cemetery, N. Y.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No. 2 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of desirable goods always in stock manufactured at low figures. apday

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
Is now the sole proprietor of the old established
MARKET at
No. 14 NORTH AVENUE.
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the finest grades of Meats and Salt meats. Fish of all kinds, Oysters, Clams, Game in season at the lowest market prices. Orders left at the store will receive prompt attention. A share of the public patronage is solicited.—1y

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR R. R. STATION.)
JAS. M. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Rooms fitted, Furnished and Renovated throughout.
Terms, $2 per day, or reasonable rates by the week.

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Unity Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. BOYD, Proprietor.
Permanent and transient board, at fair rates.
First-class cuisine and sheds attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours.

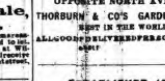
Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest, at the rate of three per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER, "
ELIAS R. POPE, Treasurer.

S. S. WOOLSTON, A. P. BUCKLE.
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTERS' SUPPLIES. 30 NORTH AVENUE
ap26tf

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS,
BEST IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE.
apay

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
[Successors to C. E. & C. E. Brown & Co.,]
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Shades, Anaglypta, Hand, Leather Stamped Flock Papers, &c. Borders for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
3-13-97

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE,
[Successor to John W. Laing.]
Laing's Hotel Stables


Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for Hire.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure drives. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day, week or month. Stable open day and night.
TELEPHONE CALL, No. 28.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to serve demands for all kinds of turn-outs in a stylish, prompt and obliging manner and platforms. Mr. Thobaud, as of old, has charge of the office.

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor
Office—Vanderbeek's Hair store, Park Avenue
The Accommodation Express will make daily trips between the city, delivering goods and baggage, and from the Depot, or from places of business. Moving of Furniture, Pianos, &c., with double and safety. Prompt attention given to Orders.

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
These Companies deserve the confidence of the public.
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York,
as guarantee to assure a constancy, economy and promptness by Fire as never before, and I solicit a continuance of the liberal patronage heretofore so liberally
NATHAN HARPER
No. 2 Park Avenue.

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.
Mayone

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also Representative other first-class First-premium Companies. Agents of the Home Mutual Life Association. Ireland for sale. First and Only Building Bank Stock Bought and Sold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale.
OFFICE:
2 FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JOHN C. POPE. ELIAS R. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
No. 10 NORTH AVENUE, NORTH PLAINFIELD.
Orders called for and delivered. A share of the public patronage is solicited.—1y

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue,
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET,
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling, Drawing and Sewing. 9 11 tf

PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass.
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
4-2-3

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Corey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—24 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans for Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 228. Telephone connection. 11Sep

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Heat Timothy Seed.
House Furnishing Goods.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 8-23-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE.
Hugo Weigman,
20 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J. mch28tf

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the Concord ripe Grape, fermented in Speer's vineyards, and left long until they attain a delicate richness, purity and delightful flavor and invaluable are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Dr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest and weakest invalid can take it with the greatest advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged, and to nursing mothers. Sold by the bottle or case.

Tonic and Strengthening Properties

Send for Descriptive Circular.

It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice

is the juice of the Concord Grape, preserved in its natural state so it runs from the press by fumigation and sterilizing, thereby preserving the virtue of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Socialite) Claret is held in high estimation for the richness as a Table Wine, and is highly recommended for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry

is a Wine of superior character, and possesses unrivaled in this country for medical purposes. It keeps perfectly in any climate. Each of the grapes from which it is distilled is

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND WINE DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

Speer's Extra Dry Catawba

is a Wine of superior character, and possesses unrivaled in this country for medical purposes. It keeps perfectly in any climate. Each of the grapes from which it is distilled is

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND WINE DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

Speer's Sparkling Catawba

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE, A. L. FORCE
Editors and Proprietors.

THE PARTY OF DEMOCRACY.

To the student of political history the Democratic party presents a subject full of interesting and profitable research.

Going back a hundred years, and following the career of that political organization, step by step, he finds it resolutely combatting foes powerfully equipped and madly bent on conquest, and closely investigating the means employed by the enemies of Democracy, under the various partisan names assumed by them, he discovers that every generation has had to wage a rapid-sighted warfare, vituperative, calumny and satire, have been constantly wielded to cripple and destroy the party of Democracy.

He finds the many opprobious terms, from time to time invented and applied by venomous opponents to the best of men because of their Democratic allegiance, and notes the repeated predictions put forth by these partisans that Democracy would surely ruin the country, and, as a party, meet an early and ignominious death.

He ponders, and asks himself why, in view of a record of such conflict, the Democratic party has survived intact and to-day stands as vigorous and mighty as ever?

Then calling to mind the numerous anti-Democratic parties that have flourished, sickened and died, and the all important fact that the real glory and prosperity of the country has been the work of the party of Democracy, he scatters the last and final sneer at the victorious coward march and undimished strength of that organized body abides prominently in two sources—Its LOYALTY TO THE PRINCIPLES OF THE FATHERS and its DEVOTION TO THE RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLE.

He is fully satisfied and boldly avows—"I, too, am now and will continue to be a Jeffersonian Democrat!"

In re-districting the Assembly districts the Third of Union C ounty remains the same as before.

The new Freeholder act failed to become a law. It is a pity we would have made the Union County Board Democratic.

Hon. Fred. Marsh faithfully looked after the interest of his constituents during the session of the Legislature. All measures introduced by him were passed.

Among the many meritorous measures passed by the last Legislature was the repeal of the Wet Jersey Cleanly Society; an iniquitous and dangerous organization.

Senator Keye has made many warm friends during the past Winter. His colleagues in the Legislature found him a dignified and courteous gentleman and an able official.

The editorial fraternity had a staunch friend in Senator Winton, who was Chairman of the Printing Committee. Dangerous and useless bills were taken care of by him so that they were never more heard from.

Should the Governor sign the County License bill, Plainfield will be relieved of the annual torture of "License" or "No License" elections. It will be a great relief to have this question removed from the Councilmanic body.

Under the new Congressional re-districting act, Union County is no longer in the Third District, but is now in the Eighth, which is strongly Democratic. While regretting the severing of connection with old political friends in Monmouth and Middlesex, we trust to make as good ones in the new fields to which we are assigned.

The Legislature just adjourned will go on record as being one of the most orderly and deliberate bodies that has met in the State of New Jersey for years. It was free from corruption and ably presided over by President Abram and Speaker Rogers. At the close of the session Mr. Rogers was presented with a handsome gold watch and chain by his colleagues.

Governor Abbett signed the bill providing for the World's Fair Commissioners and appropriating $20,000 for the necessary expenses. He sent the following names to the Senate as Commissioners, which were confirmed: Edward Bettle, of Camden county; Walter Lloyd Smith, of Passaic; Frederick Mercer; Millard F. Rose, of Middlesex; Peter E Swartzweller, of Warren; Garret A. Hobart, of Passaic; David Doll, of Essex; Peter Hauck, of Hudson.

The county license boards authorized by the new license laws passed during the present session of the Legislature are under the control of bold and unscrupulous politicians who do not hesitate to use their power for partisan advantage. In both of these cities, and probably in others, the refusal to grant, or the continuance of one, is made to depend upon whether the applicant for license will support the Republican ticket or the partisan organ of Republicanism is in control of the board. This condition has become an open abuse which demands recognition and correction. This correction the new law gives by creating a tribunal to which an appeal may be taken from the wrongful actions of the local board.—Trenton True American.

Is Absolutely Necessary.

George M. Smith contributes a long article to the last number of The Epoch about Senator McPherson. It is largely complimentary to his character, but here is a section of it intended possibly for the edification of Jerseymen: "Many persons have been led to believe that an almighty fund existed between Mr. McPherson and Mr. Leon Abbett, the brilliant Governor of New Jersey. This is a mistake. It is true that in the Democracy of the State there are two factions, one of which is well-city organized with competent leaders in the special interest of Senator McPherson, while the other recognizes the Governor as its head. To say that these facts are inimical, or that their chiefs are other than fellow-Democrats, is an error of judgment. Indeed, it may be declared with authority that when the term of Senator Rodgers expires Mr. Abbett will be allowed to attain his ambition of going to the United States Senate; and Mr. McPherson will not put so much as a straw in his way."

—Mr. S. Freeman, of Terrill road, has been affiliated by the I. o. of his live stock, including two valuable cows.

MORE ABOUT THE TROLLEY.

Are Blind to Plainfield's Interests.

To the Editor of The Press:—It is entirely natural that many citizens of Plainfield should be easily misled by misrepresentations concerning the overhead trolley wire trolley system for street railway motive power. A large proportion of our people remain at home and many have never seen a railway of the kind, except the primitive road at Asbury Park, at Baltimore, Md., and at Coney Island, two similar failures have been extensively and dishonestly used, to mislead uninformed people. Of late years the most conclusive proofs that the electric trolley system is a failure. It is a magnificent success. The development of the electric rail motor into an absolutely safe, reliable, and economical power for street-car propulsion has been so recent AND SO RAPID that many intelligent and generally well informed people are amazed to discover, on investigation, how far behind the times they are in holding opinions concerning electric motive railways based on experiments of some built 2, 3 or 4 years since. The poorest electric railway ever built has given better accommodations than the best horse car ever made, and is cheaper, safer and more. The Morrison case is no exception, and it will be seen that a modern electric trolley railway system of the kind, with the best of the rejected system which was built subject to certain guarantees (not fulfilled, I am informed,) and no doubt condemned to enable a different trolley system to be substituted. Either the Thomson-Houston or the Sprague (Edison) will probably be adopted. Horse cars won't long be tolerated by that enterprising Yankee community. Opinions formed a year ago, or based on electric roads constructed before 1890, are worthless to-day.

The poles and wire as now constructed are not "unsightly;" they are in fact not noticeable at all. The ugly frame and unsightly roof and sides of the trolley car are sightly and are noticeable. No man, woman or child in the United States has ever been killed or injured by coming in contact with the trolley system wires. The maximum voltage of 500 is abundantly proved to be harmless to human life, while there is a pitifully long record of all that persons will receive the current. Every day millions of passengers are being carried in safety and comfort on more than 250 such roads in the United States, without any electric injuries or fatalities to human being. What rank nonsense, then, is this hue and cry about "danger from the hot coils!"

The overhead wire construction is practically free from all these objections, yet the opposition is not appreciably lessened. It must conclude that all that trolley element is merely a convenient pretext, handy for those who are in fact striving to defeat the citizens of Plainfield from these transportation benefits which the public comfort and health demand.

These men profess to be public-spirited, but their opposition is most unreasonable and uncharitable opp osition to the well-being of their fellow-citizens. It is truly a humiliating exhibition of mistaken selfishness and narrowness. The Plainfield men so blind to their own welfare, and to that of their city, can see a trolley at a distance of a few miles certainly too tenderminded to be liable to injury from 500 volts in the trolley wire, whereas on our level streets not over 200 would be necessary to run the palace cars. The "Jersey Lightning" some are popularly supposed to take at the "Country Club House" is far more dangerous than a trolley wire.

"Upon what asset do these our little would-be Cassius's feed" that they should consider themselves superior to those who have studied the question more deeply, not so perfectly adapted to the public pleasure? The electric cars must run on some street; they cannot be operated underground like the railway is put on top of their houses. Broadway is the natural and daring pathway to Short Hills. When the time is ripe for the then "must-banks" can be torbed, and the street can be handsomely graded and stoned from curb to curb and thoroughly drained. Then can be taken down. It will this become a beautiful highway, for they will be stimulated to adorn their more valuable property. Then the present unsightly sands will then pass by to admire and applaud, and the right and left hand fences will be no cause for safety against collisions, and each be wider than the centre pavement now. But, better still, they will themselves have been made, like their more favored neighbors, prosperous.

Then the city will be laid out in *

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

OBJECTORS PARTICULARLY WELCOME.

A Few Rods for all Plainfield to Support the Proposed Electric Railway.

A special train will leave Plainfield Friday 1:20 p. m. for Newark, and everybody is invited to go to that city and personally inspect the electric road there that is proposed for this city.

There will be no expense attached to the trip. It is free to all. The Plainfield Street Railway company is thoroughly satisfied that there would be no object to the road and the system if they knew anything about it. Consequently this opportunity has been arranged at the Company's own expense, and they are especially desirous that the principal objectors will be present.

Mayor Gilbert's confe-ssi in a speech to the Council, last week, that he had gone to Newark and found there would be no nuisance of the proposed road and convinced that it was something the people of Plainfield did not want. He was agreeably disappointed and now honestly believes the people would like it.

That experience of Mayor Gilbert was also the experience of THE PRESS and others who went to Newark for and talked with them. It is safe to say that not an objector who has spoken in public or signed a remonstrance against the road in this city, knew what he was talking about.

—Be sure you sign the petition to have the freight house removed.

—Mrs. Maggie Bailey, wife of Charles Bailey, died suddenly at her home on Washington avenue, Dunellen, Saturday, at the age of 34 years.

—A young man who thought the fire of Saturday night was in the telephone building almost broke his neck falling up the stairs in his hurry.

—An unknown man traveling along the Jersey Central tracks Sunday night walked off the Liberty street bridge. He seemed but little hurt, and was able to walk away again.

—W. W. Cortell has been cleaning the marble house on top of the pole in front of his place of business, West Front street. He expects the birds home about April 1.

—William J. Ford has just purchased through Mulford's real estate agency, a new home at 38 East Fourth street to take the place of the one recently destroyed by fire.

—The entire contents of the Sewaren House, at Sewaren, are to be sold at public auction Wednesday of next week. John P. Turner, proprietor for so many years, will retire from business there.

—Plumbing thieves are about. Among the several houses recently robbed is that of Mr. Bodine on Sandford avenue. The thieves stole all the brass fixtures one night, and the next stole all the lead pipes.

—Every name helps! Although hundreds have already signed the petition to remove the freight house, hundreds more have not, although in favor of it. Stick a pin right here. Stop at THE PRESS office and sign.

—Considerable excitement was caused on the downtown streets Tuesday, p. m., by the running away of Zephyr truck horse No. 1. Chief Samuel Bonnell succeeded in getting the animals under control without any damage being done.

—The value of having the water-supply of the Plainfield street flow well came from the race-way back of French's mill was sufficiently demonstrated Saturday night, just when the bountiful supply of water resulting from the improvement was needed.

—The many repairs that the householder finds at this season to be necessary will be promptly and faithfully attended to if given in charge of Theodore Gray, of 31 Wellstreet place. His card in another column indicates his readiness and ability as an all-round, first-class workman in his line.

—Dunellen:—remarks the New York Continent—"Is in a State of unusual events. That is, it is in New Jersey. The latest freak of the spirit of mischief in Dunellen is the introduction of a pistol cartridge into the pipe of William Webber. When William smoked the pipe the cartridge exploded, and now he is looking for three teeth, a clay pipe, and a lock of his baby's hair."

Plainfield Commissioners.

The New Jersey Legislature in joint session Thursday chose the following Plainfielders to Act as Commissioners of Deeds:

First ward—Wm. A. Cubbington, Charles D. VanWinkle, Louis F. Wadsworth (reappointment).

Second ward—J. A. Demarest (reappointment), Vincent W. Nash, Leonard Spangenberg.

Third ward—Frank M. Bacon, Elias R. Pope.

Fourth ward—Simeon D. Moffett, Levi Reid.

The Season Opening.

Applications for rooms are being received every day at The Albion, and the prospect now is that before the 20th of May that hostelry will all be occupied. Meanwhile the opening of the billiard room and bar will afford the gentlemen of that aristocratic neighborhood a place where they may meet one another of an evening and enjoy a social game of pool or a talk on politics. S. W. Searle looks after the comfort of the patrons.

To Dedicate the Methodist Chapel.

The Monroe Avenue chapel of the Methodist Episcopal church will be dedicated Sunday, April 5. Bishop Andrews will preach at the chapel in the morning, a platform meeting will be held in the afternoon, and Dr. Reiveswill preach at night. The regular services will be held at the church.

The ladies of the Aid Society raised $300, to be used in furnishing the chapel, at their recent "Martha Washington Tea Party".

An Unexpected Delight.

There was never a more thoroughly gratified audience than that which listened to H. J. Krehbiel, at The Casino, Thursday. His lecture on "Wagner" "Meisterzinger von Nurnberg," was an unexpected delight to the majority of those present, and the cast himself charmed them all.

He was assisted at the piano by Mr. Venino and Miss Utter. There is now no doubt that a series of like lectures by Mr. Krehbiel in this city next season, would be an artistic and financial success.

A Near Fredt by the Fair.

The basar and supper conducted by the Ladies' Christian Work Society last week was a great success. The profit netted was $311.10. All goods on hand were combined in a reception style Saturday night by E. T. Dunn, the popular fancy-terer. The ladies had so much kindly assistance from so many people that it would take a long time to thank them all personally, so they want THE PRESS to extend their sincerest gratitude to those who were so generous with their time, voice, age, and to all who contributed as liberally with donations.

PERSONALIA.

Mrs. E. D. Moffett has returned from a two weeks' visit to her daughter, Mrs. W. H. Thomas of Syracuse.

Mrs. Townsend Buckmore entertained the members of the "Ladies' p" of the T. M. C. A., at luncheon, Saturday.

The Rev. Dr. J. R. VanMeter will preach at his former pastorate, the Methodist Episcopal church, April 12.

Trustee Thomas has been re-elected to the Dunellen School District. The sum of $2,500 was appropriated for school purposes.

The Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut delivered an address before the Epworth Leagues and Christian Endeavor Societies of Rahway, Friday night.

When the Rev. D. Fay Mills has finished his labors at Bloomfield, he will go to Cleveland, Ohio, where over twenty churches have united under his leadership.

Conductor Pitzbach is ill with la grippe at his home in Brooklyn. That is the reason of the notice in Monday's PRESS that there would be no rehearsal of the Choral Society.

When the Rev. D. Fay Mills has finished his labors at Bloomfield, he will go to Cleveland, Ohio, where over twenty churches have united under his leadership.

Conductor Pitzbach is ill with la grippe at his home in Brooklyn. That is the reason of the notice in Monday's PRESS that there would be no rehearsal of the Choral Society.

The marriage of Wm. M. Sandford, Jr., son of Wm. M. Sandford of East Front street, to Miss Mary Walker of St. Paul, took place at that far-western city, Sunday, March 15.

For the only time within our memory, James E. Marvine appeared at the Council meeting last evening in the role of a man who knew absolutely nothing of what he was talking about.

The marriage took place in New York, Thursday, of Frederic A. Poliock, son of West Seventh street, this city, and Annie L., daughter of Christopher Fine, of New York city. The Rev. William Snodgrass officiated.

Jeremiah Manning & Son have taken the contract for constructing five dwelling houses on Sixth street, opposite Grace church, for O. T. Fisher and T. E. Lowe. The houses will cost about $5,000 each.

The sad news has reached THE PRESS of the death of the wife of Albert Winter, late of the firm of Schepdin, Baldwin, Tweedy & Co. She died at their home in New York city. One of the twin babies born at the time of her death, survives her.

The Hyde-French dam case was argued before the Chancellor, the other day, by Messrs. Chamberlain and Reed. As THE PRESS said some time ago, it is a battle between counsel entirely. However the decision goes, it means a defeat for the counsel who loses the case.

E. Lua Babcock, wife of George H. Babcock of West Eighth street, died Saturday afternoon. Her life had already been despaired of when on a last resort a very delicate surgical operation was performed, in the hope that it might restore her to life. The utmost skill was used, but in vain.

Last Thursday evening a pleasant wedding party was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. P. Doeringer, on Duer street, Plainfield, when John Schmidt, of Newark, formerly of this city but now of New Market, and Miss Ida Ruenmeicin, were married. William Debaje acted as "best man" and Miss Carrie Lauber as bridesmaid. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. F. Koechli.

The many friends of Judge Ulrich and wife will be grieved to learn that they have lost their eight-months' child, Margaretta, on Monday. The entire family, including even the servants, have been sorely afflicted for more than a week, with what appears to have been a very bad case of la grippe, to which the baby succumbed. The sympathy of the entire community is with the Judge and his wife.

FIRST GAME FOR THE CRESCENTS.

Blazin Boys Defeated in the In-door Base-ball Contest.

The in-door base-ball game at The Crescent Thursday was enjoyed by an audience numbering nearly three hundred people. Though most of the players were amateurs, they acquitted themselves in a manner that would have done credit to professionals. The two teams played as follows:

CRESCENT LEAGUE.	POSITIONS.	BICYLE CLUB.
Lee	Catcher	Bowne
Jones	Pitcher	R. Erickson
Van Winkle	1st Base	Brown
Rogers	2d Base	Rushmore
Williams	3d Base	Murray
Dunn	Short stop	Hoffman
Williams	Left field	J. Erickson
Davis	Right field	Boobe

At the outset the Crescents took the lead, and maintained it throughout the game. When the Bicycle boys went to the bat for the last time, in the ending of the sixth inning, the Crescents were far ahead. The "Bis", worked desperately to tie the score, but to make ten runs in a single inning was more than could be accomplished, and they had to content themselves with a sale of five, thus making a total of 24, against their opponents' 19.

The applause from the spectators was frequent and generous, and a repetition of the interesting game would no doubt be attended by a large audience.

The especial features of the evening included tremendous slides by the Erickson boys, two-base hits by Lee and Sandford, and a home run by Rushmore. Rogers played an excellent game on third, and made some first-rate catches of hard balls. Dunn did excellent work in the box. Chief Murray, Jr., umpired the game to the satisfaction of all.

Union Good Friday Service.

A union service of the congregations of this city will be held in the Crescent Avenue church the evening of Good Friday. Rev. Dr. Hall, of Elizabeth, will preach and be in charge of the pastors of the several churches. Christian people of every name who may be ready to meet in the name of our Lord and Saviour that hour in prayerful meditation on his cruss and passion, are cordially invited to come.

Principal Gray Resigns His Salary.

Charles W. Gray has resigned as principal of the Dunellen public school, to accept a position in another city, where the present salary of $900 will be doubled. His place at Dunellen will be filled by Mr. Roberts of South Plainfield, who will assume charge of the school about April 1.

Miss Lizzie Salter, of the Dunellen primary department, has also resigned, and will leave the first of April.

Mr. Reed's Notes Lose Their suit.

A case that is of interest to the holders of accident insurance policies was decided yesterday in the Supreme Court at Trenton before Justice Bookhover. John Herbert Reed, who was a partner of Martin I. Conley, of North Plainfield was insured for $5,000 in the Travelers' Insurance Company, of Hartford, and for $1,000 in the Equitable Accident Insurance Company. He was thrown from his carriage and fell on his head, on October 31, 1890. A few days afterward he died while walking down Broadway, he dropped dead.

His heirs claimed that his death was the result of injuries received in the accident. The companies contended that death was due to a complication of diseases, and the jury gave a verdict in favor of the company.

The work of constructing fire-escapes on The Albion will be begun this week.

THE RULE ISN'T IN IT.

Even the Doubting "Patricians" Who Jeer Duly Converted to the Trolley System that Plainfield is to Have, and to Approve Heartily Its Where Soon Be Wanted.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Of course I was utterly astonished by the communication of "Pro Bono Publico" among our usual contribution to another paper in relation to the trolley system. There is no argument there convincing them to call your attention to a snake. I warns the cockles of his heart toward you, and opens the way for his overwhelming to your side of the case.

However, I forgive him. His only crime, doubtless, and one which, let us hope, he will forgive, is his youth.

But several duly spoken in the apples of gold in pictures of silver. Mr. Goddard's fair and able letter in Tuesday's PRESS carried the weight which the arguments of an expert always will when presented in such a rational manner. If citizens of his calibre, who know whereof they speak, would always come forward when the people are agitated over some momentous question, their testimony would be very long quoted.

But to the point, however, not defend the unsightliness of the trolley system; and isn't he rather severe on the newspaper reporters? Sometimes he mentally accepted those of THE PRESS.

All of which is introductory to saying that, acting upon your advice, Mr. Editor, and, without rather irreverently to mix man," to go and inspect the Newark Rapid Transit Road, I have done so.

I had the honor of accompanying the Mayor, several members of the Common Council, and other distinguished citizens. We inspected the road and all the paraphernalia of the power house and cars, to the courtesy of the Messrs. Nevins; and as you prophesied and as I intimated might be the case, I have deserted my friend, the pallicot and pathetic mule!

Let him go hang!

He is not in it!

The Newark road makes a circuit of five miles at the average rate of ten miles per hour. The rate is lower through the crowded parts of the city, and higher in the open. The fact that no accident occurred in Newark was $80,000 per mile of double track. In Plainfield it will be about $60,000. Those figures, of course, include the cost of the power house and machinery in the Newark plant, two 250 horse power Corliss engines, with the necessary boilers, &c., &c.

The lowest cost of construction in Plainfield will be due to the fact that only a part of the road will be double-track, and, also, to the fact that to run cars on our level streets will require less power.

The cars, which are made by the Pullman Company, are very handsome, and seat twenty-four persons comfortably. They cost $5,000 each, $3,000 of which represents the cost of the electrical equipment to be used.

The other members of the party being "public" each will, at the proper time, render their own verdict. I am not authorized to speak for them, but I think it will not be accused of "giving anything away" when I say that the general impression made was a favorable one.

Now, Mr. Editor, I have been long, long since defunct, "I cannot tell a lie": hence, I cannot say that the unsightliness of the structure is unlikely to offend, but it is certainly reduced to a minimum.

As for the noise:—by means of cogs covered with raw-hide, the fearful racket of the trolley is "done away" in the case in the trolley of "to-day" to a low, sweet song of somnolent effect! Doubtless Plainfield mothers with cantankerous little babies, if Plainfield infants are not all lambs-of-God, will crowd the cars if only to have their throbbe lulled to sleep by the dulcet whis-s-s of the raw-hide cog!

Just as I close this letter, THE PRESS arrives, with a communication from Lemuel William Serrell in which he says that the trolley is to-morrow, or "about three months hence, will be absolutely noiseless."

We can wait three months, but the trolley of "to-day" is quiet good enough for me.

I observe, also, that Mr. Serrell makes no allusion in regard to my humorous communications. Now, Lemuel William has not all the modesty in the world! He has much, I know; but there are others who have been more often and more decided flower! Hence their desire to hide blushingly behind a non de plume. Moreover, this self-same modesty causes them to doubt whether an argument will be a better argument, or a truth a greater truth, because appearing over their individual signatures. Wherefore, I trust, at least he should follow the precedent he quotes and bring an action for "anonymous communication"; I will in this instance, and with your permission, subscribe myself, Yours truly,

THOS. S. BURR,
"The Patriarch".

Committee Reports and Bargains Agreed to Without Discussion.

The only one of the City on the Water Supply question to contract and his name come up before Judge Codington for a hearing Saturday. The charge was a violation of the city ordinance against digging up the street without permission of the Council.

As the Supreme Court has, since the arrest of the defendants, expressed its desire to look into the ordinance and decide whether it has any force against the Plainfield Water Supply Company, neither He nor any special charges. Corporation Counsel Marsh for the city, and Frank S. Bergen for the Company, agreed to the postponement of the hearing until the Supreme Court's decision is received.

The Corporation Counsel moved the case and the defendant's counsel said he would not object. Then a inquired of Capt. Grant whether the digging complained of had taken place on ground between the pumping station and Cedar Brook. Capt. Grant said that it had. Mr. Marsh produced and read the recent order of the Court published exclusively in THE PRESS some time ago, the effect from ordering the ordinance on that particular street until further order of the Supreme Court, and stated that in view of Captain Grant's statement it would be impossible for the City Court to proceed further with the case until further order from the Supreme Court. To do so would be to be guilty of contempt of court, for which all concerned would be liable to attachment. He emphasized that the Court made no order, but leave it to the counsel for the city to bring up the case at the earliest time the Supreme Court would permit. This was adopted.

A Foreign View of Recent Schoolmarm Abductions.

[From The New York World.]

Night telegraphers may come and night telegraphers may go, but the abduction of women there forever. Rails cannot be brought out by the nightly with which the Jersey Central handles its night schools. Not a wire and not one of the telegraph poles in Plainfield that the managers was not cut down during the Granger excitement. There is a station in Plainfield that the managers was not cut down during the Granger excitement. There is a station in Plainfield that the managers was not cut down during the Granger excitement. There is a station

A FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH.

Light of the morning,
Darling of dawning,
Rhyme Bells, little daughter of mirth!
Into what fountain
Of youth shall I plunge
Sixty of my years for six years of time
Wings cannot vie with thee,
Lightly I fly with thee,
Gay as the thistle-down over the lea:
Life is all magic,
Come or weigh,
Traced as the rainbow is daily with arc
Promise and ringing,
Hope and delight.
Curves when the light comes, like that of the
Lilt to the play of it!
This is the way of it,
All's in the music and naught in the words—
Child or grandchildren,
Hearken and laugh.
Ballad of Eris or merry Beulah sing,
Tales to entrance
Some lucky quest
Thought free thy memory shedding cheap.

Surely I know it,
Artist, my poet,
Orpheus my minstrel of indirect heart,
Borrows, what are they?
Pioneer or sun, moon?
Vestas in sunshine, the dew from the flowers?
Years, I am glad of them!
Would that I had of them
More and yet more, while thine mingled with mine.

Age, I make light of it!
Fear not the sight of it
Time's but for playmates, whose tops are divine
—E. W. Hinchman.

SITTING DOWN ON HIM.

The Unfortunate Man Who Seeks to Do the World a Favor.

HERE is one sort of man to whom the world never gives half a show, and he is, at the same time, the very man who seeks, in the goodness of his heart, to do the world a favor. I have frequently met him, and though I may have offered him no direct encouragement, I have always found him a friend and well-wisher. At midnight one night as a train sailed along toward Buffalo, with at least eighteen out of twenty people in my sleeping-car sound asleep, the man who wanted to do us a favor seized by lucky chance the harmonium from an upper berth. At about the second screech every body was awake and each expressed as the tones were flung about that car with great recklessness:

"Where's that kitten?"

"Somebody kill him!"

"What on earth does this mean?"

"Say, porter, has the train run mad?"

The music was stopped and the man's feelings were deeply wounded. When the row quieted down so that his voice could be heard, he said:

"I am awfully sorry about it, but I assure you that I only had the good of others at heart. I couldn't get to sleep, and thinking the rest of you might be rolling along, and wishing that when we were going to run off in the woods or drop through a bridge I thought I'd soothe you all along. I'm sorry, but thanks I get for it! Not another blamed soothe if you lie awake till night!"

I could see in his face and tone and clearly discovered his motive, and it made me real sorry when a Chicago gravel roofer in the berth opposite took his fist across the aisle and said he could, would and should like any man on earth who set in on that when he was dreaming of a contract to gravel roof all the world's fair buildings.

A lot of us were seated on the stone parapet at the brink of Niagara falls, at the extreme end of Prospect park. There had been such expressions as: "Mad river is going to the sea;" "going to death," "swift rush to destruction," and "the mighty power of nature," and every body had got over the spell and was probably wondering how many miles an hour he could paddle a canoe large against the current after the man who had our interest at heart arrived. He was a little out of breath, having started too much late, but he got at once proceeded to say:

"Ladies and gentlemen: Some of you may think that this is canvas painted to represent water, the same as on the stage, but I honestly assure you it isn't. Others of you may think it is water squirted down here from the Buffalo water works, but that's another mistake. It comes right out of the river up there, and them rocks there is real and true rocks. Don't go away carrying with you a false idea of this great and stupendous work of nature. It's all wool and straight as a spotted cow."

"IT'S ALL WOOL AND STRAIGHT AS A SPOTTED COW."

His speech seemed to hurt most of the people. Instead of waiting to inquire into his errors, they got down on the car and Hiram Hathaway beckoned him aside, struck his fist under his nose and gasped:

"Say, you infernal lunkhead, I can knock your eyebrows off in about four seconds!"

"You can? Is it possible! But what have I done? Is it the feller what called you a liar."

"Durn your buttons, but what did you come here and break in on my meditations for?"

"For your own good. I didn't want you to go away thinking this was some illusion got up to bunco a part of our money. That water there is just as real as the water in your well to home. I know it, for I've seen more of it up in a cup. Come right down here and I'll prove it."

I heard a fat man growling and blowing and telling what he would do, and I knew another disappointed man went away from us vowing that he would never put himself out for his fellow beings again. I'm sorry for him too to thank him and to let him know that I appreciated his sacrifice, but I could not overhear him.

You get a splendid view of the sea from the board walk at Manhattan beach, Coney Island. Six of us sat on one of the benches there one day, and we were very quiet. You can go a great deal of the board down at the sea if you are so inclined. You can begin at the bath house, with its rooms, with its charges of five dollars per day (no dogs allowed), and gradually work out past the chains in the surf, and beyond—the white manned waves—the ships sailing up and down—going to Europe—sailing over the bones of dead men, and all. We were busy with these thoughts when along came a Long Island farmer who had just disinherited two children at the hotel kitchen. He wanted us to go home and tell a straight story, and as his manner was in a positive way and somewhat "Some folks get the different causes all tangled up together and can't tell which from t'other. This is the Atlantic ocean. Brother B. down on a slip of paper, so you won't forget it."

The six of us bowed.

"It's like the seven-pounder I can remember, and allers boiled the same."

Six more bows.

"Other is salt. Lots of fellers won't believe it when fust told, but they find out by tasting."

Six more bows.

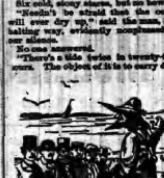
"It's more'n a thousand fathoms to t'other shore; there's more hills on the bottom of the ocean over fifty feet high. It's a beautiful sight to see them waves rolling in. Any one of you could write a wonderful description's mine. I used to think the foam on top was cotton-batting or wool, but it isn't. It comes from a sort of secretion on the bed of the ocean. A good many ships have gone down beneath the dash. Nine years and I allow one ocean water to wash my rags in if I have time to start it. It starts the heartiest quicken."

Six cold, stony stares, but no bows.

"Gentlemen, be satisfied that the ocean will ever dry up," said the man, in a halting way, evidently nonplussed by our attitude.

No one answered.

"There's a little notion in twenty-four hours. The object of it is to carry dead



SIX COLD GLARES, NO BOWS.

cats off the shore. Better write that down afore you forgit it."

No answer.

"Well, all right. Some folks don't seem to want to learn anything. If they don't they needn't. I've done my duty, and if fellers don't appreciate it they can go to Halifax!"

I met just another such man at Lynchburg, Va. He was from Rhode Island. I had just come out of the caves when he beckoned me aside and whispered:

"Isn't carry away any erroneous impression of this great natural wonder."

"How do you mean?"

"Why, you probably imagine that it was dug out by a syndicate. It wasn't. It was formed by nature."

"Is that possible?"

"Yes, and them huts in there is real huts, and not made up out of cloth."

"Dear me!"

"And this mountain is the real solid thing, and not painted on cloth and hung up to deceive the people."

"How you talk!"

"I thought you might go away feeling that you had been imposed upon, and perhaps feel bad about it, and so I thought I'd tell you. Everything here is genuine, even to the darkness in the cave."—M. Quad, in Detroit Free Press.

The Man with the Toothache.

Have you ever noticed the antics of a man with an ulcerated or badly decayed tooth that transforms his whole existence into a horrible nightmare? He will remember that at a certain hour he will have it jerked out, and is inclined to compliment himself upon his nerve. But when the time comes he finds it very convenient to fill an important engagement that can't possibly be broken. So he goes to the apothecary and buys a little vial of creosote or cocaine and dockters his tooth until it is better, and then all thoughts of the dentist fly out of his mind. Then he reaches the condition when he is inclined to look upon the dentist as a wholly unnecessary adjunct of society. But the ache comes again another day and with it a new resolve to call upon the dentist without delay. Then out comes the creosote bottle and another temporary relief and he is again a free and independent citizen. All these devices, however, only postpone his fate, and the time will come when he will be all the more painful for the delay. Better go at once to the dentist and have him pull out or mend the offending member and stop the shock that a sore tooth is sure to give to the system.—Chicago Post.

SPOOL FURNITURE.

A Great Variety of Useful Articles That Every Household Can Make.

Spools are used, strung on strong steel or iron rods, to make the legs for a small table. Obtain four rods of a size to fit into the holes of spools you have collected, and long enough to make the height you wish the table to be. Then fastened at the bottom by a round piece of wood nailed to the bottom spool. Next procure a piece of wood a small square of wood for the top of your table, and, if you choose, another for a shelf for under it. Four or six will be the number. He will also, for a small sum, fasten these squares to the legs you have prepared. Now your table is ready to be decorated, for which you must procure some enamel paints, and also some good gilding. Paint the top and shelf black with a single line of gilding near the edge; paint the spools, also black, except a tiny line around the place where their edges meet. If the cracks show at this part, and make unsightly before gilding. The table may be further ornamented by having a row of spools, covered by rods, put around the top of the table, fastened to small cubes of wood in the corners, and a row of them placed standing around the edge of the shelf, held by a slender piece of wood fastened along the tops.

If desired, the table may be painted all red and gold, and instead of the shelf, square covered with colored plush can be used. This makes a very pretty table, but care is to be made with spools are rascals, book-shelves, cabinets and screens.—American Home Graphic.

BARREL CLOTHES-HAMPER.

It Is Neater and More Compact Than Its Square Rival.

A clothes-hamper is a convenience every housekeeper should have, still it is one I should not be able to pay the price asked for the articles at the stores. My hamper is a barrel, and while it may not be quite as handsome as some, it is just as convenient. The barrel I have in this many I have noticed, and pretty enough for any hall or bedroom. It is made of a small barrel with a cover. After cleaning and scalding the barrel thoroughly dry, and if it is not perfectly thoroughly dry, I liked it smoothly on the inside with oil sallee; before put-ting it in I whacked, and afterward it a little. I sewed the breadths up skirt fashion, then put a circular piece in for the bottom, and sewed it in with a deep hem. It in the bottom of the barrel, and pulled the upper edge up and over on the outside of the barrel. The cover of which I hid with the outside covering. This you will notice is of figured cre-tonne, fulled on evenly all around the barrel. The cover is covered with the same material, and has fulled on with all neatest exhibited, and the edge finished with a cord. The cover is then tacked on, and not nicely through, and a lamp-shade fastened, and dropping the joke, the

BARREL CLOTHES-HAMPER.

The Constitutionalist
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 1891. No. 14.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well as its Constitution as to its authorities."—MADISON

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON:
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Masters-in-Chancery
Notaries Public, Conveyancers, Notaries of Peck streets and Second streets.

W. VERREE,
Counsellor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner.
Cor. PARK AVE. and NORTH AVE. 4-34-3m.

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer,
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box
113, Dunellen, N. J., or address at store at Commercial station. Terms reasonable.

DR. CHARLES R. THEIRS,
Dentist,
No. 6 East Front street, a new local anesthetic application for extracting teeth without pain. Gold filling a specialty.—p-27

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 71, Scotch Plains, N. J.;
residence and at P. O. Dover's second-hand store, 40 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—41292

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
247 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 18 and 19.
[Of Brooklyn and Hopkins' Real Building.] Scotch Plains, Plainfield, N. J.—p-1

J. H. FRESTER,
Veterinary Surgeon,
Office in H. Segerson's livery office, near Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Day or night calls promptly attended. Residence,
No. 11. Consultation on diseases of all domestic animals. Residence, 19 East Fifth ave.—p-27

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. Van Arsdale,
PIANO TUNER.
In store or residence throughout the county. Terms reasonable. Pianos and Organs for sale and to let.
Orders left at Peter Bell's, 20 Park ave., or left at Wilson's Music Store, No. 4 Park avenue will receive prompt attention. Residence, 21 Sheaf Pl. entrance, corner Sheaf street.—91292

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER.
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
residence and shop No. 36 East 2d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 4p27

LUTKINS & HUMMER,
DEALERS IN
Butter, Eggs & Produce.
Meats of all Kinds,
EXCITEDAS POSTAL CARDS IN THE SEASON.
NO. 36 PARK AVENUE, Plainfield, New Jersey.
Goods delivered to any part of the city.
A. LUTKINS. L. A. HUMMER.

TO THE PUBLIC !

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.

It is rather coarse and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Dimensional Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
depot

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
[Formerly Clark's].
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.
Repairing neatly and promptly done.
depot

FOR BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS
In Furniture
GO TO
23, 25 and 27 PARK AVE.
Garret Q. Packer,

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones,
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments
always on hand.
All work executed in the most skilful manner at the very reasonable prices. All monuments delivered and set up.
FRANK BU., next to N. E. CH., PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Monuments erected in Greenwood Cemetery
N. Y. depot

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No. 2 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of Ladies' goods always from Manufacturers. depot

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
Having been sole proprietor of the old establishment at
NO. 16 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the choicest of Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
Also Fresh Fish every Friday morning. Game in season. Oysters, Clams, Celery in season at depot

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR D. L. & W. STATION.)
JAS. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat.
First-class plumbing.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-31-tf

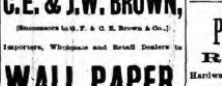
SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Emily Sts., North Plainfield N. J.
RICHARD A. BOYCE, Proprietor.
Permanent and transient board, at fair rates.
First-class stables and sheds attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours.

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand,
with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent.
per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER,
ELIAS S. POPE, Treasurer.
ADVT.

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS,
KEPT IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE.
4b41

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
[Successors to G. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.]
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tints, Anaglypta, Hand, Leather-
Backed Flock Papers, &c. Borders for Halls,
Manufacturers of Window Shades.
2-13-tf

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables


Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Light Carriages of all descriptions for
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Carefull, safe drivers for shopping calls or pleasure drives. Special attending given to boarding horses by the day, week or month.—oct13-y
TELEPHONE CALL, NO. 33.

Livery Stables !
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to answer demands for all kinds of livery entertainment. Horses gents and boarded at reasonable rates.
and carriages for funerals a specialty. 3p

Accommodation Express,
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vandeboer's Manufactory, Park Avenue
Accommodation Express will attend to all orders entrusted to the opinions of the city, delivering goods or packages, and going to the Depot, or from place to place. Moving of Furniture, Pianos, etc., with safe and early Transportation Given to Others

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE !
The oldest, surest and most reliable companies upon the strongest plan of
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's. of the City of New York, are prepared to assign assurances against loss or damage by fire on favorable terms. Policies issued promptly and adjustments equitably and liberally settled by
NATHAN HARPER
4b

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.
MAY30-1

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
The representative either first-class Fire insurance Companies. Agents of the Lloyds Steamship
Lines. Drafts on Ireland for sale. First and City National Bank Stock Bought and Sold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for Sale.
OFFICE:
42 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS S. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
No. 28 NORTH AVENUE,
Is now ready to receive orders for Fresh Meats,
Poultry, Etc., and will endeavor to give satisfaction to all. Meats delivered to any part of the city.
Orders left at the store will receive prompt attention.
Goods delivered promptly. NORTH PLAINFIELD.
Meats carefully and selected. A share of the public patronage is solicited.—3m27

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue.
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling,
Drawing and Sewing. 9 11 tf

PAINTERS & PAINTERS SUPPLIES

Paints, Varnishes, Glass,
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
8p22

J. P. WOOLSTON. J. P. BUCKLE
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 26 NORTH AVENUE
8p22

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Carey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—26 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods Delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Correspondence, P. O. Box 1,
Tel. 28. PIANO MOVING a specialty. 2p27

Parlor Stoves,
RANGES,
Hardware, Tools,
Best Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 9-13-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman.
20 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.
MCH26p

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion.
Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the finest ripe Vineyard Grapes, raised in Speer's vineyards, and left long until they attain and become purely matured before gathering. It is invaluable
Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have introduced it. The youngest child can take it with safety and benefit. It is not to be purchased by the glass or bottle, but only by the case of one dozen pints or two dozen half pints, direct from the Winery.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice is the juice of the Speer's Grape, preserved in its entire fresh condition, excepting it runs from the press by fumigation and electricity, thereby destroying the germs of fermentation. It is a perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's (Socialtic) Claret is held in high estimation for its richness as a Fine Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.
Speer's P. J. Sherry is a Wine of superior character, and portable for the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled for its richness and delicacy of flavor.
It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grape from which it is distilled.
See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER,
Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS AND WINE KEEP PERE-
[LAKE WINES. 6-19-y

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR,
The most delectable in the State, and made entire possession from the leaf.
HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
Always on hand the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars. Cigarettes also Tobacco always on hand.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety.
1b27

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMES-TIC SEGARS!!
No. 30 PARK AVE., (NEXT DOOR TO SECOND ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials,
of every description.
Thoroughbred "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco,
without a superior. 6-19-tf

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
[Successor to E. B. Maynard.]
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 26 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's HAIR CUTTING done at their residences. Shaving, Shampooing, &c. satisfactorily performed.

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Madison Avenue, cor. Park Pl.
Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

GARNEY BROS., Ag'ts,
11 SOMERSET ST.
TINNERS,
PLUMBERS,
GAS FITTERS.
PARLOR STOVES,
COOK STOVES,
HEATERS.
Grates and Backs for all kinds of fires can be found here at Jobbers' prices. Bring your Tinware mending to us. The best Tinners, the best Plumbers, and the best Gas-fitters in the county. We make no boast but the work of all hands, and our work always gives satisfaction.

Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.
Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

SANITARY PLUMBING,
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc., Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above branches of work in the best manner and on the most reasonable terms. Estimates cheerfully given. Shop
Rear of Dunellen Hotel, Dunellen, N. J.
Residence directly opposite from the Depot.
Orders left at my residence will receive prompt attention. I intend to keep none but first-class workmen, and guarantee satisfaction in every case. Thanking you for your past favors, I remain, Yours truly,
D. W. LITTELL.
No. 8 NORTH AVE. (NEAR Plainfield, N. J.

WHATEVER form of printing matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings.
Circulars.
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses.
Memorials,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other manner for Public or Private Circulation.
Everything.

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST.

DAILY PRESS

(Chautauqua Building)

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

CHOICE BITS OF VERSE.

A Glimpse of Paradise.

The tortured, tortured widow sighed,
But nothing in his studio
Could help him comfort or his grief,
Confusion in his hair
Showed where his fingers had been at work,
His wrung words were brief and few;
His smile was sad, and all the while he said,
"Now, a bit with you."

He never changed another word,
And hers is what it brings you now:
"You smile a smile like that
And tell me you are sad,
Now that is not the way of me,
Nor that for you, my poet."
Then he said, as he had said
Time and time again before,
"Now, a bit with you."

The young and lovely agent turned
Unto the other door,
The other, with three great leaps,
Reached out to Senator's Materials,
Of every description.

A Child with Nothing to Do.
I have just been told that I should say no
And neglecting my last way half;
I wrestled with it all the long day,
And I swore till I got a-full.
I hurried to the office and left the shirtsy
And handed the glorious thought;
I'm going down there to-day,
Signed and sealed.
And now I'm nothing to do.

The lover of Babel I built of blocks
Came down with a crash to the floor;
For the mason and the carpenter and the
Were gone to the store.
I'll mason they'll run no more;
The cottage was three great leaps,
Reached out to Senator's Materials,
Of every description.

"Now, a bit with you."

"Thoroughbred "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco,
without a superior. 6-19-tf

"Now, a bit with you."

The young and lovely agent turned
Unto the other door,
The other, with three great leaps,
Reached out to Senator's Materials,
Of every description.

The Constitutionalist.
W. L. FORCE, } Editors and Proprietors. } A. L. FORCE

FREEDOM.

American Freedom has ever and loudly been a national boast.

Is it rightfully founded?

Freedom deserves glorious mention, provided it is a practical reality and not hypocritical pretension.

When the condition of the toiling masses of this country is impartially investigated, and their inherent privileges to freely live and prosper are become freemen are cleared of political disengagement and all sordid consideration, the query justly and earnestly arises—are we a free people?

Is freedom fact or fiction?

True, and happily, we have slave holding oligarchy, with its assumed right to own and control human beings as chattels, has been totally and forever abolished.

So far the claim of national freedom is valid, but, are there not other taskmasters fully as imperious and more widely extended, now utilizing with might and main to the end of absolute power, and to make, if possible, the weak and dependent more cringing subjects!

When laws like the McKinley tariff are passed ostensibly to protect labor and industry, but really for the special purpose of making legitimate interests of the honest people subservient to the greed and gain of heartless monopolists, when the necessity is felt among honest farmers, mechanics, artisans and laborers—"To enjoy the grand prerogative of freedom and the debt of gratitude you owe therefor is great and lasting!"

That kind of palaver is rapidly melting away before the sunshine of popular intelligence. The people are thinking for themselves and learning to know that toiling year in year out for a bare subsistence, toiling under the weight of needless taxation, and suffering the exactions of venal laws passed as enabling acts for monied combinations to augment millions of wealth at the expense of honest labor, is oppression—not the vaunted boon of freedom.

The people so declared last November and their judgment was sound.

Equal and exact justice towards all with guaranteed opportunities for each citizen to secure and enjoy the fruits of well directed individual effort, is the very life blood of Freedom.

Aught else is fleeting shadow.

P. N. FRENCH'S DAM.

Though the Court of Chancery Decides Against Him, Mr. Hyde is Still Full of Fight.

About two years ago Chas. Hyde filed a bill in chancery to compel P. M. French to reduce the height of his mill dam. About 150 witnesses were examined and the case was hard-fought on both sides.

Below is given in full the opinion of Vice Chancellor Stevenson, recently, deciding the case, from which it will be seen that he holds that the Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction in the matter, and dismisses the bill with costs:

Hyde
vs.
French.
Cesar A. Meeh for Complainant.
Charles A. Reed for Defendant.
Bird, V. C. March 17, 1891.

It is quite clear in disposing of this case the Court must be governed by the principles of the Court of Errors and Appeals in the case of Ogelsby vs. Holme, 35th, Stew. 488. The decision of that case is very full and clear on the point, in all cases where they are reasonably applicable, and are not controlled by statute. The reasoning of the complainant urged that this case comes within the exception to the rule in the general rule, because the complainant is suffering irreparable mischief in the objurgation complained of, the mischief being the annual amount of water upon his water wheel which he says he could use, but is suffered to spill around and about his dwelling. In other words, it is an interference with that lawful enjoyment of his home, and a deprivation of his domestic comfort which cannot possibly be estimated in damages. This principle of this class of cases courts of equity cannot find to consider. The common law courts have controlled the parties and, which manifestly appear to the satisfaction of the court. A striking circumstance in this case is the fact that the complainant did not bring his suit until fifteen years after the grant of right of which the wrong complained of had been committed, otherwise than the defendant had done all in respects to the same extent as he did at the time he filed his bill. Hence I find no just reason for withholding from the defendant the case from Convent vs. Reine. Therefore I will advise that the bill be dismissed with costs.

The end, however, is not yet. Mr. Hyde will ask the highest court to reverse the Vice Chancellor's opinion, and will also move Mr. French for damages by force a court and jury.

The Game and Fish Laws.

Slight changes were made in the Game Laws of New Jersey by the last Legislature, and none in the fish laws. The following is the "open season" for game birds, animals and fish, and the amounts of penalty for violations:

	Open Season, inclusive	Penalty for Killing out of season
MINK.
Ruffed Grouse,	Sept. 30 and Dec. 16,	$25
Quail,	Oct. 30 and Dec. 16	25
Woodcock,	Sept. 30 and Dec. 16	25
	(Shooting on Sunday.)
Upland Plover,	July 4 and Jan. 1,	25
English Snipe,	Aug. 30 and Dec. 30	25
Gray Squirrels all	Aug. 30 and Dec. 30	25
Prairie Chicken,	Oct. 25 and Jan. 1,	25
Wild Turkey,	Aug. 30 and Dec. 30	25
Ruff Bird,	Aug. 30 and Dec. 30	25
Marsh Hen,	Aug. 30 and Dec. 30	25
Wood Duck,	Aug. 30 and Jan. 1,	25
ANIMALS.
Gray Squirrel,	Sept. 15 and Dec. 30,	25
Black Squirrel,	Sept. 15 and Dec. 30,	25
Fox Squirrel,	Aug. 30 and Jan. 1,	25
Rabbit,	Oct. 25 and Dec. 30,	25
FISH.
Salmon Trout,	Sept. day Feb. and Oct. 1,	10
Brook Trout,	March 15 and Sept. 15,	10
Shad,	May 20 and Dec. 1,	20
Shad Roe,	May 20 and Dec. 1,	20
Pickerel,	Apr. 30 and Dec. 1,	20
Perch,	Apr. 30 and Dec. 1,	20

The law strictly prohibits any set net or seine to streams enclosed by the fence with greater than one-half the width of the stream, whether that will interfere or not with fish from ascending the streams.

The penalty for killing any song or insectivorous bird, or taking or destroying eggs of such birds is $25 for each offense.

The penalty for trapping or snaring any game bird at any time or place, or for using any device prohibited by law for another, is $25 for each and every offense.

Non-compliance with complying with the by-laws of the Game Protective Societies of this State are punishable by a fine of $10 and costs, or in default a penalty of $20, or imprisonment until the fine is paid. The Secretary's address of this "Game Society" is Box 1,217, Philadelphia, Pa., W. T. Hornaday, Secretary.

By means of the last Legislature the charter of the "West Jersey Game Protective Society" was repealed. Under an act of 1879 the "New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society" was formed at Plainfield, N. J., and to-day it numbers many hundreds of members. Non-residents desiring to join the Society may write or order all information by communicating with the Secretary, W. L. Force, Plainfield, N. J.

When your doctor sends you around in a "Go to Grass" when Hood Sarsaparilla is called for, you generally find it in the bank. He delights in selling substitutes, because the profit is large.

NORTH BROADWAY.

The Proposed New Thoroughfare by Which the Electric Cars Will Reach the Reservation.

A large number of North Plainfielders attended a property-owners meeting in Spencer's Hall Monday, to consider the proposition to extend Place street from Grant avenue to Broadway.

Justice H. Cooley acted as chairman, and Horace Martin as secretary. Addresses were made in favor of the extension of the road by Rev. Wm. Rankin, Mayor Wm. Boe, Geo. Feller, Wm. Pangborn, Thos. Stubbidge, Newton Smalley, Father Freeman, and others.

A motion was then made that the sense of the meeting that Place street ought to be extended as proposed was unanimously and enthusiastically adopted.

Chairman Cooley was authorized to appoint two committees—one to confer with the Plainfield authorities in reference to the open way, the other to prepare a petition and get signers.

The boroughites are very anxious to have the street opened and to have the electric cars run through the thoroughfare and all the way to the mountain. They want the railway to climb the mountain also, and there is a demand for villa sites along Johnston's drive.

It is already proposed to call the contemplated thoroughfare North Broadway.

The boroughites are taking hold of the matter very energetically.

ANOTHER STEP FORWARD MONDAY.

Get Out the Street Railway's Route Through North Park Avenue, and Let Her Go!

The Plainfield Street Railway Company proved its pluck and faith and the honesty of its professions last Friday, by placing at the disposal of the people of this city a special train on which they might journey to Newark and view the electric road proposed for this city.

As was to be expected, the most stubborn obstructionists and croakers could be induced to go. They never saw a road like it in their lives, nor read of one, yet they will continue to keep up their opposition on various grounds. As the car train was waiting to start, the editor of the Central Times strolled leisurely by table to luncheon with nothing else in contemplation in his time or attention for the day. He did not go, yet he will this week again tell his readers what an unsightly, noisy and dangerous thing is this road that he has never seen.

Of the three car loads of citizens who did go, not one returned an objector. In fact, A. Vernon and others who opposed the road before the Council a week ago came away from the trip, and are now working for it since they went to Newark and saw just exactly what it was.

ANOTHER PETITION CIRCULATING.

Citizens of North Plainfield, Also, Want the Freight House Removed and a Safe and Attractive Approach Provided.

Also Better Accommodations at the Railway Station.

The following is another petition that has been started to bring about another of the public benefits THE PRESS has so long and earnestly labored for:

To the President and Board of Directors of the C. R. R. of N. J.

GENTLEMEN:—The undersigned citizens of Plainfield and North Plainfield, patrons of your road, respectfully but urgently petition you to remove the freight sheds and other buildings in the vicinity of the passenger station quickly as possible. The sheds are unsightly nuisances, which obstruct a direct approach to the station on the south side, occasion great inconvenience and danger to those who have occasion to go to the North avenue or pass through the obstructions. To go around under or over the tracks is dangerous and Place street, is daily becoming more populous and is a waste of valuable time, moreover, it is not convenient to the public, and not pretty park, with safe and wide approaches from Front street to Park avenue, would be more comfortable to us, and attractive to passers by, and will add much to the prosperity of the city, and therefore benefit your road.

Residents of the north side are put to great inconvenience and sometimes danger in the overcrowding upon North avenue and Park avenue, and this danger will be very much increased when the freight sheds and other buildings in the vicinity of the passenger station quickly as possible. The sheds and buildings referred to

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY. AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - City Editor.

—The Plainfield sewer bill was signed by the Governor Thursday.

—Dr. J. A. Allen has changed his office from 73 Park avenue to 37 Park avenue, corner of Fifth street.

—The petition to have the freight house removed has so far been signed by over 500 tax-pa ers and property-owners.

—The carpenters and joiners have given notice that after May 1, eight hours will constitute a day's work with full pay, on Saturd ys only.

—Hope chapel keeps on building, to make room for the constantly increasing growth of the mission. Recently ground was broken for two new additions.

—Day laborers throughout the city have ordered an advance in wages or else quote per day, the increase to take effect at once.

—Over $1,200 was the amount of the plate collection in the Crescent Avenue church, Sunday morning, and it was after a Board of Foreign Missions, sermon, too.

—The Somerset street Dream Book says that a Plainfielder is sojourning at "Coronado Beach, N. Y." A geography ought to be added to the dreamer's editorial library.

—Workmen digging a cellar on West Second street, near New, unearthed a human skull and other bones Saturday, twice of a old graveyard that formerly existed on the spot.

—In order to secure a Saturday half-holiday, beginning April 4, the employes of the Fond Machine Tool Company today manufactured as much as the hour for beginning work, each morning.

—Among the patents granted this week to Jers ymen, is one for a design to George H. Smith, of this city, for a fence. Kinsman, also of this city, for a device for railway signaling and the controlling of trains.

—It took 2,735 pounds of wire to repair the telephone circuit between this city and Elizabeth. It is now, however, capable of better service than ever, which is the case with all the wires that have been under Manager Runyon's own supervision.

—At the meeting of the Epworth League at Nixland, last Friday evening, the Rev. Mr. Mitchell will give a talk entitled, "Through Ireland in a Jaunting Car," with stereoscopic views. Members and friends of the League are cordially invited to attend.

—Hod-carriers all over the city have struck for an increase in wages of from $2 to $2 50 per day, about 50 of them have quit work. They have filed their bold Protective Union at their back, and expect to have the bosses accede to their demand within a few days at least.

—Herbert, Harry and George Scribner, three young lads accused of being the thieves who have robbed various Plainfield houses of lead pipe, copper pipes and other plumbing recently, are held in bail to await the action of the Grand Jury. Junk dealer Richard Corlell, to whom the stolen booty was sold, may be made to stand trial for criminal implication.

—A. D. Mellinson is already doing a thriving business at his new North Avenue Pharmacy. He has one of the neatest and most elaborate fitted up stores in line of drugs, medicines, chemicals and fancy goods is very complete. His soda-water is the purest and healthiest. Latest improved style of fountain, and is pronounced delicious. The public find his store inviting, reliable and satisfactory.

—The new schedule of trains on the Central railroad that went into effect Sunday, shows few changes affecting this city. The 5:11 afternoon train for New York leaves one minute later, and the 10 07 p. m. on Sunday is hereafter 10 10. From New York the only change is that the 11 o'clock train in the morning will leave a half-hour later. There are several changes, however, in the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington schedule.

—At a meeting of Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company, Thursday night, the charge made against Foreman Kiely that he had clubbed one of the members, was considered. It was agreed to drop the matter provided Mr. Kiely would write a personal letter of apology, which he promised to do. In this connection the Board of Engineers will it stated that they have always found Mr. Kiely a most honest, efficient and faithful assistant and firm.

The Seventh Demands Protection.

The Prospect avenue crossing over the Jersey Central railroad at Dunellen, where the recent terrible killing of Willie Cannon and Daniel Lister occurred, is protected by gates from early morning until nearly nine at night. The gates are in charge of Michael Donahue, one of the most faithful and trustworthy employes on the road. For nearly forty years he has served them, and all who have occasion to cross have heard his kind words of encouragement. Notwithstanding all this, the feeling against the company is intense, because there is no night watchman on the single plane of the road during the day. The indignation expressed will result in a request by the Board of Borough Commissioners to the company that the wrongs or pay the penalty. No blame is attached to the engineer of the train which killed Cannon and Lister. He is charged with the duty of making the plane of the road on duty

AT EVENING.

Scattered the lithtipe show
Still where his waves rest,
All golden in the gaze
Of the departing sun.
Borne now a single spot
In the last distant ripple,
Now—and, anon, one star
Shines in the sky.

As twas a jewel flever
Set in the eastern skies,
Waiting the twilight hour
When take the silent day;
As twere a lamp to light
Lighting Hope's way
Through the dim shadows of sin.
With its pale ray.

Now are parels the Sea, for while these appears
Breathe soon the air divine
Stirred to low fragrant music!
Out of this silver bath
Sheeted with emerald dew
Graping the narrow path
Across the wave.

Far in the twilight deep
Trembles a million eyes,
Counting the world asleep
Under the shadows.
Night, like a mother mild,
Tenderly takes her tired
Tiles up her weary child
And sings it rest.

—Frank Dempster Sherman, in Youths' Companion.

FIGHTING THE DUMPS.

The Old Settler Tells of a Boyhood Experience.

Twenty-Nine Wolves and Four Bears Two Always Enough—Good Sport for a Boy—He Modestly Disclaims All Credit, However.

"How many boys d'ye s'pose tha in nowadays, sir, would go out after wolves they was only twelve years old, git lost in the snow in the dep'a of'n' Squawkee Hill, lay there for a week in the snow, then buckle in'ar fetch upon their own h'arthaten luggin' with 'em twenty-nine wolfs 'n' four bears?" was the query. "How many twelve-year-old boys d'ye think tha is nowadays ez k'd do that?" said the old settler.

"Bout as many as tha ever were," replied the squire, "n' tha's not a dum one!"

"Squire," exclaimed the old settler, sternly, "d' forgit th'i I were a twelve-year-ol' myself, sir?"

"No," replied the squire.

"I'y're mean to aninvate, then, th'i I'm a liar, sometimes," mourned the old settler.

"Well, major, le's see," said the squire, provokingly. "Did you know this here twelve-year-ol' boy?"

"Gosh! thigh!!!" exclaimed the old settler, "I'm'n' I thought—"

"Thar I be ag'in!" said the squire. "Seems as if I can't see the p'int to nothin' or nobody. Correct I know th' I know'd it if I'd only thunk! But seems to me, major, th't I allez heard you was only a mine man, sir, 'n' not one to say that big gothern' o' wolfs 'n' b'ar. Sure, pr'aps I'm jes' old, but—"

"I hain't so consarned sure, now th't y' mention it," said the old settler, mollified, "th't I were nine year ol' 'stid o' twelve. But I said I were a twelve-year-ol' 'n' I'll stick to it. But it wa'n't the blightin' in a two twenty-nine wolfs 'n' the four b'ar, two o' 'em alive, th't I kneered for, or th't I'm a braggin' of now. Tha were a mighty slim week along with them wolfs 'n' b'ars th't made the mars getherin' of 'em in a small 'n' fitlin' encumbrance. Let me remember, squire, how y' k'd stan' on one side o' th' Squawkee an' look right down into the deep awful gulch, marle's not more'n a mild away, but if y' wanted to git thar y'had to go around more'n nine miles, mebbe, that side of Squawkee were so dum steep y' couldn't git down in it nor y' jumped down 'n' rolled, n' fetched up at the bottom like sausage meat? Y' member that don't you?"

The squire nodded.

"Well, the winter I were twelve year ol', or ain't, I don't jes' k'd'late ez I'm sure'n her it," continued the old settler, "my pap were way down in the dumps. I know'd why, an' my mother were, 'n' the futur' looked blue. The prosper's was setch th't pap got lonely 'n' lower ev'y day, 'n' I were the on'y one to spen' time in the woods to keep my own sperrits up. So this particular day I shouldered the gun 'n' started out for Squawkee. I tramped 'way around to the side o' the big hill 'n' then up to the top. I got to the edge o' Skull Swamp, whar I spected to run again horse tracks, n' started back for home, but I hadn't fit my way up'n that bushlin' snow more'n fifteen minutes time I got my bearin's, 'n' I didn't know no more whar I were th'n if I'd ben triumplin' 'crost kentry on the moon. Which were fundamental absurd. I run up again a ledge o' rock, 'n' right at the foot of it I see a hole. Inter the hole I prob'ly myself, or leastways I guess I k'd figger out, the place bein' darkest, 'n' I were hacked, ez'cryppin' pooty tol'able roomy quarters in the bosom of that wall o' stun. I hadn't ben in that more'n five minutes, though, 'fore I diskivered th't I wa'n't the only lodger in the hole. The opinion o' that crept in on me'n's more'n two foot squar', 'n consekently the light th't ben in were skeeven, but hinsby I got used to the dark, 'n' off on one side o' the hole I see one big b'ar, 'n' off on t'other side I see another big b'ar. They was both snoozin' away for the winter, 'n suckin' their paws. I was right between the two, 'n' I know'd tha wa'n't much danger o' the b'ars wakin' up for a few weeks yit, 'cause sumpin' more'n common kin along to 'start 'em, 'n' so I stretched out for to take a nap till the snow quit a-dumpin', 'n' k'd crawl out the way I crawl in, easy.

"I d'know how long I slept, but w'en I woke up I were in the dark, 'n' with a little in the openin' I crep' outen the hole, 'n' the sight I see were amazin'. Right in front o' the ledge were a bare spot 'bout twenty foot square. On the right o' it 'n' on the left o' it the snow were piled up in big drifts 'bout 6' high. From the far edge of the spot the snow shot down in one straight sirtish matter 'n' I'll be dumbed if it ben fifty foot deep, 'n' had a pitch to it like the roof o' a barn. The bull long 'n' short of it were, squire, I were standin' on the side of a hill, 'n' Squawkee, with one send o' that long snowbank at my feet 'n' t'other send lyin' right 'mong the b'ars in the openin' I were only a mile fum home, but I most jist en well ha' ben the middle o' Africy, ez I stood 'ere in'ar Sugar swamp with a wishful eye.

"Home o' my merry childhood!' says I, 'I'lless tha crops a calamoon 'n' melts these conjuring banks o' snow,' says I, 'these keen thunderin' b'ars 'n' I shaner my bones 'ere the spring time comes,' says I, 'cy' nobody won't never hef to put 'em in my grave,' says I.

"Sayin' w'ich, the weather bein' colder 'n Greenlan', I crep' back in the roots' o' 'emergin' tree, 'n' I piled the dead b'ars to git warm. A week passed away. I hadn't had nothin' to eat, 'n' my stomach were nearly wrinkled. The two b'ars hadn't never winked nor moved sence I fixed 'em. I hated to disturb 'em, but I were that hungry I must, 'n' so, on the seventh day I took out my knife, felt ez gentle ez a possible sayin' for the bigges b'ar's throat, 'n' with one fouse slit it from chin to gullet. The b'ar never let a hide anywhere up ez if he'd a motion to see w'at were goin' on, then closed 'em 'n' winched 'n' shivered. Little by little I made an all-p'ovider' sight, 'n' his complexion on t'other side were gone. Then I drug him out from the dead b'ar, I took it out in front o' the ledge, built a fire, cooked the b'ar meat, 'n' it were jest the best a good hunger wonst seen.

"Goin' back inter the hole I notised th' for the first time that Father Nature were to be gentle' company. She kinder moved up a bit 'n' grinned, 'n' seemed disturbed in her mine.

"Smell her of mat a cookin', neebor,' says I, turnin' over 'n' going in deep.

"I'd know how long I were asleep, I were broke up' kinder sudden by a little, 'n' squeaky voice, 'n' I see Father N'ar standin' over me, her gown a-gittin' w' the ground's supposin' it were a mountain-gittin' me the idea th't she were a mighty old lady but fum w'at I could gather fum the looks of things I were a child. Sh'e's the old lady had been talkin' in the hull shebang, b'th't. She had considerabul not to wait till the noring time fum Nove she obsarved my house. I begun to reach for my knife, w'en I heard the howl of wolfs on the hill. Then the howl fi, 'n' jumped for the openin'. Sezh a young, 'n' pritty 'n' p'leasin' lady, 'n' I were that glad th't I a'most a-crunchin' as followed I never heard. 'I'm'n' of com. 'I'm go' to stop with her back ag'in the lodge, w'ile a pack o' ja'nt 'n' hungry wolves were pitchin' 'em selves over the top. Then the lead wonsted 'em sight 'n' left till the open agen, 'n' I stepped out with the fresh air. I still they piled up, 'n' then I found my gun 'n' took a hand in, to help the b'ars. 'Twere a fight, I tell you, for on'y one of the wonsted dead in front of the lodge. Then the old b'ar hammered him to death, 'n' then he turned in and up the fight by finishin' her, but I put a load o' buckshot through her head, 'n' she tumbled on top of the wolfs.

"I counted the wolfs. This was twenty-nine of 'em. I figured th' I k'd git, 'n' I found th't they was worth jist two hundred and thirty-two dollars, the twenty on 'em bein' eight dollars a wolf.

"That's enough! I hollers, jumpin' for joy, 'n' I stuck 'em all in my pockets, 'n' I hollers, 'stiddy the two b'ar' I hollers, jumpin' for more joy. I hollers, jumpin' for more joy. I figured th' I heard a noise afind me, 'n' lookin' 'round, w'at sh'd some jumbliin' cotten the hole but two b'ar cubs, th't I hadn't see at all! 'Scewhizz!' I hollers, jumpin' for some more joy. 'Sidee two b'ar cubs! I didn't see 'em!' I hollers. 'No more dumps for pap!' says I.

"I took off my moc'sins 'n' cut 'em up inter thongs. 'N' I cut my pockets inter straps inter thongs. Fer w'ile me 'n' the old b'ar was fightin' the wolfs I had noticed sumpin' else, 'n' I discovered th't that snowbank th't pitched off twixt me 'n' Sugar swamp was kivered with a thick crust of gold! Yes, sir, I tied the two dead b'ars and the twenty-nine dead wolfs together with thongs, still'n' along. I drug 'em to the edge o' the glarin' 'n' fairin' field o' snow. I took the two b'ar cubs and under each arm. Then I laid down amongst the b'ars 'n' the wolf, 'n' pushed 'em inter the plenish glarin' snow. I figured like tha was a whizz 'n' a whoo 'n' a skwash. The nex' thing I know'd I were settin' in our kitchen in Sugar swamp. They had found me in the back yard, mixed up with the b'ars 'n' the wolfs. The house were full o' neighbors. Pap, pap, low in the dumps en he were, were braggin' on me a stanlin' up 'n' gettin' in' in twenty-nine big wolfs 'n' four b'ar, two on 'em alive.

"'Pap,' I says, 'I never thort nothin' 'bout wolfs 'n' b'ars,' says I. 'Wolfs 'n' b'ars wa'n't nothin' to me,' I says. 'I wa'n't fightin' wolfs 'n' b'ars,' I says. 'I were fightin' your dumps,' I says. 'I were fightin' the mortgage,' I says.

"'Sh' thar ain't,' pap says. 'Sh'a's th'a,' I says, 'n' th'ir'y-two dollars over, 'sides the four b'ar,' I says, 'two on 'em alive.'

"Sayin' wich I went out to shop wood, learnin' pap 'n' man to reflect 'bout what I were doin' when I were a dumps was drav 'outen that corner of the Sugar swamp deestrict."—Ed Mott, in N. Y. Sun.

TERRIBLE TEMPTATION.

James Struggled Very Hard and Triumphed Over a Bad Impulse.

It was a pretty little pocketknife, and James thought a better fate than to be forgotten by its owner, who had gone home from school and left it alone and unprotected on the desk. It had never, caught the eye of one little fellow—James Donnelly by name—who having fallen heir to a big, lovely alive to its merits.

James was staying in after hours, mastering an example in arithmetic which during the day had mastered him; and consequently he was not aware was getting his few belongings together before going home, when his eye alighted on the knife. He picked it up, and gave each blade a separate and distinct admiration.

How any boy could forget such a treasure he did not see. He fairly longed for such a knife, with a longing that only a boy knows, and who was obliged to do the great amount of his inevitable whittling with one that, in the opinion of James, was entirely lacking in single blade, and here, therefore, but sad comparison to the little beauty that he now held in his hand, and which, the longer he held and the more he admired, the harder it seemed for him to replace.

The ever-ready tempter was at hand with his suggestions, but James hesitated, for, being in the main an upright little fellow, he could not deliberately see it without violence to his better self.

"No one will suspect you, and the owner will think he lost it," whispered the evil voice.

Still he hesitated, and still the desire to possess the knife was the strong point in him.

Right and wrong struggled for the mastery; until one more admiring glance, out more feeling of the bright blade, and James had slipped it into his pocket, and hurried out of the classroom without his cheery "Good-afternoon" that his teacher was wont to hear.

But she, being intent on the work of some other boys, soon forgot the occasion.

He walked down the street with a feeling of exultation at possession of the coveted knife. He changed it from one pocket to another, and somehow it seemed to burn in none. Then he took it out and again looked at it; it certainly was pretty, but what pleasure would it bring to him if he must always hide it?

Suddenly his heart sank quicker, for one of his classmates was coming up the street, and James, with his burden of guilt, thrust the knife out strong and hin

AT EVENING.

Enwreathed the hilltops clear still in the valley sleeps
All golden in the glow
Of the departed day;
Borne now a single spot
In that the sun's last lights—
Fadeo—and, above, come star
Blooms in the night.

As 'twere a jewel flower
Set in this garden blue,
Trailing the twilight's hem
When hails the silent day;
As 'twere a lambent flame
Lighting Diana's way
Through the dim meadows of air,
Wan in pale ray.

Over you purple fen
Sue, her white form appears!
Breathe once the air divine
Steeped in her fragrant tears!
Out of this silver bath,
Flowers shall emerge at dawn
Creeping among the reeds
Across the lawn.

For in the tranquil deep
Trouble a million eyes,
Counting the world asleep
Under the summer skies.
Night, like a mother mild,
Tenderly to her breast
Takes up her weary child
And croons it rest.

—Frank Dempster Sherman, in Youths' Companion.

FIGHTING THE DUMPS.

The Old Settler Tells of a Boyhood Experience.

Twenty-Nine Wolves and Four Bears Two Aims—Wolf Meat for Dinner—A Boy—He Modestly Disclaims All Credit, However.

"How many boys d'ye s'pose, sh in nowadays, squire, that'd go out in the woods they was only twelve years old, got lost in the snow in the dep's of'o' Squawkee Hill, lay low for a day or two, then put on their buckle in 'n' fetch up on their own h'arthstun laggin' with 'em twenty-nine wolfs 'n' four bears, two on 'em alive? How many twelve-year-old boys d'ye think tha is nowadays ez k'd do that?" said the old settler.

"Bout ez many as tha ever were," replied the squire, "'n' that's not a dum cent."

"Squire," exclaimed the old settler, sternly, "I' fergit tha'l I were a feller-townsman o' yourn, I'm—"

"No," replied the squire.

"D'ye mean to sinuwate, then, tha I'm a liar, consarn ye?" roared the old settler.

"Well, major, let's see," said the squire, conciliatingly, "did you know more than here twelve-year-ol' boy?"

"Gosh! tlingity!" exclaimed the old settler, "I—I—I—"

"Thar I be ag'in!" said the squire. "Seems as if I can't see the p'int to nothin' to-day. I'll tell you what I do know'd it if I'd only thought! But seems to me, major, th'l I allus heard you was only raised in one town, 'n' never had that 'big gotherin' o' wolfs 'n' bar. Bars p' haint p'int to hold, major."

"I hain't ez consarned sure, now th't y' mention it," said the old settler, mollified, "th't I were only nine year ol' th't o' twelve. But I said I were a twelve-year-ol' 'n' I'll stick to it. But it was th' last laggin' 'n o' the twenty-nine wolfs 'n' the four b'ar, two of 'em alive, th't I loosed for, or th't I'm a braggin' of now! Tha were sumpin' else went along with them wolfs 'n' b'ars th't made the more gatherin's' 'em in a small 'n' tridin' neighborhoodsmus. I remember, squire, how y' k'd stan' on one side o' ol' Squawkee an' look right down into the valley an' see a deer'n'a bar not more'n a miled away, but if y' attempt to stir that y' had to go around more'n two mile. Them were the days, Squawkee were so durn steep y' couldn't git down nowheres 'cept y' jumped down! I rolled, 'n' fetched up at the bottom like sausage meat? Y' member that didn't ye?"

The squire nodded.

"Well, the winter I were twelve year ol', or mebbe'n year, I set out to look for herb," continued the old settler, "my pap were way down in the dumps. I knowed what were the matter with the futur' looked blue. The prospec's was setch th't pap got lower 'n' lower ev'y day. I see 'at I were the only hope 'at 'ere in the woods to keep my own sperrits up. So this partic'lar day I shouldered his gun 'n' started for ol' Squawkee. I warned 'round to the far side o' the big bald 'n' clim to the top. I got to the far edge o' Small Swamp, whar I specied to run ag'in some wolfs, 'n' I were startled more'n I hoped for when I seen how'n' dumped all th' p'ace.

Heap outen more'n fifty thou'n' four horse 'n' mule tracks I started home, but I hadn't fit my way ag'in that tumblin' snow more'n fifteen minutes 'fore I lost my bearin's, 'n' didn't know no more whar I were th'n if I'd been trimpin' 'crost kentry on the moon. I were lost, 'n' I knowed it. Then I run up again a ledge o' rock, 'n' right at the foot of it I see a hole. Inter the hole I crep', 'n' myself, ez right ez I k'd figger out, the place bein' darkish, I set me bucked, ockypyin' mysly to'ards'ds rosey sparkers in the booom o' that wall o' stun. I hadn't been in that place more'n minutes though, 'fore I diskivered th't I wasn't the only lodger in the hole. The openin' o' the hole were in wa'n't more'n two foot square', 'n consekently the light th't kin in were skesree, but timsley I got used to the dark, 'n' sot on one side o' the hole I see one big b'ar, 'n off on t'other side I see another big b'ar. They was both smoosin' away for the winter, 'n smokin' their paws. I was right betwixt the two, 'n' I knowed tha wa'n't much danger o' the b'ars wakin' up for a few weeks yit, 'cause sumpin' more'n sumpin kin along to 'arly 'em, 'n so I stretched out fer to take a nap till the snow quit sailoorgin', 'n' k'd crawl out 'n' dig my way home.

"I d'know how long I slept, but w'en I woke up I see the seat o' skiein' a little in the openin'. I crep' outen the hole, 'n' the sight I see were amazin'. Right in front o' the hole were a big spot 'bout twenty foot square'. On the right o' it 'n on the left o' it the snow were drifted up higher'n my head. From the fur edge o' the spot the snow-shot down in'o a straight setch manner ez a wall. It were about been fifty foot deep, 'n' had a pitch to it like the roof o' a barn. The bull long fo' short of it were, squires, I were a-standin' on the edge o' it, 'n' squawkee, with one send o' that long snowbank at my feet. I were on the north side o' it, 'mong the clearin's o' Sugar swamp! I were only a mile from home, but I never jist set a mile from home, 'n' I stood 'n' looked down inter Sugar swamp with a wishful eye.

"'Home ez childhood!' says I, 'unless tha comes a rain soon 'n' melts these onpitying banks o' snow,' says I, 'whose fur'ers, like a slumberin' lion, 'll chaw my bones w'en the spring time comes,' says I, 'ye nobody won't never 'arf to put the p'int to holdin' me back.'

"Sayin' w'ich, the weather bein' colder 'n Greenland, I creep' back in the rocks 'n' snuggled up ag'in the two b'ars. I'm'n got warm. A week passed away. I hadn't noticed 'at the b'ars' ever were gettin' her dander up. The two b'ars hadn't never winked nor moved sence I were in the hole. I hadn't disturb either of 'em, but I had to her musi, 'n' sit on the seventh day I took out my knife, felt ez pointless a pusson's nephyr for the biggest b'ar's wissen, 'n' with one gouge slit it from chin to pubic. The b'ar never moved. I took a second up'ard, then closed 'em to 'n' winched 'n' allowed a little, 'n' then I made an all-powerfullr sigh, 'n' his companion were inclined to be sociable, but he didn't know it. Slicin's ch'ice cut from the head b'ar, I took it out in front of the ledges, built a fire, roasted the b'ar meat, 'n' soon put natur' in a good humor inside.

"Gosh! made inter the hole I noticed th't for the first time th'other bar seemed to be gettin' uneasy. The kinder moved setched 'n' grunted, 'n' seemed disturbed in her dreams.

"Small bar, I'll start a mother's mobiles," says I, 'cordial' over 'n' going to sleep.

"I'd know how long I were asleep, but I were soon woke up by the mother bar. Hiss, 'n' opostin' my eyes I see t'other b'ar standin' over me, not quite ez big 'n' fat ez the grand' expression of a mother, 'n' some-give'n' me the idea th't she were one-sid'n'ed, but up. Fer'n' ef I could tell from the looks of things, I sh'd think th't she old lady had been talkin' in the hull settwation, 'n' th' she had been alookin' out to wait till the spring thaw a-year ago, have been considered vulgar and confusion. Tailor-made gowns, always remarkable for their absolute simplicity of cut, now seem more than ever the bottom of the skirt with gold or silver braiding. Metal clasps and a girdle are upon the same order. Very deep passementerie, profusely studded with colored stones, trims the hem of many tailor-made skirts, and the finished air of the passementerie are brought down the sides of the bodice nouave-like to meet the passementerie girdle.

A very forest of fancy pins is seen. Two are used to fasten the high collar. One is a heart composed of three small stones in a cut silver setting. The other is a flower, a cut silver daisy, perhaps, or a pansy in amethysts and gold. Gold and silver are frequently intercommingled. A gold pronged pin is seen with silver head. Amber and gold are still a favorite combination.

All the small vegetables, such as peas in the pod, and beans, they lettuce leaves, small beets and miniature sprays of celery stalks with fluted gold tops are seen upon nuts and at the necks of gowns.

There are many people who consider such display vulgar, and who will wear nothing of the sort even in the house, much less upon the street, but even these are yielding to the craze for brilliants to such an extent as to permit themselves to wear jeweled flowers, lily-of-the-valley roses in tinted coral and tiny rose-buds.

A certain headdress seen at the Astor-Willing wedding was composed of a crown of lily-of-the-valley flowers. It was very high in front, towering above the front of the head at least four inches. It gradually tapered toward the back ending in a single spray of four-or-five-inch stalk of the flowers.

Pale green and pink make a favorite combination. A beautiful evening gown shows a pale pink ground upon which are green chestnuts outlined in their burrs. From the point of the low bodice there is a deep green velvet vest extends a panel of green velvet which tapers in at the waist, becoming scarcely more than an inch wide. Gold-colored passementerie extends down each side of the velvet panel. The sleeves are of chiffon caught into puffs with bands of passementerie.

A French evening gown lately imported is white satin in material trimmed with white feather trimming to four deep vandykes. Feather trimming is used around the neck, upon the elbow sleeves and it outlines the skirting at the edge and each vandyke. The paniers and the train are in white figured aumure royale. White net heavily beaded with cut silver is draped over the white satin bodice. The backs of the gloves are stitched with silver cord. A silver ornament is used in the coiffure.

An exquisitely pretty evening bodice of pink satin has been imported. It is sloped at one shoulder, forming a puff, from whence it is brought down to make a drapery at front and back. The edge of the drapery is trimmed with white. On the other shoulder no puffing is allowed, but, in place of it, are two white bands of drapery that meet over the shoulder. Across the upper arm is a jeweled amulet held by a band of lace and bow of white satin ribbon. An enormous pink feather fan with silver sticks completes this bodice and has a silver comb with amber top. The skirt is simply made of pink satin with white bands of drapery upon it.

Lace is the prevailing trimming of the day. It is seen upon toques, it forms the top of the high collar, it gives glove tops and is used for flounces upon the skirts and bodices of street dresses.

An old-fashioned lace is still a favorite flounce of black net lace around the bottom of the skirt. Two flounces are put in points in palm leaf design, the other gown, a French gray, was trimmed with a narrow black lace box plaited closely around the skirt.

Chiffon and bengaline are thriving business in wedding gowns. At the Astor-Willing wedding more than twenty bridesmaids were either draped or composed of the former, while bengaline was almost as popular.

A bridesmaid's gown lately ordered is to have a frock and bodice of bengaline. The front of the skirt is to be of white and embroidered by silver and pearls.

The bodice is to be of white satin, the sleeves of the embroidery as will also be the top of the skirt.

A white gown makes pretty and every-day gowns. It is again the fashion to have the material around the skirt in flounces. A full crepe de soie bodice is tucked in at the waist with long flowing ribbons. These fall over a crepe de soie skirt, which is finished with a deep flounce.

This skirt is slightly reached up on one side showing a crepe de soie petticoat with silk ruffles.

Old rose crepon makes a beautiful tea gown. The front of the skirt is very full and is caught up with a cluster of the most approved walking grasses. The bodice is full in front. The collar is of a high Louis XIII. jacket is made up, projections for the daisy March which are to be worn with the Louis XIV. coat now so fashionable for dinner and calling gowns. A beautiful dark brown

EVENING BODICE.

Louis XIII. jacket has a high otter collar and is edged with fur down the front, upon the pockets and cuffs. The jacket is lined with old gold satin, glimpses of which are seen when the fashionable long-skirted bodice as the owner walks.

WELL WORTH READING.

TEN following states have no state motto: Indiana, Mississippi, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio and Texas.

IT costs five cents to swear in a certain Grand Rapids factory, and the box which contains the fines and which is now nearly full is soon to be sent to the heathen.

THERE is just one-fifth as much nutriment in quail on toast as the same quantity of weak mutton broth; and there is no more difference in the price of the two articles.

THE proprietor of a leading American newspaper says the fines and gifts he receives from actors and others in a year would pay the salaries of all the editors and reporters on the paper.

IN hotels the life of a napkin is put down at three months, provided it is of linen good material. A sheet lasts six months and a tablecloth depends for its existence upon the care that is taken of it.

TYPEWRITING machines are the favorite objects of thieves who sneak into offices and rooms in which they while the owners are out temporarily. A large number is yearly stolen from the offices of professional men.

THE senators' barber shop contains seventy shaving-mugs and seventy-five shaving-brushes and one pair of clippers—sufficient for the many senators who shave and the few who are not shaved, while the employes' barber shop has no mugs at all and only two shaving-brushes.

INVOCATIONS comes from a lady missionary who for the last ten years has been working among the Indians of the Northwest, that the boiled soft-shelled crab sent from New York last year contained 9,000 pairs of corsets, 700 pairs of rubber garters and 5,000 dresses ribbed with whalebone and steel.

A WRITER makes an ingenious computation of the number of stars in the Milky Way. Assuming that only one inhabited planet to each star, supposing it to be no reckoned that only one inher were left in existence, he estimates that this solitary tuber produced ten sets, their products the same, and so on, in ten years the number would be 10,000,000,000, a quantity sufficient to stock the whole world.

WORK OF INVENTIVE GENIUS.

A MACHINE for making shoe-strings out of paper is a recent Philadelphia invention.

AMONG modern inventions is named a bird's wing of diamonds with the least possible setting of gold visible.

A RAILROAD engineer has invented a pump with which to squirt hot water on the ground when rails on railroad tracks.

IVAN NIKOLAEVITCH ZYROFF of St. Petersburg has invented a method of baking rye bread direct from the grain. The rye is washed tasteless it and immediately afterward it is turned into dough and baked.

A SUDAN phanton has appeared in Paris resembling an ordinary phanton. It carries under the body of the carriage a boiler which cannot explode, with a machine which, when started, emits smoke under the back seat.

MAIRE has produced a Keely with a mysterious name. He lives in Monroe and says that his machine is capable of one to ten-horse power and does not depend for its force on water, gas or any agency now known. He's going to hitch the machine to churns and pumps.

ONE of the latest wrinkles in the photographic office in St. Petersburg has invented a watch which will run forty-five days at a single winding. The mechanical Technical Association, to which the inventor submitted it, wound the watch, placed it in the hands of a man that it ran the full time claimed for it.

ALL OVER THE UNION.

OPALS that sold for $300 have been found in Oregon.

ILLINOIS offers a bounty of three cents per head for the destruction of English sparrows.

MISSOURI annually exports over $7,000 for tobacco for the cuttings in the penitentiary.

THE penitentiaries of Texas have contributed $71,000 to the State treasury the last year.

A MERINO RAM sales has been disposed of in Illinois. They will soon begin to lay pipes from it.

THE assessments of the stock for sheep in Montana foot up 3,500,000 with 4,000,000 sheep for that country.

THE constitution of the new state of Washington forbids the use of the legislature to sixty consecutive days.

IN sixteen cities of Virginia, the census returns show a total of 84,342, the greater part of which is in real estate. In Richmond their positions amount to $40,000,000.

THE statement issued by the census department for Alabama's population gives the total as 1,513,017, of this number 930,726 are whites, 581,491 are colored, 758 are Indians and 42 are Chinese.

A Valuable Hen.

Hurley—I wouldn't take five hundred dollars for that dog.

Miles Standish—No, I don't think you would. You are too conscientious to perjure anyone.—Judy.

As to Conclusions.

Summer—I rode in a horse car half an hour to-day before I got a seat.

Fall—Pooh! You ought to have walked. It would be a good looking Boston Herald.

A Bright Child.

Mr. Graham (looking at poultry)—You have quite a number of hens, haven't you, Ethel?

Little Ethel—Yes, sir; but two of them is roosters.—Judge.

To Enhance Interest.

O'Rorke—Have you got the change for five dollars?

O'Brien—Sure.

O'Rorke—Then lend me two dollars, will you?—Harper's Bazar.

TOY FLYING MACHINES.

Scientific Wisdom Now Rocks And Cradles the Infant.

A feather duster modified in a very simple thing to make, but it will only amuse an instant if when flying horizontally. The motive power is furnished by a whalebone bow, which passes in the aerial screws to revolve as it unbends.

For this model you will need eight feathers, two pieces of whalebone pointed at the same size and shape. The best are good stiff wing feathers. From the base of each feather cut a slanting line in curve, as in Fig. 1; one must be arranged to revolve to the right, the other to the left, because the borrowing turns the upper in one direction, while the reaction tends to turn the lower in the opposite way, and if both screws were right-handed or left-handed they would work against each other, and produce little or no result.

The upper screw is fastened to the spindle, while the lower is attached to the bow. The spindle, which is a hole bored through the bow and into the cork; it moves freely because it simply rests in the cork, and is not fastened to the lower screw. The lowering is tied to the upper end of the bow.

When finished, hold the lower screw in one hand, and turn the upper with the other, winding the string in all around on the spindle. Now let go the upper screw, and toss it gently into the air, when it will fly until the bow straight-ens.

The aerial screw (Fig. 2) is like the other machine, but the bow is replaced by a strong rubber band tightly twisted. The backbone is made from two knitting-needles. The cross-pieces are made of thin bean brazed to the needles; that is, fastened with soldier (melted tin), and then the needles are brazed to cool. The main ribs of the screw blades are made from several light backbone strips (from a broken Japanese fan) lashed together, and the crown ribs of short pieces of the strips of fan, lashed to each rib. The whole blade is covered with the Japanese paper of the kind that is used for table napkins, pressed on with a fine needle and white thread.

FIG. 2.

The matter of adding up the cheques is similar to that for the feather model. This contrivance flies much higher and steadier than the latter.—Harper's Young People.

TIRED OF CHURNING.

Some Cows Try Hit Worse Rather Than Make a Show of Himself.

Mr. Brown had a large, strong dog named Rose. Rose was also so much like Mrs. Brown said he ought to be made to work so as to pay for a part of what he ate. So he was put in a churn.

Rose was a kind dog and they all were fond of him, and at first they thought it fun to see him churning for the women of the house. But he soon got tired and they used to give him meat and bread when he was through. For Mr. Brown had fixed a treadmill in such a way that Rose could churn the cream, and the churning did not hurt the dog.

At last Rose grew tired of the churn. Each week when the time came for him to begin churning Rose got sick and he could hide; and no one could find him until the next day. Then Mrs. Brown changed the time from week to week so that he could not know on which day to keep out of sight.

One day he went to the field to see them cut the grass. At noon Mr. Brown said: "Come, Rose, come home and churn." He went on the run, but at the end of the lane, and Rose was walking near him.

Mr. Brown was half-way up the hill, he turned round and looked Rose had run off as fast as he could go, and was out of sight in the field.

Rose has not been seen since, and we think he made up his mind that he would churn no more, though he must lose his nice home by the means. This is the end of the story of the dog who lived in the next house to us, and Rose used to play with me.—Ellen S. Eastman, in Our Little Men and Women.

IT WAS GREAT FUN TO WATCH ROSE.

Scotching.

"Willie, it was very rude of you to take the biggest piece of cake."

"Yes, ma'am, but I'm learning from making a pig of himself."—Harper's Young People.

Made of the Man Eaters.

The natives of the New Hebrides who are famous for the practice of anthropophagy, form a curious study. Nothing is more curious than their method of burying their dead. Instead of hollow tree trunks, containing specimens of the deceased, a variety of These trunks are ornamented at the upper part with sculptures representing the features of the dead person. By striking each of them with a club the natives produce sounds resembling the human voice, and they accompany their dances to the sound of these instruments, after having consecrated them by sacrifices of hogs and kids. They have also three other musical instruments: a sort of trumpet made of a bamboo cane, a drum and a kind of flageolet. The drum is made of a hollow log; a syrinx with six or seven or eight reeds, from which they sometimes obtain harmonious sounds, and a dog flute performed at the lower extremity of the nostrils of a single piece of bamboo with three holes, which is also very pretty. These instruments are used frequently within doors to amuse children.—N. Y. Ledger.

The Philosophy of Pensions.

Parent—It's no use, Jack, for you to kick about going to school.

Boy—Well, but how are you to know that it is the inevitable until your kick is made?—Lippincott's Weekly.

Definitions of Spoonies.

In a secluded city street, a spoonie couple were seen. The young man had got hold of a right hand of each of the other and of which was attached to a consequent, soon exhausted all the subjects of conversation, and he began apparently trying to explain to the young lady some of the principles of the long order of pole. Suddenly the young lady exclaimed, "Oh, Charley, I understand perfectly now the principle of the magnetic telegraph!" After much admiration of the young lady's quickness of perception, the young man proceeded to explain the principles of the telephone. Each time he would get a little further on in the long line and all would be lost in the young lady's mind. Finally, in despair, he exclaimed, "Oh, Mary, I'll explain it to you some other time!" Then the young lady, with a look of disappointment, replied, "Oh, Charley, I understand it perfectly now!"—Boston Herald.

MARIE ANTOINETTE.

How She Made Fanchon's Fashion Plays Famous Throughout Europe.

Marie Antoinette had no desire to increase upon the fondness of her time so much as to make a change. Mme. Bertin, Mme. Manson in an exchange. When she entered Paris in 1770 she was not limited to a milliner—one Mlle. Bertin—who made her fortune by it. This clever girl was one day making a bonnet when she discovered some peacock's feathers which had been placed on her table. She took one of the feathers and also plaited one up and put it in her hair. The effect was so pleasing that she added another. She tried it more, and on leaving her dressing-room astonished every one by the originality of her dress. The King admired, all Europe applauded, and thus the success of wearing feathers spread.

In 1776 she was one day dressed in a material of brown lustering, when the King observed, in a happy moment, that it looked to him like fame. Immediately the color of fleas became fashionable, and since was the range that the different shades between ash and young fleas were separated and the whole gamut of fleadom was run. Finally the resident of the Tuileries sent a new set of samples to the Queen, of a gray color, and the King this time remarked that of one that it was the color of the Queen's hair. This color quickly superseded all others, and in order to perfect the exact shade some of Mme. Bertin's hair was obtained through bribery and sent to Gobelins, Lyons and other places where the silks are made.

AN OLD-TIME NICKNAME.

The Name of Puritan Was Used in the Days of Reprisals.

"The name of 'Puritan' was itself originally a nickname," says a writer in the New York Times, neither accepted nor intended by those to whom it was applied, but first devised by Sedders, the Jesuit, to cast a reproach upon the party of reform in the Church of England, to render them suspicious and odious to the State.

"I give this on the authority of one of the most eminent of the early emigrants to Massachusetts, where he joined the elder Winthrop and many of that first distrust. If not hatred, of democracy which was and is the touchstone of the real, original and only genuine New-England Puritan, as I must call him, although in those days the name had not been assumed by the Rev. John Cotton, 'Bachelor in Divinity and Teacher of the Church of Christ at Boston, in New England.'

"It was very near the middle of the seventeenth century when this contemptuous diriving, meaning the application of the name to himself and his associates by Roger Williams, significantly re-added to the account given above of the history of this nickname Puritan. And the rigid Calvinistic head of the Lord struck him with madness who invented the name—nor doth he delight us in that difficult task to take up a reproach against the innocent."

An Earnest of His Love.

Jack—Well, you are engaged at last, old Dave. You must be awfully riling, I suppose.

Chawles—No, but I showed her a pawn ticket for one and told her I'd give it to her as soon as I could redeem it.—Money's Weekly.

Railroads.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD
THE STANDARD RAILWAY OF AMERICA
PROTECTED THROUGHOUT BY THE Pennsylvania Railroad Block Signal System.

TRAINS FOR THE WEST.

On and after November 16th, 1890, these trains will be leave Elizabeth as follows:

For Chicago, Fast Line, with Pullman Vestibule Parlor and sleeping cars, daily for Chicago, Pullman Vestibule Sleeping cars, daily for Chicago and Toledo.

For Chicago, Express, with Pullman Vestibule Parlor and sleeping cars, daily for Chicago, Pullman Vestibule Sleeping cars, daily for Chicago and Toledo.

For Pittsburg, Washington and the South—1.10 P. M. (Through day coach) week-days. For Pittsburg, 1.10 P. M. week-days.

For Pittsburg, Express, 2.00, 3.00, 7.00, 10.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 (Noon), 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 P. M. Sundays, 2.00, 3.00, 7.00, 10.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 (Noon), 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 P. M.

For Harrisburg, Philadelphia and Intermediate stations, 2.00, 3.00, 7.00, 10.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 (Noon), 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 P. M. Sundays, 2.00, 3.00, 7.00, 10.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 (Noon), 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 P. M.

For Lambertville, Philipsburg and Easton—2.00, 3.00, 7.00, 10.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 (Noon), 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 P. M.

For Lambertville and Phillipsburg only, 3.00 P. M.

For Bordentown, Burlington and Camden—2.00, 3.00, 7.00, 10.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 (Noon), 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 P. M. Sundays at 10.45 A. M. and 7.00 P. M.

For Atlantic City, 2.00, 3.00, 7.00, 10.00, 11.00 A. M., 12.00 (Noon), 1.00, 2.00, 3.00, 4.00, 5.00, 6.00, 7.00, 8.00, 9.00, 10.00, 11.00 P. M. Sundays at 10.45 A. M. and 7.00 P. M.

For other trains see time tables, or apply to the ticket agents.

C. G. HANCOCK, General Passenger Agent.
J. R. WOOD, Gen. Pass. Agent.

Central Railroad of New Jersey

Stations in New York foot of Liberty street. Time Table in effect, March 16, 1891.

PLAINFIELD AND NEW YORK.

Leave Plainfield 5 46, 7 15, 8 00, 9 00, 9 30, 10 00, 11 00, 11 30, 12 00 (Noon), 12 30, 1 00, 1 30, 2 00, 2 30, 3 00, 3 30, 4 00, 4 30, 5 00, 5 30, 6 00, 6 30, 7 00, 7 30, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 P. M. Sundays—7 45, 8 00, 9 00, 9 30, 10 00, 11 00, 11 30, 12 00 (Noon), 12 30, 1 00, 1 30, 2 00, 2 30, 3 00, 3 30, 4 00, 4 30, 5 00, 5 30, 6 00, 6 30, 7 00, 7 30, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 P. M.

Leave New York 8 45, 9 45, 10 45, 11 45 A. M., 12 45, 1 45, 2 45, 3 45, 4 45, 5 45, 6 45, 7 45, 8 45, 9 45, 10 45, 11 45 P. M. Sundays—9 45, 10 45, 11 45 A. M., 12 45, 1 45, 2 45, 3 45, 4 45, 5 45, 6 45, 7 45, 8 45, 9 45, 10 45, 11 45 P. M.

PLAINFIELD AND NEWARK.

Leave Plainfield 5 46, 6 30, 6 45, 7 15, 8 00, 8 30, 9 00, 9 30, 10 00, 10 30, 11 00, 11 30, 12 00 (Noon), 12 30, 1 00, 1 30, 2 00, 2 30, 3 00, 3 30, 4 00, 4 30, 5 00, 5 30, 6 00, 6 30, 7 00, 7 30, 8 00, 8 30, 9 00, 9 30, 10 00, 10 30, 11 00, 11 30 P. M.

Leave Newark 7 15, 7 45, 8 15, 8 45, 9 15, 9 45, 10 15, 10 45, 11 15, 11 45 A. M., 12 15, 12 45, 1 15, 1 45, 2 15, 2 45, 3 15, 3 45, 4 15, 4 45, 5 15, 5 45, 6 15, 6 45, 7 15, 7 45, 8 15, 8 45, 9 15, 9 45, 10 15, 10 45, 11 15, 11 45 P. M.

Leave Newark 7 15, 7 45, 8 15, 8 45, 9 15, 9 45, 10 15, 10 45, 11 15, 11 45 A. M., 12 15, 12 45, 1 15, 1 45, 2 15, 2 45, 3 15, 3 45, 4 15, 4 45, 5 15, 5 45, 6 15, 6 45, 7 15, 7 45, 8 15, 8 45, 9 15, 9 45, 10 15, 10 45, 11 15, 11 45 P. M.

PLAINFIELD AND EASTON.

Leave Plainfield 5 46, 7 15, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00, 12 00 (Noon), 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 P. M.

PLAINFIELD AND LAKE HOPATCONG.

Leave Plainfield 9 00 A. M., 3 20 P. M.

WESTWARD CONNECTIONS.

LEAVE PLAINFIELD.

5 46 A. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Pottsville, Mauch Chunk, Williamsport, Shamokin, Mahanoy City and Tamaqua.

7 15 A. M. for High Bridge Branch and Phillipsburg.

8 00 A. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Mauch Chunk, Williamsport, Shamokin, Mahanoy City and Tamaqua.

9 00 A. M. for Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem, Allentown, Reading, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, on Through coach to Wilkesbarre.

1 30 P. M. for Flemington, Easton, Allentown and Intermediate stations.

3 20 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Mauch Chunk, High Bridge Branch and Phillipsburg.

4 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

5 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

6 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

7 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

8 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

9 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

10 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

11 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

12 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

1 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

2 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

3 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

4 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

5 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

6 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

7 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

8 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

9 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and Allentown.

10 30 P. M. for Somerville, Bridgewater, Reading, Bethlehem, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pottsville, Shamokin, Mahanoy City, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Williamsport, Tamaqua, Flemington, Lambertville, Trenton, Bridge Branch, Manch Chunk, Williamsport, Trenton, Bethlehem and

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
M. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 1891. No. 15.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well as its limitations as to its authorities."—Force.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds for Delaware, New Jersey, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and Kansas. 2-26-1m

W. V. STERLE,
Counsellor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner, &c.

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Auctioneer.
Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box 113, Dunellen, N. J., or address at once at Constitutionalist. Terms reasonable.

DR. CHARLES H. THEIS,
Dentist,
20 West Front street. A new local anesthetic application for extracting teeth without pain. Gold fillings a specialty. 1-15-1y

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 71, Scotch Plains, N. J. Or leave bill at T. J. Gillies's Household store, 46 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention. 1-15-1y

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
241 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 18 and 19. (Lloyd-Force and Trubee Bank Building.) Residence, Plainfield, N. J. 2-26-1y

J. H. FRESTER,
Veterinary Surgeon.
Office No. 6 S. Sapington's avenue, corner Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Day or night promptly attended. Telephone No. 13. Consultation on diseases of all domestic animals. Residence, 73 East Front street. 2-26-1y

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VAN ARSDALE,
PIANO TUNER.
All instruments put in thorough order. Terms reasonable. Pianos and Organs for sale and to let. Orders by postal, P. O. Box 146 or left at Mr. Speer's Music Store, No. 5 Park avenue will receive prompt attention. Residence, 21 Rose P. ostreet, corner 8th street. 2-26-1y

JOHN CHANDLER,
JOBBING BUILDER AND CONTRACTOR.
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Residence and Shop No. 36 East 3d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 4-9-1y

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—MEDICAL BUILDING: Front St.
Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

TO THE PUBLIC!
We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of
LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.
It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We can also recommend to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice.
A. D. COOK & BRO.
Office and Yard, 2-26-1y

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
[Formerly Clerk's.]
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.
Repairing neatly and promptly done. 4-9-1y

FOR BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS
In Furniture
GO TO
23, 25 and 27 PARK AVE.
Garret Q. Packer,

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones.
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments
All work executed in the most skilful manner and at very reasonable prices. Orders solicited. Estimates cheerfully furnished. Call and see us.
Front St., next to M. E. Ch., PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Monuments erected in Greenwood Cemetery. 4-9-1y

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No. 2 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of Gentlemen's goods always on hand. Repairing done to order. 4-9-1y

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of late Ira & Moore Store)
is now the sole proprietor of the old established and well known
NO. 14 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will continue to supply patrons and friends of the firm with Fresh and Salt Meats, Fish of all kinds, Oysters, Clams, Lobsters, Game in season, Poultry, &c. Anything you may want of kept, in stock furnished at short notice. 4-9-1y

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR N. B. STATION.)
JAS. M. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat. First-class Plumbing.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-31-tf

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Liberty Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. BOYCE, Proprietor.
Permanent and transient board, at fair rates.
First-class stables and sheds attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours.

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER, "
ELIAS B. POPE, Treasurer.
J. P. MOULTON, Asst.

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS, BEST IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
[Successors to O. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.],
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
English Tiles, Anaglypta, Lincrusta, Linoleum, Leather Enamel Floor Papers, &c., Buntings for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades,
3-13-1y

LIVERY.
A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables

Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or sleeping drives. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day or week.—ostf1y
TELEPHONE CALL, No. 16.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
ADJOINING Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will gladly welcome his old friends and solicits a share of their patronage. Horses to let by the day or week at reasonable rates. Horses boarded by the day, week or month. Prompt attention to orders.

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Teacher's Market store. Parties desiring The Accommodation Express will attend to the transferring to and from any of the city depots, steamboat docks or Baggage to and from any part of the city, or to and from Plainfield and Dunellen, will please call or address Peter Rickert, Plainfield, N. J., and will be promptly attended to. Prompt attention to Orders. 4-9-1y

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The undersigned having been appointed agents in the
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the
City of New York, are prepared to grant substantial indemnity against loss or damage by fire, at the most reasonable rates consistent with safety. Policies issued without delay. Losses promptly adjusted and settled.
NATHAN HARPER
WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represents other first-class Fire insurance Companies. Assets of the Home Mutually Liable. Dwellings Insured for sale. Fire and Chemical Hand Stock Bought and Sold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for sale.
OFFICE:
5 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS B. POPE

N. B. Smalley,
DEALER IN
Fresh and Salt Meats, Poultry, Etc.
IN ROOMS NEARLY OPPOSITE PLAINFIELD. Orders called for and delivered. A share of the public patronage is solicited. 4-9-1y

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue.
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET,
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling, Sewing and cooking. 9-11-tf

PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass,
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
4-9-1y

Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTERS' SUPPLIES. 26 NORTH AVENUE

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Corey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—24 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered in any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 298. Tel. Promptness a specialty. 11-26-1y

Fresh Garden Seeds
AND FERTILIZERS,
Farm and Garden Implements,
Lawn Mowers Refrigerators,
Ice Cream Freezers,
Gasoline Stoves,
Hardware, Tools, etc.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 12 SOMERSET ST. 9-13-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
20 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.
4-9-1y

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion. Dr. Talmage for Months, weakly persons and the aged.

Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the Cluster Grape, grown on the hillsides of Speer's vineyards, and left long until they obtain and acquire that perfect ripeness and mellowness. It is invaluable for Medicinal purposes.
Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed. It is highly recommended by the faculty for the feeble and debilitated. The youngest child and the weakest invalids use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial in the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments to which either the weakest are subject.
It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.
Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the juice of the Concord Grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by cumulative and absolutely, thereby preserving the native aroma. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.
Speer's (Specialty) Claret is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially adapted for dinner use.
Speer's P. J. Sherry
is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.
Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medicinal purposes.
It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grape from which it is distilled.
See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES.

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The most discriminating smoker in the State can find no possible fault with this cigar. It is a clear Havana segar, a specialty.
Always a full assortment of the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars. Cigarettes in endless variety.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety.

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMESTIC
—SEGARS!—
No. 25 PARK AVE., (NEAR 1ST AND 2D SECOND ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials, Fancy Goods, &c.
The celebrated "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, which is the purest and best smoking tobacco in the market. 4-9-1y

A. WOLFF,
Manufacturer of
CIGARS,
And dealer in all kinds of Smoking and Chewing Tobacco, and smokers' articles, has removed from No. 9 W. Front street, to 23 West Front street, one door east of Madison avenue, and solicits the patronage of his friends and the public generally. 12-11-1y

WM. B. RANDOLPH,
[Successor to E. B. Maynard.]
PRACTICAL BARBER
AND
Artistic Hair Dresser,
No. 32 PARK AVENUE,
Ladies' and Children's Hair Cutting done at their residences during Shampooing. Satisfactorily performed. 12-11-1y

CARNEY BROS., Ag'ts,
11 SOMERSET ST.
TINNERS,
PLUMBERS,
GAS FITTERS.
PARLOR STOVES,
COOK STOVES,
HEATERS.
Grates and Bricks for all kinds of Stov e can be found here at Jobbers' prices. Being your Tinware molding in on. The best Tinners, the best Plumbers, and the best Gas-fitters in the city. Stoves put up in the very best manner. Materials, and our work always gives satisfaction.
Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.
Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

WHATEVER form of printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings,
Circulars,
Programmes, Menus,
Addresses,
Memorials,
By-Laws of Societies,
Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Public or Private Circulation.
Everything.

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST.
DAILY PRESS
(Chautauqua Building).
PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING,
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc., Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above branches of work in a satisfactory manner. Estimates furnished. Satisfaction guaranteed.
Having associated myself with the Master Plumbers Association of New York City, I can guarantee to do work as cheap as any first-class workmen. Whether it is a new building or repairing that you require, call on me.
D. W. LITTELL,
No. 8 DUNNE AVE. (NEAR Plainfield, N. J.

SUPERNATURAL TALES.

Julian Hawthorne Writes a Quaint Autobiography.

Personal Experiences in the Occult Related by Master of Fun and Satire—The Ghostly Pet Driver and Other Mysteries.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

It often happens to people of my profession to be asked for a story or a ghost story by acquaintances. If possible, a ghost story of their own experience. It has happened to me, and I have unfailingly failed to make a good showing. Whether this is because I am more skeptical than the average, I know not; but I incline to think it was more because I handled badly. I am no hand at short, clear narratives. My object is to reach the point of the story by the shortest route, and so have done with it.

But put the shade over the lamp. When I was a boy of twelve or thirteen, and lived in Salem, I had a habit of holding a pencil, moving toward the ceiling, and so forth. The place was suitable, for the rooms and attic were fearfully old and reputed to be haunted. It was an ancient Italian villa, or castle, perched on a hill of the low Apennines, overlooking a wide valley, with a historic river winding through it. There was a tower at each end of it, in which a political captive had been imprisoned more than two hundred years before. As for me, I used to sit in my gloomy chamber in which he used to languish; but after sunset it would dap sensibly round the battlements of the tower, emitting its soft, long-drawn cry. Bats there were like in those days, in great numbers, as I lay on the tiled roof up aloft, watching the great comet that arched across the horizon of the valley. I have heard my name called in the air, just over the parapet. There used to be strange times of seventy feet to the ground.

In the body of the edifice there was a flight of cell, or cavalry, massively constructed of stone, with groined belling. This was the special abiding place of the ghost. One night my sister, having occasion to go there, set the candle on the mantel-piece. As she was stooping to look about in the corner she noticed her shadow glide along the wall. Turning, she saw that the candle had been placed in the middle of several yards from its former position. But no one except herself was in that part of the house.

An immense place it was, with upwards of forty large rooms. As there was only a little left in the family, we each had a suite of five or six apartments, of bedroom and study and the west wing, five rooms opening into one another intervened between that one and the huge vaulted hall in the center of the building. Often in the dark of the night I have waked up and heard an empty pacing to and fro in these rooms, and the rustle of a long skirt sweeping on the bare wooden floors. I used to report it to my mother; and it was not until some years later that I discovered that it was either my imagination—or something else—to that, I can only say that none of us children had the least fear of ghosts, or knew that anybody looked upon them, and had never been frightened by injudicious means.

I must try to go back to that hand. It was a white, well-shaped, woman's hand, with long slender fingers, and a remarkable size in the palm. It was not make a mystery of this. It was the hand of a fair young American lady from a thoroughly respectable family in the city of Daniel Hawthorne; others, in another hand. I surmised that the book had been read by two lovers, who had taken this indirect means of intimating their sentiments.

The longer I meditated upon the matter, the more interested I became. At last I wrote a letter to Miss Mary Boadel, and folded to form V-shaped revers inside a pointed shawl collar of black silk upon which black thread lace one or five inches wide is gathered in a ruffle. Butterfly bows of black ribbon at each side of the neck-plaiting and at the end of the Achen-collar, which reaches the waist, complete this accessory to the toilet, which can be made in other colors and in white lace, as well as in those described.—Demorest's Family Magazine.

MEDICI COLLAR FICHU.

The Proper Care of Brooms.

The rapidity with which brooms are ordinarily worn out is surprising, says Harper's Bazar. This is partly due to leaving the broom standing on its brush and when not in use, but more to carelessness in handling. A piece of strong cloth, or, better yet, of old woven underflannel or stockinet, should be drawn on over the handle and down below the place where the broom splints are stitched. A few stitches with strong cotton yarn should fasten this cover both at its lower edge and gather and fasten it around the handle, sewing the splints as well as the handle. This cover holds the broom splints together, and prevents their breaking out and the tearing off of the bands of a broom which repeated striking against doors and hop-boards and reaching under large pieces of furniture does.

CLIQUES IN CLUBS.

Every Large Club has its Sets of Fellows Who Are Inseparable.

In every large club there are sets or cliques. Every day or evening you will drifts into one of these sets very soon after he joins the club, says a writer in the New York Sun. He will be confined in this way. First, there is the billiard set. Its members rarely visit any other part of the club than the billiard room, and every other member knows just where to find them. They are usually evening men, and the billiardtables are not much used in the daytime. Most of them are brilliant experts at the balk line game, and they can not tolerate the ordinary billiard player.

Then there is the card set. Not all the clubs allow card playing, but most of them do. In the many of the clubs which is nominally played, but actually all sorts of gambling games are permitted. All the card players in the club gradually drift into this set. Of course, occasionally, men play at other games without becoming slaves to the habit, but these are not members of the card set, and their appearance in a box at all decidedly to the latter.

There is some one who have fallen into the habit of breakfasting at their clubs, and are never seen there at any other time. Others come only to lunch-eon. Then there are members who live remote from the club-house, and they drop over there for an hour in the afternoon or evening. Sometimes they bring

SUPERNATURAL TALES.

Julian Hawthorne Writes a Quaint Autobiography.

Personal Experiences in the Occult Related by Master of Fun and Satire—The Ghostly Pet Driver and Other Mysteries.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

It often happens to people of my profession to be asked for a story or a ghost story by acquaintances. If possible, a ghost story of their own experience. It has happened to me, and I have unfailingly failed to make a good showing. Whether this is because I am more skeptical than the average, I know not; but I incline to think it was more because I handled badly. I am no hand at short, clear narratives. My object is to reach the point of the story by the shortest route, and so have done with it.

But put the shade over the lamp. When I was a boy of twelve or thirteen, and lived in Salem, I had a habit of holding a pencil, moving toward the ceiling, and so forth. The place was suitable, for the rooms and attic were fearfully old and reputed to be haunted. It was an ancient Italian villa, or castle, perched on a hill of the low Apennines, overlooking a wide valley, with a historic river winding through it. There was a tower at each end of it, in which a political captive had been imprisoned more than two hundred years before. As for me, I used to sit in my gloomy chamber in which he used to languish; but after sunset it would dap sensibly round the battlements of the tower, emitting its soft, long-drawn cry. Bats there were like in those days, in great numbers, as I lay on the tiled roof up aloft, watching the great comet that arched across the horizon of the valley. I have heard my name called in the air, just over the parapet. There used to be strange times of seventy feet to the ground.

In the body of the edifice there was a flight of cell, or cavalry, massively constructed of stone, with groined belling. This was the special abiding place of the ghost. One night my sister, having occasion to go there, set the candle on the mantel-piece. As she was stooping to look about in the corner she noticed her shadow glide along the wall. Turning, she saw that the candle had been placed in the middle of several yards from its former position. But no one except herself was in that part of the house.

An immense place it was, with upwards of forty large rooms. As there was only a little left in the family, we each had a suite of five or six apartments, of bedroom and study and the west wing, five rooms opening into one another intervened between that one and the huge vaulted hall in the center of the building. Often in the dark of the night I have waked up and heard an empty pacing to and fro in these rooms, and the rustle of a long skirt sweeping on the bare wooden floors. I used to report it to my mother; and it was not until some years later that I discovered that it was either my imagination—or something else—to that, I can only say that none of us children had the least fear of ghosts, or knew that anybody looked upon them, and had never been frightened by injudicious means.

I must try to go back to that hand. It was a white, well-shaped, woman's hand, with long slender fingers, and a remarkable size in the palm. It was not make a mystery of this. It was the hand of a fair young American lady from a thoroughly respectable family in the city of Daniel Hawthorne; others, in another hand. I surmised that the book had been read by two lovers, who had taken this indirect means of intimating their sentiments.

The longer I meditated upon the matter, the more interested I became. At last I wrote a letter to Miss Mary Boadel, and folded to form V-shaped revers inside a pointed shawl collar of black silk upon which black thread lace one or five inches wide is gathered in a ruffle. Butterfly bows of black ribbon at each side of the neck-plaiting and at the end of the Achen-collar, which reaches the waist, complete this accessory to the toilet, which can be made in other colors and in white lace, as well as in those described.—Demorest's Family Magazine.

MEDICI COLLAR FICHU.

The Proper Care of Brooms.

The rapidity with which brooms are ordinarily worn out is surprising, says Harper's Bazar. This is partly due to leaving the broom standing on its brush and when not in use, but more to carelessness in handling. A piece of strong cloth, or, better yet, of old woven underflannel or stockinet, should be drawn on over the handle and down below the place where the broom splints are stitched. A few stitches with strong cotton yarn should fasten this cover both at its lower edge and gather and fasten it around the handle, sewing the splints as well as the handle. This cover holds the broom splints together, and prevents their breaking out and the tearing off of the bands of a broom which repeated striking against doors and hop-boards and reaching under large pieces of furniture does.

CLIQUES IN CLUBS.

Every Large Club has its Sets of Fellows Who Are Inseparable.

In every large club there are sets or cliques. Every day or evening you will drifts into one of these sets very soon after he joins the club, says a writer in the New York Sun. He will be confined in this way. First, there is the billiard set. Its members rarely visit any other part of the club than the billiard room, and every other member knows just where to find them. They are usually evening men, and the billiard-tables are not much used in the daytime. Most of them are brilliant experts at the balk line game, and they can not tolerate the ordinary billiard player.

Then there is the card set. Not all the clubs allow card playing, but most of them do. In the many of the clubs which is nominally played, but actually all sorts of gambling games are permitted. All the card players in the club gradually drift into this set. Of course, occasionally, men play at other games without becoming slaves to the habit, but these are not members of the card set, and their appearance in a box at all decidedly to the latter.

There is some one who have fallen into the habit of breakfasting at their clubs, and are never seen there at any other time. Others come only to luncheon. Then there are members who live remote from the club-house, and they drop over there for an hour in the afternoon or evening. Sometimes they bring

AN ORIGINAL RECIPE.

I do not think that I am very vain.
But this I do assert, and will maintain,
That my recipe for nice brown bread
(Two pints of sour milk and a teaspoonful soda)
Is just the nicest that I ever ate,
And with united hands should grace a lady's table.
Take equal quantities you must, of wheat,
Cornmeal and Graham flour (no wondrous feat).
Two eggs, and melted butter, one-half cup,
Of each, sweet, if you can get it up,
Though tempted some,) Molasses? Yes, you'll find
A full half-cup, and after that, indeed,
Two teaspoonfuls of ginger, I'll add to know them. A man who likes well
Another teaspoonful of salt. Then, for a guide,
To make a pudding way that is delightful,
Listen, as all wise men will agree
That I in praises may with freedom sing.
—C. L. Thaxter, in Harper's Bazar.

HANDSOME DOILIES.

Tastily Trifles Which Add to the Attractiveness of the Dinner Table.

To the housekeepers who have time and means to add other attractions to their tables than the snowy linen all may have, nothing can be more dainty and fresh than the new center pieces and doilies, in which some flower combination is used, and forms the border of the center piece.

The design given is just one-third the size of original, and shows a white rose doily, embroidered in white silk on white damask.

The edge of outer leaves is cut out and worked in buttonhole stitch; then the outlines of center leaves are done in stem-stitch, long-and-short-stitch and buttonhole, as shown in illustration. The veins are done in stem-stitch with delicate pink silk.

The design for border of center-piece may be used the same size as the doily, in which case eight will make border, one for each corner, and one in center of each side, two sides being made longer by leaving a small spade the width of one leaf, between the side flowers and corner, working the same as edge of leaves. A round centre-piece edged with roses of the size given in the illustration would be pretty.

A pansy makes a simple design. While daffodils worked in shaded yellow silk on white make a very rich pattern.

Any of these designs may be followed in colored silks on colored damask, if preferred.

A beautiful center-piece may be done on bolting silk, by cutting out and embroidering pansies for border in their colors and sizes, and fastening them on with invisible stitches. Or the edges may be cut to represent the petals as in the illustration, and then the flowers painted. These same designs make beautiful toilet sets, or lamp shade mats.

A pretty lamp mat is made by painting the pansy border on the colored chamois, so much the style just now. Tablecovers and tops of side cushions are also made of this colored chamois. In all these it will be found easier to paint the flowers first, then cut the edges away, making a pretty colored scallop-edge.—Eva Evans, in Housekeeper.

MEDICI COLLAR FICHU.

A Handsome and Popular Accessory to the Toilet.

A handsome finish for any nice dress to be worn in the house. It is made of cream-white silk ruched in a plaiting to stand up around the neck and down below the place where the broom splints are stitched. A few stitches with strong cotton yarn should fasten this cover both at its lower edge and gather and fasten it around the handle, sewing the splints as well as the handle. This cover holds the broom splints together, and prevents their breaking out and the tearing off of the bands of a broom which repeated striking against doors and hop-boards and reaching under large pieces of furniture does.

CLIQUES IN CLUBS.

Every Large Club has its Sets of Fellows Who Are Inseparable.

In every large club there are sets or cliques. Every day or evening you will drifts into one of these sets very soon after he joins the club, says a writer in the New York Sun. He will be confined in this way. First, there is the billiard set. Its members rarely visit any other part of the club than the billiard room, and every other member knows just where to find them. They are usually evening men, and the billiard-tables are not much used in the daytime. Most of them are brilliant experts at the balk line game, and they can not tolerate the ordinary billiard player.

Then there is the card set. Not all the clubs allow card playing, but most of them do. In the many of the clubs which is nominally played, but actually all sorts of gambling games are permitted. All the card players in the club gradually drift into this set. Of course, occasionally, men play at other games without becoming slaves to the habit, but these are not members of the card set, and their appearance in a box at all decidedly to the latter.

There is some one who have fallen into the habit of breakfasting at their clubs, and are never seen there at any other time. Others come only to luncheon. Then there are members who live remote from the club-house, and they drop over there for an hour in the afternoon or evening. Sometimes they bring

AN ORIGINAL RECIPE.

I do not think that I am very vain.
But this I do assert, and will maintain,
That my recipe for nice brown bread
(Two pints of sour milk and a teaspoonful soda)
Is just the nicest that I ever ate,
And with united hands should grace a lady's table.
Take equal quantities you must, of wheat,
Cornmeal and Graham flour (no wondrous feat).
Two eggs, and melted butter, one-half cup,
Of each, sweet, if you can get it up,
Though tempted some,) Molasses? Yes, you'll find
A full half-cup, and after that, indeed,
Two teaspoonfuls of ginger, I'll add to know them. A man who likes well
Another teaspoonful of salt. Then, for a guide,
To make a pudding way that is delightful,
Listen, as all wise men will agree
That I in praises may with freedom sing.
—C. L. Thaxter, in Harper's Bazar.

HANDSOME DOILIES.

Tastily Trifles Which Add to the Attractiveness of the Dinner Table.

To the housekeepers who have time and means to add other attractions to their tables than the snowy linen all may have, nothing can be more dainty and fresh than the new center pieces and doilies, in which some flower combination is used, and forms the border of the center piece.

The design given is just one-third the size of original, and shows a white rose doily, embroidered in white silk on white damask.

The edge of outer leaves is cut out and worked in buttonhole stitch; then the outlines of center leaves are done in stem-stitch, long-and-short-stitch and buttonhole, as shown in illustration. The veins are done in stem-stitch with delicate pink silk.

The design for border of center-piece may be used the same size as the doily, in which case eight will make border, one for each corner, and one in center of each side, two sides being made longer by leaving a small spade the width of one leaf, between the side flowers and corner, working the same as edge of leaves. A round centre-piece edged with roses of the size given in the illustration would be pretty.

A pansy makes a simple design. While daffodils worked in shaded yellow silk on white make a very rich pattern.

Any of these designs may be followed in colored silks on colored damask, if preferred.

A beautiful center-piece may be done on bolting silk, by cutting out and embroidering pansies for border in their colors and sizes, and fastening them on with invisible stitches. Or the edges may be cut to represent the petals as in the illustration, and then the flowers painted. These same designs make beautiful toilet sets, or lamp shade mats.

A pretty lamp mat is made by painting the pansy border on the colored chamois, so much the style just now. Tablecovers and tops of side cushions are also made of this colored chamois. In all these it will be found easier to paint the flowers first, then cut the edges away, making a pretty colored scallop-edge.—Eva Evans, in Housekeeper.

MEDICI COLLAR FICHU.

A Handsome and Popular Accessory to the Toilet.

A handsome finish for any nice dress to be worn in the house. It is made of cream-white silk ruched in a plaiting to stand up around the neck and down below the place where the broom splints are stitched. A few stitches with strong cotton yarn should fasten this cover both at its lower edge and gather and fasten it around the handle, sewing the splints as well as the handle. This cover holds the broom splints together, and prevents their breaking out and the tearing off of the bands of a broom which repeated striking against doors and hop-boards and reaching under large pieces of furniture does.

CLIQUES IN CLUBS.

Every Large Club has its Sets of Fellows Who Are Inseparable.

In every large club there are sets or cliques. Every day or evening you will drifts into one of these sets very soon after he joins the club, says a writer in the New York Sun. He will be confined in this way. First, there is the billiard set. Its members rarely visit any other part of the club than the billiard room, and every other member knows just where to find them. They are usually evening men, and the billiard-tables are not much used in the daytime. Most of them are brilliant experts at the balk line game, and they can not tolerate the ordinary billiard player.

Then there is the card set. Not all the clubs allow card playing, but most of them do. In the many of the clubs which is nominally played, but actually all sorts of gambling games are permitted. All the card players in the club gradually drift into this set. Of course, occasionally, men play at other games without becoming slaves to the habit, but these are not members of the card set, and their appearance in a box at all decidedly to the latter.

There is some one who have fallen into the habit of breakfasting at their clubs, and are never seen there at any other time. Others come only to luncheon. Then there are members who live remote from the club-house, and they drop over there for an hour in the afternoon or evening. Sometimes they bring

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 WEEK	2	3	1 MONTH	2	3
1 in.
2 in.
3 in.
4 in.
5 in.
6 in.
7 in.
8 in.
9 in.
10 in.
11 in.
12 in.
13 in.
14 in.
15 in.
16 in.
17 in.
18 in.
19 in.
20 in.
21 in.
22 in.
23 in.
24 in.

All Electro's must be solid metal.
"Lists of Everything" inserted at one per line.
Double ads. go per an inference of above rates

Most exquisite pearl garniture for seats, including a girdle, side trimmings, collar and sleeve pieces, can be obtained at any of the large stores that deal in very nice materials. A lovely pearl set, suitable for wearing over any light material, consists of a solid network of beading extending over the complete right side of the bascque. It terminated in a broad girdle, which was composed of many rows of pearl beads strung in parallel lines across the front of the belt. The left side of the bodice was adorned with several rows of pearl beads looped from the shoulder, making large festoons, and a similar festoon adorned the bottom of the basque.

Really fashionable women do not undertake to dress in showy shawls in the street. One may search the thoroughfares over and yet fail to find a really elegant woman among all those whose dress attracts attention.

PASSEMENTERIE COLLAR AND CUFF TRIMMING.

Simplicity of adornment and taste chooses some quiet, modest, yet substantial material for the street gown and has it tossed by the hand of a tailor of her list. Other and second-rate dressmakers may be intrusted with cheap goods that are "all the rage," but a showy manner, for here, possibly, the faults in style may be hidden in the intricacies of fashion's mazes. But a street gown with the long lines and nice finish requires the best skill obtainable. It will be found closely suggested by refined taste. traces of the showiness of the season are seen upon the most elegant of street dresses.

Suppose a lady wishes to buy a gown for street use. It is to the tailor made she would be promptly directed. First of all, she is forced, if she buys the newest costume, to get something with a bright cord—perhaps of silver, bronze or gold—interwoven. Then the finish for the neck, sleeves, bodice and skirt hem is of bright braid. A quiet cording seems impossible. Thus, between the braid in the woof of the fashion and elegant taste is achieved in the same gaudy style which she has so often condemned in others.

One must indeed shut one's eyes and follow blindly the lead which Dame Fashion dictates.

Black lace dresses are being recalled into popularity. A year ago every woman, young or old, who made any pretensions to fashionable dressing numbered in her wardrobe at least one black dress. For a season the dress has been upon the wane, but modistes announce that the spring trade finds many of these dresses in the shops and upon the counters, where they are quickly measured off to admiring customers.

There is something about the soft, lustrous, clinging net that recommends itself to the mind of women-kind. There is a kind of dressiness about it that makes the wearer feel comfortably well clad, yet which does not give her the sensation of being overdressed. Nicely made, the black net dress is suitable for receptions either at home or abroad, for calling wear, street promenade and theater, as seen at evening gatherings and in the ball room. At all of these occasions it is entirely in place if properly made and set up in the shop otherwise pleasing that can be worn.

RECEPTION GOWN.

NEAT COSTUME FOR THE STREET.

A very pretty ball gown for a young woman is the second illustration figured from plain black net. In the open work meshes is run nine rows of narrow lavender and the bronze. This forms a border around the front and sides of the skirt. The back of the skirt is of black net, made in gathered breadths, and the bodice is treated in the same way with ribbon shirrings. The full ball sleeves are shades of these colors. A little ribbon. An aigrette of lavender ribbons and gold wheat gives a pretty effect to the street wear the net may be dressed with black ribbons or with gold or silver ornaments.

Very large jeweled cord can now be bought in exact imitation of gold beads. It is to be used as a finish to the edges of sleeves where the material fails over the hands. Carefully put on, it has the effect of a stiff and handsome cuff. A chain of the same is added to the upper edge of the collar to simulate a breast necklace.

Practical.

Newly-Made Widow—He is a fashionable undertaker, but even his charges are reasonable. I like his style, and I want to give my husband the most expensive funeral I can, you know.

Undertaker—Very good, I'll get a plumber to bury him, then?—Life.

Out of His Reach.

Mrs. Gopher Lyons—Babette! Why are you putting the candelabra on the mantel instead of on the dining table!

Babette—Mr. Lyons just told me to have them out of his sight the breakfast count, what's comin' to dine, mought forget himself.—Puck.

A Real Character.

McFingle—Brady's talking about me, is he? Well, anything he can say won't hurt my character.

McFarl—Character? What he says. But he remarked to me that it might possibly improve it, as it is too bad to hurt any.—Judge.

A Ray of Sunlight.

Poor Little Boy (shivering)—I'm so cold.

Benevolent Looking Individual—Well, my dear little fellow, be so while you may. Remember there is a hereafter.—West Shore.

A Sad Case.

"Poor Cholly's in a very sad case. His father brought him up in wealth and comfort, and last week—"

"Well?"

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE, Editor and Proprietor. A. L. FORCE Editor and Proprietor.

PROCLAMATION OF THE GOVERNOR.

Pursuant to the authority vested in me by the Joint Resolution of the General Assembly relative to the planting of Kessel trees, approved December 19th, 1890, I, GEORGE HOWARD, Governor of the State aforesaid, do hereby appoint FRIDAY, THE 17TH DAY OF APRIL, INSTANT, ONE THOUSAND EIGHT HUNDRED AND NINETY-ONE, as the day on which the trees shall be planted, and do hereby invite the people of the State to observe the same for that purpose.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed, at Milledgeville, this 7th day of April, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

[L. S.] at Treasurer, this twenty-fourth day of March, in the eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

LEON ABBETT.

By the Governor:
HENRY D. LINDSY,
Secretary of State. 4-9-2t.

THE WAR ENDED.

"I HAVE BEEN FURTHER INFORMED AND VERILY BELIEVE THAT (THE CIVIL WAR TERMINATED IN 1865."

The foregoing was the concluding words of an affidavit made in a suit pending before Judge Ingraham of the New York Supreme Court, growing out of certain railroad frauds, and wherein the unmanly attempt was made to impugn the standing of certain interested parties because of their Southern connection with the war.

The libel was fortified by the solemnity of an oath declares the truth and nothing but the truth.

It furthermore justly rebukes those malignant politicians who are only stock in trade is the effort to fan the embers of sectional discord.

The war terminated twenty-six years ago.

That the people of this country North, South, East and West well know, and by an overwhelming majority are determined that the issues shall remain as settled, and that henceforth patriotism and not the ruling spirit and prosperous peace the only rivalry.

The politician who now thinks he can gain power by waving the crimson rag of obsolete strife had better embark in a balloon for the planet Mars.

His chance for reaching one destination would be as certain as the other.

The last gun was fired in 1865.

Messrs. Harrison, Hoar, Lodge, Reed and Company may not be aware of the fact, yet it is as true as preaching.

A. PROBLEM.

It appears that only two of the eleven Italians killed by Lynch law in New Orleans were unnaturalized and therefore subjects of the Italian Government.

And it further comes to light that the two loyal subjects were both fugitives from the criminal law of Italy.

Now, if the Government of the United States pay indemnity, the question arises how much were those two particular lives worth?

It will be a nice mathematical problem for Secretary Blaine to solve.

THE VOICE OF DEMOCRACY.

Governor Hill, of New York, says "the Democratic party is for Free Trade, but in favor of Tariff Reform, which means a reduction of the present excessive and iniquitous tariff and the retention of a tariff limited to the necessities of the Government economically administered; and that the political revolution last November was a popular outburst against excessive duties, against restricted markets, and against the taxation of the many for the benefit of favored industries." The Governor is right. He voices Democracy.

The shortest session the New Jersey Legislature has held in twelve years was that of the recent Democratic body, forty-two weeks duration, an actual working-time of less than forty days.

Mother of New Jersey's U. S. Senator Sewell was born in Delaware. Her son was born in New York and Blodgett in New Hampshire. Next Senator Abbett was born in Pennsylvania.

In fixing Friday, the 17th day of April, as Arbor Day, Governor Abbett has striven to conform to the early wardness of the season. The day has grown into wonderful popularity, because of the belief in the fact that the destruction of our forests is the cause of climatic changes which are harmful. The past three years have been, and give nature a chance.

The Republicans, who not long since stripped Gov. Abbett of nearly all his appointing power, and placed it in the hands of a Republican joint meeting, are now crimson with jealousy and rage because a Democratic Legislature has restored this power to the Governor, with added interest. This is all that there is in the Republican kick against the acts of the recent Legislature.

FIRE-ESCAPES FOR THE SCHOOLS.

And Dr. Carroll Is to Deliver the Commencement Address.

The Plainfield public school buildings are to be provided with fire-escapes immediately. At Saturday's meeting of the Board of Educa ion the matter was brought up by Dr. Probasco, who reported that fire-escapes were not only a proper safeguard, but could be voluntarily but were required by law. He had procured local opinion, and had framed that the construction of fire-escapes was legislatory. The Building Committee were given power to con-truct the e capes as soon as possible.

In this connection the following resolution was adopted:

WHEREAS, by an act of 1890, the trustees are obliged to provide fire-escapes for all public school buildings over one story in height, then thereupon largely the expenses for the counties of same, and

Resolved, That a requisition be made upon the Assessors and Collectors of Union county for the sum of $5,000 per cent. on the taxable valuation of real and personal property in the district, or any other amount required for bonds and interest as made up.

R. K. Carroll, M. D., of North Plainfield, was invited to deliver the address at the annual commencement exercises of the High school.

Miss Page was sent to the chair in the Irving building, Louis F. Wadsworth was appointed to take the school census.

Boring Cars to Pemberton.

Pullman dining cars are now running between New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington via Royal Blue Line on the famous five-hour trains, leaving New York daily, except Sunday, at 11 20 a. m., arriving at Washington 4.20 p. m., connecting for first class express leaving New York daily at 3.30 p. m., arriving at Washington 6.55 p. m. On Sunday trains dining car train leaves New York at 9 a. m., arrives at Washington 2.40 p. m. The fact that the cars are under the direction of the Pullman Company is a sufficient guarantee as to the quality of the service. Ticket offices at Liberty street, Pennsylvania and Jersey City.

Every family should use Tutt's Pills. You can get Salvia Oil for twenty-five cents. Best in the market.

AFTER THE FIRE-BUGS.

The City Offers $300 Reward for Detection of Incendiaries.

The Plainfield Common Council held the regular meeting in their new quarters Monday evening. All of the members were present.

The following communication was received from Mayor Gilbert, and by unanimous vote its recommendation was adopted:

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—In view of the frequent occurrence of fires which strongly indicate that incendiarism is the cause of many of them, I respectfully suggest the propriety of offering a reward of $300 for the arrest and conviction of any party who shall willfully set fire to any building within the limits of the city.

Respectfully submitted,
J. GILBERT, Mayor.

Wm. H. Miner, Superintendent of the Boys' Club, was made a special policeman.

Frederick Wessel was made pound-keeper.

Assessor Hubbard's petition for an increase of $60 in his annual salary was referred to the Finance Committee.

The following communication was also referred:

To the Honorable the Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

The subscribers, property owners of Prospect street, representing more than one-half in area of the land on said street, do agree to give to the city of Plainfield eight feet of our land on the northerly side of said street, from Watchung Ave. to Second street, and eight feet on the northerly side from Front street to the Richmond Railroad.

Provided, first, that the street be opened and laid out from the present terminus of Front street to grade of the city, the same to be done at the expense of the Block Improvement Association, and the estate of Mr. Duniels.

Provided, secondly, that the subscribers who have their land for this public benefit shall not be assessed benefits or pay damages, and that the city relay their pavements and sidewalks.

Cornelia Rossiter, 40 feet.
Mary Tuthill, 8 feet.
Mary L. Force, 125 feet.
A. J. MacDonald, 125 feet.
Cranmore Hall, 80 feet.
A. M. Frazee, 100 feet.
J. Montgomery, 40 feet.
A. B. Summers, Jr., 40 feet.
Plainfield, N. J., March 31, 1891.

A further petition, from residents on other thoroughfares, asking that Peace street be widened 16 feet, re-named Broad Way, and extended to the brook, was filed.

O. B. Leonard, Secretary of the Board of Health, reported that $800 would be needed from the city for the current year.

O. T. Waring applied for permission to erect five dwelling houses at East Sixth and Sycamore streets. The Committee on Fire Alarm and Buildings was given power to grant the request.

A long list of local merchants asked that traveling auctioneers opening their stores in this city be compelled to pay with inferior goods at the expense of the local dealers who pay taxes on stock and buildings, the petitioners claiming that it is prohibited from selling altogether. The matter was referred to the Committee on Laws and Ordinances.

The Committee on Streets were given power to lay a cross-walk across Park avenue, between Front and Second streets.

The Committee on Fire and Buildings were given power to act with Frank D. Martin to erect a bicycle repair shop opposite the Bicycle Club-house, and, to permit J. A. Dunham to erect a frame dwelling on Madison avenue between Sixth and Seventh streets.

S. P. Kimball was made a member of Engine House Company. Frank Reed and John Kietering were made members of No 2 Engine Company.

Thos. J. Carey presented a bill of $1,000 for services which he never performed. It was referred to the Salary Committee.

Old rubber hose was ordered exchanged for new, and the Hook and Ladder Company, Alert Hose house were authorized, to prepare for the storing of the new hose wagon the company is about to buy.

A petition asking that the Fire Alarm was referred to the Corporation Counsel.

Mr. Corgill, an electrical ex ert from Boston, made a speech showing the trolley system to be the best and only really satisfactory method of electrical rapid transit. He proved it to be comparatively noiseless and safe.

Councilman Spangenberg, at the request of Mayor Gilbert, introduced an ordinance compelling all owners of dogs, whether licensed or not, to keep the creatures the year 'round, when on the streets. The ordinance was referred to the Committee on Laws and Ordinances.

The following resolution, introduced by Councilman Rushmore, was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That a Committee of Three be appointed by the Chair to memorialize the Legislature relative to the Central Railroad of New Jersey, the object of said memorial being to lay before the members of the Legislature the actual necessity that the freight station be removed from its present location, said memorial to be signed by the signature of each member of this Council, together with that of the Mayor of the city. Further,

Resolved, That the said Committee be instructed to present the aforesaid memorial in person to the President and other officials of the railroad company, and urge on him the importance that the said memorial should be acted on at the earliest possible moment.

President Smith appointed Councilman Glenn, Spangenberg and Rushmore, as such committee.

Ordinances changing the grades of East Second street between Dunellen and Richmond, and North avenue between Richmond and Terrill road, were adopted on first and second readings, and ordered published in the advertised.

At 11 o'clock the Council adjurned to Monday night.

Death Ends a Wedding Anniversary.

Concerning the death of the late John Wilson Thomson, which occurred at the Muhlenberg Hospital, this city, just after midnight of Sunday, March 22, an exclusively told in Tuesday's issues, the Washington correspondent of the Washington, Warren county, Star, writes as follows:

Mr. Thomson, Young was in some unknown way injured by the cars on the Central Railroad, at Plainfield, on the 5th inst. During the time he remained in the hospital he never rallied sufficiently to tell the particulars of his accident. His wife and parents watched over him night and day, hoping that they might see some favorable change, but all in vain. The lawyer that had bloomed was for eternity, and after two weeks of intense suffering he died. Mr. Young was born at a place called The Hickory, Hunterdon county, October 7, 1866. When he was but three years old his father moved to this place and engaged in the mercantile business, by Misses Schooley and Thatcher. When he was old enough he was sent to school, and, being a bright scholar, attained a good education. When he was seventeen years of age his father purchased a farm and he was then taken from school and assisted his father to operate the same. At the age of twenty-one, having a desire to shift for himself, he enrolled his name at A. J. Rider's business college, at Trenton, where he took a course in penmanship, etc., and made such rapid progress that he was enabled to secure his diploma after a period of five months. He then became a salesman of 'it with his parents here, and on Sept. 10, 1890, entered the office of the Pond Machine Tool Company at Plainfield, as shipping clerk, which position he retained until the accident. On the 22d day of March, 1890, he married Miss Sadie Laver, of this place, and but after midnight of the following day (he died). Less than just one year March 23. He was a distinguished young brother, and a kind and loving husband. The funeral services took place from the Presbyterian church, of which he was a member, on Thursday morning. Burial services at Mt. Pleasant.

1,093 SIGN IT.

ENTHUSIASTIC INDORSEMENT OF THE PRESS' PETITION TO REMOVE THE FREIGHT HOUSE.

Committee of Plainfield and North Plainfield Citizens in a Prayer to President Roswell That a Safer and Attractive Approach to the Station be Provided on South Side.

[From the Press issue of April 7.]

THE PRESS' petitions that the freight house be removed, have been signed by the Mayor, all the Councilmen and every commuter and property owner in the city who could get the chance. Even the brook Mayor Place and members of his good citizens have also signed, and to-day the petitions endorsed by 1,093 substantial people of city and borough, are sent to President Maxwell.

To add weight to these petitions, the Common Council last evening appointed committee consisting of Messrs. Glenn, Spangenberg and Rushmore to draw up a memorial to the Central R. R. of N. J. to lay before the officials of the road the actual necessity that the freight station be removed from its present location. This memorial is to be signed by the members of the Common Council, and is to be presented in person by the committee who are to urge upon the President the importance to the city and citizens of the improvement asked for.

These are THE PRESS' petitions;

"To the President and Board of Directors of the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

"GENTLEMEN:—The undersigned citizens of Plainfield and patrons of your road, would respectfully present to your attention the following considerations of things, and request for it all a thorough consideration, followed—at the earliest possible moment—by such remedial action as will meet your approval with your ideas of policy, justice, and frugality, most conducive to our comfort and safety, and to it would add much to the attractiveness of Plainfield's main station.

"The only bit upon our fair city today and the greatest obstruction to its growth, is your freight house and yards. We beg of you to remove it, not only because it is so distasteful to our sight and so repugnant to the eye of the stranger within our gates, but because it daily menaces limbs and lives of almost every inhabitant of Plainfield. Of our city's population but a handful, comparatively, live on the North side of the track. The masses then, if they have only a minute to spare, climb a steep and muddy bank on the South side and jump across the tracks, or walk a 'couple' to detour their train. If they have two minutes to spare they pick their way through the passenger yard, or wait for a chance in shifting cars or climb over them. If they have three minutes to spare they pass down under the bridges to the North side of the track, and travel around the block to reach the station.

"This latter way you will say is the only safe and proper proceeding. But it is not the way the most of us always have, and again, those of us who ride do not dare to go that way, for just as we passed under the bridges the engine or cars would rush over the horses' heads with a noise that would cause them to run away and kill us or ruin themselves forever.

"In spite of the handicap you keep upon us, we yet lead in the race for growth and increase of wealth. Still you are hurting us without helping yourselves. Your freight facilities are not adequate where they are and you own many sites further from the city's centre and with your present way. As to convenience for shippers and receivers, that is only a question that affects a few truckmen who can as well drive a few blocks further; besides you have no use of it, wherever you move you bring yourself no much nearer to somebody. The question we are presenting to you affects the whole community—its well-being and prosperity.

"It it is because there are no manufactured streets leading to such new sites as you propose to use for the present, please the city will build them. Talk it over, at least, won't you?

"Very Sincerely Yours,"

A. Gilbert,	G. F. E. Sollitt,
Ernest R. Ackerman,	C. R. Maltby,
Townsend Rushmore,	G. L. Vandinburgh,
John Gaston,	W. B. Collington,
Wm. G. S. See,	W. T. Pelletier,
Hiram Bush,	Hamilton Smith,
L. Spangenberg,	Wm. J. Leonard,
D. S. Roberts,	John M. Crane,
Frederick W. Suhth,	F. H. Miller,
E. D. Moffett,	Hobart Clark,
A. T. Galley,	W. H. Tuthill,
Walter Hetfield,	E. C. Perkins,
A. H. Lewis,	Chas. H. Sandford,
Wm. J. Fish,	Asst. Vice-President,
R. F. Murray,	A. T. Sissons,
J. B. Cornell,	J. B. Runyon,
C. I. Ames,	B. G. Bowers,
J. W. Yates,	J. E. Terrell,
Jos. Cooley,	W. S. Pond,
Chas. Schipper,	E. F. Williams,
Wm. Schipper,	R. C. Marshall,
E. L. Walz,	J. T. Fritts,
E. A. Gross,	Sam'l Milliken, Jr.,
Wm. H. Sterling,	Wm. H. Sterling,
C. W. Opdyke,	D. C. Irvin,

and over a thousand others. The other petitions, reads as follows and are signed by Mayor Place of North Plainfield, ex-Mayor Van Winkle, ex-Councilmen Squires, Bertell, Myers, Marsh and many others.

The undersigned citizens of Plainfield and North Plainfield, patrons of your road, respectfully represent that the present freight station and side tracks from the vicinity of the passenger station quickly as possible, to a point on the South side, which will construct a direct approach to the station on the South side, convenient for pedestrians, and free from danger to us daily, whether we crowd into North avenue or pass through the obstructions in Park avenue and Front street, in the Park avenue and Front street, in daily business hours, morning and evening. A next passenger station and pretty park, with safe and wide approaches, would be a credit to the city of Plainfield more comfortable to us, and attractive to strangers, and would add to the prosperity of the city, and therefore benefit your road.

The removal of the said site are put to great inconvenience and considerable peril from overcrowding upon North avenue and Park avenue, and thus endangering life in very much less, both to carriages and pedestrians, when delayed momentarily by the passing of your honorable company, to some more appropriate convenient and accessible freight house and yards.

The desire for this change is very general among the people, and we hope our appeal will receive your early and favorable attention, in the hope (now absolutely necessary) it is indeed ridiculous that so few accidents have occurred, and that we have not a funeral every day. Narrow escapes are constantly occurring, and a calamity may happen any moment which will cost your road dear, over the expense of these changes for which we now petition you most urgently.

Mrs. James Crane,	Miss Hattie Winslow,
" Annie Winslow,	" Annie Fuller,
" A. C. Dingee,	Mr. George Appleton,
" J. W. Price,	" William Cottell,
" Wm. Fisher,	" Harold Winslow,
Rev. Mr. Schaufflerbine.

In time, the building having passed into the possession of Mr. Anglemann, a liquor saloon crept into the first floor, the second floor being the dwelling place of the proprietor. At a meeting in April, 1890, the saloon was voted out of existence, the entire building, fifteen persons subscribing one dollar a month each, for the rent. James Dedrick was appointed treasurer, and collected the money for three months and paying the rent. This became in time an arduous task, as subscribers left the neighborhood, but for eleven years, with added subscriptions, the rent was paid, in 1890, Mr. Dedrick cheerfully performed this service.

The funds thus obtained, supporting him and school moved down to the first floor, placing a janitor on the second and the infant class on the third floor. It was then proposed to buy the lot, and the neighboring ministers to fill the place of Mr. Woodruff and Mr. Brown, who had removed from Dunellen, and the building of a new church. A committee

I FEEL it my duty to say a few words in regard to Dr. Green Rolfe, and I do so entirely unsolicited. I was afflicted with Rheumatism for about a year, and tried many remedies, but to no avail. I was induced to try Dr. Green Rolfe's Rheumatic Remedy, and after using one bottle I was entirely relieved. I can recommend it to all suffering with Rheumatism, as I believe it to be a sure cure. Yours truly, JOHN MCCARTHY, Plainfield, N. J.

THE NEW CHAPEL DEDICATED.

A RED-LETTER DAY AMONG LOCAL METHODISTS.

After Years of Patient Waiting, the Brown Station Has a Permanent Home at Last. Interesting Services Yesterday.

The Plainfield Methodists had a veritable jubilee, Sunday, when their new chapel at Monroe avenue and Fourth street was thrown open to the public and formally dedicated.

For weeks they had been looking forward with great pleasure to the day, and when the fine day was over, their pastor, the Rev. Charles Bayard Mitchell, said that he and his people had never had a happier day.

Those who took occasion to inspect the new chapel speedily reached the conclusion already recorded in THE PRESS, that it was a marvel of neatness, beauty and convenience.

The chapel is the outgrowth of the work of a mission that has been kept alive at Evans by a small band of earnest workers. As soon as the Plainfield Methodist Episcopal church took charge of the mission, four liberal members of the congregation agreed to put their hands into their pockets and contributed the sum of $1,500 for the purchase of the building site of the new chapel. The chapel cost $6,000, and is marvelously cheap for the money. It is handsome and commodious, and a gratifying structure in every way. With all its rooms thrown open it is to one large hall, there is room for a big congregation. At night, when lighted up by clusters of electric lamps, a very pretty exterior effect is obtained. The light streaming through the stained-glass windows serves as a beacon to hitherto unconscious people. The chapel is situated just opposite the Drake public school. It is in a neighborhood where large numbers will be reached and benefited.

At Sunda 's services, the Rev. Mr. Mitchell gave opportunity for the making of subscriptions to the building fund, which result was the raising of $1,150 in the morning, $180 in the afternoon, and nearly $250, at night, making a total of almost $1 500 for the day.

The Rev. Andrew, of New York city, preached a powerful sermon to large congregations, morning and evening, and in the evening he formally dedicated the building to God's purposes. Letters were read from J. W. Jackson, who represented the Board of Trustees. The other trustees were scattered in front of the pulpit during the dedicatory services were Edwin Loomis, W. E. Codington, George R. Cornwell, and Garret Q. Packer. In the absence of Chief Justice Beasley, who was made by James McGee, J. W. Jackson, Geo. Anglemann, Walter McGee, and other laymen. Mr. Anglemann was the first, and Mr. Walter McGee the last superintendent of the mission. F. E. Kinsman, representing the Sunday-school, extended a greeting from the Sunday-school of the Church of North Plainfield gave similar good cheer from the Crescent Avenue Presbyterians. Thus the congregational features gave evidence of kindness and promises of brotherly support, and gave liberal contributions as well. During the afternoon Willard Huff, who has been identified with the mission as one of its most tireless workers, read the following interesting historical sketch:

The history of the Evans Union Sunday-school from its organization in 1876 until 1885 is without official record, and the result of the efforts of your historian to secure information from the few conjectural verities, this record is necessarily limited to periods. The absence of official record also limits the history of the school to a narration of its annual life.

In the summer of 1876 the Evans community included a number of families of recent residence, who, considering the practicability of sending their children to Sunday-school in Dunellen or Dunellen, had planned to open a school in a barn. Last at this juncture, Mr. Anglemann, a member of the Dunellen Methodist church, sought the co-operation of his pastor, the Rev. Mr. Woodruff, and announced to the people that services would be held regularly Sunday afternoons on the second floor of a building owned by him, on the corner of Front street and Clinton avenue. The dedication of the opening cannot be ascertained, but the meeting was attended by all denominations, and was a success. You remember a rambling dilapidation being a real element in the occasion. Mr. Anglemann announced his intention to organize a Union Sunday-school, to be held previous to the preaching service, and after two or three weeks the school was opened, with Mr. Anglemann as Superintendent, and an attendance of about fifty scholars. For those first days zealous devotion to service was the character of the school, and has continued to be, even under great discouragement.

After a few weeks, the Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Dunellen Presbyterian church, relieved Mr. Woodruff, and they alternately conducted the service. Both of these men were busy pastors, having their own services in their own churches every Sunday, and were compelled to ride many months the little congregation was made to feel that they gladly gave it of their best. The pastor that was being occupied consisted of three poorly-constructed log rooms, the minister standing in a doorway, where he could be heard but not seen, and the congregation, which persisted a direct approach to the station on the South side, convenient for pedestrians, and danger to us daily, whether we crowd into North avenue or pass through the obstructions in Park avenue and Front street, in daily business hours, morning and evening. A next passenger station and pretty park, with safe and wide approaches, would be a credit to the city of Plainfield more comfortable to us, and attractive to strangers, and would add to the prosperity of the city, and therefore benefit your road.

The removal of the said site are put to great inconvenience and considerable peril from overcrowding upon North avenue and Park avenue, and thus endangering life in very much less, both to carriages and pedestrians, when delayed momentarily by the passing of your honorable company, to some more appropriate convenient and accessible freight house and yards.

The desire for this change is very general among the people, and we hope our appeal will receive your early and favorable attention, in the hope (now absolutely necessary) it is indeed ridiculous that so few accidents have occurred, and that we have not a funeral every day. Narrow escapes are constantly occurring, and a calamity may happen any moment which will cost your road dear, over the expense of these changes for which we now petition you most urgently.

Mrs. James Crane,	Miss Hattie Winslow,
" Annie Winslow,	" Annie Fuller,
" A. C. Dingee,	Mr. George Appleton,
" J. W. Price,	" William Cottell,
" Wm. Fisher,	" Harold Winslow,
Rev. Mr. Schaufflerbine.

In time, the building having passed into the possession of Mr. Anglemann, a liquor saloon crept into the first floor, the second floor being the dwelling place of the proprietor. At a meeting in April, 1890, the saloon was voted out of existence, the entire building, fifteen persons subscribing one dollar a month each, for the rent. James Dedrick was appointed treasurer, and collected the money for three months and paying the rent. This became in time an arduous task, as subscribers left the neighborhood, but for eleven years, with added subscriptions, the rent was paid, in 1890, Mr. Dedrick cheerfully performed this service.

The funds thus obtained, supporting him and school moved down to the first floor, placing a janitor on the second and the infant class on the third floor. It was then proposed to buy the lot, and the neighboring ministers to fill the place of Mr. Woodruff and Mr. Brown, who had removed from Dunellen, and the building of a new church. A committee

May the Lord bless and keep you
May the Lord make His face shine upon you
And be gracious unto you
May the Lord lift up His countenance upon you
And give you peace.

PERTINENT PARAGRAPHS.

NUGGETS OF LOCAL NEWS, WITH GRAINS OF FREE-LANCE COMMENT.

The fascinating propensities of the festive Reuben goat have long been the subject of proverb, and from time immemorial the great Democratic party has poked fun at this be-horned and be-whiskered plebian quadruped and his extraordinary lifting for the gay plutocrat of Boards and Commissions. But never would have suspected the aristocratic Plainfield horse of developing an appetite of the same queer sort. It remained for the Farmington's distinguished friend, Mr. Bill Foster himself, the William Goat's own patron saint, to discover that the Democratic City possessed a creature of such abnormal taste.

Mr. Foster had for some time been annoyed by the repeated wanton destruction of the works of art which he had hung on the boards in front of the Stillman Music Hall. He attributed the tearing down of the pictured paper to the malicious machinations of small boys. It was only yesterday that he was undeceived.

While he was pasting up lithographs of the stirring scenes from "Shenandoah", a horse whose daily employment is to haul wagon loads of furniture for Poullion & Jones, stood near, placidly feasting on the fresh paste. Mr. Foster completed his work, the horse moved to the board, delibrately ripped off the paper with his teeth and swallowed it with gusto. There was moist with paste, and highly flavored with colored inks and varnish, and it seemed a most toothsome morsel to the horse. Where we defined an animal as a "quadruped with a taste Mr. Foster could not imagine, but he very humanely called the attention of the owner of the animal to his unique appetite. The owner warned him that slow bills, though never so palatable, were scarcely a wholesome dish, as if persisted in might result ere long in a regular demise. So the paste and poster eating horse is to have his unnatural diet abridged.

While on the subject of appetites, it is meet to consider casually the appetite of that genial gentleman and scholarly traveler, Mr. William Gratian, one of the Paragraph's distinguished literary lalnfield acquaintances.

Mr Gratian's abilities as a delineator of the superb in fiction are already well known to local newspaper readers. His powers as an absorber of refreshments are not so famous.

While in a train with Mr. Bateytown. He says it, and, in the language of his namesake, that other William, Shakespeare, "What Bill says, goes". Judging from Mr. Gratian in similar mood, Mr. Elizabeth who claims to have disposed of forty-seven raw eggs at one sitting, and who is endeavoring to inscribe himself as the tallest of the tall men, as well as the Champion Hen-Fruit Annihilator. Mr. Gratian says "Pooh!"—he can do better than that. He is ready at any time—he says—to eat from 48 to 50 raw more eggs than the Annihilator can swallow, no matter what the number be; and moreover he will undertake to wash up hay till he has eaten a bushel of the fodder. This simple luncheon over, and the annihilator paralyzed, he will begin to feel himself identified with Plainfield by a genuine meal by getting away with seventy-two raw oysters, to be followed by roast beef and other hearty things.

Mr. Gratian says he is also a great on mince pies. He is ready to open an eating contest as soon as the Annihilator can swallow a dozen pies without winking, and his friends will put up the money to back him. He does not ask any guarantee as to funeral expenses.

One thing that Plainfield sadly needs, from the Paragrapher's point of view, is a vote power for its Mayor. As the matter now stands, the Mayor is little more figure-head. In other cities the mayoralty is a position of honor and power; here it is a weak and empty office. There is no danger of Plainfield's electing a mayor in whom confidence may not be fully reposed, and an office to which such good men—men of firmness and integrity of character, men of public spirit, men of nobility—are chosen, ought not to be so void of controlling influence. The municipality would be vastly safer and better governed if the Mayor had a veto power.

Plainfield's charter is greatly defective in not bestowing the veto power customary in cities of the highest local official, and if all that the Paragrapher hears is true it is greatly defective on some other points as well as that. There is, for instance, a doubt in the legal fight between the city's charter and that of the Plainfield Water Supply Company. The courts may decide the legal and irrefutable holes in the municipal parchment.

A Plainfield Chapter of Daughters of the American Revolution, to be Formed Later.

Mrs. Charlotte Louise Lawrence of the New York Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, would be glad if her sisters of Plainfield and neighborhood who are descended from the revolutionary ancestry, who her or not they may be already prepared with a full statement of their credentials (which can be drawn up later), meet at the Park Hotel, Adams Darling, Vice President-General of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and herself, at Morristown, Wednesday, April 15, at 11 o'clock for to organize a New Jersey Chapter of the D. A. R.

It was at first proposed to organize two Chapters for the State of New Jersey, to which, as a State with an extraordinary Revolutionary history, it seemed to be entitled, one of which was to have headquarters at Morristown and the other at Plainfield. But Mrs. Darling is of opinion that a single strong organization, with headquarters at Morristown where are the headquarters of the sons of the American Revolution is situated, would be best at present. The organization could hold meetings at Plainfield occasionally, particularly with meetings at Morristown, if found desirable, and the second New Jersey Chapter could be formed later if found convenient.

The Flight Over Job Hale's Wealth to Begin on June 2.

At ten o'clock in the morning of June 2, an effort will be made before the prerogative court at Trenton to have admitted to probate the alleged nuncupative will of Job Hale that Tom Parnell has told all about.

So far thirty-two heirs-at-law, devisees, legatees and next of kin have been discovered, and the most of them will be on hand, June 2, with lawyers to fight the proceedings.

Hunterdon says a nuncupative will is "a will made by word of mouth only, and depending on oral testimony for proof, though afterward reduced to writing."

It will be remembered by those who read of the deathbed scene exclusively published in THE PRESS, that death just before the end of with which Job Hale dictated his bequests as he was dying, to Counselor Marsh—who was present in behalf of Commissioner R. S. Runyon, it is said, because he was suddenly summoned to get a lawyer in a hurry, and the former happened to be near at hand. There were also present when Job Hale died Mrs. A. C. Dalgleish, Mrs. E. S. Darby, Dr. W. Dalgleish and others, who heard the dying man assert that it was all his last will and testament.

Royal Baking Powder
of Greatest Strength and Purity.

"As a result of my investigations I find the Royal Baking Powder far superior to the others. It is pure, contains none but wholesome ingredients, and is of greatest strength.

"F. X. VALADE,
"Public Analyst, Ontario,
"Dominion of Canada."

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.
The North Avenue Pharmacy,
65 North Ave., opp. Depot,
Now open with a complete line of Drugs, Medicines, Chemicals and Fancy Goods.
PRESCRIPTIONS WILL BE COMPOUNDED BY NONE BUT REGISTERED PHARMACISTS.
Delicious Soda, Drawn from Matthews's Latest Improved Fountain.
After an experience of twenty-five years, seventeen years at the corner of Front Street and Park Avenue, I beg to announce that now I have a store opening in every department.
A. D. MALLINSON.
4-1 mo

A GRAND GIFT!
Never Equaled!
A Bicycle, and It Won't Cost You a Cent!
Every Monday morning we give away a Bicycle and publish the name of the boy who receives it in the Newark papers.
HERE'S THE PLAN:
In our window you will see a Bicycle, also a lot of beans. We don't know ourselves how many beans there are—that jar, as one always does, will be filled with beans. Every boy who makes a purchase of Boys' or Children's Clothing to guess, and the one who comes the nearest guess gets the Bicycle. Guess are furnished at time of sale.
Our Stock of Boys' & Children's Clothing
Is an elegant and peerless one. An immense assortment of Clothing for Boys of all ages and sizes. In Short-Pant Suits the stock is large and unbroken. Many striking and stylish garments are not to be found elsewhere. Plaid Jackets and all wool Jersey Suits of pleating, with and without vests. A stock in which you cannot fail to find what will suit your taste and suit your pocketbook.
Large Boys' Suits, with long pants. Here again the stock is very strong in quantity and variety. We have tried hard to merit your approval this season. We are meeting it daily and we are pleased.
GET A BICYCLE.
McGregor & Co., 850 and 852 Broad St NEWARK, N. J.
The second Bicycle was won last Monday by Joseph Kroll, of Newark. Next one given away next Monday.

THE COWHIDE BOOTS WON.

Weavers of Plaited-Leather Routed by the Barbarous Farmer Element.

Here is the way that sprightly New York paper, The Daily Continent, treats the recent exciting legislation in the Nor h Plainfield Borough Council:

"For years the farmer inhabitants and brokers who have their houses in North Plainfield, N. J., have suffered a signal defeat at the hands of the farmer element of the borough of Plainfield.

"For years these factions have been warring over the disposition of road money. The amount appropriated each year is $5,000, the bulk of which the wealthy New Yorkers have continually secured for the accomplishing of handsome pleasure drives through the aristocratic Washington Park, in which they live.

"The main highways have suffered gross neglect, while farmers and other taxpayers suffering thereby have been very persistent in pushing their claims. After being utterly ignored for six consecutive years, they have at last secured recognition.

"When the newly-elected Council organized Friday night, it was discovered that the farmers had won over to their side Councilman Benjamin A. Heyman, Jr., a prominent young business man of the village. Through his deciding vote Greenbrook road, one of the most important lines of public travel to the borough, was ordered paved.

"The work will require two-thirds of the entire year's appropriation. Hitherto the road has been utterly impassable during the winter months, and because of the bad state of the works and roads in the village. Through his deciding vote Councilman Heyman, Jr., a prominent young business man of the village, brought his constituents to the conclusion that industries in the suburbs, as well as the farming people, were best shut off from civilization six months in the year.

"The road is now ordered to be paved the road was accompanied by exciting debate and bitter personalities. The farmers, who were present in large numbers, openly charged that the Council was overpaved with mushmouse deep, proof positive of the condition of the road, and made caustic comparison of them with the intricately-plaited leather foot wear of their ne ighbors on the opposite side.

"The Unitarian Have a "Barn Hunt".

A decidedly original Easter-tide entertainment was given by the children of the Unitarian Sunday-school and their young friends on Wednesday last week. The spacious barn of Mr. Edwin Darling was selected in what was called a "barn hunt".

The church parlors were prettily decorated with potted plants and the colors of the season—yellow and white. Easter lilies, worms and Vasity Band. An adjoining room was fitted up as an old barn, where hidden away in the midst of straw and the usual transport of such places, were the basket nests of candy eggs on which Easter owlets sat. The bird had even found a nesting in the pockets of the old coat and hat which hung on the wall. The nests were the treasures which the children were to hunt for in the dim light that was all the old barn-loft afforded. The whole barn interior deserves a better description, if space permitted, so ingenious were its arrangements.

Music and addresses were included in the entertainment and light refreshments were served. The festivities closed with a bit of pleasantry introduced by E. P. Hubbard, who presented Mrs. Darling, on behalf of the originator of the entertainment, Mrs. W. J. Leonard, was the victim. The young grew dark, and following the doleful sounds of the owl long-eared owl, which seemed to represent that bird appeared and repeated a few original rhymes, which created much merriment among young and old.

Trustees of St. Clement's Church.

The following members of the Free Church of Christ were elected Trustees Wednesday evening at April 1:

S. A. J. Stewart, B. J. Hand, A. G. Nicholas, S. T. Hoffman, M. J. Stewart, R. S. Brown, H. Hand.

The Great Century Run.

At a meeting of delegates from the various cycling clubs interested in the Great Century Run of 100 miles from Newark to Philadelphia, which was held Saturday evening at the club-house of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, it was decided to hold the event on the second day, June 13. The run will start from New York at 4 a. m. On arrival here the party will be served with a luncheon at the Park house, and will then assemble in a body opposite the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, where a photograph will be taken. The run will finish at Broad and Market streets, Philadelphia, at 7 p. m. The following Committee was elected to arrange the necessary arrangements and take charge of the run:

Fred. C. Gilbert, captain Elizabeth Wheelmen; Frank L. C. Martin, captain Plainfield Bicycle Club; Lewis Perry, captain Essex County Wheelmen; Trustees, J. D. Barry, Passaic Orange Wheelmen; C. W. Dobson, secretary Newark Bicycle Club, Philadelphia; J. F. Thorne, captain Atlantic Wheelmen, Newark; John Lee, captain Brooklyn Bicycle Club, Brooklyn.

A literary invitation is extended to all interested in the coming cycling event of 1891. Any information required by the run will gladly be furnished by members of the committee.

WANTS THE ROAD BY HIS PROPERTY.

Reed's An Owner of 600 Feet Frontage Who Is Begging for the Electric Railway to Pass Him.

To THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—You are filling the bill as a public benefactor in advocating the electric street railroad and in advocating the trolley system which was laid before us by our worthy Mayor and Common Council. The Broadway property owners made a like request to Netherwood by the ay of Peace street, but East Fifth street to Netherwood by the bulk of which the wealthy New Yorkers have continually secured for the accommodating of handsome pleasure drives through the aristocratic Washington Park, in which they live.

"The main highways have suffered

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

AN ELECTRIC RAILROAD FAILURE.

What Happened in a City Where the Council Refused the Trolley System.

NEW ORLEANS, La., April 8.—The works of the Electric Traction Manufacturing Company have been closed, and the employes, fifty in number, discharged. The electric motor cars have been taken off and laid up, and the two years' experience has ended in failure and loss.

The attempt made to utilize the motors was on the Upper Magazine and Citizens' line, but they gave out and broke down so often as to be serious hindrances to travel. The members of the City Council were so sanguine of the success of this enterprise that they refused to grant permission to the Carrollton Road to adopt the overhead wire system.

—The banks of this city should follow the example of others and close at noon on Saturdays. There is no reason why they should n't.

—The music in the First Presbyterian church is attracting a great deal of attention. Last Sunday evening a number of strangers were present and highly entertained by the organist and vocalists.

—Over two additional electric arc lights have been contracted for since the 1st of January, by the Plainfield company. One house alone, that of W. F. Smith at Hazelwood, has had 178 new lights put in.

—The Misses Gorsline have removed from 46 West Front street, to 14 West Front street, and offer to the public bargains in fancy articles, art needlework, hand-painted novelties, and work in stamping, outlining and embroidering.

—Young men who want to join the bowling club on the line of T. M. C. A. are requested to leave their names at once with any one of the following gentlemen: C. C. Dills, Roger P. Murray, A. B. Sears, John M. Burnett, or at the T. M. C. A. rooms.

—At the annual meeting Tuesday of the stockholders of the Plainfield Gas Light company the election of the board of directors for the ensuing year, the following were re-elected: H. G. Runkle, H. B. Pope, P. A. Pope, F. Brunson and A. J. Hindley.

—Charles Carpenter, who a short time ago was station agent at Dunellen, has been appointed agent at Somerville, in place of W. S. Snyder, resigned. Mr. Carpenter has been in the employ of the Central more than twenty-five years. He is very popular among patrons of the road.

—The Pullman Palace Car Company, which has the contract for supplying the 5,000 new coal, gondola, box and stock cars for the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, is rapidly completing the order. They will be supplied with cushioned couplers. The cost of the new rolling stock will be $3,000,000 and the extra cost of couplers will be over $100,000.

—The famous "Town and Country" ready-mixed paints are sold in Plainfield and vicinity exclusively through the agency of Woolston & Buckle, of 25 and 27 North avenue. These paints are made of the purest leads and oils, and are in every way reliable. Their merits need merits are fully detailed in the "Town and Country" advertisement in THE PRESS to-day.

The Rescue Circus Win.

The boss masons yielded Tuesday to the demand of the striking bed-carriers for an increase of 25 cents per day, and immediately the strikers back to work.

An After Easter Party.

Miss Maggie M. Hurlburt entertained April 1 a select number of her most intimate friends, at her home, 30 Emily street, Dunellen. The evening was full of entertainment included music, games and refreshments, and a most enjoyable time was had by all.

Fraternal Arrangements.

A delegation from Plainfield Council, No. 711, had an official and fraternal visit to Cranford with Council of Brooklyn Friday evening. After the regular order of business and the initiation of Wm. F. Downing, a collation was served, followed by speech making, and all present expressed themselves as having had a very enjoyable time. It is hoped that the brotherly relationship will visit Plainfield at an early date.

To Help One Another.

The South Press Works Mutual Aid Society elected the following officers on Monday, at a meeting held in Wetumpka Lodge rooms:

President—Lewis H. Brown.
Vice President—George B. Carpenter.
Treasurer—Henry C. Nesmer.
Secretary—Frank Bowers.
Board of Directors—David S. Pope, William Gleib, Thomas Gardiner, Thomas Neil, Jason Newmiller, James McKenzie, Daniel J. Randall, David Jones and David Allen.

The members left with a handsome check from Mr. Scott, and a membership of about $75. Its object is to provide aid for sick and disabled members and benefits for their families in case of death.

Fire.

A frame dwelling house at 163 South Fourth street, owned by Patrick Morse, was discovered to be afire at about 3:30 Tuesday afternoon.

An alarm was sent in from box 45. The department responded, and saved the house from utter destruction, but the roof was destroyed, and the upper story was burned out.

The fire originated either in the attic, from the chimney, or in the roof, from a locomotive spark.

The house is a double one. The end in which the fire started was vacant. The other was occupied by a family named Fitzgerald, whose household goods were saved.

The damaged house faces the railroad track, and is but a few doors below Plainfield avenue.

Arrested by the Smoke Just in Time.

Smouldering cigar stumps in a wooden spittoon in Sanford Snyder's grocery store at 19 West Fourth street started a lively blaze during Thursday night, and at 4 o'clock next morning Mr. and Mrs. Snyder and others living in the building awoke to find the place filled with suffocating smoke. The fire was extinguished with a few bucketfuls of water, but meanwhile so alarm was sent in from box 13 by night watchman Dunavan, of Bojce's coal yard, at the direction of Edward Geibir, one of the occupants of the threatened building. The department turned out, but was promptly given the recall. The hook and ladder truck is undergoing repairs, and so it was not necessary to pressed into service as a ladder carrier. The new alarm was sounded at 6:40, and succeeded in awaking even those who had been soundly sleeping.

The fire burned quite a hole in the floor of the store.

Death.

John B. Gough, the famous lecturer, expired at Centerbrook, Conn., yesterday, of a fatal cold, that started for Kansas in the hope of getting rid of it. Sympathy will be extended to the family of Colonel Dan De. Bull's Cough Syrup.

PERSONALIA.

William L. Saunders of Mercer avenue is in Virginia.

B. A. Hegeman, Jr., has removed to his new residence on Myrtle avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Michael Dunn of East Seventh street are at the seashore.

Miss Annie Searing of Madison avenue is spending a few days with relatives at Utica.

Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed moved into his new home on Willow avenue, Thursday.

Mrs. H. Lymond Munger and Miss Munger of Washington avenue, sailed for Europe April 1.

Mrs. Augustus VanDeventer, of Willow avenue, entertained a few of her friends at luncheon April 1.

Frank S. Brunson and family have removed from West Fifth street to apartments in The Albion.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Cook, and Mr. and Mrs. George W. Rockefellow, returned Friday night from their trip to Florida.

The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis will preach at the M. E. church next Sunday morning, and the Rev. C. L. Goodrich Sunday evening.

Ann Verdon, the estimable wife of the late James Verdon, died yesterday aged 86 years at her home, "Shady Lawn," North Plainfield.

C. E. Brooks is out again after an illness of four weeks. The attack was very severe, and Mr. Brooks narrowly escaped pneumonia.

The funeral services over the remains of Miss Ella Taylor, will be held at her late home, 122 Madison avenue, Friday afternoon at three o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Bischoff have returned from New York city and have again taken up their residence in "Maple Cottage," East Second street.

The engagement is announced of Miss Eleanor Bergen, of 20 West Front street, to Mr. Jack Miller, cousin of Mrs. William L. Patton of East Ninth street.

The Rev. Robert Lowry has had erected at Hillside, Summit, a handsome villa of his wife, a costly monument, the work of the Smith Granite company of Westerly, R. I.

Miss Lizzie DeCamp, formerly of North Plainfield and a graduate of the Borough public school, but now a resident of Burkesville, Va., is visiting Miss Force of Dorset street.

I. H. Boehm, F. D. Faller, Jos. S. Cutter and Frank F. Noel are the Plainfield-ers chosen yesterday to serve on the panel of Union county petit jurors for the May term.

The Rev. Chas. B. Mitchell of this city will deliver an address at the Friday evening session of the Newark Methodist Preachers' Meeting Conference, at Washington, Warren county, April 10.

Funeral services over the remains of the late Sarah J. Adair, who died at 30 South Plain, Sunday, were held from the residence of her brother, S. Adair, this afternoon at one o'clock.

Ezra K-at, father-in-law of L. C. Baldwin, one of the foremen of the Ford Machine Tool Works, died at his home, 315 West Front street, Friday. Only a week ago the death of his wife occurred.

Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Maltby and Miss Maltby have returned from the Oriental Hotel, New York city, where they have been spending the winter, and are at their summer residence on Plainfield avenue.

Miss Rose Verdon, daughter of the late James Verdon, Esq., and her niece, Miss Gertie Verdon, returned to their home in North Plainfield, Sunday evening, from a most pleasurable trip that included a visit to thirteen different States.

Miss Lina Gardner, daughter of Mary F. and Major George B. Gardner, formerly of this city, died suddenly at Elizabeth, Friday, in the twenty-ninth year of her age. Funeral services will be held in the Trinity church choir of Elizabeth.

Thomas Lynch, foreman of the pressroom in THE PRESS office, is brimming over with happiness because of the arrival of a pretty and plump young daughter to make sunshine in his home on Madison avenue. Mother and child are doing well.

Rowland Cox was Tuesday elected a vice president of the Union County Country Club in place of William Woodcock, resigned. The election of Mr. Cox was unanimous, and there was an unusually flattering enthusiasm displayed over his election.

Very appropriate and appreciative resolutions—says The Visitor—were passed by the Sunday-school Board of the Plainfield M. E. church, concerning the departure of Walter M. McGee from the school to take charge of the new Monroe Avenue Sunday-school.

The Daughters of the Cross gave a most delightful afternoon tea at the residence of Mrs. Joseph H. Johnson, Jr., of Rockview terrace, April 1, from 3 to 6 o'clock. A large number of ladies were present, and the affair was both a social and financial success.

One of the principal features of a recent entertainment given under the auspices of the Iroquois Club at Bergen Point, was the singing of the Crescent League quartette, Messrs Stevens, VanArsdale, Gorton and Barnes. They were repeatedly encored by the large audience present.

The grand army posts all over the country held a silver-ary ceremonies and jubilations Monday night. At Major Andrews' Post, Newark, Secretary Poirt, was Colider presided and addressed, were made by the Rev. L. E. Livermore, post surgeon, and Prof. Roberts of Dunellen.

A telegram was received Sunday by Rev. C. B. Mitchell notifyi g him of the death of Josephine B., wife of George C. Martin, late of his congregation, at Kansas City, Mo. The deceased lived in West Central avenue and Eighth street. She had been for two years a great sufferer, but was divinely patient through it all. Her death was triumphant in Christian. A text which is a solace to her sorrowing friends.

Ellen Frances Taylor daughter of the late ex-Councilman William Taylor, of this city, died Tuesday of heart failure at the home of William H. VanSlyck, 46 West 73rd street, New York, where she was visiting. Miss Taylor, who was quite ill, recently insisted on making a trip to Philadelphia against the advice of Dr. T. S. Davis. The result was that she took cold that developed into typhoid-pneumonia.

To a recent issue of the New York Evening Post, Constantine F. Baldi of Weehawken, contributes an interesting letter concerning the operations of the late Prince Napoleon at the battle of the Alma. As a close student of war operations, Mr. Baldi is naturally well acquainted not only with every yard of the ground on which the battle of the Alma was fought, but also with all the field positions of the French allies. His special information on the subject helps to set at rest historic points that were called into dispute at the death of the Prince.

Wm. H. Westervelt died Thursday at his home in East Orange. He was for many years well known in the foreign fruit trade in New York city, but for the last few years he had been in the fruit-commission business since 1869, for about eighteen years of that time as the senior member of the firm of W. H. Westervelt & Co., No. 24 State street. He was a member of the Mariners and of the Foreign Fruit Exchanges. His wife died seven years ago, and had been in the habit of visiting her daughter's family in Orange, which event greatly affected him. He leaves one son, C. W. F. Westervelt, and a daughter, Mrs. Nicholas of Plainfield. The funeral services were conducted at the Harrell Memorial church, East Orange.

THE BIG 6 SAY "NO!"

PLAINFIELD SHALL NOT BE BONDED IN THEIR BEHALF.

They Are to Have a Private Corporation for the Construction of a System of Waterworks in Plainfield.

The Mayor, the Corporation Counsel, and all of the Councilmen, excepting Mr. Johnston, met Tuesday at the request of Mayor Sutphen, in the room of the council's rooms adjoining the council chamber.

A few oral discussions upon the question of waterworks and sewerage, took place. Several of the gentlemen advocated the pi a of the city building the sewers and owning them. This would necessitate the bonding of the city to the amount of $250,000.

But the "Big 6," true to their record, were for the people's interests, first, last and all the time.

They said that so long as they remained in office they would not sanction the bonding of the city to the amount of one cent.

Their plan is to grant a franchise at once to a private company to put a system of waterworks in the city at a reasonable rate to the citizens for the use of it.

One Hundred Feet Born of Commit.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Councilman Johnston, alias, alley, in opposition to the measurement of 100 feet) on East Fifth street between Broadway and Richmond, for the trolley system street railroad, I agree with the sentiments expressed in your issue of yesterday over the initials "E. C. M." F. M.

The Present Mayor Foreclosure on an Ex-Mayor's Property.

Charles F. Stillman's interest in the old homestead on Sherman avenue and the property in front of Music Hall—being part of the real estate left by his father, ex-Mayor Stillman—is advertised for sale by Sheriff Hicks, at the Court House, Elizabeth, May 6, under foreclosures by the Market and Fulton National Bank, of which Alexander Gilbert, Plainfield's present Mayor, is cashier.

Growth of Local Methodism.

Last year—says the Rev. C. B. Mitchell, in his M. E. church paper—we reported 323 full members and 75 probationers. This year we report 607 full members and 101 probationers. During the year 35 have been dismissed by letter and 8 have died. We have received by letter and from probation into full membership, 127. Hence the net increase is 84 full members. With our 101 probationers we ought to have even a larger increase next year.

The Ball Season Will Open May 2.

Captain Joe Lothery, second base of the Dunellen baseball club, was in Plainfield yesterday looking over the arrangements for the coming season. The first game will be played three weeks from next Saturday, against New Brunswick's reconstructed nine. Six games have been booked with the Somervilles.

Gregg and Haenlein will be the Crescent's pitchers, with Jones behind the bat. A new man named Davis will cover first base, Lafferty second and Lee third. Both veterans, by the way, decided not to go to Indee will be in the outfield. Bertman has been engaged for the season as umpire.

Fire Company Nominations.

At a regular monthly meeting of Gazelle Engine company, No. 1, held in their parlors last week, the following company officers were nominated to serve for the ensuing year:

Foreman—Chas. F. Johnson.
First Assistant Foreman—J. R. Searing, J.
L. Blackford.
Second Assistant Foreman—W. T. Newman.
Secretary—T. A. Suffold.
Treasurer—Charles A. Love.
Treasurer—V. L. France.
Financial Secretary—A. Schaddocker.
Engineer—J. H. Gallo.
First Assistant Engineer—John Albert.
Second Assistant Engineer—Chas. Dolfrew.
Representatives to Firemen's Relief Association—J. A. Hubbard, L. J. Spicer.

The Only Clothiers to Deal With, in Newark.

Any boy can have a safety bicycle for nothing if he is a good greaser. Every Monday morning McGregor & Co., the one-price clothiers, give a safety bicycle to the lad who during the past week has greased nearest to the number of teeth in a pa'n their stores, 850 and 852 Broad street.

This is not a "paid puff" but is written because of an appreciation of the fact that McGregor & Co., are the most liberal people to their customers in their ark, and because of a person-l knowledge of the fact that they make better clothing, better cut and better trimmed, and for less money than all the other clothiers in that city without exception.

Resolutions of Condolence.

The following resolutions were passed by a unanimous vote, at a special meeting of the Plainfield Gesang und Turn Verein:

WHEREAS, In His kind providence, our Heavenly Father has transferred from this, to the higher life, our beloved brother, friend, father, friend, and active and esteemed member of our Society;

Therefore, We, the Plainfield Gesang und Turn Verein, have lost by death, in the person of Hugo Wagner, one of our first and most faithful members, who, with loving heart and kind words, so often whispered words of comfort, and with the utter still listening in our ears; be it

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy and brotherly love; and

Resolved, That these resolutions be copied in full on our minutes, be sent for publication in our daily papers, and a copy be handed to the bereaved family.

HENRY LIPPER,
WILLIAM KRUECK,
GEORGE HERMER,
Committee.

Amateur Theatricals and The Captain of the Watch.

The second performance of the Pyramus and Thisbe took place in The Academy on Thursday. The audience has a cultured and appreciative one. The cast of characters has already been given in these columns. The costumes were by Boutes and the furniture by Packer. The music, by Miss Lavinia L. French, was enjoyable. Her selections included Rubenstein's Kamenoi Ostrow, and his Torchlight dance of the Brides of Cashmere; Gluck's gavotte arranged for Pr-n Chas. Schumann, and Liszt's "Dreams of Love".

The programme of the plays was as follows:

FIRST PLAY.

Amateur Theatricals in one scene.
Characters Represented.
Master Watchman.....Mr. Denne M. VanVliet
Sybil Raymond (his wife)...Mrs. Geo. C. Evans
Bob.....Master Watt
Tinkleton.....Mrs. George Wharton Edwards.

MUSICAL INTERLUDE.

SECOND PLAY.

The Captain of the Watch, by Planche.
In Two Acts.
Cast of Characters.
Viscount de Lagny (Captain of the Watch),
Mr. William T. Pollette.
Baron Vandergelden.....Mr. Edwin Tracy
Adolf de Courtray.....Mr. Bruere Tracy
Officer of the Watch.....Mr. Edw. P. Hodgson
Gaspard.....Mr. Wm. H. Hodgson
Kristian.....Miss Caroline Scott
Estrye.....Miss Emma Kruesi.

John have you seen that woman lately?
Mrs. Fangleboy—What woman?
Why, Fangleboy's cousin for Spain's Wife. Fangleboy's cousin for Spain's Wife, and cousin for Spain's Husband. Mrs. Fangleboy was found to be absolutely worn out and completely run down. Dr. Dean's Dyspepsia Pills restored her health in large doses and healing flavor. Fangleboy now tried them, with whom she lives.

Dr. Dean's Dyspepsia Pills are unquestionably good. They are, to my opinion, all they claim to be. I have used them, and know them to be all they claim. I believe they will cure Dyspepsia. Sent in any quantity on receipt of remittance. I am, dear sir, yours truly, Dr. Dean, Chicago.

THE NEW DANIEL F. WEBSTER, D.D., Rector Holy Trinity, Jersey City Heights.

—The Young Twilights of Fanwood would like to arrange games with any boys' baseball nine not under the age of ten years of age.

$25,000 IN THE PLATE.

Remarkable Contributions of One Church for Benevolent Purposes, and the Extended Work of Its Societies and Chapels.

The regular annual meeting of the Crescent Avenue church was held in the church April 1 After the opening prayer, conducted by the pastor, the minutes of the previous meeting were read by J. E. VanArsdale, clerk of the session. The terms of office of Elders J. E. VanArsdale and J. G. Force, and Deacon S. H. Whitney, having expired, they were unanimously re-elected.

The report of the Ladies' Aid Society was then read by Mr. Richards. The Ladies' Home Mission ry Society held meetings every Friday afternoon during the winter, with an increased attendance over last year. The ladies prepared boxes for missionaries and their families, valued at $600, and raised in money $703, including the salary of the teacher whom they support and $125 for a bicycle for a missionary who has to travel over a large field with it.

The Foreign Missionary Society, which includes ladies of both Presbyterian churches, met once a month, alternately with the two churches.

The share of this church of money contributed, was $462. The Young Ladies' Mission Band, also of both churches and including the boys, had a very successful year. The share of the Crescent Avenue church of its money raised in various ways, was $125.

The Band of Earnest Workers, composed of boys between seven and fourteen years of age, and under the charge of ladies of the church, raised $65, and the Sunshine Mission Band, of little girls of the same ages, had also a successful year.

There was contributed to the Plainfield Relief Society by the ladies of the church, $414, and to the Children's Home $360. The society also contributed largely toward the Mead Auxiliary.

A report of the Sunday-school was next read by its Superintendent, Wm. D. Murray. During the year the school had had one Superintendent, H. B. Newhall, whom it had had for many years. He voluntarily resigned, but took a class of boys, so that the school still has the benefit of his rich experience and good judgment. The school contributed for missionary purposes during the year, $657. The membership on the roll, including officers and teachers, is 454.

A report of Bethel school was next read by S. A. Gilman. The school is in good condition, holding three religious services on Sunday and a prayer meeting during the week. It sustained a great loss during the year by the death of Mary Marc Martin, one of their ablest workers, who had built up and sustained one of the largest mid-week services, whose members were much attached to him. Mr. VanArsdale is now teaching the class with success. The number of members is 150, and the average and they contributed $415 during the year.

A report of Hope chapel was read by H. C. Squires. The school is in a flourishing condition, so that it has been again thought best to build additions. The chapel is open every evening in the week, and there are five religious services besides church regular meetings. The Ladies' Aid Society of the chapel has done excellent work, the ladies having furnished the building fund, $70 toward the deficit in expenses of the summer excursion, and curtained the windows of the building. There is a society of Christian Endeavor under the direction of F. H. Andrews, and a young men's society, both of which are doing excellent work. The total membership is 416, and $600 has been raised during the year $617. Mr. Richards then called on the Rev. G. Kennedy Now-ll, pastor in charge of the chapel, who made a very interesting manner his work of the work.

Albert Beers reported for the Young People's Association of the church, that the average attendance at the Friday evening prayer meetings has been 125; the largest attendance being 175, and the smallest, on only two evenings, 60. Many have led and otherwise taken part, who have never done so before.

The deacons reported, through S. B. Strickler, the contribution of $700 toward their fund. As the work has grown so large that three deacons can hardly attend to it properly, Mr. Struthers suggested the appointment of another deacon from the direction of Hope chapel.

Mr. VanArsdale read the report of the session. The two large amounts contributed during the year were for the Foreign Mission Board, $2,366, of which $1,400 was contributed Easter Sunday, and for the Board of Education, $2,387. The total for various boards was $8,499, which, with what was contributed by the other societies during the year, amounted to $13 647 since for convenient purposes $11,852 was contributed for the expenses of the church. The total membership is 890, of which number 767 are of the church east avenue church, 40 from Bethel chapel and 83 fr m it pe chapel.

Crescent Whist Players Win.

The games in the second of the series of whist contests for the Central railroad championship, were played on April 1. At Westfield the N. J. A. C. players, of Bergen Point, defeated the Westfield Athletic Club player by a total of 208 to 207.

But the visitors were not so well treated in Plainfield Fanwood's players met the Crescent Avenue's players at the latter's parlors, and were defeated by the magnificent playing of Kieb & Bates. The other Crescent players, Emerson & Allis and Graham & Green, each lost two out of the three sets, but Kieb & Bates's totals pulled the Crescents out 28 points ahead. The score was:

PLAINFIELD.		FANWOOD.
Bates & Kieb.....	40	Miller & Stevens..	18
Force & Quereau..	31	Force & Quereau..	31
Graham & Green....	39	Kyte & Downer....	37
Total.....	110	Total.....	82
Bates & Kieb.....	41	Force & Quereau..	31
Emerson & Allis....	35	Kyte & Downer....	37
Graham & Green....	39	Miller & Stevens..	17
Plainfield.....	115	Fanwood.....	87

THE SECOND TO DATE.

	Won	Lost
Bergen Point, N.J. Athletic Club...	2	0
Crescent Athletic Club.....	1	1
Elizabeth Athletic Club.....	1	1
Plainfield Athletic Club.....	1	1
Westfield Athletic Club.....	0	2

LIVELY TIMES IN THE BOROUGH

JOHN GOODWIN TELLS A COUNCILMAN HIS NAME IS DENNIS.

But Just the Same the Council Sent Up a Few Year by Commendable Improvements, and So Their Body by Greenbrook Road at Last—Statements by Mayor and Council—Assessor Reed's Salary Increased.

The Borough Council of North Plainfield Friday started a new year by very commendable improvements, a number of which was the decision to macadamize Greenbrook road.

Councilman Hegeman introduced the resolution to begin the long-ruminated work of macadamization on that thoroughfare, all the way from the Cadmus mill to Grove street, as soon as the weather would permit.

Councilman Smalley raised objections, and sought to have the matter deferred until another meeting, but Councilman Needham also wished the resolution held over till the date could be properly estimated.

But the opposition crossed Mr. Hegeman's righteous wrath.

This is not a question of expe se—he said—it is a matter of right for the people. It is time we at least recognized the right s of the property holders in that section. These people can't carry on their business after the road is now and has been so long. Mr. Scribner has to use eight horses to draw a small load of brick through the hub-deep mud. Hundreds of the citizens have given evidence for one year, in making temporary repairs.

Councilman Smalley held that the district east of Somerset street ought to receive the benefit of the road next year, as it had been neglected heretofore.

At this Councilman Hegeman was, still further aroused.

This fe-ling of sectionalism—he said—was very deplorable, and he protested vehemently against it. If the Council refused to macadamize Greenbrook road now it was blind to its duty. The old custom had been, it was true, that each side of the borough should be benefited alternately every while, the other side was allowed around in the mud, but Greenbrook road had been unjustly debated out of macadamization had year, and surely ought to be given first attention now.

Mr. Smalley accepted the west side of town of asking for all the money continually. The Council, he learn, had a contingent Park asked for nothing this year, and Greenbrook road was a thoroughfare used by people from both east and west sides of the borough. The year a special fund of $1,000 was to be spent on Somerset street, and there was $5,000 to spend elsewhere.

Mr. Smalley insisted that of that $3,000 Greenbrook road would require $2,000 if macadamized, besides the $500 promised by property holders along the thoroughfare, leaving only $1,000 for east-side streets.

A motion to table the resolution to macadamize was voted for by only Councilmen Smalley and Needham, and was lost. The resolution to macadamize was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Councilmen Buckle, Hegeman, Hummer and Allen—4.
Nays—Councilmen Needham and Smalley—2.

Out in the lobby John Goodwin viewed the Greenbrook road proceedings through east-side eyes, and had developed quite a show of sectional feeling and temper by the time the Council adjourned.

No sooner was the meeting over than Mr. Goodwin charged on Councilman Hegeman.

Shaking his big head of bushy black hair violently from side to side, and pounding the air emphatically with his fists the irate warrior shouted to the astonished Councilman:

"Your name's Dennis! Your name's Dunis! You've cooked your goose! You'll be fired for macadamizing the mountain-side when the streets on the east side need the money so bad. You only did it 'cause you don't know no'hin'. You never did know nothin', anyhow!"

"We're only putting the money where it will do the borough the most good"—responded Mr. Hegeman placidly.

Mayor Brunson, Council Board, Secretary Reed, Engineer Hodgson and Attorney Hedges were all present.

Street Paving and Health—Councilmen Hegeman, Buckle and Needham.

Printing, Stationery and Supplies—Councilmen Hummer, Hegeman and Smalley.

Councilman Hegeman withdrew from the Street Committee, owing, he explained, to the pressure of personal business.

Hery H. Brokaw was unanimously re-appointed Borough Clerk at a salary of $150 per year.

Charles H. Cooley was unanimously reappointed Assessor at a salary of $600.

George Conover was unanimously re-appointed Street Commissioner at a salary of $2 per day for actual service, and $20 per year bonus.

Chas. A. Reed was unanimously re-appointed Counsel to the Mayor and Council at a salary of $500 per year, with a fee of $100 for each Court in session, and $10 for each Council meeting attended. Attorney Hedges and chairs for the new borough's clerk-up were ordered.

The interior of the engine house was ordered painted, and the time for a loan of $600 for use on the streets was granted. Superintendent Complaints concerning the electric light service, and Councilman Smalley explained that all the poor service complained of was due to the fact that complaints made to him or to W. E. Hodgson, Superintendent of the Borough, of the service, were always promptly attended to.

The Council adjourned to April 17.

FOLLOWING IN PLAINFIELD'S FOOTSTEPS.

The Borough Not Alone to Use the Iron of a Street Railway, Water-Works and other Improvements.

At Friday's meeting of the Borough Council of North Plainfield the following Mayor Ing message was presented by Mayor Pratt, read and transmitted, and ordered filed:

To the Borough Council:

Six of the seven members of this Council, including the Mayor, served in it during the last year. We have had a full knowledge of the work of the last Council, and are fitted in a degree for such work we shall be called on to do in the coming year. We have commenced under favorable auspices, and, judging from the past, I feel confident which represent certainty that the people whom we represent will indorse all needful improvements, based on economical expenditures.

STREETS.

So far as I can learn, there seems to be general satisfaction with the improvements done last year by the Council, because the streets which were macadamized were those most needed. I believe the action of Council on the question of macadamizing is the same to-day as it was one year ago. I have in the office of Mayor, I believe now, as I did then, that those streets lying within the vicinity set apart for the Borough Park should receive the attention of this Council; provided, however, contingent on the condition that the streets are willing to pay a reasonable amount for the Council in macadamizing them. This has been done by the property on the streets already improved. In this way the Council can do more work than would with the money voted for street purposes will go very much further. It cannot be denied that in the thickly settled parts of the town that there are greater needs for good streets, because the people's necessities are greater.

SIDEWALKS.

Although very much improvement has been made in sidewalks during the past year, there yet many of them are kept in bad condition. In many places underlying timbers are allowed to decay, and consequently boards are put lengthwise, where they should be put crosswise, with too few timbers under them, thus causing a horrible clatter, especially in the night. In some places, before nice residences, no walks have been laid, and I am told that what the Street Committee said in its last annual report, "We ask the citizens to do more with us in our endeavors to make good walks in the Borough, and this can be done by instructing the Street Committee to lay out a definition, and in case of neglect." It is to be hoped that our citizens will respond to this call all possible aid in keeping our sidewalks good, for if our citizens will do their duty in this direction please the Mayor and Council should exist one foot of defective walk. Muddy and dusty streets will be a thing of the past, and it is to be hoped defective sidewalks will also.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

The system of electric lights which was put in the Borough by the last Council has been very satisfactory. But little opposition exists in this direction, so far as I can learn. The lamps become properly located in the dark places now existing, there is not much doubt but our citizens will feel that the change from the naptha lamp was a wise one. The lamp was very unsatisfactory until something better came to take its place.

GROWTH.

Concerning our growth, I am glad to note that the increased assessed value of real estate in the Borough of $486,387 in five years proves that the people have faith in the Borough government, which has given them a healthful growth. Improvements are conducted to accomplish this growth. Muddy streets, poor sidewalks, and unlighted streets, do not prove beneficial to any comer. But these are fast overcoming those enemies of the public weal. When North Plainfield had these, she stood still, while the city of Plainfield was growing rapidly. Our population is increasing each year and the people are coming to us to remain with us. Our borough now contains nearly eight thousand souls to-day, and it will be the duty of this Council to create two election districts in it, to comply with the State law in such cases.

STREET RAILWAY AND WATER-WORKS.

In the near future the Borough Council will undoubtedly be called on to take some action regarding a street railroad, and a system of water-works and sewerage. How soon either that time will arrive I cannot tell. The city of Plainfield will in all probability take some action in these matters at once, as the people of that municipality are very long before there will be a decision on the part of our residents to have these also in use to meet the wants of our needs. But when that time does come, the management of such people will devise what kind of a street railroad, and what system of waterworks, shall be put in. I am constrained to say that in my judgment some of these contemplated improvements will find any advocates in this Council, and will not be approved of by our residents in general, whether the time for action comes this year or some other time in the near future.

CHARLES PRATT, Mayor.

April 3, 1891.

FIRE-BUGS AGAIN.

Another Incendiary Blaze in the Heart of the City.

That fire-bugs are again at work in Plainfield there is no longer any doubt. Within two weeks three fires, of mysterious but undoubted incendiary origin, have occurred in the heart of the city. The first was that in which Hugo Wolfgman lost his life, Saturday evening, March 21. The second was that which destroyed the Woodruff barn. The third occurred last Saturday evening.

On that evening, at 8:20, Alonzo Ayres saw flames leaping from an old shed in the back of the Stiles building on East Front street. He immediately procured from Shaw's pharmacy a key to box 12, from which he ran to the nearest fire department responded quickly, and a big crowd of people turned out. The firemen worked well, but the flames, fanned by a high wind, were raging fiercely, and were threatening the Stiles, the post-office, and other important buildings, at 9:35 every spark was extinguished.

The barn in which the fire originated was entirely consumed. It was owned by a Mrs. Shepherd, and was occupied by Ickman Dennis O'Brien, who lost a wagon and a stage. O'Brien's horse was saved by A. M. Griffen at the risk of his life. Fireman James Saltzman had his hands sadly blistered while saving portable property.

The fire communicated to a frame tenement building in the adjoining alley, occupied by several families of colored people. Of this the roof was burned off, and the house was also set on fire, which damaged the household goods considerably. The firemen and police think they have clews which may lead to the arrest of suspected par ies.

Comic Opera at The Casino.

Only about one week ago, a proposition was made to bring the Amateur Opera Association of New York City to the Country Club Casino, to give "The Mikado", yet already most of the reserved seats have been taken.

This well-known organization is justly ranked with the best professional companies, and is under the direction of W. F. Thomas. The members have been organized eight years, and invariably are the first amateurs to produce a new opera. Their performance of "The Pirates of Penzance" *given while the English Com*pany was playing at Palmer's Theatre, New York, and the Boston Company was in New York, was said by the New York Herald to be fr r superior in every way to either of the latter companies, and the professional were advised to go and see how it was done.

Special scenery and the Thomas Orchestra will be brought from New York for this evening's performance at The Casino. Tickets may be obtained at Hegedd's drug store, and at The Casino.

The cast will be as follows:

The Mikado.....	Mr. Chas. A. Heisel
Nanki Poo.....	Mr. Geo. C. Foster
Pooh Bah.....	Mr. J. William Hoey
Pish Tush.....	Mr. Chas. E. Lyon
Yum Yum.....	Mrs. Florence Thomas
Pitti Sing.....	Mrs. Alice Bowman
Peep Bo.....	Mrs. Lou Mosier
Katisha.....	Miss Jessie M. Lobb
Chorus of School Girls, Nobles and Guards.

—J. J. Bedford has a fresh supply of timothy, clover and garden seeds, bedding lawn, farm and garden implements, lawn mowers, refrigerators, ice cream freezers and garden stoves. It will be to your interest to call and examine his stock before ordering elsewhere.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

ALL MOTHER WERE ONLY ALIVE"

All through life she has known a mother's watchful care. She now is a young mother, and gains strength but slowly. She would "give suicide" to do everything for her precious baby, but cannot; the doctor is so strict, and does not sympathize with her, "as mother always did."

That baby has enfolded in the young mother's heart, new emotions. She has a living responsibility, and begs for strength to enable her to perform a living duty. If such a time, too much care cannot be taken, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is indispensable.

Send stamp for "Guide to Health and Etiquette," a beautiful illustrated book.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

is the only Positive Cure and Regulator—Remedy for all those painful diseases of women. Backache, Kidney Complaints, Nervousness, that Bearing-down Feeling, Weak Back, Flooding, Irregularities, Suppressions, Inflammation, Ulceration, Displacements, Organic Diseases of the Uterus or Womb, and is invaluable to the Change of Life. Thousands of women have been restored to perfect health by its use, and will gratefully testify to its virtues. Endorsed Home. Sickness, Faintness, Excitability, Nervous Prostration, Sleeplessness, and strengthens and tones the Stomach. Cures Headache, General Debility, Indigestion, etc., and invigorates the whole system. For the cure of Kidney Complaints of either sex, Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound has no equal.

All druggists sell it as a standard article, or sent by mail, in form of Pills or Lozenges, on receipt of $1.00. LYDIA E. PINKHAM MED. CO., LYNN, MASS.

MULLINS & CO.,

218 and 220 Market Street, NEWARK, N. J.

The largest and most Reliable CASH or CREDIT House in the United States.

EVERYTHING FOR HOUSEKEEPING.

Real Values in

FURNITURE,

A large and Elegant New Stock just received of all necessary articles in the Furniture line, at ASTONISHING LOW PRICES. Parlor Suits in variety, $30 and up. Chamber Suits, $15 and up. Folding Beds, $6 and up. Wardrobes, $10 and up. Sideboards, $15 and up. Parlor Tables, $4 up. Baby Carriages, $4 50 up. Desks, $9 up. &c., &c.

CARPETS,

OUR NEW SPRING STOCK contains a larger assortment of NEW PATTERNS than ever before offered. We will continue to sell AT THE OLD PRICES. Call and inspect our goods. Give us your order, and we will guarantee you a saving of 20 per cent. on your purchase.

SPECIAL OFFER—For a short time only we will sell Smith's and Sanford's double extra Tapestry Brussels at 75c per yard. This is one of the Greatest bargains ever offered in the Carpet line.

STOVES.

To close out our Stock of Parlor Stoves and Kitchen Ranges, we have reduced PER CENT.

BABY CARRIAGES.

A large and elegant line of Handsome Baby Carriages at prices to suit all pockets

To those desiring CREDIT we give the best Terms at the LOWEST CASH PRICES.

All Goods Guaranteed as Represented.

MULLINS & CO.,

218 & 220 MARKET ST., NEWARK, N. J. TELEPHONE No. 945. 3 19 m3

ANNOUNCEMENT!

The

CLOAK-ROOM STORIES.

Congressman Cummings Overhears Some New War Stories.

Col. Herbert and the Brave Yankee at Banks' Ford—Swapping Over the River—Colonel Fats of a Spotted Nag.

[COPYRIGHTED, 1891.]

Col. Hilary A. Herbert, of Alabama, and a New York member of congress were seated in a cloak-room of the house not long ago, smoking fragrant Havanas. Col. Herbert was the confederate army, and the New York representative was sergeant major of a New Jersey regiment. The fight at Fredericksburg after the 6th capture of the Heights in May, 1863, was the subject of conversation. The talk drew out many a reminiscence. Each congressman told where his regiment was located during the battle. It was evident that they had been within hailing distance of each other for several hours, nearly twenty-nine years ago.

Col. Herbert was colonel Gen. Wilcox' near Baillo's ford when the Heights were taken. The sergeant was on the right of the position a mile or more below Fredericksburg and was in the skirmishing on Sunday, May 3. His regiment sealed Marye's heights near the female seminary. It passed near the spot where William Barnes' colonel were captured from the Washington artillery of New Orleans. Congressman Coleman, a member of that very battery, was addressing the house while the colonel and the sergeant major were conversing.

Herbert went into the fight from Wilcox's intrenchments at Bank's ford on Sunday morning, and the sergeant major went out of the fight thirty-six hours afterwards from the same intrenchments. The Heights were carried by the old Sixth corps. Sedgwick made an effort to effect a junction with Hooker at Chancellorsville and the fight at Salem church occurred on the same evening. Wilcox swung so far to the right that he flanked Sedgwick's left, came down the hill and recaptured Fredericksburg, leaving "Uncle John" upon the Heights.

On Monday evening the confederates were reinforced from Lee's army and made a determined effort to entomb Hines. They were repulsed. After dark, however, Sedgwick drew back. He was not withdrawn entirely at Banks' ford vacated by Wilcox. A pontoon bridge had been built across the Rappahannock in the early morning, and the Sixth corps recrossed the river before daylight.

Few weeks afterward the pickets confronted each other with the Rappahannock between them. There was very little firing and the utmost good feeling existed. The sergeant major told a story of a picket on the part of the union side of the river. A confederate officer of the day appeared early in the morning on the opposite bank. His rank and duty was indicated by his sash. The instant the officer in charge of the union pickets saw him he shouted: "Turn out the guard, officer of the day!"

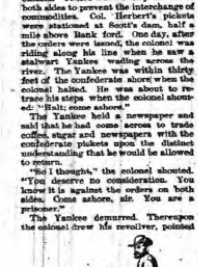
The reserve fell in line and presented arms to the confederate officer, who acknowledged the compliment with a graceful salute.

There was so much good fellowship among the pickets that a general commandment ordered the division and brigade officers. Orders were finally issued on both sides to prevent the further usage of commodities. Col. Herbert's pickets were stationed at Scott's dam, half a mile above the mouth of Deep run. After the orders were issued, the colonel was riding along his line when he saw a stalwart, brave Yankee swimming to the river. The Yankee was within thirty feet of the confederate shore when the colonel hailed him. He ordered the brave to trace his steps when the colonel shouted: "Halt; come ashore."

The Yankee was a newspaper and said that he had come across to trade coffee, sugar and newspapers with the confederates. He was under the fullest understanding that he would be allowed to return.

"No, I thought," the colonel shouted. "You deserve no consideration. You know it is against the orders on both sides. I cannot allow it. You are a prisoner."

The Yankee demurred. Thereupon the colonel drew his revolver, pointed



"WHAT IS THAT?" THE COLONEL ASKED AS THE PICKET LOWERED THE BOAT FROM THE WATER.

it at him and said: "Obey orders. Come ashore immediately."

The Yankee waded ashore and stood upon the bank in his wet clothes. He was a strong, stalwart fellow, and had a manly bearing. Marching up to his captor he saluted him, thumped his breast and said, in firm tones:

"Colonel, shoot me, but don't take me prisoner. I prefer death to capture. I am a brave man. I have been in the army only two weeks. I came from Michigan. I would rather suffer death than have my family disgraced by a capture under the present circumstances."

The appeal touched the colonel's heart. He regarded the Yankee fixedly for a moment or more and then said: "Return to your lines. But understand that hereafter any man that crosses the river will be detained as a prisoner."

The soldier thanked him and waded back to the union picket.

Upon arriving at Gen. Wilcox's headquarters Col. Herbert said: "Colonel, I have been ordered over. I have allowed a prisoner to return to his lines." He then told the story of the Yankee's visit.

"Colonel," replied Gen. Wilcox, after due reflection, "if I had been in your place I should have done precisely as you did."

And that was the end of it.

In further conversation in the cloak-room the colonel said that not long afterwards he was sitting among the picket lines when he heard a Yankee shout from the other side of the river: "Hi! Johnny, have you got a nice spot over there?"

"Yes, heaps of them," was the reply.

"Well, send one over and we'll beat you running," the Yankee shouted.

"Not now," was the answer. "You always beat us running. You have had more experience than we've had."

A week or so afterwards the colonel was again riding along the picket line. He saw in the river a little boat, a float or more long, exquisitely molded. It had no sail, but bore a three cornered flag which a little southern breeze flapped. It came across the river slowly and reached the exact point occupied by a confederate picket.

"COLONEL, SHOOT ME, BUT DON'T TAKE ME PRISONER."

"What is that?" the colonel asked to the picket lifted the boat from the water. It contained a canteen filled with finely pulled fruit to the colonel. Some one had written the word "Onion." Within the boat was a little package of sugar and coffee with a note saying:

"Present to Colonel ——, commanding."

The boat had a little rudder nailed to the right. The tiller was lashed to the gunwale with twine. With this arrangement the current of the river kept the little craft steady, kept her upon her course, and carried her direct to her point of destination.

Nobody seemed to know anything about the boat. The colonel gave the order and it was done. But the colonel really understood where it came from. Some of his soldiers had gone from Mobile and were experienced naval architects. It was a rebel craft designed to run the blockade. It had not been successful. It entered the service or not is not known. Many years afterwards the colonel was telling the story while on a visit to Fredericksburg. A Virginian heard him and burst into laughter. "I know all about the boat," he said. "I know it. It is now in the house of a wealthy gentleman living in Washington, and he don't think five hundred dollars would buy it."

At this time Gen. Hooker, of Mississippi appeared in the cloak-room. "The general has but one arm. Something was said about the difficulty of tying cravats to their manikins. He told a touching story about a faithful black servant who is his plantation near Vicksburg. Before he went to assist in the defense of Vicksburg he called the slave one morning and told him to take the horses on the place to a plantation a hundred miles below, where they would be safe from capture.

"I can't do it, massa. You mus'n't ask me to do it," the negro replied.

"Why, what's the matter?" the general said: "you have been ordered to obey me before."

"I know dat, massa," the negro answered, "but where you goes I goes. I can't leab you, dead I can't. Please don't send me away, massa."

The general advised him to remain at home, but the attachment of the faithful ant was so strong that, with tears in his eyes, he begged to be allowed to go with his master. He would not leave him. They were camped within the intrenchments in a gully seaming the inside of the fortifications, and the Sixth corps recrossed the river before daylight.

Few weeks afterward the pickets confronted each other with the Rappahannock between them. There was very little firing and the utmost good feeling existed. The sergeant major told a story of a picket on the part of the union side of the river. A confederate officer of the day appeared early in the morning on the opposite bank. His rank and duty was indicated by his sash. The instant the officer in charge of the union pickets saw him he shouted: "Turn out the guard, officer of the day!"

The reserve fell in line and presented arms to the confederate officer, who acknowledged the compliment with a graceful salute.

There was so much good fellowship among the pickets that a general commandment ordered the division and brigade officers. Orders were finally issued on both sides to prevent the further usage of commodities. Col. Herbert's pickets were stationed at Scott's dam, half a mile above the mouth of Deep run. After the orders were issued, the colonel was riding along his line when he saw a stalwart, brave Yankee swimming to the river. The Yankee was within thirty feet of the confederate shore when the colonel hailed him. He ordered the brave to trace his steps when the colonel shouted: "Halt; come ashore."

The Yankee was a newspaper and said that he had come across to trade coffee, sugar and newspapers with the confederates. He was under the fullest understanding that he would be allowed to return.

"No, I thought," the colonel shouted. "You deserve no consideration. You know it is against the orders on both sides. I cannot allow it. You are a prisoner."

The Yankee demurred. Thereupon the colonel drew his revolver, pointed

"WHAT IS THAT?" THE COLONEL ASKED AS THE PICKET LOWERED THE BOAT FROM THE WATER.

it at him and said: "Obey orders. Come ashore immediately."

The Yankee waded ashore and stood upon the bank in his wet clothes. He was a strong, stalwart fellow, and had a manly bearing. Marching up to his captor he saluted him, thumped his breast and said, in firm tones:

"Colonel, shoot me, but don't take me prisoner. I prefer death to capture. I am a brave man. I have been in the army only two weeks. I came from Michigan. I would rather suffer death than have my family disgraced by a capture under the present circumstances."

The appeal touched the colonel's heart. He regarded the Yankee fixedly for a moment or more and then said: "Return to your lines. But understand that hereafter any man that crosses the river will be detained as a prisoner."

The soldier thanked him and waded back to the union picket.

Upon arriving at Gen. Wilcox's headquarters Col. Herbert said: "Colonel, I have been ordered over. I have allowed a prisoner to return to his lines." He then told the story of the Yankee's visit.

"Colonel," replied Gen. Wilcox, after due reflection, "if I had been in your place I should have done precisely as you did."

And that was the end of it.

In further conversation in the cloak-room the colonel said that not long afterwards he was sitting among the picket lines when he heard a Yankee shout from the other side of the river: "Hi! Johnny, have you got a nice spot over there?"

"Yes, heaps of them," was the reply.

"Well, send one over and we'll beat you running," the Yankee shouted.

"Not now," was the answer. "You always beat us running. You have had more experience than we've had."

A week or so afterwards the colonel was again riding along the picket line. He saw in the river a little boat, a float or more long, exquisitely molded. It had no sail, but bore a three cornered flag which a little southern breeze flapped. It came across the river slowly and reached the exact point occupied by a confederate picket.

"COLONEL, SHOOT ME, BUT DON'T TAKE ME PRISONER."

"What is that?" the colonel asked to the picket lifted the boat from the water. It contained a canteen filled with finely pulled fruit to the colonel. Some one had written the word "Onion." Within the boat was a little package of sugar and coffee with a note saying:

"Present to Colonel ——, commanding."

The boat had a little rudder nailed to the right. The tiller was lashed to the gunwale with twine. With this arrangement the current of the river kept the little craft steady, kept her upon her course, and carried her direct to her point of destination.

Nobody seemed to know anything about the boat. The colonel gave the order and it was done. But the colonel really understood where it came from. Some of his soldiers had gone from Mobile and were experienced naval architects. It was a rebel craft designed to run the blockade. It had not been successful. It entered the service or not is not known. Many years afterwards the colonel was telling the story while on a visit to Fredericksburg. A Virginian heard him and burst into laughter. "I know all about the boat," he said. "I know it. It is now in the house of a wealthy gentleman living in Washington, and he don't think five hundred dollars would buy it."

At this time Gen. Hooker, of Mississippi appeared in the cloak-room. "The general has but one arm. Something was said about the difficulty of tying cravats to their manikins. He told a touching story about a faithful black servant who is his plantation near Vicksburg. Before he went to assist in the defense of Vicksburg he called the slave one morning and told him to take the horses on the place to a plantation a hundred miles below, where they would be safe from capture.

"I can't do it, massa. You mus'n't ask me to do it," the negro replied.

"Why, what's the matter?" the general said: "you have been ordered to obey me before."

"I know dat, massa," the negro answered, "but where you goes I goes. I can't leab you, dead I can't. Please don't send me away, massa."

The general advised him to remain at home, but the attachment of the faithful ant was so strong that, with tears in his eyes, he begged to be allowed to go with his master. He would not leave him. They were camped within the intrenchments in a gully seaming the inside of the fortifications, and the Sixth corps recrossed the river before daylight.

Few weeks afterward the pickets confronted each other with the Rappahannock between them. There was very little firing and the utmost good feeling existed. The sergeant major told a story of a picket on the part of the union side of the river. A confederate officer of the day appeared early in the morning on the opposite bank. His rank and duty was indicated by his sash. The instant the officer in charge of the union pickets saw him he shouted: "Turn out the guard, officer of the day!"

The reserve fell in line and presented arms to the confederate officer, who acknowledged the compliment with a graceful salute.

There was so much good fellowship among the pickets that a general commandment ordered the division and brigade officers. Orders were finally issued on both sides to prevent the further usage of commodities. Col. Herbert's pickets were stationed at Scott's dam, half a mile above the mouth of Deep run. After the orders were issued, the colonel was riding along his line when he saw a stalwart, brave Yankee swimming to the river. The Yankee was within thirty feet of the confederate shore when the colonel hailed him. He ordered the brave to trace his steps when the colonel shouted: "Halt; come ashore."

The Yankee was a newspaper and said that he had come across to trade coffee, sugar and newspapers with the confederates. He was under the fullest understanding that he would be allowed to return.

"No, I thought," the colonel shouted. "You deserve no consideration. You know it is against the orders on both sides. I cannot allow it. You are a prisoner."

The Yankee demurred. Thereupon the colonel drew his revolver, pointed

"WHAT IS THAT?" THE COLONEL ASKED AS THE PICKET LOWERED THE BOAT FROM THE WATER.

it at him and said: "Obey orders. Come ashore immediately."

The Yankee waded ashore and stood upon the bank in his wet clothes. He was a strong, stalwart fellow, and had a manly bearing. Marching up to his captor he saluted him, thumped his breast and said, in firm tones:

"Colonel, shoot me, but don't take me prisoner. I prefer death to capture. I am a brave man. I have been in the army only two weeks. I came from Michigan. I would rather suffer death than have my family disgraced by a capture under the present circumstances."

The appeal touched the colonel's heart. He regarded the Yankee fixedly for a moment or more and then said: "Return to your lines. But understand that hereafter any man that crosses the river will be detained as a prisoner."

The soldier thanked him and waded back to the union picket.

Upon arriving at Gen. Wilcox's headquarters Col. Herbert said: "Colonel, I have been ordered over. I have allowed a prisoner to return to his lines." He then told the story of the Yankee's visit.

"Colonel," replied Gen. Wilcox, after due reflection, "if I had been in your place I should have done precisely as you did."

And that was the end of it.

In further conversation in the cloak-room the colonel said that not long afterwards he was sitting among the picket lines when he heard a Yankee shout from the other side of the river: "Hi! Johnny, have you got a nice spot over there?"

"Yes, heaps of them," was the reply.

"Well, send one over and we'll beat you running," the Yankee shouted.

"Not now," was the answer. "You always beat us running. You have had more experience than we've had."

A week or so afterwards the colonel was again riding along the picket line. He saw in the river a little boat, a float or more long, exquisitely molded. It had no sail, but bore a three cornered flag which a little southern breeze flapped. It came across the river slowly and reached the exact point occupied by a confederate picket.

"COLONEL, SHOOT ME, BUT DON'T TAKE ME PRISONER."

"What is that?" the colonel asked to the picket lifted the boat from the water. It contained a canteen filled with finely pulled fruit to the colonel. Some

SUMMONS SERVERS.

They Must Be Possessed of Bravery, Ingenuity and "Cheek."

A Business That Requires a Man to Almost Go Through Fire and Water to Attain Success—A Few Men at the Head of the Profession.

"If there is a man in the world who needs to be energetic, ingenious, quick-witted, persistent, long-suffering, determined and, above all, 'cheeky,' says the New York Times, that man is the unfortunate server of summonses. Serving summonses is a good deal like driving a skittish horse—anybody can do it until something goes wrong, and then when something does happen, unless the driver or the server can do something more than hold on to the reins or hold out his summons, he is done for.

The tricks that are taken to get the best of the summons-server are legion. Defendants in suits, even if they have scruples against lying at other times, feel that to lie to a summons-server is perfectly legitimate, and, as it were, only making one of his own moves against him. For the server himself never hesitates to lie. It is one of his most useful tricks. He is any thing while trying to get near enough to Mr. Blank to serve him with the summons he is paid for serving. He is a partner, or friend just come to the city from Hoboken or the West, and has not seen Mr. Blank in years. He is the real estate agent who was talking with Mr. Blank last week about those valuable lots in Harlem. He is a special messenger from a business friend of Mr. Blank who wants to see him at once on his most important business and can not possibly come to his office. Any and all and many more such personages in the summons-server's different lines of his arduous career, until it is a wonder that he doesn't himself forget what he is, and when he catches his victim fail to recollect to hold out the little official piece of paper and say: "Mr. Blank, here is a summons in a suit brought by—" But the summons-server never forgets.

As a general rule the summons-server carries on his disagreeable, business, quietly, but of course a well-equipped server never hesitates to "make a stir" if it is necessary. If his victim jumped into the water, very likely he would jump in after him if there wasn't a boat handy, and serve his summons before attempting to save him from drowning. In fact, a summons-server with out a large bump of determination would be of little use. He is a man who is determined and at the same time quick-witted enough to make his determination valuable in carrying out a job. He gets up a reputation as a reliable man, one who always nails the defendant he is set on, and a lawyer who knows the man he wants to serve will be difficult to catch, doesn't put his summons in the hands of his office boy, but sends for the server with the reputation.

It sometimes happens that a piece of ingenious summons-serving is done in public, and sometimes so neatly that little or no credit is done are so taken up with the admiration for the ingenious server that they quite forget to sympathize with the victim, which ordinarily they would do, knowing that the chances are in favor of their at some time being in his place, rather than of their ever having to try to serve summonses themselves.

Such a case occurred in East Fifty-ninth street the other night, and was witnessed by twenty or thirty passengers on a Belt Line street-car and half a dozen pedestrians. The car was bowling along rapidly. Suddenly two men dashed out from one of the avenues crossing Fifty-ninth street, one of them about twenty feet in advance of the other, who was shouting at the top of his voice: "Stop thief! Stop thief!" One or two pedestrians joined in the pursuit, and the policeman at the corner got his unwieldly frame into motion. But the supposed thief was a faster runner than any of the others, and jumping on to the front platform of the car he passed on to the rear, and, as no thief Whip up your horses, and here's a dollar." Then the men left inside and sat down, and all the other passengers looked at him askance.

The conductor evidently thought it was his place to get his car through on time, and not to stop to let a man after whom "stop, thief!" was being called be captured, but when the burly policeman in the crowd of pursuers he pulled the bell strap and the car came to a stop. The man after whom he appeared in pursuit leaped on board and rushed out at the back door, as he had called a thief. The other passengers looked to see him take the man by the collar, and the policeman was just at the rear platform ready to put him under arrest. Pulling a paper from his pocket the man held it out to the uniformed and said: "Mr. ——, here is the summons in that suit of ——."

And then the policeman swore because he had to run a block to help a summons-server, and the car went on its way. The man who had been served looked dejected, but he remarked to his next neighbor: "It's just as well, I suppose. I'll be ready for him some time. I knew at the start that that fellow would serve his summons some way. He's a terror. He's got up a reputation for serving summonses in a way that has played all sorts of sharp games to get it, and—That last one was a bright trick, though, and I'm glad we've had a fling for me outside my house but I saw him going down the street, and I'm glad I think I ought to see him for defamation of character for calling after me 'Stop, thief!'"

SHE—THE SUMMONS.

Scene—The Jones parlor: time, Sunday evening. Miss Jones discovered reclining in the Hall's Chamber. Belle.

Nadie—You might leave the book, dear, I should like to look at it.

Little—Indeed I will not let you, for she always keeps the Bible out of the parlor when any young man calls. She deems it quite sacred to be read the family record, cause dey would find out how old she is.—Boston Herald.

A Great Advantage.

Tom (a cynic)—Behold a clergyman, you have better opportunities than most bachelors to find out the good and bad qualities of the fair ladies in your congregation.

Rev. Whitside—How so?

Tom—Cos he at least have a chance to discover which of the girls snore.—Tit.

The Proof of It.

Mordling—That girl in the candy-store says she's only a poor shop-girl, but she's a true woman!

Paxon—I'm convinced of it, me boy! Why only the other day I got her to break a dollar for me, and she handed back one dollar and seventeen cents in change.—Puck.

Pride Is Punished.

Littleton (coming out of the restaurant—By Jove, I'm glad we saw rid of that waiter! His air was so lofty that I actually felt small.

Coker—Indeed! And so—

Littleton—And so I acted small. I didn't give him one cent.—Puck.

A FEW MASTER STROKES.

—Golden Days.

Misunderstood Hints.

Mr. Scour—Do you know that you are a perfect Niagara Falls. What did you see that frightened you most while you were away, Mrs. Scour?

Mrs. Scour (modestly)—My hat and veil.—Jury.

Not a Fisherman.

Americus Bellows—Who is that at the door?

Maid—Only a beggar.

PRETTY BOOK COVERS.

A Wonderful Addition to the Value of a Handsome Book.

Decorated Tiles Reminiscent of Those in Alhambra—Some Specimens.

FIG. 1. LACED BOOK COVER.

For several reasons a handsome or ornamental book cover is very desirable for one's favorite periodical, a much used favorite book, as an addition to the value of a dainty gift book, in extra cover, in lieu of the familiar worn paper one, will preserve the handsome binding of a fine volume for a long time. Indeed, a book cover does not wish to wear in any way; and if it is not locked upon as a desirable thing to advertise one's literary taste, a neat ornamental cover to one's novel or preferred magazine is a great convenience.

FIG. 2.—LACED BOOK COVER WITH BOOK.

The dainty fancy worker can also impart some of her own individuality to the cover or interior of her book, as she stres to present to some favored friend, by making for it a handsomely decorated cover of velvet, plush, satin or fine broadcloth, upon which she will work some "border fantasy of branch and flower and any other pretty device of initials, or a motto, or perhaps paint some flowers in water colors, "pansies for thoughts," etc.

The first of the illustrations shows a handsome book cover suitable either for a periodical or any bound book, according to the size it is made to, which, of course, is governed by that of the book for which it is intended. Procure the pattern first by laying the book open in the middle fastly upon a sheet of sufficient size and cut out, allowing half an inch on all sides. Cut a piece of silk the double width of the book and an inch longer, will be required for the cover, and a piece of the same size for the lining. If the cover is for a periodical, that is, a pamphlet-bound book, an interesting effect may be had by using a silk of two contrasting colors.

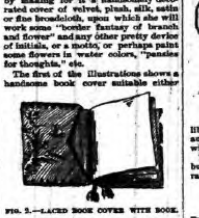

FIG. 3.—CELLULOID BOOK-COVER.

The first gun of this type to be completed and to enjoy protection and ownership by the United States Government is a six-pounder, that is, it sends a six-pound projectile a distance of at least five miles. The projectile is conoe-shaped and is made of hardened steel, and so great is its velocity when fired from the gun that it will perforate a six-inch steel plate at one mile without flattening or otherwise damaging itself. Although the new gun weighs 540 pounds, so skillfully is it mounted and balanced that the merest touch of a finger sets it to revolving about its axis. In this way the horizontal range is governed. High or low range is only a matter of the gentlest touch on the breech in a vertical plane. All this is so much less than a ground to fire the piece in all four points of the compass just as quickly—and perhaps more accurately—than a gun of the self-cocking revolver in the same direction. A six-pound projectile can be sent a straight distance of five miles or immediately another can be sent toward the south, long before the first has reached its destination.

The mechanism of the gun proper is as simple as that of the mounting appears to be. The firing is effected by means of a trigger no larger than that of an ordinary revolver. There are two extractors, each working independently of the other, so that if one becomes disabled the empty case will be safely and easily ejected by the other. The mechanical parts of the gun are completely covered by a steel hood, so that it is impossible for dirt to enter the breech opening. The gun was invented by Lieutenant W. H. Driggs, of the United States navy, and Lieutenant Seaton Schroeder, patented his invention and resigned from the service in order to devote himself to his manufacture.—N. Y. Times.

A PECULIAR CLAIM.

One of the Dangers of Advertising Wanted to Be Avoided.

The case of Noble vs. Yates, tried by Mr. Justice Charles and a jury recently, should be noticed by house owners and intending buyers of houses. An action against a house owner by a would-be tenant for damages sustained through the latter's not looking over the house which it was proposed to take. The jury found a verdict for the defendant, who, in fact, had in no way broken covenant of each sheet, and slip two ribbons through the illustration. These covers can be cut in any size, to fit any bound book, and are worth twenty times the ordinary covenant than the ordinary.—Farm and Home.

Nature of Rheumatic Gout.

Rheumatic gout is an incurable disease. It is a disease in which a sort of ulceration of the cartilages of the joints takes place. The change being organic nothing can be done for it. But when this disease is due to lowered nerve vitality—and I think it is always a nerve disease—and the nerve-tone can be improved and the system raised from its state of vitality by proper nutrition, the disease can be arrested: so that it shall make no further progress. This class of patients are often rushed off to taking hot baths at various springs. This is a mistake, for they are never improved by reducing treatment.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg.

A Simple Moth Remedy.

It is reported that the sums in use of the Kensington Society of Arts, where large quantities of clothing are stored, were greatly annoyed by the depredations of moths in a room full of blankets which were intended for pillow-making; but when the little pests were ruining their woolen stuffs, they had to try salt, which they sprinkled liberally around, and in a short time found that the moths had disappeared. It is also recommended for use in sweeping carpets, especially in rooms that are little used.

Too Costly.

Goodman—Is she a charmer he treated you so; but you should heap coals of fire on his head!

Furnish—With coal at the present price? Not, much—I'm not so fond of revenge.—Puck.

Agreeable.

Boston Hostess—How would you enjoy spending the evening at our Burns club, Mr. Overland?

Western Guest—First-rate. I used to belong to a fire company myself.—Good News.

A Waste of Raw Material.

Otherwise the genius of Miss Hajelevator was very widely discussed in the newspapers.

Young Man—It's a great pity she isn't alive, to profit by the advertising.—Puck.

Too Economical.

"Don't let Bronson write my obituary," said the dying man.

"Why not?" asked the editor.

"He—he—economizes—well," gasped the other.—Munsey's Weekly.

So Did He.

She (on their wedding trip)—What is the whistle for, Fred?

Fred—We are approaching either a station or a tunnel.

She—I—I hope it is a tunnel.—Life.

Eclipsed Cold.

Rounds—I've seen people laugh till they cried; but I never knew of a fellow crying till he laughed.

Hepburn—Guess you never lost a rich uncle!—Puck.

Not His Choice.

Bachelor—I tell you, it costs a man to have his wife well dressed days.

Tubbs—Yes, dress goods are high, especially on the shoulders.—Texas Siftings.

Why It Is So.

"Why is it that there is never banking business done in the north than in the south?"

"Nearer Canada."—Jury.

NEAT LITTLE SANCTUARY.

A Country Church That Can Be Made to Seat Three Thousand People.

This pretty church can be built of frame on a rubble stone foundation at an expense of about three thousand dollars. It is in good proportion and has a seating capacity of 1,000, arranged for a bell or an observatory, which is reached by stairs from the vestibule.

The chancel is built in a heptagon shape, making a very pretty effect and a good finish for the exterior. The auditorium is 32x40 feet with a chancel 12x20 feet.

To one side directly across from the hall there is a vestry 12x12 feet and a library 12x13 feet. The fire-place in auditorium is built of stone and brick in breast 6 feet.

Floor Plan

The hall is 12x13 feet and the vestibule 6x13 feet. This church is arranged for a furnace.

G. A. W. KEITH.

KILLS AT FIVE MILES.

Tremendous Efficiency of the New Driggs-Schroeder Gun.

Inside the walls of the Colt factory at Hartford, Conn., has recently been completed and tested the first of the twinscrew rapid-fire guns which the Government has purchased for use in the army. By "rapid fire" it is not meant that the new gun will send the bullets with the rapidity of the famous Gatling gun, but it will send them of such power and with a force that is heretofore unequaled in such projectiles. The Driggs-Schroeder gun fires projectiles weighing from one to eight pounds each. The first gun of this type to be completed and to enjoy protection and ownership by the United States Government is a six-pounder, that is, it sends a six-pound projectile a distance of at least five miles. The projectile is conoe-shaped and is made of hardened steel, and so great is its velocity when fired from the gun that it will perforate a six-inch steel plate at one mile without flattening or otherwise damaging itself. Although the new gun weighs 540 pounds, so skillfully is it mounted and balanced that the merest touch of a finger sets it to revolving about its axis. In this way the horizontal range is governed. High or low range is only a matter of the gentlest touch on the breech in a vertical plane. All this is so much less than a ground to fire the piece in all four points of the compass just as quickly—and perhaps more accurately—than a gun of the self-cocking revolver in the same direction. A six-pound projectile can be sent a straight distance of five miles or immediately another can be sent toward the south, long before the first has reached its destination.

The mechanism of the gun proper is as simple as that of the mounting appears to be. The firing is effected by means of a trigger no larger than that of an ordinary revolver. There are two extractors, each working independently of the other, so that if one becomes disabled the empty case will be safely and easily ejected by the other. The mechanical parts of the gun are completely covered by a steel hood, so that it is impossible for dirt to enter the breech opening. The gun was invented by Lieutenant W. H. Driggs, of the United States navy, and Lieutenant Seaton Schroeder, patented his invention and resigned from the service in order to devote himself to his manufacture.—N. Y. Times.

A PECULIAR CLAIM.

One of the Dangers of Advertising Wanted to Be Avoided.

The case of Noble vs. Yates, tried by Mr. Justice Charles and a jury recently, should be noticed by house owners and intending buyers of houses. An action against a house owner by a would-be tenant for damages sustained through the latter's not looking over the house which it was proposed to take. The jury found a verdict for the defendant, who, in fact, had in no way broken covenant of each sheet, and slip two ribbons through the illustration. These covers can be cut in any size, to fit any bound book, and are worth twenty times the ordinary covenant than the ordinary.—Farm and Home.

Nature of Rheumatic Gout.

Rheumatic gout is an incurable disease. It is a disease in which a sort of ulceration of the cartilages of the joints takes place. The change being organic nothing can be done for it. But when this disease is due to lowered nerve vitality—and I think it is always a nerve disease—and the nerve-tone can be improved and the system raised from its state of vitality by proper nutrition, the disease can be arrested: so that it shall make no further progress. This class of patients are often rushed off to taking hot baths at various springs. This is a mistake, for they are never improved by reducing treatment.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg.

A Simple Moth Remedy.

It is reported that the sums in use of the Kensington Society of Arts, where large quantities of clothing are stored, were greatly annoyed by the depredations of moths in a room full of blankets which were intended for pillow-making; but when the little pests were ruining their woolen stuffs, they had to try salt, which they sprinkled liberally around, and in a short time found that the moths had disappeared. It is also recommended for use in sweeping carpets, especially in rooms that are little used.

Too Costly.

Goodman—Is she a charmer he treated you so; but you should heap coals of fire on his head!

Furnish—With coal at the present price? Not, much—I'm not so fond of revenge.—Puck.

Agreeable.

Boston Hostess—How would you enjoy spending the evening at our Burns club, Mr. Overland?

Western Guest—First-rate. I used to belong to a fire company myself.—Good News.

So Saved His Life.

A wealthy banker meets a tramp in the isolated forest.

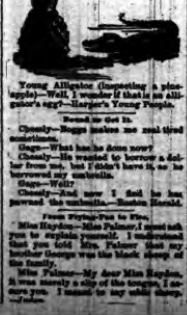
Tramp—Help a poor man with a dollar—you will save a human life.

Banker (thoughtfully)—Your life is not worth a dollar.

Tramp (swinging a club)—But yours is.

Tramp gets his dollar.—Texas Siftings.

NOT AN EXTRAORDINARY QUESTION.



Young Alligator (forgetting a pleasantry)—Well, I wonder if that is an alligator's egg?—Harper's Young People.

Dreadful.

Chesby—Bought another new coat, have you?

Chaffie—What do you mean? Why, I've had this coat for a year. Haven't bought or borrowed a thing in months.

Chesby—Well, I said it was a dreadful coat.—Puck.

Proper Precaution of Prudence.

Miss Hayden—Miss Palmer is most sick from eating too much candy. I told her she would be sick, but she would not heed me.

Miss Lyon—Why, how was that?

Miss Hayden—Why, she ate the whole basket before she was sick.—Jury.

Not a Fisherman.

Americus Bellows—Who is that at the door?

Maid—Only a beggar.

PRETTY BOOK COVERS.

A Wonderful Addition to the Value of a Handsome Book.

Decorated Tiles Reminiscent of Those in Alhambra—Some Specimens.

FIG. 1. LACED BOOK COVER.

For several reasons a handsome or ornamental book cover is very desirable for one's favorite periodical, a much used favorite book, as an addition to the value of a dainty gift book, in extra cover, in lieu of the familiar worn paper one, will preserve the handsome binding of a fine volume for a long time. Indeed, a book cover does not wish to wear in any way; and if it is not locked upon as a desirable thing to advertise one's literary taste, a neat ornamental cover to one's novel or preferred magazine is a great convenience.

FIG. 2.—LACED BOOK COVER WITH BOOK.

The dainty fancy worker can also impart some of her own individuality to the cover or interior of her book, as she stres to present to some favored friend, by making for it a handsomely decorated cover of velvet, plush, satin or fine broadcloth, upon which she will work some "border fantasy of branch and flower and any other pretty device of initials, or a motto, or perhaps paint some flowers in water colors, "pansies for thoughts," etc.

The first of the illustrations shows a handsome book cover suitable either

FIG. 3.—CELLULOID BOOK-COVER.

for a periodical or any bound book, according to the size it is made to, which, of course, is governed by that of the book for which it is intended. Procure the pattern first by laying the book open in the middle fastly upon a sheet of sufficient size and cut out, allowing half an inch on all sides. Cut a piece of silk the double width of the book and an inch longer, will be required for the cover, and a piece of the same size for the lining. If the cover is for a periodical, that is, a pamphlet-bound book, an interesting effect may be had by using a silk of two contrasting colors. Procure a piece of ribbon or cord. Finish each end with a small silk tassel. The fold of the ribbon or cord will be used for the outside edges, to allow more space for slipping the covers of the book inside. Another piece of ribbon may be so placed a little way to allow the cover of the book to slide in without "breaking the back," if it is in board covers.

The smallest of the book-covers illustrated is made of two sheets of celluloid, which may be had at any artist's material store, and are generally covered with a thin coating of gold. These are sewed together at the top of the sides "slip thief! Stop thief!" One or two pedestrians joined in the pursuit, and the policeman at the corner got his unwieldly frame into motion. But the supposed thief was a faster runner than any of the others, and jumping on to the front platform of the car he passed on to the rear, and, as no thief Whip up your horses, and here's a dollar." Then the men left inside and sat down, and all the other passengers looked at him askance.

The conductor evidently thought it was his place to get his car through on time, and not to stop to let a man after whom "stop, thief!" was being called be captured, but when the burly policeman in the crowd of pursuers he pulled the bell strap and the car came to a stop. The man after whom he appeared in pursuit leaped on board and rushed out at the back door, as he had called a thief. The other passengers looked to see him take the man by the collar, and the policeman was just at the rear platform ready to put him under arrest. Pulling a paper from his pocket the man held it out to the uniformed and said: "Mr. ——, here is the summons in that suit of ——."

And then the policeman swore because he had to run a block to help a summons-server, and the car went on its way. The man who had been served looked dejected, but he remarked to his next neighbor: "It's just as well, I suppose. I'll be ready for him some time. I knew at the start that that fellow would serve his summons some way. He's a terror. He's got up a reputation for serving summonses in a way that has played all sorts of sharp games to get it, and—That last one was a bright trick, though, and I'm glad we've had a fling for me outside my house but I saw him going down the street, and I'm glad I think I ought to see him for defamation of character for calling after me 'Stop, thief!'"

SHE—THE SUMMONS.

Scene—The Jones parlor: time, Sunday evening. Miss Jones discovered reclining in the Hall's Chamber. Belle.

Nadie—You might leave the book, dear, I should like to look at it.

Little—Indeed I will not let you, for she always keeps the Bible out of the parlor when any young man calls. She deems it quite sacred to be read the family record, cause dey would find out how old she is.—Boston Herald.

A Great Advantage.

Tom (a cynic)—Behold a clergyman, you have better opportunities than most bachelors to find out the good and bad qualities of the fair ladies in your congregation.

Rev. Whitside—How so?

Tom—Cos he at least have a chance to discover which of the girls snore.—Tit.

The Proof of It.

Mordling—That girl in the candy-store says she's only a poor shop-girl, but she's a true woman!

Paxon—I'm convinced of it, me boy! Why only the other day I got her to break a dollar for me, and she handed back one dollar and seventeen cents in change.—Puck.

Pride Is Punished.

Littleton (coming out of the restaurant—By Jove, I'm glad we saw rid of that waiter! His air was so lofty that I actually felt small.

Coker—Indeed! And so—

Littleton—And so I acted small. I didn't give him one cent.—Puck.

A FEW MASTER STROKES.

—Golden Days.

Misunderstood Hints.

Mr. Scour—Do you know that you are a perfect Niagara Falls. What did you see that frightened you most while you were away, Mrs. Scour?

Mrs. Scour (modestly)—My hat and veil.—Jury.

Not a Fisherman.

Americus Bellows—Who is that at the door?

Maid—Only a beggar.

WHAT KIND HE.

A typographical error is thus accounted for by the Waterville Herald: Compositor setting new reporter spells "virtuous" "virtuous."

Foreman—Yes, he's fresh. Make him right, and then put him in here. We must get to press in just three minutes.

The item was put in place, and this is the way the public got it:

"The verdict of the coroner's jury was that the deceased came to his death from the eff

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, APRIL 16, 1891. No. 16.

"Support the Constitution, which is the consent of the Union, as well to its limitations as to its authorities."—MADISON.

The Constitutionalist, A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY. M. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors. AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY. TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 WEEK	2	3	4	1 MONTH	2	3	6	1 YEAR
1 Inch

All Electro's must be solid metal.

"Medicine of Everything" ordered, 1 pin per Day.

Double ads. 50 per ct. advance of above rates

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON. Counsellors-at-Law, Commissioners of Deeds, Masters-in-Chancery Peoples Bank Bldg., corner of Park avenue and Second street.—1m61

W. V. STEELE. Counselor-at-Law, Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner, etc. Cor. PARK AVE. AND NORTH AVE. 4-31-3m

GEORGE W. DAY, General Auctioneer, Sales of Personal Property solicited. P. O. Box 114, Dunellen, N. J., or address in care of Constitutionalist. Terms reasonable.

DR. CHARLES R. THEISS, Dentist, 28 West Front street. A new local anesthetic application for extracting teeth without pain. Gold filling a specialty.—3m

H. HAND, Auctioneer, P. O. Address, Lock Box 71, Scotch Plains, N. J. Orders left at C. J. Casey's merchandise store, 20 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—4m182

OSCAR S. TEALE, Architect, 247 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 32 and 33. (Limperial and Postoffice Block Building.) Residence, Plainfield, N. J.—3m57

J. E. PERSTER, Veterinary Surgeon, Has in A. N. Somers' livery stable, Corner Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Day or night calls promptly attended. Telephone No. 13. Consultation on diseases of all domestic animals. Satisfaction. 23 Shot Pin operation. 4-16-1y

JOHN CHANDLER, JOURNEYMAN BUILDER, PLAINFIELD, N. J. Residence and Shop No. 36 East 2d St. Jobbing promptly attended to. apl7

T. J. GILLIES, Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent. SALESROOM—MADISON AVENUE, corner Front. P. O. Box 1, Plainfield, N. J. Goods received on consignment.

TO THE PUBLIC! We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of LEHIGH COAL, Fresh from the Mines. It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice. A. D. COOK & BRO. 1m61

J. Hervey Doane, 8 PARK AVENUE. (Formerly Clerk.) Watches, Clocks And Jewelry, Repairing neatly and, promptly done. 49tf

FOR BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS In Furniture GO TO 23, 25 and 27 PARK AVE.

Garret Q. Packer, Steam Marble Granite Works. AND Tesuments & Headstones, Fencing for Cemetery Plots. Largest assortment of Slate Mantels; large variety of Granite Monuments. All work executed in the best artistic manner and at as low a price as first-class work can be done for. PLAINFIELD, N. J. Factory Nos. 35 and 37 N. E. Cor. Plainfield, N. J. Monuments erected in Rosewood Cemetery, Chester, N. Y.

Alex. Willett, DEALER IN BOOTS & SHOES, No. 2 PARK AVENUE. A full assortment of desirable goods direct from manufacturers, at Low Figures. 4-16-1y

Geo. A. Moore, (Of the late firm of Moore Bros.) Is now the sole proprietor of the old established Grocery at No. 144 NORTH AVENUE. Where he will endeavor to supply patrons with the choicest Groceries of Teas and Coffees, Fine Table Syrups, Canned Goods, Spices, Extracts, and all the several needed goods. Anything not usually kept in stock furnished at short notice. 4-16-1y

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL, NORTH AVENUE, (Train N. B. S. STATION.) JAS. M. FORCE, Prop'r. A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat. First-class Plumbing. Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-31-tf

SOMERSET HOTEL, Cor. Somerset & Emily Sts. North Plainfield, N. J. RICHARD A. BOYCE, Proprietor. Permanent and transient board, at fair rates. First class stables and sheds attached. Meals at all reasonable hours.

Dime Savings Institution OF PLAINFIELD, N. J. Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually. JOHN W. MURRAY, President. WILLIAM WHITE, " MORGAN HARPER, " " EDGAR R. POPE, Treasurer. 4-2-1y

L. B. WOOLSTON. A. P. BUCKLE. Woolston & Buckle, PAINTERS, Wall Papers, PAINTER'S SUPPLIES, 38 NORTH AVENUE. 4tf2

Jas. M. Dunn, Dealer in GROCERIES, PROVISIONS, Vegetables, Fruits, etc. No. 36 Park Ave. OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.

THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS, SENT IN THE WORLD. ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE TO PURCHASERS. 4tf

ESTABLISHED 1836. C.E. & J.W. BROWN, (Successors to O. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.,) Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in WALL PAPER. 321 Canal Street, NEW YORK. English Tiles, Anaglypta, Hand, Leather Stained Flock Papers, &c. Borders for Halls. Manufacturers of Window Shades. 2-15-1y

LIVERY.

A. M. SEGUINE, (Successor to John W. Laing.) Laing's Hotel Stables

Front street, opposite Madison avenue. Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Balls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure. RIDING OR LIVERY.

Livery Stables! Mr. D. S. ROBERTS Has Removed to His New Building on NORTH AVENUE, Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to answer in a manner forallinside of the entire livery business, and by a continuance of past favors, and by thorough attention to business, to merit a liberal share of the public patronage. Horses for Funerals, Weddings or Baptisms will be furnished from the Depot or other Places at reasonable terms. Having a full supply of Horses, Carriages and Harness of every description, he is prepared to furnish the same on short notice. Horses taken to board by the day, week or month. Orders left with Engineer Force's Hotel will receive prompt attention. 4-2-1y

Accommodation Express. SEYFER RICKERT, Proprietor. Office—Vanderlinda's Machine Store, Parkhurst's Pipe Line Connection Express will attend to the general carrying business of the city, delivering goods or Baggage to and from the Depot or other Places at reasonable. Moving of Furniture, Pianos, etc., with care and safety. Transportation of Merchandise to Order. 4-2-1y

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE! The undersigned has given up the agencies of the Star and Merchants Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York, as prepared to assign valuable, solvently accommodate my Fire and Life insurance business to the following reliable companies: NATHAN HARPER

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF, FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE AGENT, Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave., PLAINFIELD, N. J. Real Estate for Sale & Exchange. MONEY TO LOAN On Approved Security. Mayor

J. C. Pope & Co., GENERAL AGENTS OF THE German American Ins. Co., of New York. Also represents other first-class fire insurance companies. Agents of the Home Mutual Life Insurance Co. Fire and City Business Block. Small Bought and Sold. Also, BUILDING LOTS And Other Real Estate for sale. OFFICE: 6 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD. JAMES O. POPE. ELIAS S. POPE

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER AND Miss NEWTON'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND KINDERGARTEN, 17 Lafayette Avenue, CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET. Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890. The regular course will include Modern Cooking and Sewing. 2 12 tf

PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass, WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES. WALL PAPERS! PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY. A. SWALM, No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield, NEXT TO P. O.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON, [Successor to W. J. Carey.] Furniture and Freight Express! OFFICE—36 W. FRONT ST. Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to city part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 326, cor. Front and Park avenue. Telephone No. 2. 2-26-1y

Fresh Garden Seeds AND FERTILIZERS, Farm and Garden Implements, Lawn Mowers Refrigerators, Ice Cream Freezers, Gasoline Stoves, Hardware, Tools, etc. J. J. HEIDELOFF, No. 13 SOMERSET ST. 5-13-1y

CANOPIES For Weddings, Parties, Etc., TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE Hugo Weigman, 38 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J. 6-13-1y

SPEER'S GRAPE WINES, ALSO UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.

Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for families, weakly persons and the aged.

Speer's Port Grape Wine, FOUR YEARS OLD.

THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the J. Speer type (Sporto Grape, raised in Speer's Vineyards, and left long until they shrivel and become partly raisined before gathering. Its family blend Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being prescribed by Dr. Speer, as an invalid, especially for Consumption, and highly recommended by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalid can use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and raised to the various ailments that affect the latter part of life.

It is in every respect a WINE TO BE RELIED ON.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice is the Juice of the Sporto Grape, preserved in its natural state. Fresh, pure and delicious. Put up in pints from the grape by fumigation and sterilizing, thereby excepting the action of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, free from spirits, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Sacrifice) Claret is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine. Recommended for dinner use.

Speer's P. J. Sherry is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivaled in this country for medicinal purposes. It has a peculiar flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is over the cork of each bottle. SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 6-16-1y

Garden Seeds, Direct from the Grower. Othello Ranges, Choice Clover and Timothy Seed, House Furnishing Goods, Hardware, Plumbing and Tinning. A. M. GRIFFEN, 19 East Front Street, TELEPHONE CALL, 2. 11-1-1y

TOBACCO, CIGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING, No. 17 Park Avenue, PLAINFIELD, N. J. Manufacturer of the Celebrated C. O. D. CIGAR. The manufacturer is the Only one made on the premises in the United States. CLEAR HAVANA BRAND A SPECIALTY. A large assortment of the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars always on hand. Smokers Articles in Great Variety. 7-24-1y

C. M. FINE, Dealer in HAVANA & DOMESTIC —CIGARS!— 8.30 PARK AVE. (Next corner to POSTOFFICE.) Tobacco and Smoker's Materials, Grocery Sundries. The celebrated "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, with other leading brands of Tobacco and Cigarettes. 2tf

A. WOLFF, Manufacturer of CIGARS, And dealer in all kinds of Smoking and Chewing Tobacco, and Smokers' articles. Has removed from No. 9 W. Front street, to 41 West Front street, one door east of Madison avenue, and solicits the patronage of his friends and the public generally.

GARNEY BROS., Ag'ts, 11 SOMERSET ST. TINNERS, PLUMBERS, GAS FITTERS, PARLOR STOVES, COOK STOVES, HEATERS. Grates and Ranges for all kinds of Stove to be found here at Polsgrove's prices. Bring your Tinware mending to us. The best Tinners, the best Plumbers, and the best Gas-fitters in the section. We use none but the very best of materials, and our work always gives satisfaction. Keys of All Kinds are Made Here. Tinware Made to Order. Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces SANITARY PLUMBING.

WHATEVER form of printed matter you require we can be of service to you; whether it be

Letter Headings, Circulars, Programmes, Menus, Addresses, Memorials, By-Laws of Societies, Prospectuses and Reports of Financial Associations, or any other matter for Public or Private Circulation. Everything

WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONALIST. DAILY PRESS (Chautauqua Building). PLAINFIELD, N. J.

SANITARY PLUMBING, Brick and Portable Furnaces, GAS FITTING, TIN ROOFING, Etc., Etc. I can recommend to any of the above branches of business. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges moderate. Shop on Somerset street, between Second and Third streets. Residence on Second street, between Plainfield and North Plainfield. Orders left at Constitutionalist office will receive prompt attention. D. W. LITTELL, No. 2 SOMERSET AVE. (NORTH PLAINFIELD.) 2-5-1y

CURRENT POEMS.

Mr. Tupper Mann.

There is a little man who is quite a friend of mine,
And he thought that he couldn't be any more divine
Than he was, but he was mistaken, he can sooner
Write a line.

Though it's true that he's accomplish great things, may be,
He thinks that he's greater than he is, and he
Is mistaken, for he's not even half as great
As he thinks he is.

Before he has a book in the pen has dry,
He tells his wife what he has done and seems his peace to steal;
Mr. Tupper Mann, come down and mind the baby.

Not a day but what she said him, to his infinite chagrin,
While his hair is so inviting, and his pens are so thin,
And he'd rather not over her, but the fact is he is afraid to begin.

So he's forced to mope the house I'm told, for, may be,
You will see the richest house hopped upon it,
Some fine day,
When Mr. Tupper Mann at his power is out enough to play,
And his mind's all right, no longer runs out in the hall to say:
Mr. Tupper Mann, come down and mind the baby!

Malcolm Douglas, in Puck.

Adversity.

Adversity! There are our friends, not foe,
And when we're down they help us to our feet
In many a way.
Adversity! A refining fire then art;
The fine metal, and the dross, and leaves behind
A mould pure of honest flag, where outward
Form
Reflects the treasures of the heart,
And trusty friendship shows, manifold, kind,
A glorious gem, unknown to art.

Lemming.

Child! If thou wouldst with truth and honor live Better, without, that thou shouldst cease to Thy first best years, thy first fresh effort, give
To honest things, and true.

Learn, while the glorious sun in heav'n rides high,
And noisy streams beneath his fervid roars;
Learn, when the silver Moonlight floods the With
Like veil of Artemis on clouds and stars.

Learn, ever learn, while yet thy youth is fair,
While life's morning lurid in its strength,
When sun, like hunt, lies lightly on thy hair,
And thy heart is as fresh as it must be length.

Learn! and thy essence of gathered learning Give
To those to rejoice; rather shalt thou come
With songs of triumph; morning over there,
And the diadem of the Victor's crown.

—Margaret Thomas, in Youth's Companion.

The Loaded-For Bear.

He 'lit the fire and scattered rice'
Oh, no! quite plain to see,
Why 'twouldn't do
To shoot a shoat
For Mr. Bruin's tea.

He's not rich, or bright, or young;
Yet, when he walks the street,
The fairest maids
Lift winsome smiles
And listen for his feet.

And he's the prize, the grandest game
Some pleased—or heaves a sigh
When he escapes
She sees at last
The precious game he's by.

—Frank Dempster Sherman, in Century.

Nature.

Fair is the world, its sweetest be alive,
The flowers look and bend their heads and strive;
Yon, o'er tiers and gaze to hear the cross,
And all the years of waiting, pain or loss,
With the exception of a single day,
Him who heard her voice, and with her lives.

To lend the ear and lend the eye to all
Her varied gifts and rich, or great or small,
That through the years is more or less begun
To each life thrills, is to hear the
To untold treasures, where the soul may glean
Handing of heartache, and a peace serene.

—Lisa A. Fletcher, in Good Housekeeping.

Both Satisfied.

"I would not be a horrid boy,"
Said Ethel, with a frown,
"For boys, they always play so rough,
It worries mamma so."

"And I," said Johnny, as he pulled
And twisted Kate's curl,
"Would rather be a big, rough boy
Than be a frisky girl."

And both were right, 'tis plain to see;
In naughtiness and mischief
Girls make the very best of girls,
And boys the best of boys.

—Wm. Shaw.

Nobody Cares.

A wastrily little face,
A feeble, forlorn little smile,
Poor, faltering feet,
That must pass their best
For many and many a mile—
A star seeking out in the dusk;
A lamp that hardly flares,
In the wide city's wold
Just a nameless girl—
Nobody cares.

* * * * * * *

A desolate, desert-broken room,
A pillow pushed up to the wall;
A flower that's known
A face to repose;
Silence, and that and alone;
Save just on the wee-hopes cheek
That look which each repines Wears,
That light on the brow—
Ah, who shall say now?
"Nobody cares"?

—Donald Magnus.

"What said Where?"

Mischievous Tommie,
He hears every day,
Is family maxim
Beginning table way:
"How, Tommy, you master's,"
And "Tommy, you must;"
And "Tommy, you mustn't,"
"You'll kick up the dust;"
And "Do put up your things,
Or you will get wet,"
And "Do not be upsetting,
You'll bestrew your bones,"
And "Do put down the stones;"
So "Tommy, where?" I ask,
And "Good little children
Are seen and not heard."

Which Tommy on hearing
Exclaims: "Every me
What was I for, then,
And where am I not by be"
—Anna Boynton, in St. Nicholas.

A Satisfaction.

Miss Fluffy Ruffles—Say, did you ever ride on an ice boat?

Mr. F. A. Kerr—No; but when I was doing the harlequin in Humpty Dumpty last year I did shoot out of a cannon every night.—Puck.

A Sharp Shaft.

Maud—George, please explain what you mean by that Edith sly eyes reminded you of a cat's.

George—Why, simply, that to appreciate their beauty one must see them at night.—Puck.

Cautiously Move Made One.

Mother—Because I may wouldst you, sir, that my sentiments left me an honored name.

Tom Kuox—And a very thoughtful act it was in them, to be sure.—Puck.

Up With Current Events.

Chicago Congressional Teacher—Why should we not call people before action, Johnny Lovegood?

Johnny—Tell ask page. He's in Congress business.—Judge.

A Sore Point.

"What makes you think Miss Dowsed really loves you?"

"Because she has repeatedly advised me not to lend my money to her brother."

Where's a Friend?

Tillinghast—Young Mumbler runs very incorrect language.

Penniwell—Yes, he's a grandson of Noah Webster.—Judge.

PURSUED BY SAURIANS.

The Timely Arrival of Another Deadly Enemy Saves Us.

IN THE WINTER of 1890-91 I visited Florida and all of the rivers, lagoons and lakes were became greatly overflowed by the heavy rains, owing to the quantities of water rushing toward the sea. The extensive southern part of the peninsula was especially flooded, and many of the low-lying mangrove islands were submerged, and the upper branches of the forest trees growing in the middle of the pools.

We were spending the winter along the coast, making occasional brief excursions into the interior for the purpose of scientific interest that we could find, or to enjoy a few days' sport by shooting the wild game.

James Walton was a fellow student with myself, and through the advice of physicians we had both come to Florida, books of natural history for study in the field. South Florida opened up a wild life more rich in every department of science, and when we were engaged in studying the fauna of the pine woods region we never failed to make observations and discoveries that interested and instructed.

In the course of time, however, the continually rising waters forced us from dry land, and we had to construct a rude platform for our home. This was built by driving heavy stakes in the ground, and on these placing a big platform on the top of the stakes. The water never rose quite up to the top of this platform, but came within a few inches of it.

The platform, with our rude shanty on it, stood about close to a huge cypress grove swamp, and near enough to Indian Inlet to give us a distinct view of the ocean. We could thus reach salt and fresh water birds and fish with but little difficulty.

Shortly after the holidays the water reached its highest mark, and we found ourselves living, as it were, right in the midst of a large sea, and with here and there forests of trees growing out of it. With our little canoe we could paddle far up into the interior, and we frequently spent days in exploring the submerged country.

One day James and I entered a little cove in one of the large mangrove swamps, and as they very rarely were, some two or three miles from the camp. We shot a few wild ducks to replenish our stock of provisions. After paddling around for some time we startled up a flock of wild birds, which scurried out of the brakes so rapidly and suddenly that we could not get a good glimpse of them. To prevent any great prize from escaping, we shot indiscriminately into the flock, and brought down three birds.

The three birds were wounded and their cries soon brought the other denizens of the swamp. They proved to be pelicans and they made desperate efforts to get beyond our reach. We picked up two of the screaming creatures, and then started for the shed.

Before we reached the last, our attention was attracted by a ripple in the water, and then by the black head of an alligator moving rapidly toward the screaming bird. The winter had been a hard one, and the voracious saurians had become bold and desperate in their hunger. Otherwise the big fellow would never have ventured out in broad daylight and attempted to steal the game right from under our nose.

"Paddle for the hut," James shouted, as he saw the alligator. "We can beat that fellow."

It was fun and a wild desire for venture we entered the race and paddled our best. The alligator, nothing daunted by our approach, increased his speed but we were too much for him, and we snatched the bird almost out of his jaws.

IN THE MIDST OF A LARGE SEA.

Baffled and angry, the huge saurian snapped his jaws together loudly, and then opening them again, he made toward us as if intent upon crushing our canoe to pieces. We never realized that we were running any danger until the saurian was not so easily baffled. Anger and hunger made him return to the attack, and he started in rapid pursuit. The cries of the wounded pelicans seemed to have the effect of a spur or overtake us, and he doubtless felt that we were robbing him of his game.

We could not hold our own in the race, and the monster overhauled us foot by foot. He was close to us, and almost ready to leap into the air for other charge when I threw one of the pelicans overboard. There was a sudden snap of the jaws, and the bird disappeared down the red throat.

FIGHT FOR LIFE.

The spoor of the alligator was stopped for an instant, but he soon renewed the chase. At this point we came upon a few ripples on the lake, and we knew that we were being pursued by a whole army of saurians. The cries of the birds had indeed attracted the hungry alligators from all the neighboring lagoons and swamps.

"Quick, over with the bird," James shouted. "They are calling all the

I threw the remaining birds in the water, and saw them disappear down the throats of our enemies. Then seizing our paddles again we redoubled our efforts, knowing that our lives depended upon the result of the race. The ripples all around us, and over the cypress grove, appeared almost alive, and in fifteen minutes the black heads and the scaly backs of the pursuing alligators could be plainly seen. They were all gigantic fellows, and were swimming like a body after us. The cries of the birds no longer incited them on, but they had evidently made up their minds to have us for a meal.

It was a long distance to the camp, and our chances of reaching it before the alligators overtook us were very few minutes. We paddled on, hoping almost against hope that the alligators would tire of the chase and turn back to the camp. We had a good start of them, and we determined to make the best of it. We were not long in doing so, for the fear of death is a well known stimulus to the desires are aroused, and we could neither tire the few large ones out nor hold the distance between us. Several of the alligators dropped out of the race, but five of the larger ones steadily gained on us.

We gave a sigh of relief when we sounded the last point of land and saw our elevated log cabin in the distance. But there was no sign of help there, and our hearts failed us. The guides were either sleeping or out duck-hunting. A great despair followed our sigh of relief. The foremost alligator leaped lower and snapped his jaws within five feet of the canoe. Another attempted to reach us, but failed. Then they swam down to work again, but we were so paralyzed with fear that our arms could make only ineffectual efforts to paddle rapidly.

"We're lost," groaned James, "unless we can frighten them."

Our guns not being loaded proved practically useless, but we both jumped up and tried to strike the saurians with the paddles. The creatures stopped for a minute and swam in a circle around the canoe. They knew that they had conquered their prey, and they seemed to be gloating over their coming feast. Our attempts to frighten them, however, were ineffectual, and when we struck one on the tail, he turned around and snapped savagely at the paddle. We saved the piece by jamming it in a hole in the platform on the top of the stakes. The alligator's head came within a few inches of the canoe. We could then reach salt and fresh water birds and fish with but little difficulty.

Shortly after the holidays the water reached its highest mark, and we found ourself living, as it were, right in the midst of a large sea, and with here and there forests of trees growing out of it. With our little canoe we could paddle far up into the interior, and we frequently spent days in exploring the submerged country.

One day James and I entered a little cove in one of the large mangrove swamps, and as they very rarely were, some two or three miles from the camp. We shot a few wild ducks to replenish our stock of provisions. After paddling around for some time we startled up a flock of wild birds, which scurried out of the brakes so rapidly and suddenly that we could not get a good glimpse of them. To prevent any great prize from escaping, we shot indiscriminately into the flock, and brought down three birds.

The three birds were wounded and their cries soon brought the other denizens of the swamp. They proved to be pelicans and they made desperate efforts to get beyond our reach. We picked up two of the screaming creatures, and then started for the shed.

Before we reached the last, our attention was attracted by a ripple in the water, and then by the black head of an alligator moving rapidly toward the screaming bird. The winter had been a hard one, and the voracious saurians had become bold and desperate in their hunger. Otherwise the big fellow would never have ventured out in broad daylight and attempted to steal the game right from under our nose.

"Paddle for the hut," James shouted, as he saw the alligator. "We can beat that fellow."

It was fun and a wild desire for ventures we entered the race and paddled our best. The alligator, nothing daunted by our approach, increased his speed but we were too much for him, and we snatched the bird almost out of his jaws.

IN THE MIDST OF A LARGE SEA.

Baffled and angry, the huge saurian snapped his jaws together loudly, and then opening them again, he made toward us as if intent upon crushing our canoe to pieces. We never realized that we were running any danger until the saurian was not so easily baffled. Anger and hunger made him return to the attack, and he started in rapid pursuit. The cries of the wounded pelicans seemed to have the effect of a spur or overtake us, and he doubtless felt that we were robbing him of his game.

We could not hold our own in the race, and the monster overhauled us foot by foot. He was close to us, and almost ready to leap into the air for other charge when I threw one of the pelicans overboard. There was a sudden snap of the jaws, and the bird disappeared down the red throat.

FIGHT FOR LIFE.

The spoor of the alligator was stopped for an instant, but he soon renewed the chase. At this point we came upon a few ripples on the lake, and we knew that we were being pursued by a whole army of saurians. The cries of the birds had indeed attracted the hungry alligators from all the neighboring lagoons and swamps.

"Quick, over with the bird," James shouted. "They are calling all the

I threw the remaining birds in the water, and saw them disappear down the throats of our enemies. Then seizing our paddles again we redoubled our efforts, knowing that our lives depended upon the result of the race. The ripples all around us, and over the cypress grove, appeared almost alive, and in fifteen minutes the black heads and the scaly backs of the pursuing alligators could be plainly seen. They were all gigantic fellows, and were swimming like a body after us. The cries of the birds no longer incited them on, but they had evidently made up their minds to have us for a meal.

It was a long distance to the camp, and our chances of reaching it before the alligators overtook us were very few minutes. We paddled on, hoping almost against hope that the alligators would tire of the chase and turn back to the camp. We had a good start of them, and we determined to make the best of it. We were not long in doing so, for the fear of death is a well known stimulus to the desires are

SACHET FOR GLOVES.

A Pretty Trifle with Which Girls Can Make Presents That Please.

It will be a good plan for the girl who means to learn to embroider to make a sachet for gloves. There are few uses for which will be described is so simple and so easy to make that any little woman can succeed who will do so. And as she is sold.

First, sacrifice three-quarters of a yard of pale blue ribbon, four inches wide, and fringe each end to the depth of one inch. Above the fringe draw the cut the of a bunch of daisies like the one in the illustration below. If any another design is more pleasing to you, get a piece of tissue paper, and transfer the or she can take the ribbon to some shop where embroidery materials are kept, and have it stamped.

The stems must be worked in dark green floss, with the petals shown in the first illustration. The first row of stitches must run up the stem along the line which marks the right edge, and another row of stitches must be put on so close to the first that they touch them row after row until the line to the left of the stem is reached.

Then the leaf must be done with some bright green French silk. It will be best to use two strands at a time for both stemand leaf. First make a row of long stitches along the line which marks the central vein; then begin at the base and work one side of the leaf with stitches which run from the vein to the petal to the point. The stitches must be close together, so that the silk cannot be seen between them, and every stitch must be very long. Work the other side of the leaf in the same way, and then fill in the outline, so that all the petals and the leaf look compact. When complete, work the wreath, which is to go at the base of the vein, as you did the petals on each side. To embroider the daisies, first work the centers, one set a little above the other, of the single petal shown in the illustration. Use cream-white floss for the stitches of gray, at the base of each petal to which they are to be added. The lines in the design show how the shading is to be done.

DAISIES.

The calyx of the daisy, that hangs over on its stem, is to be worked in white floss also, and the stitches are set run in the direction indicated by the lines in the design.

With the center of the frill daisy yellow embroidery silk must be used. The stitch best suited to represent the petals is the French knot stitch.

To make the knot, thread your needle with one strand of embroidery silk, bring the end, and pass the needle through from the under side at the center of the circle. Hold the thread in the left hand almost close to where the ribbon, then wind it twice around the needle, and hold the thread tightly with the left hand. Slip the needle down the silk until you can pass the point through the ribbon close to where the strand of silk is fastened. Let go the silk with the left hand, and pull the needle and silk through the ribbon as fast as you can. A tiny knot will be found in the center of the daisy. Continue to make other knots until all the circle is filled, and the effect will be quite like that of the real petals.

SACHET FOR GLOVES.

It will require some practice to make perfect knots, but if you will carefully follow the direction you will surely succeed in the end.

When the daisies on both ends of the ribbon are worked, the ribbon must be gently pressed with a warm iron, and then begins the making of the sachet itself. To do this you must tie the ribbon in as loose a bow-knot as you know how, so that the loops of the bow are to hold the sweet-scented cotton. Fill each loop in layers of white, absorbent cotton, well sprinkled with violet powder, and over that put the edges together in the neatest possible manner. When all the work is done you will have made a really artistic piece of embroidery, and a sachet supply as the one in the illustration above.—Harper's Young People.

WALL DECORATION.

A "Catch-All" Made of Japanese Fans and Bamboo Sticks.

A clever invention for a bedroom wall decoration is a "catch all," made of Japanese fans and bamboo sticks. For this purpose the sticks of the fan are disconnected and inserted in the pieces of split bamboo. The intervals between the sticks are filled with a broad ribbon, woven in and out of the sticks, at the top of the sticks, and at the bottom of the sticks, which two fans, back to back, at the top of which two fans, are opened, make the half circle. Trimmings of pieces are also of fans nearly shut.—N. Y. Tribune.

Correct.

Teacher—To what circumstance is Columbus indebted for his fame?

Tommy—To the circumstance that America was already discovered.—Texas Siftings.

Another Advantage of Illness.

"They made about three thousand dollars out of the fair at our church last night."

"Any arrests?"—Puck.

How He Felt.

Tom—How did you feel when you put the chunk of ice down his back?

Jack—I felt that the ice was pretty hard.—Light.

No Doubt.

He—Miss Antique may be old, but she comes of an old family.

She—Possibly she inherits her age.—Jury.

Felled Again.

Hero (modern drama)—Great heavens! My rival has just arranged to convey the deed proper to Irene's father! Lost! Lost! Lost!

Stanch Friend—I fear the worst! But stay! How much did he pay?

"By a messenger boy."

"Ha! I have it! Give the boy a nickel to buy himself candy!"

"Saved!"—Good News.

Philosophical Pleasure.

Downey—I wish it were always Sunday. I feel so much better after a longer, Sunday. I find six times more pleasure in life, in that respect, than you.

Downey—How so?

Rooney—Why, I get up an hour earlier on Sunday than any other day, and then I get to church with a rush-hour. On other days I am glad it is not Sunday, see?

Downey—Yes.—Puck.

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE, Editor and Proprietor. A. L. FORCE

PROCLAMATION OF THE GOVERNOR.

Pursuant to the authority vested in me by a joint Resolution of both Houses of the General Assembly of Rhode Island, approved January 29th, 1891, I do hereby proclaim and appoint FRIDAY, THE SEVENTEENTH DAY OF APRIL, INSTANT, AS A DAY OF SPECIAL AND SOLEMN RELIGIOUS OBSERVANCE, for the people of this State, and I recommend that the day be devoted by the people to that purpose.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the State to be affixed, at Providence, this twenty-fourth day of March, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

[L. S.] JOHN ABBETT.

By the Governor:
HENRY E. BAILEY,
Secretary of State.

4 Pd.

SUGAR.

The decline in the price of sugar to the full extent of abolished duty knocks into flinders the M Kinley protectionist assertion that in the foreign shipper, not the domestic consumer, who pays the levied tax on imported articles.

Utterly unfounded as such a declaration is in fact, its persistent repetition by interested parties has no doubt led many thoughtless people astray.

Truth is mighty and will prevail. Block it as monopolistic allies may.

Sugar is a practical object lesson.

It is placed on the free list of foreign importations.

The consumer at once reaps the benefit of lower rates for an article of daily family use.

It reduces his living expenses.

It keeps money in his pocket, which, otherwise, would go as a tax direct from him into the public treasury.

Tariff duties, being added to your prices, are a direct tax upon the home purchaser, and higher the duty heavier the tax.

Free sugar is a blessing, but, similar freedom applied to many other articles of necessity, would prove an equally acceptable boon to the toiling millions of this country.

What heartless presumption to congratulate farmers upon the reduced price of sugar, when every implement of their labor, the salt for the dairy purposes and the meat barrels, and the clothing for themselves and their families are burdened with excessive and needless taxation!

How supremely absurd to tell mechanics and workingmen that the present tariff gives them cheap coffee and sugar, when the coarse fabrics they wear, the blankets that keep them warm, the carpets on their floors, the tin on their roofs, and even the nails that pin their daily carpets, are all forced to pay enormous tribute to favored monopolists!

Yet such is the political twaddle of the day.

The McKinley tariff, so called, is an aggregation of arrant pretense and unjust exaction. It was passed for a certain partisan purpose, but not in the interest of legitimate business and the just rights of honest people.

Sugar is free.

So far so good.

But required freedom abides not alone in sugar.

THE NEW LAW RELATING TO HOLIDAYS.

The act recently passed by the Legislature of this State in relation to days of recreation and holidays and regulating the maturity of commercial paper on those days, provides that the following days shall be legal holidays: New Year's day, Washington's birthday, Decoration Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, which occurs on the first Monday in September, any general election day in the State, and any day appointed or recommended by the Governor of the State or the President of the United States as a day of thanksgiving or fasting and prayer, or other religious observance. Saturday will make a half-holiday, commencing at 12 o'clock noon, unless it happens to be a whole holiday, as before specified. The provisions of the act, however, are not to be construed to prevent any such day person or corporation in transacting business in this State, either private or public, but every such person or corporation is permitted to conduct business on any holiday or half-holiday in the same manner as if the law had not been passed.

All promissory notes, drafts or bills of exchange made after the passage of the act payable on any Saturday are made payable at the next succeeding business day.

Arbor Day.

Friday, April 17, is the day designated by the Governor as the annual tree-planting day in New Jersey. This day, now celebrated nearly every State of the Union, has become one of the most useful of the holidays, because tree-planting is not a work of mere sentiment, nor of temporary character, but of lasting benefit. Its tendency is to make home-life beautiful, by the adornment of homes and grounds; to make a good living, not only on each individual family but also on the community, thereby improving the public taste and ministering to every enjoyment. It is a work which has an attachment to one's native soil, is an antidote to the restless, roaming and migratory spirit of our people, as well as a safeguard from temptation and a strong stimulant to genuine patriotism. It directs attention to the immense influence of trees upon climatic conditions, and dwells on all earth's productions. It also leads to the study of the kinds of trees best adapted to our climate, both for ornament, for timber, for fuel and other uses which should form a part of every child's education. There are many useful leasons to be derived from the study of trees, which will occur to every thoughtful mind, and Arbor-Day is one of the occasions to teach them to the youth. Few things have more influence than trees, and in the years to come, as the twig expands into may-like proportions, the traditions that cluster around them will prove a living romance blooming with elevating sentiment and bearing the fruitage of cherished associations. Therefore, let the day be celebrated everywhere with proper observances—with music, song and speech—and this cause it to be remembered as one of the days which fell of God's goodness and love to man.—The Advance, Jacksonville, N. J.

The Textile Need Will Reduce Taxes.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In Saturday's issue I see a fellow craftsman complained of a bonus (in way) placed a board walk being unsafe. Well, "E. C. M." will have it repaired, and if a trolley electric street railway goes through the street, he will find it safe.

Mr. Editor, the objectors to the street railroad lose sight of the advantages to be derived. Not only will their property therein value be raised, but necessarily will taxes be reduced by the erection of many more improvements along the electric road being established. E. C. M.

AFTER selling 70 a Chronic Rheumatism remedy, I am satisfied to say that the 71st bottle sold has given the best satisfaction of any. Sold by druggists. Price 75 cents per bottle. Manufactured by Dr. J. H. McLEAN MEDICINE CO., St. Louis, Mo.

THREE BOLD STOVERS.

They Give an Exhibition of Their Family Pride, Courage and Selfishness by Attacking One Man Like Newsboys.

Rowland M. Stover of East Ninth street, accompanied by two brave sons, appeared before the office of The Press Monday evening, and demanded to know who wrote the "Press" account of Saturday night's successful prize fight. The informant mentioned a "Stover" being prominent, and the elder of the two sons said, "that was me."

Then they addressed had been out of town up to the time the paper was printed, and had not even read the article the three "proud gentlemen" were talking of. So he could not say what it was in. But the "brave Stovers" had another object in view.

While the young men engaged the newspaper man in conversation about the disgrace to their families," etc., the old one worked around to one side where he was not noticed, and struck the newspaper man. He knew, and his sons knew, that their father's age and tottering frame would protect him from any retaliation that he played the part of head coward, and the sons kept behind his skirts.

The reader will observe they came in three to one, and made the attack with premeditation. There was no denial that a Stover was at the prize fight, for he said so, and his brother and father said it was a good fight. There was not even a no more the fault of The Press than their disgraceful actions of last evening.

A warrant was issued Tuesday for the arrest of the old man. Whether for the younger ones will probably follow.

All of this is, of course, of no particular interest to the general public. It is only published as an illustration of how a refined and brave family vindicates itself in a high-bred manner.

AN UNGRATEFUL GREENHORN.

Trying to Raise Trouble for the Women Who Gave Him a Kind Home.

Emil Kohler grinned all over his blonde German face when Mrs. Frank Linke asked Judge Codington on Tuesday what he had been doing at her husband's place on West Front street Monday. Mrs. Linke said that Kohler was intoxicated and had been causing a disturbance by abusing herself and the boy in charge of the sales room. Kohler seemed highly pleased at the statement that he had been drunk and pushed Mrs. Linke about the room because she had ordered him out, and to judge from the expanse of his grin when she had told how he had feared that he would shoot her with the revolver that he always carried his risibilities must have been tickled to a most prodigious extent.

Mrs. Linke went on to say that Kohler actually did pull his hand in his pocket, but as he drew out was a bottle of whisky instead of a gun. When Mrs. Linke found that he had n't his pistol with him, she took courage and slapped his face and put him out, but since which he has been very abusive and disorderly.

Kohler sobered his features from their spell of sickly grinning long enough to intimate that Mrs. Linke had a grudge against him because he possessed evidence that she sold liquor by retail and on Sunday. He said that the flask of whisky he had pulled out of his pocket was one he had purchased from the boy just before she came in. He wanted to know if he could n't have her arrested for illegal selling.

Mrs Linke and the boy denied the alleged illegal sale, and the court ruled that had nothing to do with the case anyway. Mrs. Linke said Emil was very ungrateful. She had taken the young man in when he was a greenhorn, and given him a good place to live at home and had even taken him back and secured his clothing from the pawnshop when,after an absence of several months, he had pleaded to have her do so. Kohler shook his head in sorrowful denial, and she shielded him from disgrace, and very properly, too, for he had been discharged from Sunday, he was trying to make trouble in revenge.

When Kohler was fined $10 he grinned again, and wanted to know if my Mrs. Linke should n't be arrested too.

MEDALS FOR LOCAL WHEELMEN.

Captain Hartle Makes a Generous Offer to the Bicycle Club.

At a regular monthly meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, Monday evening, another call of the club's bonds was made. The club is fast wiping out its indebtedness.

Captain Frank L. C. Martin made the following appointments for his assistants: First Lieutenant—Ed. Nason.
Color Bearer—L. E. Waring.
Sergeant—Ed. Hyde.

The captain asks the members to turn out on all runs that will be called this year. It is proposed to make this a year long for the members of the club's boys. He also urged the members to join in the "Great Century Run" from Newark to Philadelphia, to be held June 13th. He made the generous offer to present every member of the club that rides the entire distance a handsome souvenir medal of the run. He also offered a handsome gold medal to the member riding the greatest number of miles from May 1 to the next annual meeting of the club in March, 1892.

May Spoil the Base-Ball Grounds.

Now that the residents of North Plainfield are taking hold of the matter of extending Front street from the line bounding the Crescent League are alarmed for fear that their new base-ball grounds are going to be ruined. The proposed North Broadway will, it is threatened, cut directly through the field, and there seems to be no way, when the project is consummated, of diverting the thoroughfare so that the grounds may be saved.

The Storage Battery System Fails at Kenil.

(From The Boston Evening Record.)

WORCHESTER, April 11.—[Special.]—For some time past, the Barrett storage battery system has been installed at Kenil, a city and this week was given a trial. A lot of people from Springfield were brought on here to witness the test and they rode on the cars. The thing ran well enough for some war, but when in the suburbs of the city it broke down and finally the power was shut off. For an hour the car was helpless and when they started to go back to the city it broke down and finally the car was hauled in by a horse. The storage battery system failed to work.

Their Silver Anniversary.

Wedumpka Lodge, No. 2,401, Knights of Honor, gave a highly complimentary entertainment at Music Hall Tuesday night, in commemoration of their third anniversary. A large and select audience was present and the play produced by the Brooklyn Comedy Company, entitled "Confusion", was rendered in a manner that gave entire satisfaction and amusement. The Committee of Arrangements —C. J. Feytel, R. S. Rogers, F. P. Haffner, L. J. VanAlstyne and C. H. Bugg—deserve much credit for the successful efforts in giving their friends such a delightful entertainment. Before the curtain rose, Treasurer F. P. Haffner, in a few well-chosen remarks, explained the objects of the order, and gave a history of the wonderful growth of Wedumpka, 2,401. Altogether the entertainment was a grand success, and reflects great credit on those concerned in its management and the members of the lodge. A committee was appointed to call, that the value did not belong to him. It was decided to open it in order to ascertain to whom it did belong. It was found that both were entitles to return it to the owner. To their horror they found that it belonged to a well-known widow who had recently buried her husband. She, while it not only all that would make up her holiday toilet, but his carefully prepared notes, as well.

PETER GRANYERS GOES TO JAIL.

He Says It Pained Him to Work, Better Herself if Thirty Days Will Do It.

Peter Granyers wore a face decorated with several colors of the rainbow and a pair of trousers that closely resembled tiffanated shirts, into City Judge Codington's court room on Tuesday.

He pleaded guilty to the charge that 10 or three nights ago he had a row with his uncle, B. his grandmamma's house in Middlebush. As a result of the fight he and his brother left the sheltering grandmamma's roof and stole a ride on a coal train to Plainfield.

During their journey the Granyers brothers developed a scheme for enriching their wardrobe with old clothes which could be converted through the medium of pawnbroker into ready cash, and to put our plan into practice they retired to a vacant lot, and Peter helped the other fellow strip off most of his garments before then rolled the bundle of clothes while the brother, airily clad in a pair of perforated trousers, a coarse undershirt, and a necktie, went about begging for rubber boots and blankets to shelter his shivering body from the icy blast.

Policeman McCoe was not long in learning of the dodge, and swooped down on Peter like an avalanche. Peter still clung to his brother's clothes and ran into Green brook, but the policeman didn't mind getting his feet wet too, and soon made the fugitive a prisoner. The brother made good his escape, but Peter, still carrying the brother's clothes, was taken to the station house.

On Tuesday, while waiting to be sentenced, Peter whiled away the time filling Sergeant Lemley's cupidor with Johnson juice. When he was informed by Judge Codington that he must go to the county jail at Elizabeth for thirty days, for being a tramp and a fraud, he pleaded:

"Oh, friends, you make a mistake. You'll do an awful good benefit to me, friends, if you'll only send me to my grandmamma, instead of to jail."

Judge Codington said "You can write to your grandmother telling her where you are, and she'll come to see you."

"Oh thank you, friends"—said Peter.

FRED MAYER'S SUICIDE.

Despondent from Illness. He Put a Bullet Through His Head.

Frederick Henry Alton Mayer, said to be an heir to a large estate in Germany, committed suicide in the house of Fritz Marx, East Front street, Saturday. He was a well-bred, well-educated young man, twenty-four years of age, who had learned his back on the luxuries of the foreign home for an active life in America. He believed that every man should have his hand stained by the toil of his own hands, and was said to be ambitious to found a school of disciples on that principle.

He put his ideas into personal practice he became coachman for Mr. Marx about a year ago. Of late he suffered a great deal from illness, and became very despondent. Saturday morning he was found partially dressed lying across his bed, with a bullet hole through his head. He was still breathing, but never recovered consciousness, and died at 9.30 o'clock. Dr. Fritts, who attended him in his dying moments, consulted Dr. Woolard, the County Physician, and the burial permit was issued. The body was removed to Terrill & Cole's undertaking establishment, and was interred in the Methodist Cemetery this morning.

The affair was kept very quiet, and was not known outside of the Marx household till Saturday night. Mr. Mayer evidently spent the night writing letters, fourteen of which were found. They were very pathetic, and explained that suicide was being but chosen as the only relief the act. "Of what use is a sick man?" he asked in one of them, and answering this question he added, "He is a burden dead."

The letters file dead man left were addressed to friends and relatives in America and Germany, and in them he said that all tidings of his suicide might be kept from his mother, for he said the grief would kill her. His mother is said to be a titled lady among Germany's nobility.

DR. HURLBUT WANTS IT TOO.

He Has been All Systems in Operation, and Prefers the Trolley.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Your correspondent "E. C. M." was not authorized to state that I would write an article favoring the electric street railroad for your columns. I held a brief conversation with a gentleman bearing those initials, but did not expect to be called out quite so publicly for my opinion on the subject.

However, I have no hesitation in saying that of the trolley system I am certain it that he the name applied to the overhead wires. I have seen it in use in more than fifty places throughout the United States, and while it is not perfect, it is as satisfactory as any system, and the least expensive of any. I have seen but one car propelled by storage battery, and do not know of any place where a line is run upon that plan. The cable cars are very expensive and very dangerous, while at the same time, whether cars are passing or not, and, moreover, their cost in equipment and in operation is nearly ten times that of the trolley system.

We have already so many telegraph poles and wires adorning our streets that one more will not seriously mar their beauty; and the system is in use in Newark and in many other cities are not ill-looking.

For my part I am willing to have the electric railway pass my door on Fifth street. I have asked people living on lines in other cities whether the railway has depreciated rents or property, and have been informed that it has not.

Let us have a street railway of some kind, run by trolley or by horse, by storage-power as in New York, by underground cables as in Chicago, or by overhead wires as in Newark, Cleveland, Boston, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and dozens of other places. Something we must have, if our suburbs are to be brought into connection with our city, for the present system needs to be the most feasible. JESSE L. HURLBUT.

Plainfield, N. J., April 11, 1891.

DRUNK AND DISORDERLY.

Two Cases Disposed of in Police Court Tuesday Morning.

Two cases of drunk and disorderly were disposed of in police court Tuesday morning.

Frederick Henry Alton Mayer, said to be an heir to a large estate in Germany, committed suicide in the house of Fritz Marx, East Front street, Saturday. He was a well-bred, well-educated young man, twenty-four years of age, who had learned his back on the luxuries of the foreign home for an active life in America. He believed that every man should have his hand stained by the toil of his own hands, and was said to be ambitious to found a school of disciples on that principle.

He put his ideas into personal practice he became coachman for Mr. Marx about a year ago. Of late he suffered a great deal from illness, and became very despondent. Saturday morning he was found partially dressed lying across his bed, with a bullet hole through his head. He was still breathing, but never recovered consciousness, and died at 9.30 o'clock. Dr. Fritts, who attended him in his dying moments, consulted Dr. Woolard, the County Physician, and the burial permit was issued. The body was removed to Terrill & Cole's undertaking establishment, and was interred in the Methodist Cemetery this morning.

The affair was kept very quiet, and was not known outside of the Marx household till Saturday night. Mr. Mayer evidently spent the night writing letters, fourteen of which were found. They were very pathetic, and explained that suicide was being but chosen as the only relief the act. "Of what use is a sick man?" he asked in one of them, and answering this question he added, "He is a burden dead."

The letters file dead man left were addressed to friends and relatives in America and Germany, and in them he said that all tidings of his suicide might be kept from his mother, for he said the grief would kill her. His mother is said to be a titled lady among Germany's nobility.

DR. HURLBUT WANTS IT TOO.

He Has been All Systems in Operation, and Prefers the Trolley.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Your correspondent "E. C. M." was not authorized to state that I would write an article favoring the electric street railroad for your columns. I held a brief conversation with a gentleman bearing those initials, but did not expect to be called out quite so publicly for my opinion on the subject.

However, I have no hesitation in saying that of the trolley system I am certain it that he the name applied to the overhead wires. I have seen it in use in more than fifty places throughout the United States, and while it is not perfect, it is as satisfactory as any system, and the least expensive of any. I have seen but one car propelled by storage-battery, and do not know of any place where a line is run upon that plan. The cable cars are very expensive and very dangerous, while at the same time, whether cars are passing or not, and, moreover, their cost in equipment and in operation is nearly ten times that of the trolley system.

We have already so many telegraph poles and wires adorning our streets that one more will not seriously mar their beauty; and the system is in use in Newark and in many other cities are not ill-looking.

For my part I am willing to have the electric railway pass my door on Fifth street. I have asked people living on lines in other cities whether the railway has depreciated rents or property, and have been informed that it has not.

Let us have a street railway of some kind, run by trolley or by horse, by storage-power as in New York, by underground cables as in Chicago, or by overhead wires as in Newark, Cleveland, Boston, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and dozens of other places. Something we must have, if our suburbs are to be brought into connection with our city, for the present system needs to be the most feasible. JESSE L. HURLBUT.

Plainfield, N. J., April 11, 1891.

Their Silver Anniversary.

Wedumpka Lodge, No. 2,401, Knights of Honor, gave a highly complimentary entertainment at Music Hall Tuesday night, in commemoration of their third anniversary. A large and select audience was present and the play produced by the Brooklyn Comedy Company, entitled "Confusion", was rendered in a manner that gave entire satisfaction and amusement. The Committee of Arrangements —C. J. Feytel, R. S. Rogers, F. P. Haffner, L. J. VanAlstyne and C. H. Bugg—deserve much credit for the successful efforts in giving their friends such a delightful entertainment. Before the curtain rose, Treasurer F. P. Haffner, in a few well-chosen remarks, explained the objects of the order, and gave a history of the wonderful growth of Wedumpka, 2,401. Altogether the entertainment was a grand success, and reflects great credit on those concerned in its management and the members of the lodge. A committee was appointed to call, that the value did not belong to him. It was decided to open it in order to ascertain to whom it did belong. It was found that both were entitles to return it to the owner. To their horror they found that it belonged to a well-known widow who had recently buried her husband. She, while it not only all that would make up her holiday toilet, but his carefully prepared notes, as well.

Rosie Mell's Pink and Blue Parlor.

(IN THE PRESS.)

What variegated mansion,
What combination dome,
Where colors, ten, of four,
Come up before your mind?
And turn our mental bent,
Each time we go to Monte Hall
To see his parlor grand,
And view in abject wonderment
It would be hard to find
The pink and azure splendor
Of Rosie Mell's parlor scene.

Who shows chromatic taste
And Jekyll-Hyde affairs,
And so-called versatility,
And puns and mild charms,
Let lightning-change performers,
And sister Phil sings,
And atmospheric caution,
And fiddling beds and things,
All these, of course, are well enough,
And woodcocks to be seen,
But they cannot hold a candle
To that grand old parlor scene.

Of course we've tried of it,
And weary one and all,
And still we have to ridge in,
Or out the Music Hall,
It's always to be seen there,
And always seems to go;
It's tragic, comic, good or bad,
According to the show.
We cannot help but love it,
The faithful ex-agents,
And yet we'll cancel the man
Who shoots the chronic scene.

G. P. T.

A MIDNIGHT BATTLE.

Scene Allen's Blood Spilled at the Bachelors' Club.

A brief but bloody bouting bout took place at the rooms of the Bachelors' Club at midnight Saturday.

Sam Allen, of East Front street, sometimes known, in sporting circles, as Dick Lester, is very proud of his ability as a boxer, and at a meeting with Wash Berriman, the Crescent League base-ball umpire, ascertained that Berriman was something of a sport and he knew how to handle fists. A challenge from Allen was promptly accepted, and Allen drove home for his gloves. Returning he passed himself out of the fray by devouring half a dozen lamb chops at a North avenue restaurant, while Berriman calmed himself inwardly by consuming three glasses of soda-water and limbered up his muscles by taking a run around the block.

An accommodating young gentleman well-known as a Plainfield "friend" provided the place for the conflict. He owned the Bachelors' Club a gridiron, and, having a key to the club's rooms, threw open his main apartment, a spicy furnished parlor, to the combatants. The fighters provided themselves with seconds, and selected an obliging acquaintance named Stover as referee. Mr. Stover did n't pretend to be familiar with the rules of the ring, but matters were explained to his satisfaction and he took charge of the six-ounce gloves and "sail in". They "sailed". At least Berriman did. Allen did n't understand just how it all happened, but could tell in very short order he was lying on his back and bleeding profusely. Berriman's blows had smashed his face shamefully.

It was 15 seconds before Sam had recovered spunk enough to get himself together again to face his formidable antagonist, and Berriman held Stover that Allen ought to be declared knocked out, as ten-seconds had been decided on as the limit of a breathing-spell.

"Oh, give him another chance"—said Stover; and the fighters again put up their fists.

For the second time Allen went down, badly punished. This time he was 45 seconds recovering, and Berriman was declared the victor.

Every body then went home; Berriman was happy; Allen had for once had all the fight he wanted; and the man with a grudge against the Bachelors' Club wondered vaguely to himself, because of big stains of blood covered the parlor carpet and furniture.

STATE PRISON READY FOR THEM.

Detectives Looking for the Ruffians Who Threw Rocks at the Train.

Central New Jersey Railroad detectives are searching for two more ruffians who conduct jeopardized the safety of a car full of passengers at the Crawford station Saturday night.

The men boarded a late train from New York, at Elizabeth. They were very noisy, and annoyed and insulted the passengers, many of whom were women. When the conductor ordered them to behave themselves they replied insolently, lighted cigars, and puffed smoke in his face. The conductor was on his mettle in an instant. He was a little man, but plucky and muscular. Yanking one of the fellows to his feet, and holding him by the collar with a vise-like grip, he signaled to the engineer to stop the train. The offenders begged for mercy, and promised good behavior so earnestly that the conductor relented, and the train went on to Cranford.

Just before the station was reached, the fellows stuck from the train and disappeared. When the train again started a shower of rocks was hurled through the plate-glass windows. Jagged stones and fragments of glass flew about, and dangerously near the heads of the passengers, and it was considered miraculous that no one was seriously hurt. Several people were cut and bruised, and silk hats and ladies' finery were damaged. Heavy missiles followed the train till out of range.

When the railway authorities were informed of the outrage, they at once detailed two men to ferret out the offenders and bring them to justice.

DISHONEST PAPERS STILL AT IT.

Their Editors, However, Only Express the Sentiments of Their Political Bosses.

The papers of this city who cannot be independent and cast politics aside for the sake of the city and the liberties of the citizens, republish only such accounts of the telephone fire at Albany, Ind., as charge the blame to that awful" trolley street railway system.

Because the bringing of a street railway, or water works, or sewerage, to Plainfield has been, might reflect credit and dozens of other places. Something we must have, if our suburbs are to be brought into connection with our or tre, for the present system needs to be the most feasible. JESSE L. HURLBUT.

Plainfield, N. J., April 11, 1891.

Their Silver Anniversary.

Wedumpka Lodge, No. 2,401, Knights of Honor, gave a highly complimentary entertainment at Music Hall Tuesday night, in commemoration of their third anniversary. A large and select audience was present and the play produced by the Brooklyn Comedy Company, entitled "Confusion", was rendered in a manner that gave entire satisfaction and amusement. The Committee of Arrangements —C. J. Feytel, R. S. Rogers, F. P. Haffner, L. J. VanAlstyne and C. H. Bugg—deserve much credit for the successful efforts in giving their friends such a delightful entertainment. Before the curtain rose, Treasurer F. P. Haffner, in a few well-chosen remarks, explained the objects of the order, and gave a history of the wonderful growth of Wedumpka, 2,401. Altogether the entertainment was a grand success, and reflects great credit on those concerned in its management and the members of the lodge. A committee was appointed to call, that the value did not belong to him. It was decided to open it in order to ascertain to whom it did belong. It was found that both were entitles to return it to the owner. To their horror they found that it belonged to a well-known widow who had recently buried her husband. She, while it not only all that would make up her holiday toilet, but his carefully prepared notes, as well.

STATE PRISON READY FOR THEM.

Detectives Looking for the Ruffians Who Threw Rocks at the Train.

Central New Jersey Railroad detectives are searching for two more ruffians who conduct jeopardized the safety of a car full of passengers at the Crawford station Saturday night.

The men boarded a late train from New York, at Elizabeth. They were very noisy, and annoyed and insulted the passengers, many of whom were women. When the conductor ordered them to behave themselves they replied insolently, lighted cigars, and puffed smoke in his face. The conductor was on his mettle in an instant. He was a little man, but plucky and muscular. Yanking one of the fellows to his feet, and holding him by the collar with a vise-like grip, he signaled to the engineer to stop the train. The offenders begged for mercy, and promised good behavior so earnestly that the conductor relented, and the train went on to Cranford.

Just before the station was reached, the fellows stuck from the train and disappeared. When the train again started a shower of rocks was hurled through the plate-glass windows. Jagged stones and fragments of glass flew about, and dangerously near the heads of the passengers, and it was considered miraculous that no one was seriously hurt. Several people were cut and bruised, and silk hats and ladies' finery were damaged. Heavy missiles followed the train till out of range.

When the railway authorities were informed of the outrage, they at once detailed two men to ferret out the offenders and bring them to justice.

DISHONEST PAPERS STILL AT IT.

Their Editors, However, Only Express the Sentiments of Their Political Bosses.

The papers of this city who cannot be independent and cast politics aside for the sake of the city and the liberties of the citizens, republish only such accounts of the telephone fire at Albany, Ind., as charge the blame to that awful" trolley street railway system.

Because the bringing of a street railway, or water works, or sewerage, to Plainfield has been, might reflect credit and dozens of other places. Something we must have, if our suburbs are to be brought into connection with our or tre, for the present system needs to be the most feasible. JESSE L. HURLBUT.

Plainfield, N. J., April 11, 1891.

Their Silver Anniversary.

Wedumpka Lodge, No. 2,401, Knights of Honor, gave a highly complimentary entertainment at Music Hall Tuesday night, in commemoration of their third anniversary. A large and select audience was present and the play produced by the Brooklyn Comedy Company, entitled "Confusion", was rendered in a manner that gave entire satisfaction and amusement. The Committee of Arrangements —C. J. Feytel, R. S. Rogers, F. P. Haffner, L. J. VanAlstyne and C. H. Bugg—deserve much credit for the successful efforts in giving their friends such a delightful entertainment. Before the curtain rose, Treasurer F. P. Haffner, in a few well-chosen remarks, explained the objects of the order, and gave a history of the wonderful growth of Wedumpka, 2,401. Altogether the entertainment was a grand success, and reflects great credit on those concerned in its management and the members of the lodge. A committee was appointed to call, that the value did not belong to him. It was decided to open it in order to ascertain to whom it did belong. It was found that both were entitles to return it to the owner. To their horror they found that it belonged to a well-known widow who had recently buried her husband. She, while it not only all that would make up her holiday toilet, but his carefully prepared notes, as well.

I HAVE been a great sufferer from dry catarrh for many years. I have used Ely's Cream Balm and am entirely cured. Sold by Drug Stores. Price 50 cents. Ely Bros., Owego, N. Y.

THE CHOIR WILL BE COMPLETE.

The choir of Hope Chapel church, under the direction of the choirmaster, Prof. A. E. Minor, is planning for a week's outing at the seashore on the Connecticut coast, near Bridgeport, beginning August 3. An entertainment consisting of a concert in the church on Friday evening, May 29, to raise funds for the trip, and it is hoped that all the friends of the choir will help them.

A Surf Rode Run.

The New York Telegram has the following to say of Peter F. Rodenbough, who, after having retrieved by the large circle of friends he has in Plainfield, as a thorough gentleman and a self-made man, has become one of the most successful bicycle dealers in the country:

Peter F. Rodenbough, son of Jesse Rodenbough, of Jersey City, and a member of the Jersey City Bicycle Club, has been a wheelman for the past seven years. He has been a prominent racing man, and has won many prizes. He is now a member of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, and is the manager of Rodenbough's Bicycle Depot, 1,000 Broadway, New York. He is also the agent for the Victor bicycle, which is one of the most popular wheels in the market. He has been in the business for the past two years, and has built up a large trade. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

Cornelius Ackerson's Opinion of the Effect of Electric Railway Plainfield is to Have.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—If anything further were needed to convince us of the beneficence of the proposed electric railway, the words of that earnest young opponent would have been full sufficient which decided the trembling ballot.

At the meeting when the bill was passed in the Legislature, long to sell or have traveled on most of the electric railways in this country and many in Europe, and I must say that the Newark Journal is the finest I have ever seen.

That is the road proposed for Plainfield. What further evidence is needed? Not even the "Deadly Snooze" or the "Weekly Times" can accuse him of belonging to the "Combine," so persistently vilified because of its efforts to promote the welfare of the masses; and yet to our truth and impartial journalistic twins fall in their verbatim (?) reports to make any reference to Mr. Ackerson's opinion, for it is decidedly favorable to the road.

Despite the gulping and snarling of "Canes minores," who bark whenever "Canis major" vibrates his caudal appendage, and the gentle note—unpronounceably termed "the Combine," by the "Snooze"—deals a re-election, the masses will crowd to the polls in November and elect an electric road and demonstrate their gratitude by vindicating and returning them by a large majority."

Not every word in the bill is approved by the editor few and their barnacles. The tail cannot forever wag the dog. The place is getting too large to be eternally governed by the bosses to do their pig-ounce gloves and "sail in". They "sailed". At least Berriman did. Allen did n't understand just how it all happened, but could tell in very short order he was lying on his back and bleeding profusely. Berriman's blows had smashed his face shamefully.

It was 15 seconds before Sam had recovered spunk enough to get himself together again to face his formidable antagonist, and Berriman held Stover that Allen ought to be declared knocked out, as ten-seconds had been decided on as the limit of a breathing-spell.

"Oh, give him another chance"—said Stover; and the fighters again put up their fists.

For the second time Allen went down, badly punished. This time he was 45 seconds recovering, and Berriman was declared the victor.

Every body then went home; Berriman was happy; Allen had for once had all the fight he wanted; and the man with a grudge against the Bachelors' Club wondered vaguely to himself, because of big stains of blood covered the parlor carpet and furniture.

STATE PRISON READY FOR THEM.

Detectives Looking for the Ruffians Who Threw Rocks at the Train.

Central New Jersey Railroad detectives are searching for two more ruffians who conduct jeopardized the safety of a car full of passengers at the Crawford station Saturday night.

The men boarded a late train from New York, at Elizabeth. They were very noisy, and annoyed and insulted the passengers, many of whom were women. When the conductor ordered them to behave themselves they replied insolently, lighted cigars, and puffed smoke in his face. The conductor was on his mettle in an instant. He was a little man, but plucky and muscular. Yanking one of the fellows to his feet, and holding him by the collar with a vise-like grip, he signaled to the engineer to stop the train. The offenders begged for mercy, and promised good behavior so earnestly that the conductor relented, and the train went on to Cranford.

Just before the station was reached, the fellows stuck from the train and disappeared. When the train again started a shower of rocks was hurled through the plate-glass windows. Jagged stones and fragments of glass flew about, and dangerously near the heads of the passengers, and it was considered miraculous that no one was seriously hurt. Several people were cut and bruised, and silk hats and ladies' finery were damaged. Heavy missiles followed the train till out of range.

When the railway authorities were informed of the outrage, they at once detailed two men to ferret out the offenders and bring them to justice.

DISHONEST PAPERS STILL AT IT.

Their Editors, However, Only Express the Sentiments of Their Political Bosses.

The papers of this city who cannot be independent and cast politics aside for the sake of the city and the liberties of the citizens, republish only such accounts of the telephone fire at Albany, Ind., as charge the blame to that awful" trolley street railway system.

Because the bringing of a street railway, or water works, or sewerage, to Plainfield has been, might reflect credit and dozens of other places. Something we must have, if our suburbs are to be brought into connection with our or tre, for the present system needs to be the most feasible. JESSE L. HURLBUT.

Plainfield, N. J., April 11, 1891.

Their Silver Anniversary.

Wedumpka Lodge, No. 2,401, Knights of Honor, gave a highly complimentary entertainment at Music Hall Tuesday night, in commemoration of their third anniversary. A large and select audience was present and the play produced by the Brooklyn Comedy Company, entitled "Confusion", was rendered in a manner that gave entire satisfaction and amusement. The Committee of Arrangements —C. J. Feytel, R. S. Rogers, F. P. Haffner, L. J. VanAlstyne and C. H. Bugg—deserve much credit for the successful efforts in giving their friends such a delightful entertainment. Before the curtain rose, Treasurer F. P. Haffner, in a few well-chosen remarks, explained the objects of the order, and gave a history of the wonderful growth of Wedumpka, 2,401. Altogether the entertainment was a grand success, and reflects great credit on those concerned in its management and the members of the lodge. A committee was appointed to call, that the value did not belong to him. It was decided to open it in order to ascertain to whom it did belong. It was found that both were entitles to return it to the owner. To their horror they found that it belonged to a well-known widow who had recently buried her husband. She, while it not only all that would make up her holiday toilet, but his carefully prepared notes, as well.

I HAVE been a great sufferer from dry catarrh for many years. I have used Ely's Cream Balm and am entirely cured. Sold by Drug Stores. Price 50 cents. Ely Bros., Owego, N. Y.

THE CHOIR WILL BE COMPLETE.

The choir of Hope Chapel church, under the direction of the choirmaster, Prof. A. E. Minor, is planning for a week's outing at the seashore on the Connecticut coast, near Bridgeport, beginning August 3. An entertainment consisting of a concert in the church on Friday evening, May 29, to raise funds for the trip, and it is hoped that all the friends of the choir will help them.

A Surf Rode Run.

The New York Telegram has the following to say of Peter F. Rodenbough, who, after having retrieved by the large circle of friends he has in Plainfield, as a thorough gentleman and a self-made man, has become one of the most successful bicycle dealers in the country:

Peter F. Rodenbough, son of Jesse Rodenbough, of Jersey City, and a member of the Jersey City Bicycle Club, has been a wheelman for the past seven years. He has been a prominent racing man, and has won many prizes. He is now a member of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, and is the manager of Rodenbough's Bicycle Depot, 1,000 Broadway, New York. He is also the agent for the Victor bicycle, which is one of the most popular wheels in the market. He has been in the business for the past two years, and has built up a large trade. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

Cornelius Ackerson's Opinion of the Effect of Electric Railway Plainfield is to Have.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—If anything further were needed to convince us of the beneficence of the proposed electric railway, the words of that earnest young opponent would have been full sufficient which decided the trembling ballot.

At the meeting when the bill was passed in the Legislature, long to sell or have traveled on most of the electric railways in this country and many in Europe, and I must say that the Newark Journal is the finest I have ever seen.

That is the road proposed for Plainfield. What further evidence is needed? Not even the "Deadly Snooze" or the "Weekly Times" can accuse him of belonging to the "Combine," so persistently vilified because of its efforts to promote the welfare of the masses; and yet to our truth and impartial journalistic twins fall in their verbatim (?) reports to make any reference to Mr. Ackerson's opinion, for it is decidedly favorable to the road.

Despite the gulping and snarling of "Canes minores," who bark whenever "Canis major" vibrates his caudal appendage, and the gentle note—unpronounceably-sic-ble Snooze"—deals a re-election, the masses will crowd to the polls in November and elect an electric road and demonstrate their gratitude by vindicating and returning them by a large majority."

Not every word in the bill is approved by the editor few and their barnacles. The tail cannot forever wag the dog. The place is getting too large to be eternally governed by the bosses to do their pig-ounce gloves and "sail in". They "sailed". At least Berriman did. Allen did n't understand just how it all

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, ... City Editor.

BEFORE THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

President Maxwell Assures the Plainfield People That Their Petitions Will be Considered.

The following letter shows that a long step has been taken at last towards Plainfield's deedicedatim:

C. R. B. of N. J. Passenger's Office, }
New York, April 8, 1891. }

JAMES A. DEMAREST, Esq.,

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledging yours of the 7th inst., in reference to petitions submitted for the removal of the present freight house at Plainfield, I have to say that the matter will be placed before our Executive Committee for consideration. Yours truly,

J. H. MAXWELL,
President.

—There is $20,000 insurance on the furniture alone, in the house of Mr. Wile, on LaGrande avenue, that the firemen saved Monday.

—The Jersey Central is to have its tracks elevated, and a new stone station built, at Elizabeth. The work is to be completed within a year.

—Among the certificates of incorporation filed with the State Department at Trenton Friday, was that of the Soldiers' Monument Association of Plainfield.

—Wm. J. Ford, grateful to the firemen for the efforts they made to save his property at the recent burning of his house, has contributed $5 to the Firemen's Relief Association.

—Mrs. Hugo Weisman will continue her late husband's business of upholstering and carpet cleaning at 32 East Front street. She deserves a large share of the people's patronage.

—A shooting tournament, under the management of the famous old Jersey sportsman Jacob Pepin, will take place on the grounds of the Fanwood Gun Club, at Fanwood, Saturday.

—Colyer & Co., the big clothing firm at 615 and 617 Broad street, Newark, have an advertisement in this issue giving the facts worth knowing about the matter of clothing. They have a great reputation for reliability, and the Plainfield men do no harm to his spring suit there need never go elsewhere. In the employ of Colyer & Co. is L. C. Dunn, of this city, at whose side Providence may be sure of especially good treatment.

—Plainfielders are patronizing more and more the famous clothing house of Marshall & Ball, 607-609 Broad street, Newark. More people are finding out every day that at that house one may obtain the best of goods, made up in perfect-fitting garments for less money than they have been in the habit of paying elsewhere. In the double-column advertisement in to-day's paper the firm makes an interesting announcement giving low prices on excellent custom-made spring suits.

—The movement to allow women representatives in the General Conference of the Methodist Church is not seem to meet with much favor in this State. Women are allowed to preach and do much of the church work, but their reverend brethren are not so willing that they shall sit among the rulers. The latest vote, that of the Newark Conference, was 126 to 28 against the proposition. Those ministers evidently think that woman's sphere is home, and that, though the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world, it shall not be allowed to enter the lords of creation in the Methodist ministry.—New Brunswick Home News.

—Doane & VanArsdale Thursday celebrated the fourth anniversary of their business career. Their success has been almost phenomenal, they having increased their business one hundred per cent. in that time. They attribute their success to the fact that they have kept a larger assortment of goods than was ever before kept in Plainfield, in that way saving the trade that formerly went to New York. They get a large trade from the surrounding towns as well as from people directly in Plainfield. Their new and greatest helps to success they acknowledge to be judicious advertising. They have had their advertisement in every issue of the CONSTITUTIONALIST, for the excellence of that advertising medium, and to their enterprising way in which they have made use of it, they owe a great measure of the good fortune they have secured.

Bar 25 Sends Its First Alarm.

The fire department was called out at 2.20 Monday p. m., by an alarm from signal box No. 25.

The fire was at the house of Frederick H. Wilde, No. 9 LaGrande avenue. It originated in the closet of a room on the upper story of the rear extension. The cause is unknown. The fire was confined to the one apartment, and the damage was slight.

Young People's Sociable.

The parlors of the First Baptist church were filled Tuesday night, the occasion being the monthly sociable of the Young People's League of the church. The programme was opened by a piano selection, "Concerto in A flat," composed by the proficient organist of the church, William E. MacClymont. The Crescent League Quartette rendered several excellent selections, which were followed by a sleight-of-hand performance by A. G. Waring, of Brooklyn. The interesting exercises were brought to a close by a recitation by Miss Stella Place and William E. MacClymont, which was heartily applauded.

106 Feet Race for the Trolley on Putnam Avenue.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Your efforts in behalf of true and permanent progress in our beautiful city, we earnestly hope will be successful and finally appreciated.

The advocacy of a street railway is in the right direction, and the trolley system meets my approval.

When the Common Council decided to refuse the grant for the line up and through the eastern district, we felt we were about to be set off from the benefits other sections were to have.

The proposed route through Fifth street and Putnam avenue received my sanction, as the owner of 106 feet front on Putnam avenue.

Yours heartily,
JOHN J. R. COARD.

Local Bible Training Classes.

Two workers' training classes are held at the Young Men's Christian Association rooms every Sunday at 2:15 p. m. The course of study in both classes is for the purpose of fitting the members for better Christian work and to this end it is commended to young men who, while they have had Bible instruction, have not been taught how to use the Bible as the sword of the Spirit in dealing with individuals. The class taught by the President of the Association devotes considerable time to the study of the books of the Bible, while the class taught by the General Secretary takes up the fundamental doctrines. Those who have never availed themselves of the opportunity afforded them in these classes are invited to be present next Sunday.

TWO STORES BURNED OUT.

A Dangerous Blaze Results from a Gasoline Explosion—A Careless Purchaser Badly Burned—The Loss Many Thousands.

The explosion of a gasoline stove in the hardware store of J. C. Pierson, Jr., at 42 West Front street, caused a bad fire Friday morning.

The stove is one that was used in both Mr. Pierson's office at the back of the store. It had been burning during the morning, and at about 11.30 its tank was no longer needed, and the flame was extinguished.

At about twenty-five minutes past one, Miss Sharp, Mr. Pierson's book-keeper, asked that it be re-lighted.

Robert Kettleborn, a young man, a foreigner, who was employed to do odd jobs about the place, got the stove ready for lighting, and touched a match to the burner.

It is supposed that he carelessly spilled gasoline on the stove or floor and that the atmosphere surrounding the stove was filled with the highly-explosive fumes of gasoline. At any rate, an explosion instantly occurred, and blazing oil was scattered about the store.

Mr. Pierson himself was not in at the time, and Kettleborn fled precipitately.

Kettleborn's clothes were afire, and he was groaning with pain, when the clerks gathered in a group on the sidewalk. The blaze of his garments was quenched, and he was taken to Randolph's City Pharmacy, where his burns were dressed. He has a severe singed condition of the face, great blisters covered his face, hands and legs, and the skin hung in parched strips from his half-cooked flesh. From the pharmacy he was taken to the Muhlenberg Hospital.

Miss Sharp, who was slightly burned on one hand, was taken to her home on Netcong.

Meanwhile an alarm had been sent in from signal box No. 43, making the fifth alarm that far seen from that box. The entire fire department turned out, and found a fierce blaze awaiting them.

The flames had full sway. One of Mr. Pierson's store a mass of flames, but the fire had swept through a wooden partition into Louis Gallman's "Bee Hive" dry goods store.

Dense volumes of the most suffocating smoke poured forth from both stores, and great masses of red flame could be seen licking up everything within.

The firemen fought the fire well, and with such good effect that at half-past two, within an hour after the alarm was sent in, the result was sounded, signifying that the fire was out.

The fire was confined to the ground floor of the buildings in which the two stores were situated, but at one time threatened the store house containing powder and oil, at the rear.

Mantz Bros., wholesale clothing manufacturers, on the floor overhead, had some new spring goods slightly damaged by smoke and water.

Mr. Pierson's entire stock, valued at $12,000, and insured for $8,000, was almost utterly ruined.

Mr. Gallman's stock was also ruined. It was worth $5,000, and insured for $4,000.

The building is owned by James Clark, of West Seventeenth street. The third story was until April 1 rented by Plainfield as the Common Council Chamber. Mr. Clark's loss will be fully covered by the insurance of $6,000.

During the fire several men were painfully cut by flying bits of broken glass from the big show windows.

An Assistant Prosecutor for Union.

By a new law, passed by the last Legislature, provision is made for the appointment of an assistant prosecutor, at a salary of $1,000 a year, in each county having 65,000 inhabitants or over. As Union has 71,000 people, that is one of the counties whose prosecutor is to be relieved of some of his arduous work.

Won't Cost the City a Cent.

After much solicitation and persuasion, Street Commissioner Mosker has succeeded in getting Mayor Bayne to turn the C. R. R. and $1,000 from the New Jersey Land Improvement Company, for the filling in and draining of the approach to the Southern Boulevard on the North side. This long needed improvement will be begun at once, and at no expense to the city thanks to Mr. Mosker.

Won't Cut the Ice.

Charles Mathy, Jr., was driving his high wheel bicycle at its utmost speed on Somerset street from the C. R. R. to Before Friday, when it struck a high crosswalk. Young Mathy turned a complete somersault and then struck the macadam pavement on his head. His condition was very serious.

Another Serious Runaway.

Charles Mathy, Jr., was driving his high wheel bicycle at its utmost speed on Somerset street from the C. R. R. to before Friday, when it struck a high crosswalk. Young Mathy turned a complete somersault and then struck the macadam pavement on his head. His condition was very serious.

Rare Prizes For Plainfield's Faithful Fire Boys.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I desire to thus publicly and sincerely thank the firemen of Plainfield for the success of their efforts to save the fruits of a goodly part of 62 West Front, from total destruction yesterday. Their prompt response to the alarm, their cool headedness and their untiring efforts undoubtedly prevented a serious conflagration.

JAMES CLARK.

Veterans at a Re-Union.

At the re-union of the 2d N. J. Brigade, at Camden, April 9, which was the anniversary of Lee's surrender at Appomatox, there were present from this city ex-Sheriff A. W. Van Cleef, Capt. Wm. Hand, N. J. volunteers; John Mackey, 7th N. J volunteers; Captain Wm. Hand, John Hand and Dr. Abel Titsworth, of the 11th N. J. volunteers. The large number of veterans were addressed by General Wm. H. Sewell, General Dan Sickels and others, and the boys report having a grand time.

A Flourishing and Progressive Organization.

The Exempt Firemen's Association has elected as officers for the ensuing year:

President—A. Sattzman.
Vice President—T. J. Gillies.
Secretary—G. Thelen.
Treasurer—Jno. J. Hulbert.
Board of Trustees—D. W. Littell, Jos. A. Hubbard, H. M. Sherwin, Wm. H. Harding, A. J. Jourdan.

The retiring President, Alex. Titsworth, in his annual report shows the Association to be in a flourishing condition. The last adoption of new by-laws a sick benefit fund has been added to the burial fund. The membership is 100 and constantly increasing. The new quarters in Cowan's building, are in keeping with the progress of the Association.

A Tribute to the Departed.

Funeral services over the remains of Mrs. James Verdon took place at St. Mary's Roman Catholic church Saturday. This fine old lady had been a resident of "Shady Lawn" since October, 1848. She was born in Newry, County Down, Ireland, in 1806 She had endeared herself to her children and many friends by a record of many years of a peaceful life, full of virtues. Yet it was not mere length of days nor attainment of high honors which drew the hearts of all towards her, but that sweet and gentle life with her exalted virtues causes this little village to her revered memory which I could not pass by in silence. Of the four Cardinal virtues, prudence, justice, fortitude and temperance, she fully adorned all. Her faith, love and veneration of the religion of her native land and that of her father was sublime. It was her happy privilege to grow up with Christianity in one beautiful city, and in her adopted land, to watch its progress and its vast development, unparalleled in history, and it is with one feeling of tearful regret and sorrow for her loss, and character, that we hope ever to bear testimony that her's was a devoted, useful and noble life.

SEMPER FIDELIS.

Mrs. Emma Henry-Thomas Dead.

Mrs. Emma Henry-Thomas was very well known in Plainfield and "Mrs. Mood and I" so well that she deserved more than the faint encore which was given her. She should have received a round of applause, one of which never would have been missed from those accorded the funny men. Mrs. Alice Mordecai took well the part of Pan Sing, as did also Miss Jessie Van Pelt as Kabobo. The latter has some of the hardest singing as it requires the most dramatic effect the lack of which was sometimes apparent as the becoming of it came upon some of her weakest to-do.

Geo. C. Pierce has a pleasant voice, not especially clear, but he made a very satisfactory Ko-Ko. Chas. A. Heisel, as The Mikado was no blood-thirsty and horrible as could be desired; while J. Williams Macy made an excellent Poo-Bah, and his singing was more of a treat in one way than some of the rest. His voice is rich and mellow and shows more cultivation.

CRESCENTS AGAIN.

Rules A Kick Lose Their First Game, but the Total Was on Their Side.

The result of the third contest for the world championship of the Central New Jersey road, in which the Crescent League's players took part, was 275 to 260 in their favor, as given below. An exclusively annotated in THE PRESS, now blood is down at the table but was not any better than other people's.

Dunham and Daniel played a fine game and to them is due the victory. Their total was 25 points ahead of their opponents. This lifted up Keller & Miller who were left behind, and Bates & Kiely who were only 8 to the good. The detailed scores were:

PLAINFIELD.		WESTFIELD.
Bates & Kiely	25	Foster & Peck	21
Keller & Miller	33	Worth & Kecler	24
Dunham & Daniel	58	Dunham & Hanford	33
	116		78
Dunham & Daniel	58	Worth & Kecler	33
Keller & Miller	34	Dunham & Hanford	25
Dunham & Daniel	58	Foster & Peck	24
	150		82
Bates & Kiely	36	Dunham & Hanford	22
Keller & Miller	25	Foster & Peck	23
Dunham & Daniel	39	Worth & Kecler	32
	99		77
Plainfield	275	Westfield	260

A Bicycle Point for Plainfield Athletic Club's players met those of the New Jersey Athletic Club. The former won by a total 240 to 233. The record of the tournament to date is:

	Played.	Total.
Crescent League	3	801
N. J. A. C. Bergen Point	3	767
Westfield A. C.	3	738
Elizabeth A. C.	3	733
Fanwood Club	3	717

New Wide-Awake Officers.

At a recent business meeting of the Wide-Awake Circle in the W. C. T. U. rooms, the following appointments were made: Secretary—Rita Yeager; Chairman of Lookout Committee—Ida Wagoman; Chairman of Flower Committee—Hadie Taylor; Chairman of News Committee—Try Mattox.

Another Serious Runaway.

Charles Mathy, Jr., was driving his high wheel bicycle at its utmost speed on Somerset street from the C. R. R. to before Friday, when it struck a high crosswalk. Young Mathy turned a complete somersault and then struck the macadam pavement on his head. His condition was very serious.

Rare Prizes For Plainfield's Faithful Fire Boys.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I desire to thus publicly and sincerely thank the firemen of Plainfield for the success of their efforts to save the fruits of a goodly part of 62 West Front, from total destruction yesterday. Their prompt response to the alarm, their cool headedness and their untiring efforts undoubtedly prevented a serious conflagration.

JAMES CLARK.

Veterans at a Re-Union.

At the re-union of the 2d N. J. Brigade, at Camden, April 9, which was the anniversary of Lee's surrender at Appomatox, there were present from this city ex-Sheriff A. W. Van Cleef, Capt. Wm. Hand, N. J. volunteers; John Mackey, 7th N. J volunteers; Captain Wm. Hand, John Hand and Dr. Abel Titsworth, of the 11th N. J. volunteers. The large number of veterans were addressed by General Wm. H. Sewell, General Dan Sickels and others, and the boys report having a grand time.

A Flourishing and Progressive Organization.

The Exempt Firemen's Association has elected as officers for the ensuing year:

President—A. Sattzman.
Vice President—T. J. Gillies.
Secretary—G. Thelen.
Treasurer—Jno. J. Hulbert.
Board of Trustees—D. W. Littell, Jos. A. Hubbard, H. M. Sherwin, Wm. H. Harding, A. J. Jourdan.

The retiring President, Alex. Titsworth, in his annual report shows the Association to be in a flourishing condition. The last adoption of new by-laws a sick benefit fund has been added to the burial fund. The membership is 100 and constantly increasing. The new quarters in Cowan's building, are in keeping with the progress of the Association.

A Tribute to the Departed.

Funeral services over the remains of Mrs. James Verdon took place at St. Mary's Roman Catholic church Saturday. This fine old lady had been a resident of "Shady Lawn" since October, 1848. She was born in Newry, County Down, Ireland, in 1806 She had endeared herself to her children and many friends by a record of many years of a peaceful life, full of virtues. Yet it was not mere length of days nor attainment of high honors which drew the hearts of all towards her, but that sweet and gentle life with her exalted virtues causes this little village to her revered memory which I could not pass by in silence. Of the four Cardinal virtues, prudence, justice, fortitude and temperance, she fully adorned all. Her faith, love and veneration of the religion of her native land and that of her father was sublime. It was her happy privilege to grow up with Christianity in one beautiful city, and in her adopted land, to watch its progress and its vast development, unparalleled in history, and it is with one feeling of tearful regret and sorrow for her loss, and character, that we hope ever to bear testimony that her's was a devoted, useful and noble life.

SEMPER FIDELIS.

Mrs. Emma Henry-Thomas Dead.

Mrs. Emma Henry-Thomas was very well known in Plainfield and "Mrs. Mood and I" so well that she deserved more than the faint encore which was given her. She should have received a round of applause, one of which never would have been missed from those accorded the funny men. Mrs. Alice Mordecai took well the part of Pan Sing, as did also Miss Jessie Van Pelt as Kabobo. The latter has some of the hardest singing as it requires the most dramatic effect the lack of which was sometimes apparent as the becoming of it came upon some of her weakest to-do.

Geo. C. Pierce has a pleasant voice, not especially clear, but he made a very satisfactory Ko-Ko. Chas. A. Heisel, as The Mikado was no blood-thirsty and horrible as could be desired; while J. Williams Macy made an excellent Poo-Bah, and his singing was more of a treat in one way than some of the rest. His voice is rich and mellow and shows more cultivation.

PERTINENT PARAGRAPHS.

NUGGETS OF LOCAL NEWS, WITH GRAINS OF FREE-LANCE COMMENT.

The subject of street railways for Plainfield is something the Paragrapher has thus far left for wiser heads to consider, and as those who have said nothing in the matter are getting along finely he does not purpose saying anything now that savors of intrusion. But, without going into the merits of the question, nay as a desirable system of rapid transit, he would like to make a few remarks, "off," in the language of ex-Councilman Emmons, "the map be allowed", concerning the enthusiastic eagerness with which people in the borough view the coming of the proposed electric road.

The citizens of North Plainfield have far more of a spirit of enterprise slumbering in their bosoms than most Plainfielders give them credit for, and some fine morning the residents on the city side of the brook will awake to find that the borough has taken a gigantic stride forward of which Plainfield never dreamed it capable.

In the street railway matter the boroughites are a great opportunity. Already they are laying plans for getting the Broadway obstruction-le have succeeded in shaming the railway out from Netherwood. The railway people are disgusted with the situation, and the formidable opposition reared up on that side of the town, and will not cheerfully turn their faces that direction ever more. The people now fighting against it recognize the desirability of the road and pray to have its benefits, at present refused and shortened, conferred upon them. The company is naturally desirous of benefiting most those sections which earliest receive it with favor. Netherwood is going to lose the boom that was surely coming with the extension of the rapid transit road to the foot of the Heights, and it won't be the borough's fault if North Plainfield is not quicker. Already negotiations are pending looking to the construction and equipment of a road by the same company through the heart of the borough to the foot of the Watchung Mountains and up the mountain-side at will. The people of the borough did n't take much thought to the plan last night, learned how the East Plainfield residents were blinding their eyes to their own interests and how ready the railway company was to stop in and make itself a help to a community willing to have mutual interests developed. The borough is very ready for the road, and the road is very ready to grind out profits for the borough. The plan now being perfected is to run the electric palace cars through Somerset street all the way to the mountain. Those who have used the Rapid Transit Company's cars glide up the steep hills at Newark know of what fine advantages they are capable, and see no difficulty in the way of their climbing up to Johnston's drive and depositing people at the doors of the beautiful residences which are to be built there all along that thoroughfare as soon as the road is an assured success. The prediction has been made to the Paragrapher that within a reasonable time after the completion and perfected operation of the borough branch of the road the mountain-top will be covered with cottages the way from the Somerset street "Notch" to Scotch Plains, with electric cars running along the mountain-side the whole stretch, and with side country roads in immediate connection with the Jersey Central railway stations. The scheme is being carefully manipulated, and assurance is given that one of its speedy results will be the extension of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad to North Plainfield and farther west, with steam cars plying back and forth from New York and Newark all the way to the foot of the mountain just beneath Washington, Rock, where charming villa sites abound. North Plainfield's mountains afford better advantages for such upper-air suburban homes than even the mountains at Orange, and the very near future will bring an immense amount of practical proof of this superiority developed. Shrewd real-estate men who know of

THE GOOD-NATURED MAN.

The man who is good-natured is a blessing to humanity;
You meet him when growling nor indulging in profanity;
He's loved by me and Mike; ev'ry one he gets in contact with
With wagging tails will follow him at every corner patriarch.

He gives his only dollar to whoever is materially gaily;
He lends a sympathetic ear to those who are importunately;
No matter how you treat him he will greet you with urbanity,
And not a good rebuke to professors of Christianity.

He can be model's person with a cordial hand and kind;
He makes him sweeter bravery of the world in the tintinnabulation;
And drives away his shadows with a merry jocularity.

That sends the gloomy person into spasms of hilarity.

The man who is good-natured never practices duplicity;
The life he leads is honest and a marvel of admirability;
He never has an enemy; he feels no animosity,
And every where establishes a friendly rendezvous.

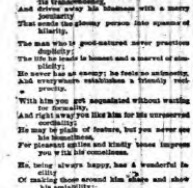
With him you get acquainted without waiting for formality,
And right away you find him for his unreserved cordiality;
He may be made of feather, but you never see his nobleness,
For generous qualities and kindly traits impress you with his comeliness.

He, being always happy, has a wonderful in ability
Of making those around him shape and show his amiability;
The good he does in observing his too-much-to-be-pressed humanity,
Gives them a joyous life on earth and fits them for eternity.

—H. C. Dodge, in Goodall's Sun.

MR. BOWSER.

Mrs. B. Tells of His Alleged Attack of Spinal Meningitis.



THE indifference displayed by the average husband to the pains and aches of the average wife is only equaled by the manner in which he tends to belittle and doubtless denies all to pieces at the slightest ache or illness. We have a regular programme at our house in certain illness. I am subject to nervous headaches. About once a fortnight Mr. Bowser comes home at noon and finds me on the sofa with my head tied up and my temples throbbing as if they would burst. It's just the next thing to being pounded on the head by a woodchuck, and if the house was on fire I should take my time about getting out, and that without trying to save anything except that slumber bottle. The programme then runs as follows:

Enter Mr. Bowser.

Hangs up his hat and overcoat.

Marches into back parlor, evidently suspecting some calamity.

Stands and gazes at me as if I were some curiosity. I try to smile, but it is a dead failure.

"Bumps! Cholera, I suppose!"

"S-o-" (Very faintly.)

"Yellow fever, then. I always knew you'd have it!"

"N-o. Only—only—"

"Only small-pox, eh! Nic thing to bring into the house, isn't it?"

"Mr. Bowser, I—I've got one of my headaches."

"Good! Is that all! Good lands, but you gave me a scare! Headache? Humph! If I was a woman of your size and age I'd show a little spunk."

"But it's dreadful!"

"Bosh! There is a little parts of imagination to one part headache."

And he goes slamming around the house and finally goes out, as if every sound did not fall on my skull like a blow of a hammer.

"Coming to dinner?"

"Mercy, but I can't eat."

"Can't, eh! Well, if you will let your imagination run away with you in this manner I can't help it. Be more left for me to-night, you know."

"I ALWAYS KNEW YOU'D HAVE IT."

He looks in as he is ready to leave the house and says:

"If you are down town this afternoon come in. Bye-bye, boobyr"

We have another programme—one which is followed when Mr. Bowser comes home with a bilious headache. If I happen to be looking when he gets off the car a block away I can tell what is the matter. He comes dragging his legs, head down and eyes half closed, and I meet him at the door and inquire:

"Mr. Bowser, have you been run over on the street?"

"I've been that!" he gasps, as he sits down on a stair step and holds his head in his hands.

"Have you been shot at or stabbed by a ruffian?"

"Would that I had!"

"Mr. Bowser, what awful, awful thing has happened? Answer me at once!"

"I've—I've got one of those infernal headaches!"

"O-o-o! Is that all? Why, I didn't know but some awful thing had happened. Well, you know what to do—I've got pork and beans, as you requested."

"Pork and b-beans! My soul, woman, but how can you talk p-pork and b-beans to a-a dying man?"

"Oh! a headache! Why, what should a great big man like you care about a headache? Come to dinner."

But he staggers into the sitting-room and falls sideways on the lounge, and starts a dozen sick aches the cat's back up to an angle.

"Mr. Bowser, these headaches are all imaginary. I observe as a fact that when the legs and swing him about so that he rests on his back.

"O-o-o-h!"

"If I was a man of your size and age I'd show a little spunk."

"O-o-o-h! How can I stand it?"

"Well, then I'll be more left for me to eat. Better lie as quiet as you can."

But I don't go out to dinner. He wants a pillow for his head and he wants his shoes taken off and his feet covered up, and then I have to remove the collar and undershirt and tie a wet towel around his forehead, and all his pluck has departed. It isn't near so bad a headache as usual. The slightest touch of a nervous woman ever has will double a discomfort any headache assigned to six and carry about, besides sound grits and bear it.

"DO YOU THINK THAT I'M GOING TO DIE?"

I got the harshorn for Mr. Bowser.

I chalk his hands.

I make the usual decoction for his feet.

I have the mustard plaster ready in the kitchen, and I send our boy over to a neighbor's.

Then I turn the pillow over.

Then I hold the camphor under his nose.

Then I take off the towel and tie it tighter around his aching head. He soon as last to fall into a doze, and suddenly opens his eyes and fairly calls:

"Mrs. B-Bowser!"

"Yes, dear."

"Do you think-think I'm going to die?"

"Die? Why you've only got a headache."

"But I feel a p-pressure—a sort of sinking away. Do-yo think it can be collapse of the system?"

"Of course not. You've got a fever—a little who about as big as a pin-head. All you've got to do is to go to sleep."

"But you'd better call up the doctor."

"Nonsense!"

"If you don't get the doctor I'll be dead in half an hour-er."

And so I go to the telephone and ring up the central and hold an imaginary conversation with the doctor as follows:

"Mr. Bowser thinks he's dangerously ill and he wants you to come up right away. Can't you? That's too bad. Well, come in two hours at the latest. He's on the lounge now. When it started with a headache. Yes, I'll keep him smelling of the camphor bottle. Good-by."

The entire afternoon is taken up with nursing Mr. Bowser and assuring him that he has not been struck with death. Then, at tea time, I must make him toast and poach him an egg, and at bed time the cook and I have to help him upstairs. He gets into bed with a series of groans, turns over with the declaration that he will never see another sun rise, and is sound asleep in ten minutes.

Next morning, when he arises fresh and clear headed, and I inquire if his headache is all gone, he looks at me in disdainful way and replies:

"Mrs. Bowser, my headache, as you call it, was a violent and malignant attack of spinal meningitis, and nothing but my great will-power, aided by my pluck and courage, enabled me to throw it off! Had it been you, you would have given up and died."—Detroit Free Press.

PECULIAR PARADOXES

A MAGNET does not attract iron as such. It has first to convert iron by induction, into another magnet before it can attract it. Hence magnets can only attract magnets.

A PIECE of solid steel will float on water, if it be small enough and slight-ly greased. A common sewing needle, especially if it be a new one, when placed gently on the surface of water, floats.

We can see the sun after he has sunk out of sight below the horizon, due to atmospheric refraction, which apparently raises the sun thirty-four sixtieths of a degree. His apparent diameter is only thirty-one sixtieths of a degree.

LIGHT, which makes everything else visible, is itself invisible. If light is the brain only that sees. In this sense, the fingers do not feel; the ear does not hear; the tongue does not taste, nor does the nose smell.

SNOW is not white, neither is it opaque. It is composed of small, six-rayed crystals, which, when examined separately, are seen to be as transparent as water. Snow is white only in the sense that water, when falling over a precipice, is white. In each case the whiteness is due to inclosed air.—Golden Days.

THINGS TO REMEMBER.

FROM 90,000 to 120,000 hairs grow in a human scalp.

THE combined population of the world is 1,450,000,000.

THERE locally one sudden death among women to every eight among men.

ON daily 6 the earth is carried away from the sun than at any other time.

Of the white population in America 5 per cent. is unable to either read or write.

THERE leads in the United States, living the country as a whole, occupy only 28 acres in every 1,000.

A HEALTHY adult, doing an ordinary amount of work, will require from ten to twelve ounces of meat a day.

TO COMPLETE their growth the nails of the left hand require eight or ten days more than those of the right.

A GRAIN of fine sand would cover one hundred square inches under the human skin, and yet each of these scales in turn covers from three hundred to five hundred pores.

THERE are about one hundred and five women to every one hundred men; one-fourth of the population of the world will die before the age of seventeen years; only one in one thousand lives to be one hundred years old, and only six in one thousand reach seventy-five.

POINTS ABOUT THE MEN.

THE man who pays his rent has to hustle, and the man who does not has to hustle considerably more.

THERE is nothing more discouraging to a man than thoughts of how great he intended to be when children clothe.

THE chances are that the man who hates himself has studied himself pretty thoroughly.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

EVERY man is the architect of his own fortune. And it's lucky for the world that there's no building inspector about.

YOU may be sure that a man has a very good opinion of himself as youthful assailant, who, nothing daunted by the formidable appearance of his terrified foe, continues the work of strife.

Whilst the brute twisted and [illegible]

His unwieldy body in futile attempts to seize his adversary, the little Greek plunged his weapon again and again into his body in vain endeavor to reach its vitals.

A fearful sight now presented itself to the fishermen on whom it was now to board the vessel. The sea, lashed into foam by the frenzied contortions of the monster, looked like a boiling pot. They dared no longer fire, lest they should hit the youthful combatant, whose position they could not see for whose fate they feared. It was soon evident to all that the boy's strength was not sufficient to enable him to inflict a mortal wound. He became apparently conscious of this himself, for, instantly relinquishing the deadly strife, he endeavored to regain the ship.

Now, all was eagerness and haste on board. Ropes, life-belts and hen-coops were promptly thrown overboard, and the firing was recommenced. It was evident that the ropes were the only real means of escape available; for, as a sadly too common at sea, it would waste a pillow for his head and he wants his shoes taken off and his feet covered up, and then I have to remove the collar and undershirt and tie a wet towel around his forehead, and all his pluck has departed. It isn't near so bad a headache as usual. The slightest touch of a nervous woman ever has will double a discomfort any headache assigned to six and carry about, besides sound grits and bear it.

"DO YOU THINK THAT I'M GOING TO DIE?"

I got the harshorn for Mr. Bowser.

THE SONG OF TOIL.

There's a grand old music away
From all the cities of human clay,
Over the mountains and over the sea,
Back it comes to you and me.
Listen and hear it coming to-day,
Down through the ages, the world's highway:
Toil, toil, toil,
Toil in the city and toil in the soil,
Children, all, must toil.

There's a wail of sorrow, a sob of pain,
Over the earth like a heavy rain,
Falling on hearts that break and burn
With the bitterness of unanswered yearn.
Toil, toil, toil,
Toil in the depths of the dreary coal,
Toil, toil, toil.

There's a song of joy that shakes the air,
And the notes of it sound everywhere,
It is the song that the angels know,
Feeble and falt'ring are ours below.
Toil, toil, toil,
Toil with a smile and toil with a song,
Toil, toil, toil.

Do we long to weight and station
And labor with head instead of hand?
Are there not a nation's builders,
Whether with head or hand?
Brawny hand and sturdy muscle
Are the bulwark of the State.

Let each toiler in the vineyard,
And each worker in the field,
Sing as he marches bravely onward
To the harvest he shall yield.
Toil, toil, toil,
Toil in the sunshine and toil in the shade,
And the advantages of enabling
Are his who toils unafraid.

Are his who toils unafraid of toil.
Prince guide the shining plowshare,
Morning-tide and evening-time,
Brawny hand and sturdy muscle
Are the bulwark of the State.

Let each toiler in the vineyard,
And each worker in the field,
Sing as he marches bravely onward
To the harvest he shall yield.
Toil, toil, toil,
Toil in the sunshine and toil in the shade,
And the advantages of enabling
Are his who toils unafraid.

FOR FATHER'S SAKE.

A Little Hero Who Gave His Life for Others.

Volney Beckner, Aged Twelve, Receives His Father and a Drowning Passenger from the Grasp of Sharks and a Moving Shark.

OLNEY BECKNER, who was born in 1748, at Londonderry, a town famous in history, was the son of a common sailor. As such his educational training beyond that which would enable him to follow in his father's steps. He was strong, active and robust in body, with mental qualities corresponding thereto; and, as a child, displayed such determined courage and resolution, that the captain of the vessel on which his father served would often point him out as a model to other boys, remarking: "If this boy continues to display the same courage and resolution, I doubt not that in time he will obtain a post superior to my own."

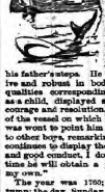
The year was 1760; the season, autumn; the day, Sunday.

Volney Beckner, then twelve years old, was at sea with his father. The vessel was bound from Portsea-Prince, in the notorious West Indian Islands of St. Domingo, to France. It carried passengers as well as cargo. Among the former was a wealthy American planter, who, with his infant daughter, was making a voyage to Europe. After a few days of sea-sickness the child found her "sea legs," and frequently ran about the deck, amusing the sailors, who, whom, "simply dazzled" became a favorite with her infant prattle.

It was early evening; the ship lay almost becalmed; the seas merely had a burnished gold. The little American girl, with her nurse, came on deck. Suddenly the child sprang forward, ran to the head of the vessel and, in a moment, fell overboard. The sailor, the elder Beckner, witnessed the accident and, with the quickness of thought, plunged into the sea to her rescue. With a few sturdy strokes he reached the child's side and, seizing her, was about to make his way back to the ship when the whiteness is due to inclosed air.—Golden Days.



THE BOY PLUNGED INTO THE SEA.

sel of them dared not share his peril, but they, with the passengers, began a brisk fire upon the cruel monster of the sea. Sailors, too, are proverbially bad marksmen. It may be the shark was aware of this. Certainly he continued on his course until he had almost reached his intended victim.

It was an awful moment of suspense. The agonized planter was upon the deck, offering incredible rewards to any who would rescue his daughter from her imminent peril. Men's faces were blanched with fear; their hearts stood still with dread.

Then it was that Volney Beckner, seeing his father's danger, did that which he intended to be a children Globe.

THE chances are that the man who hates himself has studied himself pretty thoroughly.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

EVERY man is the architect of his own fortune. And it's lucky for the world that there's no building inspector about.

YOU may be sure that a man has a very good opinion of himself as youthful assailant, who, nothing daunted by the formidable appearance of his terrified foe, continues the work of strife.

Whilst the brute twisted and [illegible]

His unwieldy body in futile attempts to seize his adversary, the little Greek plunged his weapon again and again into his body in vain endeavor to reach its vitals.

A fearful sight now presented itself to the fishermen on whom it was now to board the vessel. The sea, lashed into foam by the frenzied contortions of the monster, looked like a boiling pot. They dared no longer fire, lest they should hit the youthful combatant, whose position they could not see for whose fate they feared. It was soon evident to all that the boy's strength was not sufficient to enable him to inflict a mortal wound. He became apparently conscious of this himself, for, instantly relinquishing the deadly strife, he endeavored to regain the ship.

Now, all was eagerness and haste on board. Ropes, life-belts and hen-coops were promptly thrown overboard, and the firing was recommenced. It was evident that the ropes were the only real means of escape available; for, as a sadly too common at sea, it would have been impossible to clear and launch the boats in time to effect a rescue. Besides, the number of them was no object to the men and the other was encumbered with lumber. For their time, the number of the vessel was

THE BRAVE ORDERED THE UNDERTAKER BOY.

OLIVE OIL LAMPS

They Are Artistic and Quite a Fad Among a Certain Class.

The lamps shown in the engraving are elaborately ornamented in the Venetian style of Florence.

OLIVE OIL LAMP.

which is seldom seen in American goods of the same class. These lamps are made in several different designs and with one, two, three, or even four burners. The lamp illustrated is 22 inches high and is made throughout of cast brass, with the exception of the extra oil carrier, which is of copper. Every lamp is provided with a pair of snuffers, an extinguisher, and an instrument for trimming the wicks. These articles are suspended from the lamp with brass chains having brass links. The lamp font is tinned on the inside to prevent corrosion, and is arranged to slide up or down the rod. The wicks, which are flat, come pass through small brass tubes inserted loosely in the beaks. The supply of oil contained in the font being limited, the small oil reservoir holding a charge of oil is suspended from the lamp. The olive oil, which is very clean, costing only 8 to 10 solidi (8 to 10 cents) the liter, is manufactured from small olives or those unfit for eating. These lamps give a soft, pleasant light.—Scientific American.

GARNITURE FOR LAMPS.

To Be to the Swiss It Must Be Changed to the Locality in Which It Is Used.

To be distinctly fashionable you must change the garniture of your lamps at least once a year; for these pretty fluffy things follow the mode as much as milady and adopt, in a way, the fashion of the day as far as lamp shade can. This year, for instance, the high ruches and stiff collars are also reproduced on the shades, while the pinked skirts and ruched out flounces are also copied. The shirrings and fine plaitings, so much in vogue a year ago, are quite out. Here is a sketch of the last favorite, and it is made of the finest kind of pink silk and an abundance of soft lace about two inches in depth. The sicket plait over the ruche umbrella shaped, and a clever woman can easily learn to sew them herself. "I change my shade under this just for the sake of variety," said the owner of a charmingroom, the other day, "and I always feel as if I were dressing a doll; the children call it the 'Lady Betty' and I assure you it is quite a character."—N. Y. Tribune.

DAINTY TRAY CLOTH.

One Especially Designed for Use in an Invalid's Chamber.

Tray cloths are very popular and so numerous that it is not necessary to speak a good word for them or call attention to their beauty or utility. The one herewith illustrated is much like many of these—simple and full of fine work, and soft, yet heavy enough to stay in place well, is fringed and has a cross-cornered bit of drawn work in the upper left-hand corner the first line of:

A DAINTY TRAY CLOTH.

"Just a tip bit,
There is no more."

is embroidered in cutline stitch, and in the lower right hand corner the remainder is placed, the last line showing how the words are arranged and ornamented by rosette stitches.

This cloth was designed especially for an invalid, and was measured to fit her own tray, which was large enough to hold all required for a meal in her sick-room. Those who have "been there" can judge of her pleased surprise when she first saw the inscription—in cheerful red letters among the brown monochrome—perhaps when she had had either side of a dainty bit of game and toast. It was not used at all times, only when the invalid was called for as bits of delicate cookery was this brought forth to add zest to the meal; therefore, it never failed to give pleasure. Any forget-me-nots instead of branches would be dainty and suggestive; if worked in the blue of the forget-me-not silk, olive would be pretty for the stems, about foliage and tendrils.—New Lean Agriculturist.

MENNONITES OF RUSSIA.

The Hardships of a Christian Sect Under the Czar's Intolerant Rule.

The Mennonites of Russia, as well as Hebrews, are complaining of the severities of the Russian Government. Not for the obstacles to their emigration, the whole body of them would probably come to this country. They are a Christian sect over three centuries old, which began in southern Russia as an organized by the orthodox Greek church, into which the government has tried to force them.

The Russian Mennonites, who number only about 60,000, took up their habitations in southern Russia under the sea of Azov, about a century ago, explains the New York Sun, having then left Prussia because of the hardships to which they were subjected. They are a peaceful, intelligent, virtuous and industrious people and they have enjoyed rare prosperity in that region.

The main trouble of the government with them arises out of their religious principle of non-resistance and their refusal to perform military service. For a long period of time they were exempt from service by the decrees of the czars, but this privilege was gradually curtailed by years ago. They then obtained permission to leave Russia within a specified time.

In 1875 they began to take advantage of it, and several thousand of them settled chiefly in Kansas and Nebraska, colonies went as farmers to Kansas and Minnesota, where they purchased land and got along well. Lately, however, their determination modified his decree of compulsory military service during the time of war, they should be required only to render service in the military hospitals. This was regarded as a violation and the expiration of the period during which they were allowed to emigrate stopped the wholesale movement to America. The whole body of them was desirous of leaving Russia, as they left Prussia a century ago.

Now again they are suffering hardships through the operation of the conscription law, which requires the final determination to bring them into the orthodox fold. It is understood that the efforts by them to leave Russia they would follow those of their brethren who came here eighteen years ago.

Debarking as Officer.

Sergeant—You are charged with conduct unbecoming an officer.

New Policeman—In what respect?

Sergeant—You have been in the habit of taking nuts and fruit from the street stands kept by old men and helpless women.

New Policeman—But I pay for them always.

Sergeant—You that's the substance of the complaint.—Detroit Free Press.

Very Strict.

In the government schools a large school it is necessary to have strict rules, and abide by them.

One day the teacher, "I saw you laughing just now. What were you laughing at?"

"I was just thinking about something."

"But you have no right to be thinking during school hours. Don't let it happen again."—Youth's Companion.

The Same Way.

Husband—Don't forget to buy meat for dinner, I am going fishing and will be back in time for us to have a mess of fish.

Wife—Well, you had better tell the fish man to leave them at once as you go by in the morning, for I like when you return.—Omaha Week.

Commercial Item.

Gilhooly (indignantly)—Look here, Mr. Schlumberg, this whiskey we bought from you yesterday won't stand up.

Mose Schlumberg—Vat have I got to do mit all dose. Ven I sold you dot vas prella it vas stunt up all right. Maype you have made it yourself already. I done sold it to you. Vat ish der matter mit you dose mornings, anyvay?—Texas Siftings.

Collecting an Erroneous Idea.

Jimson—All this talk about young wives' theories being as hard as bricks is a misdirected idea.

Simson—I'm glad to hear you say so, Jimson.

Jimson—Yes, I've been married four weeks now, and every loaf of bread that Mrs. Jimson has made so far has been as soggy and soft as apple dump.—Somerville Journal.

A Catastrophe.

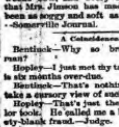
Bentnick—Why so broke up, old pard?

Hopley—I just met thy tailor. His bill is six months over-due.

Bentnick—That's nothing. I always take a cursory view of such things.

Hopley—That's just the view my tailor took. He called me a blank, blankety-blank fraud.—Judge.

INCORRIGIBLE TO THE LAST.



Professional Humorist—I wish you would leave; you're a dreadful bore.—Life.

A Justification.

Great Author (in his own estimation)—Parkins was one of those who [illegible] but did you not know that an author does not like to discuss his own book?

Great Reader—Certainly, I did; but I didn't think an author would object if the book was not at all original.—Puck.

Did Not Want to at Discreditable Price.

Judge (to prisoner)—You have been arrested for beating his wife and children! —What is your occupation?

Prisoner—I am an agent of the society for the prevention of cruelty to children.

Judge—Discharged.—Texas Siftings.

Under suspicion.

"Somebody has picked my pocket," sighed the Fat Woman.

"Whom do you suspect," asked the Midget.

That Scowling Armless Wonder over there has a conscious look on his face. I believe it's him."—Puck.

Railroads.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD
THE STANDARD RAILROAD OF AMERICA
PASSENGER EQUIPMENT OF THE
Interlocking Switch and Block Signal System.

TRAINS FOR THE WEST.

On and after Oct. 26, 1890, trains leave Elizabeth as follows:

8.30 A. M. FAST LINE, with Pullman Vestibule Drawing-room and Sleeping Cars, daily for Pittsburg, Columbus, Cleveland, and St. Louis, with Pullman Sleeping Car for Chicago and Toledo.

10.00 A. M. WESTERN EXPRESS, with Pullman Vestibule Drawing-room and Sleeping Cars, daily for Pittsburg, Columbus, Chicago, Cincinnati and Louisville, and Parlor Car for Cleveland and Toledo.

8.15 P. M. PACIFIC EXPRESS, with Pullman Vestibule sleeping cars, daily for Pittsburg, Columbus, Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, and Cincinnati.

For Pittsburg, Washington and the South—1 00 A. M., 7 00, 9 00, 10 00 A. M., 12 30, 3 30, 4 30, 7 00, 8 00, 11 30 P. M. Sunday—1 00 A. M., 7 00, 9 00, 10 00 A. M., 12 30, 4 30, 7 00, 8 00, 11 30 P. M.

For Harrisburg—1 00, 7 00, 9 00, 10 00 A. M., 12 30, 3 30, 4 30, 7 00, 8 00, 11 30 P. M. Sunday—1 00, 7 00, 9 00, 10 00 A. M., 12 30, 4 30, 7 00, 8 00, 11 30 P. M.

For Philadelphia—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Atlantic City—9 00 A. M. Sunday, 4 00 P. M.

For Long Branch—9 00 A. M. Sunday, 4 00 P. M.

For Red Bank—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Monmouth Beach—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Asbury Park—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Ocean Grove—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Lakewood—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Toms River—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Bay Head—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Point Pleasant—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Seaside Park—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Forked River—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Tuckerton—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Beach Haven—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Manasquan—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Sea Girt—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Lakewood—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Toms River—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Bay Head—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Point Pleasant—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M.

For Seaside Park—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 00 A. M., 12 00 Noon, 1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4 00, 5 00, 6 00, 7 00, 8 00, 9 00, 10 00, 11 30 P. M., 12 01 A. M. Sunday—1 00, 2 00, 3 00, 4

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1891. No. 17.

"Support the Constitution, which is the cement of the Union, as well as its limitations as to its authorities."—Madison.

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY,
H. L. FORCE & H. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors,
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

Rates of Advertising

Spaces	1 w	2 w	3 w	1 m	12
1 in.	$1.00	$1.50	$2.00	$3.00	$10.00
2 in.	1.50	2.00	2.50	4.00	15.00
3 in.	2.00	2.50	3.00	5.00	20.00
4 in.	2.50	3.00	3.50	6.00	25.00
5 in.	3.00	3.50	4.00	7.00	30.00
6 in.	3.50	4.00	4.50	8.00	35.00
7 in.	4.00	4.50	5.00	9.00	40.00
8 in.	4.50	5.00	5.50	10.00	45.00
9 in.	5.00	5.50	6.00	11.00	50.00
10 in.	5.50	6.00	6.50	12.00	55.00
11 in.	6.00	6.50	7.00	13.00	60.00
12 in.	6.50	7.00	7.50	14.00	65.00

All Notices must be paid for.
"Lists of Everything" column, 5 cts. per line.
Double rate, 25 per ct. advance of above rates.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & GODDINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Masters in Chancery, Notaries Public, Offices corner of Park avenue and Second street.—[1m27]

W. V. STERLE,
Counselor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner, etc.
Cor. PARK AND NORTH AVE. 6-20

GEORGE W. DAY,
General Conveyancer,
Sales of Personal Property Conducted. P. O. Box 185, Dunellen, N. J., or address in care of Observer office, Plainfield, N. J.—[1m27]

DR. CHARLES R. THEIS,
Dentist,
29 West Front street. A new local anesthetic application for extracting teeth without pain. Gold filling a specialty.—[e41]

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
P. O. Address, Lock Box 71, South Plainfield, N. J. Orders left at D. G. Carey's, second hand store, 19 West Front street, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—[e13]

OSCAR S. TEALE,
Architect,
242 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 32 and 33. (Importers' and Traders' Bank Building.) Residence, Plainfield, N. J.—[e52]

J. E. PRESTER,
Veterinary Surgeon,
Office in A. M. Seguine's livery stable, near Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Day or night calls promptly attended to. Telephone [No. 6. Consultation on disease of all domestic animals. Residence, 73 East Fifth street.—[e1]

BUSINESS CARDS.

P. P. VanArsdale,
PIANO TUNER.
Instruments put in thorough order. Tenements, Pianos and Organs for sale and to let. Orders left at P. O. Box 151 or left at Wholesale Confectionery, No. 6 Park avenue will receive prompt attention. Residence, 21 East Front street, corner Plum street.—[e7]181

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.,
residence and shop No. 26 East 2d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. aply

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Madison Avenue, next to First National Bank of Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received for consignment.

TO THE PUBLIC!

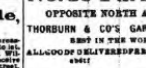
We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.

It is under cover and well protected from the weather. We are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We are also prepared to furnish all kinds of Seasoned Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
aply

A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables



Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Parties and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure driving.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping callers promptly ordered. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day, week or month.—[e13]y
TELEPHONE CALL, NO. 24.

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE.
[Formerly Clark's.]
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.
Repairing neatly and promptly done.
e21

FOR BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS
In Furniture
GO TO
23, 25 and 27 PARK AVE.
Garret Q. Packer,

Steam Marble
Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones,
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments

All work executed in the most skilful manner and at very reasonable prices. All orders duly received and set up.
FRONT ST., NEXT to M. E. CH., PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Monuments erected in Greenwood Cemetery, N. Y.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES,
No 7 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of desirable goods direct from manufacturers, at Low Figures. aply

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.) is now the sole proprietor of the old established cash store at
No. 14 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the best grades of Fresh and Salt meats, Fish of all kinds, Oysters, Clams, Poultry, Game in the season, Canned goods, Jellies, Preserves, Pickles, Sauces, Spices, Vegetables, Fruits, Nuts, Confectionery, Tobacco, Cigars, Snuff, Pipes, Etc., Etc. Anything not named kept in stock furnished at short notice.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (Near D. & R. Station.)
JAS. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL. Steam Heat. First-class Plumbing.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-31-ly

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Suit Six North Plainfield N. J.
RICHARD A. BOYCE, Proprietor.
Permanent and transient board, at fair rates. First-class cuisine and sheds attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours.

Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. HUBBARD, President.
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
NATHAN HARPER, "
ELIJAH S. HOYT, Treasurer.
ASST.

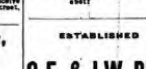
Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS,
RESP'D IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE WITHIN THE CITY LIMITS.
e9617

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
(Successors to C. E. & C. E. Brown & Co.)
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER.
321 Canal Street,
NEW YORK.
English Tiles, Anaglypta, Hand, Leather Stained Flock Papers, &c. Borrage for Walls.

Manufacturers of Window Shades, 1-13-ly

LIVERY.

Laing's Hotel Stables



Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Parties and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure driving.
RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping callers promptly ordered. Special attention given to boarding horses by the day, week or month.—[e13]y
TELEPHONE CALL, NO. 24.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will always be found ready and able to answer calls demanded for all kinds of turn-outs at horter notice and upon more reasonable terms than ever before. Horses and carriages for Funerals, Parties, Weddings or Excursions a specialty. Horses taken to board at reasonable rates. Prompt attention to orders left at Force's Hotel or at the stables, corner of Somerset and Suit streets, will receive prompt attention. 6-20

Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderbook's Hardware Store, Park Avenue.
The Accommodation Express will attend to the general carrying business of the city, delivering goods or Baggage to and from the Depot, or from place to place. Moving of Furniture, Pianos, etc., a specialty, with care and safety. Prompt attention given to Orders left as above.

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE
The undersigned having been appointed agents for the
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York, are prepared to grant economical indemnity against loss by Fire on all desirable risks. Satisfactory references if in Plainfield is desirable.
NATHAN HARPER
6-20

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.
Mortgages

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represents other first-class Fire insurance Companies. Agents of the Issues Steamship Line. Drafts on Ireland for sale. First and City National Bank Stock Bought and Sold. Also,
BUILDING LOTS
And Other Real Estate for Sale.
OFFICE:
6 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS D. POPE

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue.
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will reopen WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling, Drawing and Cooking. 9 12 tf

PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES

Paints, Varnishes, Glass,
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
e202

Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 26 NORTH AVENUE
apl6tf

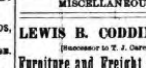
MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
(Successor to T. J. Carey.)
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—34 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 329, cor. Plum meeting a specialty. 11tm6

Fresh Garden Seeds
AND F RTILIZERS,
Farm and Garden Implements,
Lawn Mowers Refrigerators,
Ice Cream Freezers,
Gasoline Stoves, Hardware, Tools, etc.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 13 SOMERSET ST. 8-13-tf

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
30 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.
MUSIC.

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
ALSO
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.
Used in the principal churches for communion. Excellent for females, weakly persons and the aged.



Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the finest ripe Delaware grapes, raised in Speer's vineyards, and fermented until they shrink and become fairly raisined before pressing. Its invaluable

Tonic and Strengthening Properties are unsurpassed by any other Wine. Being pressed with the stems, it possesses great medicinal virtues, its purity and genuineness are guaranteed by the principal Hospitals and Boards of Health who have examined it. The youngest child and the weakest invalid can use it to advantage. It is particularly beneficial to the aged and debilitated and suited to the various ailments that affect the weaker sex. It is the purest article in the market. BE RELIEVED.

Speer's Unfermented Grape Juice
is the juice of the Concord grape, preserved in its natural fresh, sweet state as it runs from the press by fumigation and sterilizing, thereby destroying the germs of fermentation. It is perfectly pure, non-alcoholic, and will keep in any climate.

Speer's (Sociable) Claret
is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner use.

Speer's Sherry
is a Wine of superior character, and partakes of the rich qualities of the grape from which it is made.

Speer's P. J. Brandy
IS A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medical purposes. It has no after-fiery flavor, similar to that of the grapes from which it is distilled.

See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is on the cork of each bottle.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 6-19-y

Garden Seeds,
Direct from the Growers.
Othello Ranges,
Choice Clover and Timothy Seed,
House Furnishing Goods,
Hardware, Plumbing and Tinning.
A. R. GRIFFEN,
28 East Front Street.

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The best Connecticut cigars in the State, and made under premises like those of a factory.
CUBAN HAVANA SEGARS A SPECIALTY.
Also agent and manufacturer of the Celebrated Brands of Pennsylvania and Domestic Cigars. Cigarettes and Tobacco always on hand.
Remember Articles in Great Variety.
1y17

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMEST'C
—SEGARS!—
No. 28 PARK AVE., (NEXT DOOR TO SECOND ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials, of every description.
The celebrated "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, which for its purity and delicacy is unsurpassed. 42tm3

A. WOLFF,
Manufacturer of
CIGARS,
And dealer in all kinds of Smoking and Chewing Tobacco, and smokers' articles. Has removed from 24½ W. Front street, to 62 West Front street, one door east of Madison, and solicits the patronage of his friends and the public generally. e7 3m

CARNEY BROS., Ag'ts,
11 SOMERSET ST.
TINNERS,
PLUMBERS,
GAS FITTERS.
PARLOR STOVES,
COOK STOVES,
HEATERS.
Grates and Tiles for all kinds of Stove or can be found here at others' prices. Ring your Tinware mending to us. The best Tinners, the best Plumbers, and the best Gas-fitters in the section. We use none but the very best of materials, and our work always gives satisfaction.
Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.
Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

SANITARY PLUMBING,
Brick and Portable Furnaces,
GAS FITTING,
TIN ROOFING,
Etc., Etc.
I am prepared to do any of the above branches in a strictly first-class, skillful and workmanlike manner.
Having associated myself with the Master Plumbers Association of New York City, I am enabled to keep myself thoroughly posted in the latest improvements in the trade, and can guarantee to every man entrusting me with his work perfect satisfaction.
D. W. LITTELL,
No. 5 NORTH AVE. cor. Plainfield, N. J. 11-14

HER TYRANT MASTER.

With shades aglow from kisses of the frost,
Nine laughing girls, and all striding, hats wind tossed,
She comes in breathless, bright, a little late
Pale as a dream, but pitiless as Fate.

She struggles with her rubbers on the mat,
Lays by her furs, and then with hands like pearl
Pulls off her gloves and sweetly thoughtful hurls
Beside the register, to warm her hands.

I look up, at her nod: "good morning!" then Bend to my work, and think I'll see her "when."
And then her task begins, and, like a Turk,
I am her tyrant master, and she my serf.

She's my typewriter yet, and I'm her "boss."
I hear her tell the bookkeeper I'm "cross."
Yet I'm a Great Man to her when we're alone,
And she's a Great Artiste in Great Variety.

—Madeline S. Bridges, in Puck.

THE TEST.

Locating the Traitor in a Russian Conspiracy.

One bitterly cold winter's evening five men were seated together in a small room in a house situated in the lower quarter of a busy and largely populated Russian city. The appearance of the room would indicate from the external aspect of the house itself. The solitary window was totally concealed by a heavy baize curtain suspending from the roof, and as the wind moaned dismally through the broken pane of glass it caused the curtain to sway to and fro. The inmates of this mournful den were seated around the table, smoking their pipes and talking as if furtively, in whispers. As the feeble rays of the candle fell fitfully upon the company they revealed the youthful faces of four students. The chief spokesman, however, was a much older man, apparently about fifty, with a short, pointed beard, shaggy brows and bushy, penetrating eyes of dark-est hue. The others deferentially addressed the speaker as "professor," and such, indeed, he was, having at a well-known school of medicine in Russia.

On the present occasion, however, he was speaking, not of science, but of the terrible doctrine of assassination.

Prof. Orsan, a leading and reputed Colossus of craft in the dissemination of revolutionary doctrines, and on the particular evening in question was engaged in advocating with fiery eloquence the assassination of the autocrat, who had lately been promoted to the rank of chief commissioner of police in Moscow. As the eight eyes on their whispered conversation was suddenly interrupted by a low knocking at the outer door. In a moment the conspirators sprang noiselessly to their feet and listened with bated breath. The sound was repeated in peculiar whistle was heard from without, and the listeners exchanged significant glances and quickly resumed their seats. Presently cautious footsteps were heard in an outer room, the door opened, and a young man was hastily entered. His face was pale, his manner agitated, and as he returned his companions' salutations he regarded them with a fixed and angry stare.

"You have kept us waiting, comrade," exclaimed the professor, pulling calmly at his pipe. "Tell me, are you not?"

"Yes, comrade, we are betrayed; and as we are known of this plot of ours except ourselves, it is by one of think, that one of us has turned informant."

"We are mad to say so," hoarsely exclaimed the professor; "but in heaven's name, what has happened? Come, tell us quickly. This is no jesting matter."

"Listen, then. On my way hither, comrades, I entered a cafe de Paris to sip a cup of tea and smoke a cigarette. I happened to sit beside two officers of the secret police, and as one of them was somewhat tipsy, I could distinctly hear his conversation. I found it rather interesting. He told his companion that he was under orders to surround this old, deserted house at midnight —it was near eleven now—and to arrest all persons found within. He mentioned, moreover, all our names, and added, with a maudlin laugh, that a certain person, to whom the administration is eternally indebted, would be found in our midst playing his part of conspirator. Now, comrades, I have done. What shall we do?"

The men looked at each other in dismay. A dead silence filled the room, for the intense suspicion of treachery among the men who had solemnly dedicated their lives to the sacred cause of liberty seemed to hold them dumb. Such villiany in their very midst—among men banded together in sacred brotherhood—was a great crime in the merciless acts of a despot, and his minions.

"If this is true," said the professor, in a voice of suppressed rage, "then I will no longer believe in human fidelity, or the future of our cause. But—doubt if the story is true. Which of us is the informer?" he continued, looking fiercely at the pale faces of his companions.

"Hush! it is useless to ask that, my dear professor," exclaimed Ivan—such was the name of the youth who had brought the alarming intelligence—"we are advanced to the door of the room, locked it, and placed the key in his pocket. "Every one will assert his innocence, naturally, and therefore I suppose we endeavor to find him out? Let us search each other. The traitor, whoever he is, will, no doubt, have in his possession some proof of his guilt. At least, the experiment is worth trying for our safety."

"Agreed! agreed!" exclaimed the nihilists, and they accept they sprang convulsively to their feet. One of the students—a tall, lank youth, with a somewhat foppish appearance—objected, however, to the proposal.

"But why?" hotly demanded the professor, who seemed all eagerness to begin the investigation.

"Because," was the hesitating reply, "there might be a mistake. Besides there is something degrading in the idea of searching one another, as if, indeed, we were a lot of policemen. So let us break up the meeting. This excitement is absurd, and requires the deliberation of our plot impossible, and for the story told by the drunken soldier in the cafe, I don't believe a word of it."

These words produced an angry murmur among the excited conspirators. The professor, however, replied as calmly as the clamor increased. Ivan turned to the speaker and warmly exclaimed: "Why, I will, and shall, be the first to be searched, and I am willing to submit to the examination we shall then know upon whom to fix our first; I am ready."

In a moment the speaker's pockets were emptied of their contents, and even the lining of his clothes was carefully searched, but beyond a few old love-letters, some political pamphlets and an English newspaper with a paragraph obliterated with the blue black nothing of an incriminating character was found. A second student readily submitted to the test and it was equally similar results. Then a third stepped forward and placed himself in the hands of his companions, but with the manner a curious incident occurred. An invisible hand suddenly extinguished the light of the candle, and in a second the room was plunged in utter darkness.

What did it mean? Why had quenched the light? For a moment the nihilists remained motionless, as if rooted to the spot. As they listened in alarm they heard a strange, creaking sound in the direction of the curtained window.

Suddenly the voice of Ivan exclaimed in the darkness: "Comrades, this is a trick! Listen! Some one is endeavoring to escape by the window! It is the traitor at last. His attempt to escape betrays his guilt. Stand back! I know how to deal with him!"

In an instant the reports of three revolver shots rang through the room and were followed by an agonizing yell as some one fell heavily upon the floor.

A prolonged groan then ensued.

It was an awful situation.

At length Ivan spoke to his terrified companions.

"Strike a light now," he said, in a trembling voice, "and let us look upon the face of a traitor. Will no one move? Are you all afraid to gaze upon the dead body of a miscreant who has betrayed us to our enemies? Come, professor, where are the matches? You had them last. But hush! What sound is that? Listen! By heavens, comrades, the police are upon us already. The house is surrounded! Quick! here is a trap-door known only to myself. It leads to the main sewer and is our only hope of escape. Follow me."

Creeping hand in hand in the dark, the affrighted men followed the speaker's directions, and after some momentary confusion disappeared into the noisome abyss. None too soon. In another instant the door of the room was battered to pieces, and a company of gendarmes entered. Lights were soon flashed in every direction, but it was obvious to all that the conspirators had escaped. The officer in charge swore long and fiercely, ordered the men to search the house from top to bottom. Then, advancing toward the window, he stumbled over a human body.

What's this?" he exclaimed, examining the dead man's features with a lantern. "Ha! so they have caught you at last, my friend, have they? Well, you played the spy long and well, but it always come to this in the end."

And tearing open the coat of the certain the officer threw it over the rigid body of—the professor.—Pall Mall Budget.

THE CHILD-KINGS

A Quaint Old Religious Procession on the Spanish Main.

One of the most charming festivals of a religious character to be seen in the tropics is that of the Three Kings of Magi, celebrated every winter on variable dates at St. Jean de Luz in Spain.

The church of St. Jean de Luz is said to possess some relics of the garment of the east who followed the star until it lay over Bethlehem, and led them on to the manger where the Christ-child lay.

In the old days this festival was general in the country districts, but it is now confined to a procession in the town, in which all the religious, civil and military authorities join.

The chief feature of the procession is the trio of kings, represented by three beautiful boys in fine oriental costumes, their long trains borne by pages in costumes of the time of Francis the First.

The chronology is a little mixed, but the intentions are excellent and the effect of the whole is like that of looking into some illuminated missal of the middle ages.—N. Y. Journal.

Couldn't Work Both Ways.

Patron. Medicine for my horse — I'm very sorry you can't give us a testimonial for our Anti-Fat. We're willing to pay well, but I suppose you are opposed to recommending anything.

Popular Minister—It isn't that, my dear sir. I would be glad to, but I am just a little too late. This very morning I wrote a testimonial for another man's Anti-Fat.—Judge.

At the Church Fair.

"Do you know why you remind me of the steamer Teutonic?" asked Jimmy Baddeman, of the Rebecca at the fair.

"No, sir," she answered, with a smile that was graded above No. 16 Dutch clothes.

"Then I'll tell you. It's because you don't look a deal of water, my dear."—West Shore.

A High Stand.

"Mr. Astor has literary aspirations, has he not?"

"Yes; as a poet he is inconsiderable; as a novelist he is very clever; but his highest flight in literary writing is in the form of a cheque, in which respect he surpasses Dickens, Thackeray, Poe or even Shakespeare."—Harper's Bazar.

Light Literature.

"What have you been reading lately?"

"Nothing."

"How do you like it?"

"Very much. There is no adventure, of course, no plot, no sensational incidents. In fact, it's quite the same as reading a fashionable novel."—Puck.

A BARGAIN.

—Harper's Young People.

Deserted Policemen.

Mrs. Knickerbocker — There was a policeman in the kitchen, counting our ugly old cook.

Mr. Knickerbocker — What! Why, she is sixty years old, and as ugly as a crazy quilt. Well, that policeman must have been hungry for a fact.—Texas Siftings.

Wounded in Service.

Hazel in Helena:

"What are those crippled men who have just passed along the street? Both the scarred veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, I take it."

"Oh, no; those are merely the motley boys of the Montana legislature."—Judge.

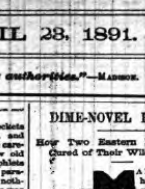
Heartrending.

Rural Clergyman (sympathetically)—Terrible accident, terrible, wasn't it? Six men blown to atoms with nitroglycerine!

Undertaker (tearfully) — Heartrending! Not enough left of them for a funeral.—Good News.

DIME-NOVEL HEROES.

How Two Eastern Boys Were Cured of Their Wild Fancies.



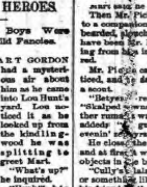
MART GORDON and Lou Hunt had a rapture on air about him as he came to the kindling wood he was splitting in the great Mart.

"What's up?" he inquired.

"Hush!" hits Chum Cash!" warned. Mr. Pickle, or something like that, and he patted his friend on the back.

"Pickle's in, too!" said that worthy; then he asked: "Got ther scide, pards?"

Lou had put his hand on this little



THEY WERE BOUND TIGHTLY TO THE BEAMS.

hoard in his pocket all the time, and, unsuspectingly, he produced it. Mr. Pickle seized it, and his ally took Mart's, they the boys had a surprise.

A piece o cloth was thrust into the mouth of each, and they were pinioned up against two beams on the opposite side of the girl's interior. The purging was then up as perfect with the hatchet-handkerchiefs, and they were bound tightly to the beams with bits of rope. Mr. Pickle produced, much to that worthy's satisfaction

After they were forced to listen to some very uncomplimentary remarks from Mr. Pickle's friend, they were finally left alone in the old cabin, he and Mr. Pickle disappearing through the door, Lou's five dollars and Mart's shoes seven in his pockets.

The spirits of the chums were damped. They saw how they had been mislead; and, as if the punishment were not already great enough, a night in the old mill stared them in the face. They even feared they might have to stay there longer—Lou thought die these. The old ruin was seldom visited. It grew larger and more lonely. Weird noises sounded now and then; while the strong, moaning wind began to moan distinctly. On the eaves. As storm arose. The old mill rocked and swayed, its beams groaning and boards rattling. Drumming streams of water fell upon the chums through the leaky roof, and they were chilled to the bone by the cold gusts entering the door, everywhere.

Rose found or shingle was torn from the old shell by an unusually strong puff.

Fortunately, for them, a grizzly-faced wanderer was driven there for shelter. The mill was deserted.

Some time in the night, after he had released the, the oldrain topped into the river and was washed down to the Monongahela.

That night's adventure—their terribly narrow escape—made dreams of running a log boat freighted with Pickle sitting with the boys than before. Nor was "Nat, the Trapper" quite so much bored over the secret.

Then, soon, business called Lou's father west, and he took Lou with him, so my young friend saw that great country as it really is, not as it is painted. Once that young fellow stopped at some of the camps in the heart of the Rockies, and when he came homeward was with the determination to never attempt running away from home again. Mart, too, was cured of his desire for a miner's life by what Lou told him, and they now are, thanks to the failure of the plans laid in Mart's father's successful blasting of a thriving Pennsylvania city, and the experience I relate is a vivid memory they laugh over heartily when they meet.—Clarence G. Converse, in Yankee Blade.

A BRAVE FRENCHMAN.

Destruction of the Frigate Philadelphia and Capture of Tripoli.

Ninety years ago, the Chicago News, the pirates of Tripoli declared war against the United States on account of fancied grievances. He felt slighted because this government had presented the bey of Algiers with a fine frigate and had sent him none. The pasha began hostilities against the American commercial marine, and for its protection a squadron was sent to the Mediterranean, Decatur being commander of the sloop-of-war Norfolk of eighteen guns, but was afterward transferred to the Enterprise. In the winter of 1803-4 the frigate Philadelphia ran aground on a reef off Tripoli and was captured by the enemy. The Tripolines succeeded in getting her afloat and into the harbor. She came aboard of the misfortune that had befallen the frigate and volunteered to destroy her. He had captured the ketch Mastico, which he renamed the Intrepid and made ready for the service upon his daring scheme. Concealing a number of men below the decks, he stood boldly into the harbor of Tripoli on the 16th of February, 1804. He had given his ship the appearance of a vessel in distress, and her warlike characteristics not suspected. The Philadelphia was anchored just under the guns of the forts, but Decatur sailed up to her without hesitation. As soon as the two vessels were alongside Decatur and his men rushed on board the frigate, drove the panic-stricken crew overboard and then set fire to the ship. So fierce was this that the Americans jumped into their little vessel and made their escape without loss of a man, though they were made the target of 141 rapid-firing guns. The Philadelphia was completely destroyed. Admiral Nelson, of the British navy, pronounced Decatur's feat the most daring act of the age.

Cut Rates.

"I always get reduced rates on the railroads," said Jimmy Indiana," remarked the traveling salesman.

"How did you manage that?"

"I get them scalpers' tickets."—Puck.

Tasks by the Card.

At a school examination:

"Tell something about David."

"David was a king, sir."

"Quite right. What king of what?"

"Of chalk, sir."—Judge.

Spectatively Strange.

She—What is the best society?

He—Those whose members are not good.—Puck.

Learning the Fandom.

"Fairies be in getting awfully fat."

"That's only a tendency of the times."

"How so?"

"He is only imbibing himself into a corporation."—Puck.

Not Have Had Wings.

Clubber—You ought to have seen the cops run when Chinner began his lecture.

Subber—Were they as ripe as that?—Puck.

Sensational Science.

Editor—Have you any letters or other testimonials to show that you are a literary worker by profession?

Applicant—If you will look at my pants, sir, you will find that they are badly at the knees; and if you will particularly examine my coat, you will find that they are worn very shiny at the rear. Yes, sir, I am a literary man.—Good News.

ATTACKED BY A BUFFALO.

The Narrow Escape from Death of a Cross Timber Hunter.

Sir Samuel W. Baker in his latest book, "Wild Beasts and Their Ways," narrates an adventure which shows that a hunter's life may depend upon his attention to small details. Sir Samuel and Mr. Jarvis were shooting in Africa, when they saw a solitary bull buffalo on the opposite side of a small creek. Mr. Jarvis was evidently in a state of great excitement, for as the hunters left their horses to cross them he tore up the turf with his horns, and looked down the perpendicular bank, twelve feet high, as though meditating descent.

Dick, who carried a little rifle, a single barrel, with which he could only kill at close quarters, was left in charge of the ball, had by Sir Samuel's advice declined his charge of powder.

"Aim at the back of the neck if the buffalo charges in his head," said Sir Samuel to his companion, throwing a hard clod of earth that he felt into the water at the foot of the ridge. Down he sprang and into the harbor. The clod seemed to have the misfortune that had befallen the frigate and volunteered to destroy her. He had captured the ketch Mastico, which he renamed the Intrepid and made ready for the service upon his daring scheme. Concealing a number of men below the decks, he stood boldly into the harbor of Tripoli on the 16th of February, 1804. He had given his ship the appearance of a vessel in distress, but her warlike characteristics were not suspected. The Philadelphia was anchored just under the guns of the forts, but Decatur sailed up to her without hesitation. As soon as the two vessels were alongside Decatur and his men rushed on board the frigate, drove the panic-stricken crew overboard and then set fire to the ship. So fierce was this that the Americans jumped into their little vessel and made their escape without loss of a man, though they were made the target of 141 rapid-firing guns. The Philadelphia was completely destroyed. Admiral Nelson, of the British navy, pronounced Decatur's feat the most daring act of the age.

Cut Rates.

"I always get reduced rates on the railroads," said Jimmy Indiana," remarked the traveling salesman.

"How did you manage that?"

"I get them scalpers' tickets."—Puck.

Tasks by the Card.

At a school examination:

"Tell something about David."

"David was a king, sir."

"Quite right. What king of what?"

"Of chalk, sir."—Judge.

Spectatively Strange.

She—What is the best society?

He—Those whose members are not good.—Puck.

Learning the Fandom.

"Fairies be in getting awfully fat."

"That's only a tendency of the times."

"How so?"

"He is only imbibing himself into a corporation."—Puck.

Not Have Had Wings.

Clubber—You ought to have seen the cops run when Chinner began his lecture.

Subber—Were they as ripe as that?—Puck.

Sensational Science.

Editor—Have you any letters or other testimonials to show that you are a literary worker by profession?

Applicant—If you will look at my pants, sir, you will find that they are badly at the knees; and if you will particularly examine my coat, you will find that they are worn very shiny at the rear. Yes, sir, I am a literary man.—Good News.

RAW JOURNALISTS.

The Efforts of Ambitious Youngsters at Interviewing.

Some Specimens of the Ridiculous Figures Cut by the Journalistic Fools in the Presence of Prominent Persons.

The tests to which a reporter's stamina is subjected at times are severe, says the city editor, and the young man who has heard of the renowned visitor fibres without number, will be found dovetailed immediately forget all he ever knew concerning the gentleman in question. He will probably begin to feel that his youthful ideas of journalism were the outgrowth not of sound judgment but of dream-engendered midnight suppers and overdosed stomach. Pride, however, prevents his resigning and into the presence of the great man he goes, to be tied a blank, and with that empty feeling which comes from unaccustomed to associate with celebrities.

During the recent visit of ex-United States Senator Warner Miller to Chicago, one of these journalistic buds called on him at the Auditorium. The New Yorker received him graciously and offered him a seat. The bud took it. His mind was still a blank and a pinch did not start an idea. The silence was becoming a torture, when through the open window came the voice of a newsboy far below:

"All about Gen. Sherman dying."

It was an inspiration. The bud was not up on politics, but he thought he was, and with a smile of confidence he said:

"Senator, do you think that the death of Gen. Sherman will materially change the complexion of Ohio politics?"

The statesman looked into the reporter's face at the question was impressed and answered with a smile as he replied that he hardly thought it would. The bud thanked him and withdrew.

Several years ago when Ben Butler arrived in Chicago he was lead was dispatched to see him. He found the general-elect in the parlor of his room at the Grand Pacific hotel, gazing with one eye through the Jackson street window and with the other at the wind-vane that faced Clark street. The young bud was attacked by stage fright, but when his self-control returned he started to ask the general the popular question of the day:

"What, general, do you think of Kel's purchase by the Bostons?"

The general surveyed the bud with his left eye, and his reserve tone inquired:

"Who in thunder is Kel?"

Drawing himself toward to the tone of coping with such ignorance she bud, suddenly recovering his self-possession, bowed stiffly and, without deigning an answer, withdrew.

When Hamilton Fish first came to Chicago another bud from the same paper, chancing to be the only reporter available, was sent to tap the distinguished person. This bud seemed to retain his self-possession, but he was not much acquainted with his victim, whose active career antedated his own by nearly a quarter of a century. Mr. Fish was in a decidedly communicative mood, and to a dozen queries he returned monosyllabic replies. This bud, however, had a store of questions, and he turned to go, when a thought struck him.

"Mr. Fish," he innocently inquired, "were you ever in politics?"

The question struck Mr. Fish with the force of an electric shock. It appeared to his feet and, with mingled wrath, amazement and disgust pictured in his countenance, he said:

"What-a-t? Was I ever in politics! Why, young man, I was once vice president of the United States!"

And, like the guests of Macbeth, the bid stood not upon the order of his going, but departed with the echo of the thundered words.

ATTACKED BY A BUFFALO.

The Narrow Escape from Death of a Cross Timber Hunter.

Sir Samuel W. Baker in his latest book, "Wild Beasts and Their Ways," narrates an adventure which shows that a hunter's life may depend upon his attention to small details. Sir Samuel and Mr. Jarvis were shooting in Africa, when they saw a solitary bull buffalo on the opposite side of a small creek. Mr. Jarvis was evidently in a state of great excitement, for as the hunters left their horses to cross them he tore up the turf with his horns, and looked down the perpendicular bank, twelve feet high, as though meditating descent.

Dick, who carried a little rifle, a single barrel, with which he could only kill at close quarters, was left in charge of the ball, had by Sir Samuel's advice declined his charge of powder.

"Aim at the back of the neck if the buffalo charges in his head," said Sir Samuel to his companion, throwing a hard clod of earth that he felt into the water at the foot of the ridge. Down he sprang and into the harbor. The clod seemed to have the misfortune that had befallen the frigate and volunteered to destroy her. He had captured the ketch Mastico, which he renamed the Intrepid and made ready for the service upon his daring scheme. Concealing a number of men below the decks, he stood boldly into the harbor of Tripoli on the 16th of February, 1804. He had given his ship the appearance of a vessel in distress, but her warlike characteristics were not suspected. The Philadelphia was anchored just under the gu

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE, A. L. FORCE
Editors and Proprietors.

THE SAME OLD BANNER.

The Democratic party came into existence as a pledged organization for the protection and perpetuity of popular rights, and its origin was an absolute necessity, as a brief allusion to political history will show.

When the struggle for American independence ended victoriously, and the important question of establishing a Constitutional Government presented itself for practical solution, there was throughout the newly enfranchised land a numerous body of politicians bearing the name of Federalists. They had generally sustained the Revolutionary cause, but failed to divest themselves from monarchial influences. The virus of aristocracy will pass seed then.

Instead of being the friends of popular sovereignty, they were the avowed and urgent advocates of the very opposite. They wanted a consolidated government exclusively controlled by "the rich and the well born," or, in fact, the old English tone of privileged classes.

That was Federalism.

To battle against it the party of Democracy arose for determined action.

Thomas Jefferson and his compatriots vehemently denounced the views of the Federalists to be hostility to the liberties of the people and flagrant disloyalty to the principles of free representative government, for which the Declaration of Independence was signed and the Revolution waged and won.

Bitter was the contest between those opposing political forces. Democracy, Federalism and equal-rights Democracy.

Fortunately for the people, Jefferson conquered in the fight and the Democratic party unfurled the victor ensign to the proudly beats aloft and with undiminished zeal defends.

From the days of Federalism to the present time the Democratic party has been a target for arrows of political defamation because of its antagonism to class privileges of every name and nature.

Democracy lives unharmed.

Equal and exact justice to all the People, regardless of creed, class or condition, continues to be its rallying song.

THE GOVERNOR ON BUILDING LOANS.

To Protect the Interests of the People. He Disapproves a Bogus of Law.

Among the bills left in the hands of Gov. Abbett on adjournment of the New Jersey Legislature was one increasing the supervisory powers of the board of loan a sociations to do business in the State, news of which will be read with interest by those who are members of local building and loan associations, or who may contemplate joining one of them.

It has been the custom of the Governor to refer to the Commissioner of Banking and Insurance all bills changing the banking and insurance laws. He did so in this case, and received the following report from the Commissioner:

"The practical effect of this act, should it become a law, would be the admission of building and loan associations to membership in the laws of the United States, to do business in this State.

"In a general way the bill is objectionable, per se, as there exists no necessity or popular demand that I can find for the admission of foreign building and loan associations to do business in this State. The business done by such national associations is contrary to the theory of building and loan associations, which is, briefly, to enable people to own their homes on building bonus. The extension of the scope of such associations to enable them to do business in all parts of the country is not, in my opinion, desirable under existing circumstances, nor desirable to the people of this State, especially in view of the fact that this department would be practically helpless to attempt such supervision as it should make to protect their interests. Moreover, if the business of national associations should be very extensive, as they might check the present healthful growth of local associations throughout the State.

"For these reasons I am unable to recommend the enactment of this bill, notwithstanding its passage by both houses of the Legislature."

After receiving the report the Governor decided not to sign the bill, with the remark that he could see no reason to believe that it would serve any good purpose, and that to protect the interests of the people it was his manifest duty to disapprove the act.

ALLOTING THE SCHOOL TAX.

The Amount Apportioned Among the Counties to $2,062,560.

The State Board of Education has just apportioned the State school tax among the various counties of the State. The tax amounts to $2,062,560, based upon a school census of 490,342 at $4 per child. The amount due as follows: Atlantic county pays $24,203 37; Bergen, $53,678 37; Burlington, $75,120 17; Camden, $87,555 61; Cape May, $6,541 54; Cumberland, $45,381 94; Essex, $457,968 86; Gloucester, $45,813 68; Hudson, $384,535 98; Hunterdon, $63,306 45; Mercer, $123,467 50; Middlesex, $91,536 74; Monmouth, $120,095 56; Morris, $67,284 25; Ocean, $13,065 08; Passaic, $110,653 52; Salem, $41,661 31; Somerset, $59,623 38; Sussex, $39,780 54; Union, $173,693 94; Warren, $57,848 85.

Ten per cent. of the total of these sums goes into the State fund, which foots up this year $205,256.

In the apportionment of the tax some counties get back just what they pay. There are 64 of these. Seven breaks even with $4.14 to each school child; Passaic gets its own back with $4.30 to each child; Mercer, $4.64; Sussex, $4.68; Cape May, $4.70; Middlesex, $4.93; Burlington, $5 11; Warren, $5 44; Union, $5 62; Gloucester, $5.98. Six counties pay more than they receive, the difference going to the poorer counties. The paying counties are: Essex, with an apportionment of $6.40 to each child, and is out $2,396.07; Monmouth, although it gets back $6.42 for each school child, is out just $6,359; Mercer, getting $6 50 for each, is out $1,476; Salem, which receives $6 66 for each child, is out $9,450; Hunterdon gets $6.70 each and pays the State $5,570 more than is returned to it; Somerset is apportioned $6 90 for each child's being the highest made, yet fails to get back what it pays for school purposes by $5,262 93.

Five counties receive money. Cumberland gets only $4.05 for each unit of its school census, and yet receives $3,590 more than its inhabitants are called on to pay for school purposes. Camden county, with the same small apportionment, overdraws its own amount by $3,803. Ocean gets an apportionment of $4.11 per child, yet pulls in $7,410 raised by other counties. Atlantic emulates Ocean to the extent of $6,580, while receiving the low apportionment of $4.06. Union, with Sussex, with $4 20 per child, draws $8,955 more than it pays.

Do not go traveling without a bottle of Salvation Oil. It cures a bruise at once. 25 cents.

RAPID TRANSIT WINS AT LAST.

THE STREET RAILWAY ORDINANCE ADOPTED BY A VOTE OF 10 TO 1.

Only Two Votes Opposed to the Five Years' Proposition—Mr. Ackerman's "Big Abuse Personal Feeling" for the Good of the People.—Lengthy Council Session All Along the Route.—Another Important Midnight Council Meeting.

The ordinance granting to the Plainfield Street Railway Company a franchise to construct and operate in the streets of the city a system of electric trolley pattern was adopted on its third reading and final passage at Tuesday's meeting of the Common Council. Ten Councilmen voted for the ordinance. Councilman Ginna alone voted no.

It was nearly half-past nine when the routine matters before the Council had been disposed of and Councilman Hetfield moved to call up the street railway ordinance for final consideration.

Councilman Ackerman promptly asked where were the written consents of the property-owners along the proposed route. He was informed that they were in the hands of City Clerk, as the law required. He then suggested that the ordinance be on the table till the Councilmen on Monday and Tuesday could have opportunity to examine them. Both he and Councilman Ackerman said that per-onally they were strongly in favor of the railway, but they insisted that before adopting the ordinance a careful investigation of the consents should be made.

Councilman Hetfield said that the consents were all legal, and that everything was now lawfully ready for the passage of the ordinance and the construction of the road. He therefore moved that the ordinance be promptly taken up and passed.

Councilmen Ackerman, Bushmore and Ginna opposed the motion. Councilman Ackerman moved, as an amendment, that the ordinance be taken up at a previous meeting, providing for the examination of the consents by the Committee on Laws and Ordinances. President Bush put the motion, but the resolution had insisted that the committee should report on the examination of the consents by April 6. On that evening the committee had not reported within the specified time the resolution was dead. Councilmen Ackerman Ginna and Bushmore insisted that the consents were being cheated of examination of the consents by a mere technicality, a trick, and held that the true meaning of the resolution was to give the committee a chance to make proper examinations just as soon as the consents should have been filed. Of course they concluded—they could not be examined till the consents by April 6, for none had been filed by that date.

Councilman Hetfield—id that when the resolution fixing April 6 as the date of the report was passed it was supposed that the consents would all be ready for examination before that time. The company had then had 90 per cent. of the property-owners in favor of the road. Withdrawals of consent had cut that figure down for a time, so that the necessary majority was reduce to a useless minority. It was only within the past two or three days that the necessary majority had been secured and legally acknowledged. All of the consents now in the hands of the City Clerk were properly authenticated, and there was no question about any of them. They were there to speak for themselves.

The Law and Ordinance Committee again insisted that they had been promised opportunity to examine thoroughly the consents. Councilman Hetfield therefore moved that the Committee of the committee of the whole, and that all of the Councilmen be given four hours to examine the papers.

Councilman Ginna said that such a proposition was ridiculous, and the resolution knew it. Proper examination was a matter of days, not of hours.

Councilman Ackerman argued that it was advi able to be deliberate in this matter. It ill the Councilmen were given but a short time to examine the consents the ordinance was certain.

The motion to go into a committee of the whole was carried by a vote of 6 to 5, Councilmen Ackerman, Ginna, Johnston, Bushmore and Bee voting no. Councilman Ginna thereupon exclaimed that he refused to consent to take part in such a hurried and unsatisfactory investigation. Councilmen Ackerman and See said the same. The Councilmen came all left their seats, and considerable time was spent in lobbying and discussion. After a while all of the Councilmen agreed to examine the consents, and in two hours, at half-past eleven, Councilman Hetfield as chairman of the committee of the whole, reported to the Council that the committee of the whole had examined the consents and that the same were in due form. Councilman Ackerman, Gallup, Hetfield, Johnston, Moffett, Roberts, Bushmore, See, Smith and Spangenberg —10.

No—Councilman Ginna—1.

Councilman Ackerman explained his vote by a short speech.

We think—he said—that the gentlemen on this side of the house should have been consulted when the street railway matter first came up. We hardly feel that we have been treated with the fairness that the occasion demands. Advantage has been taken of a technicality to frustrate the proper handling of the matter which the gentlemen on this side of the house had intended. The ordinance was faulty. The compensation the company was to give for the franchise was not adequate. The corporation ought to be bound to agree to observe all future ordinances of the city. Still, the consents appeared to be all right, the railway system was a fairly good one, and he believed it would be a benefit to the city. He would therefore give the fair personal treatment he and his fellows had received from certain of the Councilmen. Though that treatment had been very severe, he would rise above it. He believed the introduction of the road to be in the interests of the city, and would therefore vote aye.

Applause from the lobby rewarded his speech.

Councilman Ginna explained that he was in opposition to the ordinance, that he opposed to the positive irregularity which had just been exhibited in overriding a resolution whose object was the careful examination of the consents. Therefore he would vote no.

Councilman Hetfield said that the Council had been accused of rushing the ordinance. But—he said—the street railway matter has been under consideration here for more than a year. Everything that had been done and that was now being done was in open and honorable day. He and his councilmanic friends were working solely for the people's interests. If they did not know that the consents were all right, and that everything was in good order, he and all his associates would vote against the ordinance very promptly. There was nothing to conceal, and there was no reason to fear delay. The consents were there to speak for themselves. If the matter was not all right not one Councilman present would vote for it.

Councilman Bushmore said that he felt keenly the personal treatment he had received in the matter, but would overlook it, as there was no doubt that the best interests of the city demanded the railway. He would gladly see the ordinance changed relative to compensation to the city in return for the franchise granted, relative to the company's agreeing to observe future city ordinances, but taking all things into consideration he would vote aye.

The route of the railway as now finally adopted is as follows:

Beginning at a point in Somerset street at the line of North Plainfield Township and running thence southerly to Front street, thence through Front street easterly to Park avenue, thence through Park avenue to Sixth street, thence through Sixth street southerly to Madison avenue, thence through Plainfield avenue southerly to Seventh street, thence through Seventh street easterly to Monroe avenue, thence through Monroe avenue northerly to Front street, thence through Front street easterly to Green avenue, and thence through Green avenue northerly to Somerset street, thence through North avenue northerly to Pierce street.

Another question that caused considerable discussion was the compensation set forth in an ordinance introduced by Councilman Ackerman, to macadamize Madison avenue according to the terms of an ordinance that has long been on the books.

Councilman Hetfield insisted that the matter be tabled until it could come up in proper shape. He said that the property-owners along the street to be improved should agree to pay a fair proportion of the cost—at least 15 cents per running foot of frontage. It was unfair—he considered—to seek to saddle on the city all the expense of macadamizing this thoroughfare. He said that the street railway were willing to pay fair subscriptions.

Councilman Ackerman said that his resolution merely asked for the enforcement of an existing law. To the Mr. Hetfield replied that there was an ordinance fully as old providing for the macadamizing of Third street, and that the Councilmanic—he added—most of the residents were comparatively poor people, yet all were willing to pay the customary percentage of the cost of macadamizing for the sake of having the street put in good condition. If these were to be compelled to contribute—he asked—before their street could be attended to, the wealthier residents of Madison avenue ought to be held to a similar obligation. The Madison avenue people were just as willing to contribute as were the Third street people.

The resolution to macadamize Madison avenue without requiring any contribution from the property-owners was tabled by a vote of 6 to 5, Councilmen Ackerman, Ginna, Johnston, Bushmore and See voting no.

The application of Frank E. Miller for a six-months' liquor license at Hotel Netherwood, together with the application of James O'Neill to keep a saloon at 126 South Second street, was referred to the Committee on Licenses.

Councilman Ginna, of the special committee appointed to present to the Jersey Central Railroad people the matter of the proposed removal of the freight house, reported that the committee had had a very pleasant interview with President Maxwell and the other officers of the company, but had come to no definite understanding. The company—he said—thought that the city ought to make concessions. The report was received and filed as a matter of progress.

The Committee on Laws and Ordinances, through Councilman Bushmore, chairman, recommended that no action be taken in the matter of the proposed refunding of alleged illegal New street sewer assessments amounting to $600, until the city's liability could be clearly shown. The recommendation was adopted.

The claim of policeman Patrick Lynch for $60, being salary for one month when he was not on duty, was reported correct by the Committee on Laws and Ordinances, with the recommendation that it be paid at once.

Councilman Hetfield moved that the report be received and tabled, in order that the written opinion of the Corporation Counsel might be obtained in the case. Councilman Bushmore said that Counselor Marsh had already told him that the bill was correct and ought to be paid. Councilman Hetfield replied that probably the Corporation Counsel was not yet familiar with the facts in the case. Policeman Lynch—he explained —had absolutely refused to do duty during the time to which the bill referred because he had been served with a copy of a complaint against him he had voluntarily declined to serve on the force while the charge was pending against him. For refusing to do his duty he could have been laid off altogether. The city had no right to pay him for work which he had refused to do.

The matter was tabled by a vote of 6 to 5, and by a unanimous vote it was referred to the Corporation Counsel for his written opinion, to be given at the next meeting.

The Committee on Laws and Ordinances reported that the claim of Tunis J. Carey, as Captain of Police, for a year's salary for work which he did not do, was incorrect, as it claimed pay for time when his office had expired by limitation, and by the Corporation Counsel referred back to him for correction.

A written opinion of the Corporation Counsel was received to the effect that the oil was at liberty to accept Sandford avenue as a public thoroughfare, and by a unanimous vote the avenue was accepted, and it was ordered that four electric lights should be placed on the street.

The Corporation Counsel having informed the Committee on Laws and Ordinances that the Council had the right to appropriate money by resolution as had been done in offering a reward of $500 for the capture of Policeman Lynch's assailant, Councilman Bushmore introduced an ordinance legally offering the reward. The ordinance was passed on its first and second readings, and was ordered engrossed and advertised.

It was several minutes past midnight when the Council adjourned.

Gone from His Old Post.

Most of the readers of THE PRESS, and all of the travelers on the Jersey Central Railroad, and especially the ladies, will regret the loss of that most efficient and popular police officer, James Humphry, who had been stationed on West street, in New York, for nearly 23 years, and who has become so great a favorite with every one who crosses that crowded thoroughfare. His absence of late has not been seen for a week past, and THE PRESS is told that he has resigned his position as metropolitan police officer to assume a position in the new Central Railroad building on the corner of West and Liberty streets.

In connection with this building THE PRESS further that Elias Hoffkins, of Rockview avenue, North Plainfield, is to have entire charge as superintendent of the building, employing a force of about 80 women and 25 men under him.

There are five Otis's hydraulic elevators now in operation, and none will be run as are not occupied by the company are already mostly rented. The building is one of the most substantial of recent and modern construction, and will be fitted up with every known and improved convenience.

VERITAS.

IT IS A FRIENDLY SUIT.

Gentlemen Wanger Tells Eastwood President Stops Not to Worry.

Almost everybody in Plainfield knows Stephen Wanger. He may be seen on the streets of Plainfield any day, with a spice of a budding peach tree which he tells was forced to bloom in a few days or so, Summer or Winter, by the use of his great and fertilizer. He was in THE PRESS office the other day, and the secret came out that he has brought suit against the Plainfield, Dunkirk and Southern Railroad Company for $50,000, charging that he had been roughly handled by a conductor on a train. His complaint sets forth that he claims $50,000 "because my life was worth that to his family and very many thousands more to his nation or $5,000,000 people."

Indefendably he tells President Randolph of the road how he can make fortunes by "using the odoriferous refuse of Hackensack meadows to make fertilizing Hackensack meadows to make fertilizing Hackensack meadows to make fertilizing [illegible] Scran]."—he added—"can change the meadows into gold bars at a trifling expense. Now this priceless refuse is being daily wasted by careless refuse is being daily wasted by careless refuse is being daily wasted by care

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

—Gately, the Concords' deaf mute pitcher of 1889, is dead.

—The Record of Saturday contained eighteen columns of live advertising.

—The Board of Trustees of the Crescent League at a meeting last week, decided not to open the club house on Sundays.

—The Sunday-school building of Holy Cross church will be enlarged during the coming summer to double its present capacity.

—The High School pupils will give a concert, under the direction of Mr Hassell, for the benefit of the school library fund, Thursday, April 30.

—Workmen have broken ground to begin the erection of a chapel for the new Grace Protestant Episcopal church at Sycamore and Seventh street.

—The Plainfield Bicycle Club baseball team have just received their new suits of duck from Merwin, Hulbert & Co., through their representative, E. B. Ryder.

—To-day Martin Buck in his old place as school janitor in Crescent avenue, Saturday the thereafter, will do more than anything else to help revive the public's interest in base-ball.

—One of the girls could beat Washington Park in an egg race. She is an expert on the accordion, and wields the instrument with remarkable skill and persistency. The house next door is to let—but that's another story.

—A number of the young society people over in the Park are stricken with the prosaic and indelegant measles, and are wondering why their unusual disease couldn't have arranged to visit them during Lent and be done with it.

—George Dengler secured from the Somerset County Board of Excise Commissioners at their meeting last week the renewal of the license to keep the inn and tavern which he has successfully conducted for more than 20 years. The other North Plainfield applications were laid over.

—Dr. Jas. Taylor, a graduate of the American Veterinary College of New York, and who has taken a special course in surgery at the University of Pennsylvania, is located in the Park Hotel, in Plainfield. He will open his office at an early date. He comes highly recommended.

—Joseph Pike has left long known hoe to hoe a row in Plainfield. The object in trying to make a name for himself as a record breaker. On a bicycle which he has possessed only since last Thursday he rode from No. 5 Park avenue through the Boulevard to Bethlehem, to the Boulevard Hotel in Newark, in 1 hour and 14 minutes, recall. Considering the heat and other things this is talked of by wheelmen as an excellent record.

—The premises opposite French's Mills, on Somerset street, consisting of a small lot and building containing a store and tenement, grocery store, were sold at auction by T. J. Gillen recently, by authority of R. M. Stover, administrator. They were sold to the estate of Peter Dunn, deceased. P. M. French bought the property for $3,000, which amount just covers the debts that encumber the property.

—At a meeting of North Plainfielders held in Spencer's Hall Monday night another step forward was taken towards the proposed extension of Peace street as North Broadway into the borough. L. M. French was added to the committee in charge of the matter, and the committee were authorized to procure from a competent surveyor a survey of the proposed route. A report of the survey will be made at a meeting to be called by chairman Place.

BARN BURNERS STILL AT WORK.

Another Attempt at Incendiarism in the Heart of the City.

An attempt was made Saturday night to burn the barn owned by George A. Moore, the butcher, situated at the rear of Dr. Probasco's East Front street residence, and adjoining the other old outbuildings at Gardner estate.

Ina manmade material saturated with kerosene was set on fire, but fortunately the fire other than that of the barn occured or was extinguished by the shower of the evening. Had the flames gained headway a bad fire must have resulted. The barn is located not far from the one that was recently burned at the rear of the Stiles building. It contained four horses, which must surely have perished had the fire gained any headway, so carefully was the inflammable material arranged, and so near was the oil-soaked waste and straw placed to the walls. The authorities should be able to keep the matter quiet, hoping to secure a clue to the fire-bug, but the news of the attempted incendiarism got about town yesterday, and is now on hundreds of tongues. Numerous people visited the barn Sunday and poked their canes in the half-burned rubbish, in search of some article the recognition of which might lead to the discovery of the identity of the incendiary.

Injured by a Gun Explosion.

While Dan Terry, the well-known shot, was returning home from the shooting tournament of the south Plainfield Gun Club last week, accompanied by his little brother-in-law, Douglas L. Darby, they saw a snake. Dan picked up his gun and placed a cartridge in it to shoot the snake, and in doing so exploded and lacerated the thumb of the left hand to such an extent that it is feared it will be necessary to amputate it at the first joint. The snake escaped.

Methodist Appointments.

By the appointments made in the Newark Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, churches in this vicinity are provided for as follows:

Bound Brook—F. A. Mason, from First Church, Irvington.

New Providence—W. W. Vanderhoef, from Plainfield, N. J.

Metuchen—A. A. Graves.

Mount Herbert—D. C. Ramsey, supply.

Dunellen—W. C. Hinson, from Riverside dem.

Roselle—G. H. Bonsall.

The Rev. Chas. Bayard Mitchell of course remains with the flock in Plainfield, where he is so well beloved.

Big Majority for Golden-rod.

At every public school in Plainfield the Arbor Day vote on the pupils' choice for a national flower was by a large plurality in favor of the golden-rod. THE PRESS published exclusively last Friday, the same day the balloting took place, the vote in detail of all the schools except the Bryant. The vote in the Bryant school was as follows:

Goldenrod	47
Arbutus	35
Violet	32
Daisy	1

This completes the list. The final vote of all the schools on the four leaders in the floral race stands as follows:

Goldenrod	1,264
Violet	1,000
Arbutus	1,000
Daisy	1,000

WHEN I began using Hyo Cream Balm my catarrh was so bad I had bounded the whole world. Now I am entirely cured. Sold by druggists. That has almost entirely disappeared, and I have no pain.—Mrs. Sarah Hoffman, Bellefonte, Pa.

PERSONALS.

An extra Assembly is to be held at The Casino, March 30th evening.

Miss Hettie Glen, of West Front street, is spending a week with friends in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Benson, organist at St. Mary's church, is confined to the house with the grip.

Miss L. E. Gilbert, of Staten Island, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. P. J. Horr, of Bay street.

Counselor Reed has returned from a highly enjoyable fishing trip. He caught 60 trout.

School Trustee J. B. Probasco, M. D., will sail on Saturday by steamer "Ostara", for Mediterranean.

All the nine lays if this city now have bicycles excepting Dr. Yerkes and the Rev. Mr. Bills.

The Rev. T. Logan Murphy will sell on the premises, "Majestic Point," No. 10, to-morrow evening in Europe.

Gen. Eli Long and daughter Maggie, of Penn Yan, N. Y., and formerly of North Plainfield, are the guests of Mayor Force.

The Misses Jebert have returned to their Newark home from a visit to Mr. and Mrs. R. F. B. Hardman of Bay street.

The Rev. Cornelius Schenck united in marriage at the parsonage, Monday evening, Martin D. Coddington and Miss Katie Stahl, both of North Plainfield.

The wedding of Miss Anna Anderson to John Emil Strandberg was solemnized by the Rev. E. M. Rodman at the bride's residence in the city Saturday morning.

A very pleasant reception was held by the ladies of the M. E. church in Woodside Thursday, to welcome the Rev. C. B. Mitchell in his reappointment as pastor for another year.

The Presbyterian remarks that Colonel Mason W. Tyler, of this city, presents a striking contrast to his law partner, General Henry E. Tremain, the former being dark as a negro and the latter his lightest shade of blonde.

Mr. and Mrs. George F. Brown, who have been in California for a year or more on account of the ill health of Mrs. Brown, have returned to Plainfield. Mrs. Brown is not so well as when she left town, and Mr. Brown also is ailing.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cooley, mother of Dr. J. H. Cooley of North Plainfield, died Monday morning at the Sanitarium, where she had been ill a long time. She was in her seventy-second year. Funeral services will be held Friday afternoon at 1 o'clock.

The marriage of Chas. Holstein to Miss Lavina Wenham took place Saturday afternoon at the home of the bride's father, this city. Flea Hamilliter was bridesmaid, and Edward Hamilliter was best man. The wedding supper was served after the ceremony.

Leo Ball's second season from a recent severe attack of the grip, and engaged in the real estate business. He is disposing of his property in the East, prior to his departure with his family in a few weeks for Tacoma, where he will make his home in the future.

The Rev. Dr. John C. Bliss, formerly pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church of this city, preached to large congregations in the morning and evening at the First Presbyterian church Sunday. He was the guest during Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Closson, 132 East Front street.

A very pretty christening took place in St. Mary's church Sunday, when the name of Helen was bestowed by the Rev. P. E. Supple on the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lynch, of Madison avenue. Peter Flynn, Jr., was chosen godfather, and Miss Maggie Lynch godmother.

Funeral services over the remains of Hester V., widow of the late James C. Dingley, were held from her late residence, 87 Third avenue, Newark, Sunday. The deceased lady was a sister-in-law of Mrs. Asenath T. Nelson, of 117 West Front street, and had many friends in Plainfield. She was 75 years of age.

The remains of Harvey McGowan were interred in this city, Monday, after funeral services with high mass at the Catholic church of Westfield. The was a well-known and esteemed citizen of that town. His death occurred on Wednesday of last week. The property he leaves will be inherited by his nephew, Louis M. Feehily, of Boston.

Among the pleasant possibilities of the very near future is that the charming club-house of the Hillside Tennis Club, described exhaustively in THE PRESS, will become the headquarters for the proposed Plainfield chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, for the Tuesday club already in existence, and for the Four-in-Hand Club that is now being projected.

Further information regarding the proposed will of Hiram Bing, showing that the share of his nephew, Thomas W. King of this city, will be greater than Tom Paine surmised Monday. The $500,000 left to be individual; $100,000 goes to public institutions and religious objects; $150,000 to the wife of the testator, and $100,000 shared equally by the three nephews.

Mrs. Hannah C. Pierson, widow of the late Daniel Pierson, died at her home, 86 Duer street, at 7:30 o'clock Thursday, of heart disease, after an attack of the grip. Mrs. Pierson leaves one son, the Rev. J. Judson Pierson, a pastor-elect of Woodbury, and one daughter, Mrs. Fred Bailey. The deceased was a sister to the Rev. Joseph Buchanan and to Congressman James Buchanan of Trenton.

At the funeral services over the remains of Mrs. Hannah C. Pierson, from her late residence, 86 Duer street, Sunday afternoon, the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes preached a tender and appropriate text, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints"—Ps. cxvi. 15—and a choir consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Bigelow, Miss Baker and Miss Runyon sang beautifully the selection "Some Sweet Day, by and by." Today the remains were taken to Cherry Hill, Hunterdon county, and laid to rest beside those of her late husband.

The will of the late Rufus King, one of Ohio's best-known jurists, and uncle of Thomas W. King, of this city, was filed for probate in that city, has been admitted to probate. The estate is valued at $300,000. More than $100,000 is given to public institutions and religious objects. Valuable bibliotheca received by the testator from his parents and grandparents, together with all his books, pictures, plate, and familiar articles are to be shared by the testator's three nephews, Wm. M., Thos. W., and Rufus King, Jr., who will also share a portion of the estate valued at $30,000.

Edmund A. Seely died at his home in Stodch Plains, Tuesday, after a week's illness of grip. He was 71 years old, and well-known from a long residence in this vicinity. The big mills that were swept away in the flood of 1869, bore his name, and represented the fortune that he had spent a lifetime in building up. He was a member of the New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society, and other organizations. Funeral services will be held at his late home, Thursday afternoon at two o'clock. By his request, formulated Lodge, F. & A. M., of this city, of which he has long been a member, will bury his remains with masonic ceremonies.

THE HILLSIDE TENNIS CLUB.

Only Organized a Year Ago Yet Already in Possession of Grounds and Club House of Its Own.

THE HILLSIDE Tennis Club, with grounds on Madison avenue near Broadway, was organized a year ago under the following named officers:

President—Robt. S. Morrison.
Vice President—W. M. Truman.
Treasurer—D. W. C. Irvine.
Secretary—George P. Moffitt.

The Club built two fine tennis courts which were in constant use during the Summer and Autumn by the members and their wives, daughters and sisters. This Spring the Club increases the size of the courts and builds an excellent croquet ground. These will probably also be preserved a quiet ground and an archery field.

Mrs. Edson Fox, who so long owned and occupied the picturesque old red cottage on the grounds, has lately moved into her newer home on Hillside avenue, and she most kindly placed the old cottage at the disposal of the club for the purpose of a club-house. This was promptly accepted and a committee appointed, of which Charles W. Quayle was Chairman, whose duties were to quickly fit up three rooms on the ground floor for the Club's comfort.

This has been most admirably done, and the cottage is as antique and unique as bodies so old a house. The walls have been colored yellow, a handsome colonial brick fireplace is built, a bright rug carpets the floors, an abundance of really old furniture procured, curtains hung and a number of old steel engravings placed. A long, cross-timbered room the furniture is a spinet, the original of the modern grand piano. This seats is known to be very old, and there is reason to believe that it was brought to this country by Lord Stirling about the middle of the eighteenth century. The club is also receiving as loans, some interesting articles from members, and there seem to be abundant reasons to believe that the enterprise of the Tennis Club will result in adding greatly to the social pleasures of the city of Plainfield. One of the rooms is exclusively the "ladies room" and from its bay window commands the club grounds. As the latter can be pleasantly witnessed from inside when desired.

On holidays and Saturday afternoons the ladies are requested to turn serve ten to the players and guests.

At the annual election just held the following officers were chosen:

President—Mr. Morrison.
Vice President—Mr. Quayle.
Treasurer—Mr. Irvine.
Secretary—Mr. Bogue.
Executive Committee—Twenty-five members. The authorized number is forty, so there are vacancies for desirable candidates.

MELOPOIA'S SECOND MUSICALE.

A Very Pleasant Affair Throughout, Though Not Pretentious.

The second private musicale of the Melopoia Society was given at the Casino Tuesday, and was as successful an entertainment as those preceding it. The society's members, good, the programme well rendered, and the programme varied.

Miss Alice M. Stoddard, the solo soprano of the evening, needs no introduction to readers of this paper, and formed a part of the concert given last year under the auspices of the Crescent Avenue church choir for the building fund. On Tuesday night, as then, well received, and sang beautifully two compositions of W. R. Chapman's, Summer Song and Lullaby, which are very vocal. Miss Stoddard was led by the composer. Miss Stoddard thoroughly understands the capabilities of her voice and uses it in a way that is very pleasing.

Not the least among the leading singers was Miss Alice Holmes. As was shown last night there is sometimes honor in being a substitute. She sang a number from "Semiramide", Rossini, which displaced the flexibility of her voice, and was well within her range. She was encored, and gave Ah! Fillidi al mio core, a mezzo soprano voice of rich sympathetic quality, which gave great pleasure to the audience.

Miss Florence Hall, pianist, however, as his voice sounded tired at times. He sang Meyer Helmund's "Gondolier's Love Song", with "My Love is Like a Red, Red Rose" as an encore.

Alexander Lambert, Director of the New York College of Music, was well received and was given an encore for his fine rendering of Liszt's Rhapsodie, which were not, however, those named on the programme. Another mistake in imagining that the people of Plainfield cannot appreciate the best. Had he played Valse de Concert by Moszkowski as announced, he would have been better pleased. The selection substituted for selection for the Chopin ballade in the second part. He was particularly a delight pointment to those who had heard pianists of the possible presence of Mr. Parkhuman.

A duet, Carascosio's "Nearest and Dearest", by Miss Stoddard and Mr. Hilliard was also a long-cared feature of an enjoyable entertainment, as were also Miss Stoddard's solos, Nebolingen's Serenade and "Old Folks at Home", sung with great feeling and accompanied by the flute. The latter selection had been arranged in very sweet harmony by Mr. Chapman and was sung by request.

The accompanists, the individual performers was Miss Jessie Utter. Before he knew that Plainfield possessed anything approaching to the way of an accompanist, Mr. C. Spaman had engaged Mr. Harris for the season. Through a mistake on the part of the latter he was not present to play for the last meeting of the club, as Miss Utter proved herself thoroughly capable.

Of the chorus work, the acapella songs were by far the least among the individual performers. "Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer" all, arranged by Curtiss, was especially sweet. Garrett's "My Love is like a red, red rose" is old but pleasing, and was very well rendered by the chorus. "Hail to the Chief" by Hatton, "Hail to Cherry Blossom" was not sung quite so smoothly as the others.

The orchestra which were given from Vogrich's Captivity were "The Prayer", Chorus of Priests, Chorus of Israelitish Women, the Cyrus Chorus and the final Choral. They were well sung, but the disjointed selections one can hardly appreciate the great work of the composer. "The Captivity" is undoubtedly the greatest production of its kind that has appeared for years. It will be given in its entirety for the first time next Tuesday evening at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city, by Mr. Chapman's various societies, making a chorus of several hundred voices. In this concert the Melopoia Society will bear an important part and will attend as a body the final rehearsal to-morrow evening.

The last concert of the season will probably be postponed to May 5th, when the subscribers are promised Madame Vogrich, Herr Dipple and Herr Fischer.

Shooting.

There was a good attendance of lovers of trap shooting on the grounds of the South Plainfield Gun Club last week. Some fine scores were made at inanimate targets. Among those present was Milt F. Lindsley, agent for the renowned American wood powder, and his wife, who is an expert at the traps, under the nom de plume of "Wanda". Yesterday she made four straight kills at live birds in such a handsome manner as to bring forth applaudits of all present. Jakob Poetz acted as official scorer in his usual satisfactory manner.

GUILTY BS WORTH.

An "Innocent" Prisoner Submits Cheerfully to City Court Punishment.

John Sloane was a prisoner before City Judge Coddington Monday morning on the charge of drunkenness and fighting on the street. Thomas Fahey, who had been implicated with him in the row, stood trial and paid a fine of $15 weeks ago, but until recently the police had been unable to lay their hands on Sloane. He said that that was it because he was hiding, but because he was off looking for work. He claimed to be entirely innocent in the matter, and said that he was sober and was going to his boarding place when Fahey stopped him on the street, insulted him, and began to strike out with his fists. Of course a fight followed, but he had acted solely in self-defense. Fahey, he considered, was the guilty party.

When the court set the case down for trial at 4:30 that afternoon Sloane objected. He had all his witnesses on hand to prove his innocence, and insisted that the trial should proceed immediately.

"I won't agree to no postponement"—he said, but when Sergeant Lynch ordered him to a cell he consented to wait, "not to put on so much lugs", he quieted down for awhile.

It developed that while he was not guilty he was willing to retract his plea and plead guilty for the sake of having the case promptly disposed of. He didn't want to be caught to pay a fine of more than $5, though.

Sergeant Lynch told him he could'nt plead guilty to any specific amount. He could plead guilty $5 worth. The court suggested that he might, if he so desired, plead nes valt contendere, which Mr Sloane said was just what he had in mind to do. Cheerfully and without a murmur he received the information that he must pay a fine of $8, and said he was glad to get off so easy. He paid the money of his valuable time over so trivial a matter. His landlady loaned him the price of the fine.

PLAYING BASE-BALL FOR FUN.

Already the "Ki." Boys Are Having a Jolly Good Time.

The base-ball team of the Plainfield Bicycle Club have entered on a season of liveliest sport. Last Saturday they met and conquered a picked nine of North Plainfielders. They were their first game. they recorded it a victory by the score of 23 to 16. There was considerable excitement during the playing, and had any spectator been present he would have found an excellent opportunity to shed tears of sympathy over the injury to catcher Wyckoff, who split his hand badly. Cheerfully and without a word at time after receiving the hurt, but had to retire at last in favor of Erickson. Burt was pitcher. J. Sandford short stop, F. Bell first baseman, Tilney second baseman, S. McCutchen third baseman, Roger Murray left fielder, R. Erickson right fielder, and Gus Shepard centre fielder.

The Bicycle team will probably play a "scrub" nine from among the other members of the "Ki" club. May 2 they will play against the Lead Mines, and May 9 the Westfield Athletic Club players will be their opponents. The morning of Decoration Day they will astonish the natives at Somerville, with base-ball playing against the team of that place. The morning of July 4 the Somerville will play against them here.

The boys have all of their own on Park avenue, opposite E. L. Pinch's. They are playing base-ball for fun, and don't charge any admission fee. If the boys want to see a good game they will be accommodated with comfortable seats, but the boys are independent, and don't care whether they have a big crowd of spectators or not.

CRESCENTS STILL WINNING.

They Keep Steadily at the Top, in the Race for Pennant Championship.

The Plainfield Crescent League played their fourth game in the Central New Jersey whist tournament last week, and won it. Their opponents were the Elizabeth Athletic Club, and the score of defeat for the first time. Among the Elizabeth players was Mayor Rankin. The players were all royally entertained by the Crescents. The game was a most interesting one, and resulted in the following score:

Crescents.		A. A. C.
Kirk & Bates	36	Mecker & Bowen	32
Keller & Miller	30	Hellner & Fleming	30
Dunham & Daniel	37	Rankin & Crane	29
	103		91
Kirk & Bates	31	Rankin & Crane	27
Keller & Miller	26	Mecker & Bowen	31
Dunham & Daniel	31	Hellner & Fleming	32
	88		61
Kirk & Bates	25	Hellner & Fleming	29
Keller & Miller	30	Rankin & Crane	30
Dunham & Daniel	28	Mecker & Bowen	30
	83		89
	322		234

To Camp at Sea Girt in July.

The State Military Board has decided to allow the First Brigade of the National Guard to spend a week in camp at the well-appointed State encampment grounds at Sea Girt during the month of July. Quartermaster Gen. Donnelly has put a large force of men at work on the encampment grounds, and will make several needed improvements for the accommodation of the soldiers before the encampment begins. The regimental rifle teams and State sharpshooters will begin their target practice at the ranges on the encampment grounds about July 1.

Paying Off the Debt.

The Ladies' Christian Work Society of the Trinity Reformed church have done nobly in their work of paying off a large portion of the church debt, and will not rest content until the debt is entirely wiped out. In order to raise further money for the debt fund they purpose giving a tea at the residence of Mrs. F. A. Church, Craig place, Thursday evening, from 4 to 7. They will be glad to see all their friends at the tea. Though no admission fee will be charged, they will accept offerings of 25 cents or more. A very pleasant social time is expected.

Tome—Marsh.

The marriage ceremony of Miss A. Bertha Marsh and John J. Tome of Harlem, took place at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. John D. Bonner, Monday, April 13. Miss Marsh was formerly a resident of this city and is a daughter of Randolph Marsh. The bride wore a handsome traveling suit of helio-trope henrietta cloth, with hat and gloves to match, and carried a large bouquet of lilies of the valley. The presents were rich and numerous, and included a solid silver tea service and other valuable articles. The happy couple, after a wedding breakfast, left on the evening train for a tour through the south.

Fire and Matches Cause a Blaze.

Fire which Chief Engineer Doane attributes to mice and matches was discovered in the shoe store of Rogers Bros., 12 West Front street, at about half-past 9 o'clock Thursday. The blaze started among the drawers and shelving, and caused considerable damage. Police Captain Grantland was on the scene, and 12, but though the department responded promptly their services were not needed. Harry Connett, who lives over the store, entered the place through the rear and put out the fire with buckets of water.

The alarm drew a crowd from Reform and Music halls.

Rogers Bros. wish the public to appreciate the fact that but a small proportion of their stock was damaged, and that they can still fit any foot.

FISTIC ENCOUNTER IN AN ORCHARD.

It All Happened Because Barry Thought He Had Been Insulted.

Charles Barry had of late been annoyed by the circulation of a report that he was a married man, which report had reached the ear of his sweetheart and had caused trouble. Publication of a notice in The Press that he would prosecute the author of the same if the story were not stopped did not succeed in soothing the ire of the offended, and last Friday night Barry approached John Sebern personally and accused him of being the originator of the malicious fabrication. A heated dispute followed, and as a result of challenge and counter-challenge the two men adjourned to an orchard over the brook and fought the matter out to a finish. Those who have since seen the combatants say that indeed was the more badly punished of the two. At any rate, Barry seems satisfied, and considers that in punishing Set orb he has vindicated himself against the stories that have been afloat.

The Young Pastors Meet at the Old Home Rep.

Five candidates for the ministry selected before Bishop Mallalieu, the Rev. C. B. Mitchell, D. D. Herbert of this city, and the other members of the Newark M. E. Conference, at Washington, recently, for examination preparatory to ordination. One of the disciplinary requirements was that the young men should promise not to use tobacco in any form from the time of their pledge until they be answered promptly that they would keep from the use of the weed, another hesitated and then gave the same answer, and still another, a Methodist of long standing, replied, in a low tone:

"I'll try."

"No, no! That won't do"—ejaculated one of the elder members of the conference—"that you will, brother."

The Bishop said he could not ordain the young man unless he promised not to use tobacco, and finally the young man plucked up courage and said:

"I will."

He was commended for his action by the Bishop and the other members of the conference.

"How is it"—asked a reporter of one of the elder members of the conference—"that you insist on new members giving up the week, while a number of the old members are great smokers?"

"Oh, well"—was the reply—"we can't reform the old preachers, but we can refuse to take in young ones unless they promise not to use tobacco."

"But if he used to young men it is in old ones; is it not ?"—the reporter asked.

"Yes, I suppose so"—the minister hesitatingly replied.

On Monday morning three ministers who are prominent in the conference and held good appointments met in this city, and on a bread to enjoy a smoke where the young men who had just been deprived of the solace of a cigar could not see them. But it happened that the Rev. Dr. Nott, pastor of the Washington Presbyterian church, and three newspaper men, chanced to ride that way, and espied the ministers with cigars in their mouths. A great shout went up from the carriage, and innumerable jibes were hurled at the smokers, who had little to say but looked their unutterable ire.

What the guileless reporters have since been trying to settle is: Why is there a discrimination between young and old ministers in this respect?

Dunnlen's New Pastor.

The Rev. Walter C. Kinney, formerly of Riverside church, has been appointed pastor of the M. E. church of Dunellen, and the members of the church are well pleased with the appointment. Mr. Kinney is a young man of rare ability as a preacher and an earnest worker among the young people. With his accomplished wife, who is not a whit behind him in good works, he will find a field well equipped for work.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

As Exclusively Announced in THE PRESS

[From The New York Sun.]

The whist tournament that is in progress along the line of the Central Railroad of New Jersey is giving the game quite a boom. The clubs represented are the Bergen Point, Elizabeth Athletic Club, the Westfield Athletic Club, Fanwood whist Club, and the Crescent League of Plainfield. The Crescents have now a lead of 67 points in the series, having lost but one game. On Wednesday night they defeated the strong team of the Elizabeth Athletic Club by 18 points in one of the most brilliantly contested games of the series.

Ousted Not to Wait for the Law.

[From The Perth Amboy Herald.]

Fire-escapes are to be placed on all the school buildings of Plainfield, N. J. There is nothing remarkable in this item. But it is remarkable that a body of men who have the responsibility of the safety of the school children in their charge should wait until they are compelled by the law to place fire-escapes upon the school buildings. Even if there was no law compelling the placing of fire-escapes upon buildings the Board of Education of a town or city should see to it that the buildings occupied by children should be surrounded by every possible safeguard against fire and panic. Fire-escaped should be placed upon every school building over one story in height, and fire drills should be introduced into all schools as a means of clearing a building quickly in case of need.

A Bicycle for Their Pastor.

The members of the Seventh-Day Baptist church have taken their pastor, the Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, literally "off his feet", by presenting to him a handsome safety bicycle. The scheme started at a business meeting of the church, but was kept entirely secret from the pastor. Two of the young men volunteered to collect the amount needed to push the matter through, and everybody spoken to heartily fell in with the proposition. When the safety arrived, and in a mask and unsuspecting way was left at the parsonage. The surprise was complete. Whether or not the doctor called in the bicycle and had a great rejoicing is not recorded, but at any rate his progress will henceforth be more rapid than at any other time in his theological course, and those of his flock who have hitherto escaped a pastoral call because of their distant residence need not wonder in the least at receiving one any moment, during these charming spring days.

Mrs. Keenan Assisted the Crescents.

The West End Athletic Club, of Somerville have arranged the following schedule of base-ball games for the season:

May 2, Rutgers College at Somerville.
" 9, N. J. A. C. at Somerville.
" 16, Allentons at Somerville.
" 23, N. J. A. C. at Bound Brook.
" 30, Seton Hall College at Somerville.
June 6, Rutgers at Somerville.
June 8, Seton Hall College at Somerville.
" 13, Allentons at Somerville.
" 20, Rutgers at Somerville.
July 4, Ridgewood at Somerville.
" 11, Rutgers at Somerville.
" 18, Plainfield at Plainfield.
" 25, Cuban Giants at Somerville.
" 28, ——— at Somerville.
Aug. 1, Westfield at Westfield.
" 8, Plainfield at Somerville.
" 15, ——— at Somerville.
" 22, Plainfield at Plainfield.
" 29, ——— at Somerville.
Sept. 5, Westfield at Somerville.
" 12, Plainfield at Somerville.
" 19, Plainfield at Somerville.
" 26, ——— at Somerville.

MONEY FOR CITY EXPENSES.

Amounts Named by the Common Council for the Coming Year.

The Plainfield Common Council Friday evening met in the office of City Clerk Force, with Councilman Ackerman in the chair, to consider the matter of making appropriations for the year.

The various items were estimated that the amounts needed would be as follows:

Fire—$4,000; last year the appropriation was $4,500. Fire and Buildings—$5,000, same as last year. Police Commissioners has in mind improvements to be made to the engine house on Second street, which is badly in need of them. Police, Salaries and Elections $12,500, $2,000 more than last year, partly due to the increase of salaries. Public Lights—$9,300, an increase of $300. Streets—$15,000, same as last year. Water, Printing and Stationery—$1,500, same as last year. Board of Health—$800, same as last year. Finance Committee — nothing; last year, $200. Public Library—$2,000, $200 more than last year, partly due to the increase of salaries. Public Lights—$9,300, an increase of $300. Streets—$15,000, same as last year. Water, Printing and Stationery—$1,500, same as last year. Board of Health—$800, same as last year. Finance Committee — nothing; last year, $200. Public Library—$2,000, $200 more than last year, partly due to the increase of salaries. Police, Salaries and Elections $12,500, $2,000 more than last year, partly due to the increase of salaries. Public Lights—$9,300, an increase of $300. Streets—$15,000, same as last year. Water, Printing and Stationery—$1,500, same as last year. Board of Health—$800, same as last year. Finance Committee — nothing; last year, $200. Public Library—$2,000, $200 more than last year. General city purposes—$25,000, same as last year.

The Council adopted the recommendations of the several resolutions of the Committee of the Whole, and passed on first and second reading an ordinance appropriating the money.

When the Assessor has completed his work for this year and has made known the total assessed valuation, together with the county and school taxes, the new city tax rate can be determined. The Council fixed the salaries for the year as follows:

Assessor — $1,000; Treasurer — $600; City Judge—$600; Corporation Counsel—$1,000; City Clerk—$750; Overseer of Poor —$400; Chief Engineer—$600; First Assistant Engineer—$150; Second Assistant Engineer—$75; Captain of Police—$1,080; regular police—$720; regular horse driver —$417 per month; Janitor of City Hall and City Council janitor—$50 per year, and $2 per special meeting; Street Commissioner —$1,500; City Physician—365.

The Committee on Sewers reported back the matter of widening and extending Peace street, said that they were at present unable to do anything towards accomplishing the desired improvements, and recommended that the Committee on Laws and Ordinances prepare an ordinance to cover the case so that the plan of widening and extending may be consummated.

HARD LINES FOR MAYOR PLACE.

He Can't Arrange His Committees to Suit the Borough Council.

At the regular April meeting of the Borough Council, when Mayor Place appointed his standing committees for the new municipal year just begun, Council-man Hegeman declined to serve as chairman of the Committee on Streets. At last week's adjournment meeting the Mayor disposed of the situation by appointing a new list, as follows:

Auditing and Finance—Councilmen Hunter, Hegeman and Smalley.

Fire, Water and Lamps—Councilmen Seeling, Smalley and Buckle.

Laws, Ordinances and Elections—Councilmen Needham, Hummer and Smalley.

Licenses and Markets—Councilmen Smalley Needham and Hegeman.

Streets and Public Health—Councilmen Buckle, Needham and Hunter.

Printing, Stationery and Supplies—Councilmen Hummer, Seeling and Hunter.

Sewers—No meeting of the committee this fact. It is the only newspaper on this earth with capacity to do such work. And it was never yet done by any other. Don't be humbugged by any other. Don't lose time. We have spent thousands of dollars and years to acquire this skill. Don't let any fancy talk or name-calling and don't silly boast either. This is our stamping ground, and proudly we roar for the Big Dollar Sunday Newspaper of Plainfield. Tag the envious source that "Hires Help" and "Sells Out" and "Rides a Horse Upon New Jersey." This we once took. New Jersey is the power behind the throne; and Plainfield is the Queen City of New Jersey, likewise the Colorado of the East." And don't you forget it, and don't every time—in it to stay—at long this time.

A complete search of the paper reveals the fact that the only original performance of the Arbor Day exercises in our own, "completed and completed since his last issue," is the part of the Arbor Day public school programmes from THE PRESS of the day before. True it is that it is the only newspaper on this earth with capacity to do such work."

Welcome Friends.

By a rare accident I was made acquainted with Mr. Ayres, the typographer of Phila, and have used them for two years for my Job Printing and Binding, concerning the secretion and preventing other diseases. I subscribe myself your friend, as your patient, Dr. Hanthorne, N. J.

The Rev. J. M. Hendrickson, Hanthorne, N. J.

Somerset Presbyterial Meet.

The Somerset county Board of Freeholders met at the Court House at Somerville last week. All the members were present.

The recent Borough act having abolished the office of Chosen Freeholder in North Plainfield township, the following resolution was passed:

WHEREAS, It has come to the knowledge of this board that by a recent act of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey the office of borough of North Plainfield has been abolished; and

WHEREAS, Jacob Long, Chosen Freeholder of said borough, has acted in the capacity of Chosen Freeholder of said borough and has not having been informed of the abolishment of said office; therefore, we hereby ratify and confirm the acts of said Long.

The committee appointed to investigate the South Branch Railroad track at Riverside reported that in their opinion it would be of no avail to bring suit against the company for damages, as no witnesses could be procured.

The final meeting of the old board will be held at the Court House May 12. The next day, May 13, the new board will meet for organization and such other business as will be necessary.

An Easton man advertises for a boy to "open oysters with a reference." Oysters do not generally obtain references, but billions of them have been opened by the miraculous power of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. It knows of no reason worst as "fail."

NOTICE.

MARCH 30TH, 1891.

Estate of Patrick Day, Deceased.

Pursuant to the order of George P. Farrell, Surrogate of the County of Union, this day made, on the application of the undersigned, administrator of said deceased, notice is hereby given to the creditors of said deceased to exhibit to the subscriber under oath or affirmation their claims against the estate of said deceased within nine months from this date, or they will be forever barred from prosecuting or recovering the same against the undersigned.

JAMES J. DAY, Administrator.
4 15 6t

DEATHS.

COOPER—at South Sterling, April 16, 1891, Mary E., daughter of John Cooper, aged 17 years, 8 months and 22 days.

DRAKE—In North Plainfield, April 17, of pneumonia, Miss Ann Drake.

ODAM—In this city, April 15, at the residence of her son, John T. Odam, 55 West Second street, Mrs. Elizabeth Odam, in her 84th year.

PIERSON—In North Plainfield, April 16, 1891, Mrs. Hannah C. Pierson.

ROLL—In this city, April 14, Mrs. Nancy, wife of the late Charles Roll, aged 72 years.

SQUIER—In Bonna Heights, April 17, 1891, Sarah W., wife of the late William Squier, in her 82d year.

SEELEY—At South Plains, April 27, 1891, Edmund A. Seeley, aged 71 years.

WILKINS—In this city, April 19, 1891, Mrs. Juliet Wilkins, aged 67 years.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

"WHY, ARE YOU SICK?"

"I know precisely how you feel; it is that nervous, irritable feeling, your back troubles you, and when you try to read a little, your head aches. That's just so! I know it. Oh, brother the doctor! Get a bottle of Vegetable Compound, and take it faithfully, as I have done. I've been through the sinking spell, but am now entirely restored. Do, I tell you, dear."

Prudent women the world over understand diseases, and in the Compound is a remedy for all those distressing ills that require prompt and effective treatment as a guaranty to good health.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a Positive Cure for all Female Complaints, as a beautiful illustrated book.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Is the only Positive Cure and Establishment of Menstruation, Inflammation, Ulceration, Falling and Displacement of the Womb, Inflammation, Ovarian Troubles, and all kinds of Weakness of the Uterus or Womb, and is the best Remedy for Leucorrhœa, Irregular and Painful Menstruation, Flooding, Gravel, Weakness of the Spine, Kidney Complaints, Nervous Prostration, Headache, Dizziness, Sleeplessness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Torpidity of the Liver, Piles, and all Nervous Complaints of either sex.

All Druggists sell it as a standard article, or sent by mail in form of Pills or Lozenges, on receipt of $1.00. LYDIA E. PINKHAM MED. CO. LYN

BUILDING A HOUSE.

Important Suggestions for People of Moderate Means.

The Duties of Architect and Builder—What Kind of Materials to Use—Plans and Specifications for a Pretty House.

(COPYRIGHT, 1891, BY A. E. KELLOGG NEWSPAPER CO.)

This handsome dwelling is to contain seven rooms and can be built for $2,600. It is calculated to prepossess anyone in its favor, while the plan, with the same or but original feature of a living room, is conducive to comfort and economy of space.

The front porch is 10x11 feet, hall 8x 10 feet, living room 14x14 feet, kitchen 14x15 feet, pantry 3x6 feet, three chambers 14x14 feet, 11x14 feet, 10x14 feet, bedroom 9x10 feet, and an alcove 6x10 feet. The house is piped throughout for gas and furnace.

The materials employed in the construction of the building are fully described in the following specifications of material and labor required in the erection and completion of a dwelling house, according to plans, and under the superintendence of the owner.

SPECIFICATIONS.

DRAWINGS, ETC.—The contractors will make no alterations in the drawings or specifications, but should any error or inconsistency appear in these during the progress of the work, it shall be the duty of the contractors to duly notify the owner, who will make the proper adjustments.

The drawings and specifications are to be used for building only, and are the property of the owner, and are to be carefully treated and returned to him on completion of the work. The drawings and specifications are to be signed by each owner and contractor, for the purpose of identification.

GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—The contractor is to furnish all transportation, labor, materials, scaffolding, etc., for performing the work in a workmanlike manner. All materials shall be the best of their several kinds, and all work done in a thorough and workmanlike manner, to the true intent and meaning of the following specifications and accompanying drawings, which are intended to include everything necessary and usual to be done properly and for the finishing of the work, notwithstanding every item necessarily pertaining to the work may not be particularly mentioned. All work, when finished, to be delivered up in a perfect and undamaged state.

All portions of the work done by the contractors of a quality not approved by the owner shall be forthwith removed by and at the expense of the contractor and replaced by him in a proper and satisfactory manner.

The contractors must do all the necessary cutting and patching of any and every kind of specialties; also clean out building when required by the owner, and also keep the premises reasonably accessible at any time during the progress of the work and in not respect to use the premises for the storage of materials or any outside piece, if any such place can be found on the premises.

All masonry is liable to be properly protected from the weather, and in cold weather the exterior must provide suitable protection to all materials used. Any portion of the work the contractor will provide set centers, etc., required by the architect.

EXCAVATIONS.—Make excavation for cellar to the full size of present, and same to be carried to about the depth of four feet below the line of the present floor and deeper where the construction may require for grading.

GRADING.—Fill in and pack the earth against the cellar walls, after the mortar is dry, and grade the lot around the house to be the height of about one foot six inches above the line of the present grade, and slope the ground on all sides of the building as directed.

CONCRETING.—Concrete shall be composed of coarse gravel and cement. One part cement and two parts lime, and sharp sand, also not over the cellar bottom to the depth of three inches, with the upper surface left straight and level.

BRICKWORK.—Build piers, chimneys, etc., to the height and of the size shown on the plans. All wood work must be thoroughly cleaned off, and projections, if any, to be cut away. Point with putty, knots properly filled, and wood primed before glazing.

FINISH HOOKS.—All wood work on first floor to be painted three coats in two colors as directed by the owner.

PAINTING.—Furnish all materials and perform all labor for the painting of all the wood work. All lead and oil must be ground fine and pure. All wood work must be thoroughly cleaned off, sandpapered, and rubbed down smooth with pumice stone properly filled, and wood stained before the first coat dries.

FINISH HOOKS.—All wood work on first floor to be painted three coats in two colors as directed by the owner.

PAINTING.—All wood work in second story to have three coats in two colors as directed by the owner.

PAINTING.—Furnish all materials and perform all labor for the painting of all the wood work. All lead and oil must be ground fine and pure. All wood work must be thoroughly cleaned off, sandpapered, and rubbed down smooth with pumice stone properly filled, and wood stained before the first coat dries.

FINISH HOOKS.—All wood work on first floor to be painted three coats in two colors as directed by the owner.

PAINTING.—All wood work in second story to have three coats in two colors as directed by the owner.

NEWELS, BALUSTERS AND RAIL to main staircase to be of black walnut. Slips to be properly applied rubbed down and cleaned off, and finished with two coats of hard oil finish.

OUTSIDE WORK.—Paint all outside work including the shingles, two coats. All blue paint, etc., three coats of best white lead and linseed oil paint. All outside work to be well rubbed down and cut smooth between each coat, and all left in a perfect finish.

PLUMBING.

Furnish all materials and perform all labor required in the plumbing. Set bath tub, wash basin, water closet, and sink complete, and connect with the water and sewer pipes in a workmanlike manner, according to drawings and specifications.

All water pipes must be so put in that they will not be liable to burst by the action of frost. All lead pipes to be secured with hard wiped joints. All joints between lead and iron pipes to be made through hydrant joints. All waste pipes to be of lead and well trapped and ventilated.

PLUMBING FIXTURES.—All plumbing fixtures, except those otherwise specified, to be of the best kind, with white porcelain, where shown in the drawings, and to be supplied with all necessary cocks, and waste through a two inch lead pipe with trap and air pipe, properly connected with the main drain and sewer.

PUMP AND SUPPLY PIPE.—Set in kitchen a force pump with lead pipe connected with the best galvanized iron pipe from the cistern.

GEO. A. W. MYERS.

An Anatomical Proposal.

"Why did you refuse the learned and rich Mr. Sigfarmus?"

"He was too precise. When he proposed he asked me for my hand and heart. He says the liver has been proved to be the seat of affection.—Fancy living with that sort of a man!"—St. Joseph News.

Her Training.

"I don't see how Miss Summit ever became such a good conversationalist. She never has anything to say, does she?"

"Well, you see, she has been going regularly to the opera ever since she came out."—Puck.

A MATTER OF INSTINCT.

Miss Bibbs—Your friend, Mr. Parker, has not favored us with his presence this afternoon, Mr. Idlewild.

Idlewild—It is strange that Charlie was not put in appointed. I saw him only last evening strolling down the avenue with a well-known club man.—Munsey's Weekly.

A Long Wait.

Dashaway—An amateur performance I attended the other evening was delayed an hour because one of the ladies forgot her cues. They got a fellow from the audience to help them out.

Cleverton—I don't see why getting a fellow from the audience delayed them an hour.

Dashaway—They had to wait for one to come in.—Judge.

No Discovered on Over Words.

Van Dodder—Would very well to talk about the splendid forms of the Greek statues, but modern men are for no such thing. Why, I'm built like a brick! Don't you agree with me, Miss Cutting?

Miss Cutting—Well, Mr. Van Dodder, I can't say that I admire the shape of it at present.—Munsey's Weekly.

VOGEL BROTHERS,

Clothiers.

Boys' Suits, (ages 4 to 15) Prices, $3 to $10.

Men's Prince Albert Coat and Vest, Prices, $15 to $20.

Men's Spring Overcoats, Prices, $6 to $25.

Men's Single and Double Breasted Business and Dress Suits, Prices, $12 to $30.

Men's Frock Suits, for Business and Dress Wear, Prices, $20 to $30.

Boys' Suits, (ages 4 to 15) Prices, $3 to $10.

Children's Suits, (ages 4 to 15) Prices, $4 to $9.

New Spring and Summer styles for 1891, the highest standard of ready made Clothing at the very lowest prices. Every Garment manufactured by ourselves with the utmost care, to give perfect satisfaction in every instance.

Fashion Catalogue, Rules for self-measuring, and samples of Cloth mailed free to any address.

BROADWAY & HOUSTON ST.,

NEW YORK CITY.

ELECTRO-PLATING.

The Principle Lying at the Foundation of the Interesting Process.

Whenever a current of electricity passes through a liquid which contains a metallic salt in solution, the metal of the salt will be deposited upon the place where the current leaves the liquid. The ends of the wires which bring and carry away the current are called electrodes. The electrode which is connected with the zinc of the battery is the one which receives the deposit.

This principle lies at the foundation of the process of electro-plating, by means of which any cheap metal is covered with a thin coating of a precious metal.

To superimpose with electro-plating you will need three things—a good battery, a plating bath and a means of cleaning the article which is to be plated.

For a battery, three cells of any of the batteries hitherto described will suffice. Connect the end of No. 1 to the copper or carbon of No. 2, the zinc of No. 2 to the carbon of No. 3, and the remaining terminals of No. 1 and No. 3 are connected with the bath.

As a receptacle for the solution, use a pint bowl—a china finger bowl, or a bread and milk bowl will do—and suspend in the bowl across the top of this place two bright copper or brass wires, an eighth of an inch in diameter. Connect the ends of these with the terminals of the battery.

To plate with copper, fill the bowl with a solution made by dissolving two ounces of blue vitrol in a pint of boiling water. Suspend the plate with silver, use a solution of twenty grains each of potassium cyanide and silver cyanide in a little de less than a pint of water. These salts are poisonous, and the hands should not be brought to the mouth after handling them. Upon the wire, which is connected with the zinc of the battery, hang, by means of an S-shaped hook of bright copper wire, the article to be plated. Upon the other wire suspend in the same manner a piece of sheet copper about the same size as the article.

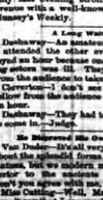
In order that the article may receive an even coating of metal, it must be thoroughly cleaned. In practice, regular platers pass it through several baths. For plain work it will suffice to dip, for a few minutes, in a solution of common commercial potash and water. After its removal, wash it in boiling hot water.

After the articles have received a sufficiently thick coating, they may be removed from the bath and washed with an abundance of water. The copper needs no further attention; but silver-plated articles appear dull, and will need to be polished. This can be done with chamois skin and any ordinary polishing powder.—Youth's Companion.

IN GOOD COMPANY.



JAPANESE PIPES.

Smoking Has Been Reduced to a Fine Art in the United Empire.

To be quite Japanese, says a writer in Scribner's Magazine, we will begin by taking from our girdle the little brass affair which we shipped, and by filling the kisera and inhaling one or two fragrant whiffs of the delicate Japanese tobacco. In their use of the nicotian herb, as in many other things, the Japanese display a supreme refinement.

The rudest coolie, the meanest farm laborer, equally with the gay and lively the pretty geisha and the minister of state, are content with this tiny pipe, which does not hold enough to make even Queen Mab smoke.

They stuff a little rolled pill of the fine-cut leaf into a bowl smaller than the smallest acorn cup, thrust it in the glowing charcoal and inhale deep into the lungs just enough of the weird of the blue smoke, which they expel by mouth and nostrils.

Then they shake out the little burning plug into the bamboo receptacle and repeat the smoking process, not exhaling only the first sweet purity of the lighted luxury and always retaining the smoke in the mouth, ground-glass to the "bitter end" or each for half an hour at a huge Havana puro. "Three whiffs of tobacco and a cup of tea" is the Japanese idea of a refreshment.

FRESH YOUTHS OF ENGLAND.

They Are Considered to Be Altogether Too Precocious.

If England can find Lord Beaconsfield believed and maintained—is to be "saved by her young men," whatever sound cause of more mature age are justified in beseeching their serious consideration on the very complaint of this kind. It is our duty to look after these future saviors of the country, says the London Telegraph, and whatever we notice in them a tendency to decline from the standard of our own well-known virtues and todiscredit the admirable example which we have set them, the fact must be kindly but firmly pointed out to them. It is not that there is bad cause for the national future if the youth of England were really losing that chivalrous regard for the weaker sex by which the manners of their fathers, and, we will add, their mothers, were so favorably distinguished; and, though we do not ourselves take as despondingly a view on this point as prevails in certain quarters, we cannot deny that here are visible grounds for some uneasiness.

For instance, it is impossible not to notice a change for the worse in the new mode of address adopted by the young man of the present day toward young women not related to him, or for any other reason so closely associated with him as to justify a tone of exceptional familiarity. To overhear a casual conversation between two such young people of opposite sexes, however, "gently born and bred"—to quote the laureate's description, introduced, by him as the type of the most effeminate "but" of his city clerk in "Sea Dreams"—is to find food for very grave reflection. The young man not lay too much stress on the fact that the youth's manner toward the young maiden is undoubtedly calculated to make the bones of the latter's schoolmarmish stir in the silent tomb. We are quite willing to admit that these venerable ladies are just a little too much "out of the movement," and we profess no wish to review the somewhat oppressive and exclusive standard of the old "ladies" and "madames" days. There is, however, surely some medium between the ceremonious style of address in vogue, and if the gentlemen has ceased to bow to the ground in addressing the lady, that is no reason why he should make speaking figuratively, to slapping her on the back.

The "hail-fellow-well-met" style between the two sexes has, moreover, unquestionably gained ground of late years, and it may be too common male habit of talking to women with a freedom and familiarity not formally used toward them which is gradually leading young men to neglect those distinctions and flatteries which ladies expect from them. Some may be silently for a youth who is accustomed himself to treat his female partner of the lawn tennis ground as a "chum" or a "pal" to make a sodded and complete change of attitude toward her when she becomes the partner of the ballroom. On occasion—and, indeed, on most occasions—he might very will be apt to forget that his fair companion has claims to precedence, for more right to be waited upon and "looked after" by him, than would belong to a companion of his own sex.

Little Man (excitedly)—I'm hunting for a man named Bibbs, who said I was a contemptible liar.

Big Man (calmly)—I'm Bibbs, but I didn't call you a toadstool. I said you were a fungus.—Detroit Free Press.

Little Man (backing off)—That's all right. We're all fond of mushrooms.—Good News.

Explaining the Item.

Client—You have an item in your bill, "Advice, January 5, five dollars." That was a day before I first saw you.

Lawyer—I know it. But don't you remember, on the 4th I told you you'd better not make the case for yours.—Client—Yes.

Lawyer—Well, that's advice.—N. Y. Sun.

Valuable Information.

"O, dear," sighed Mrs. Cornsoe, "I've got parents and any quantity of dread-ful diseases."

"I didn't know you had anything of the kind," replied Chappie.

"I didn't, either, until I read this patent medicine advertisement."—West Shore.

Premature Rejoicing.

"I'm always glad," said Chappie, when the summer is over. There's a lot of us to entertain and pretty girls to meet.

And just as he was later Ethel told Chappie that she promised she'd "take a little turnpike."—Judy.

Another Fact.

Hoffman House—Howell Others—Such is to hand back lately, and yet he still dresses very well. He must have a good friend somewhere.

Howell Others—Yes; he's Monsters-stretcher.—Puck.

Another Fact.

Holdenwell—Yeh Hoky and Miss Allen seem to be getting on very pretty well.

Holdenwell—Yes the last few evenings I have noticed that they were progressing at a swinging gait.—Light.

Railroads.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.
THE STANDARD RAILWAY OF AMERICA
PROTECTED THROUGHOUT BY THE
Interlocking Switch and Block Signal System.

TRAINS FOR THE WEST.

On and after Nov. 16, 1890, trains leave Rinesburg as follows:

9:30 A. M. FAST LINE, with Pullman Vestibuled parlor and sleeping cars, daily for Pittsburg, Crestline, Fort Wayne, Chicago, St. Louis, Denver, Salt Lake City, Chicago and Texas.

11:30 A. M. PACIFIC EXPRESS, with Pullman Vestibuled sleeping cars, daily except Saturday, for Pittsburg, Crestline, Fort Wayne, Chicago and St. Louis, daily except Saturday, for Denver and Salt Lake City.

6:41 P. M. PACIFIC EXPRESS, with Pullman Vestibuled sleeping cars, daily for Pittsburg, Crestline, Fort Wayne, Chicago and St. Louis, daily except Saturday, for Denver and Salt Lake City.

For Pittsburg—1:00, 2:00, 3:00, 4:00, 5:00, 6:00, 7:00, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00, 11:00 A. M.; 12:00 M.; 1:00, 2:00, 3:00, 4:00, 5:00, 6:00, 7:00, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00, 11:00 P. M.; 12:00 Night.

For Philadelphia—1:00, 2:00, 3:00, 4:00, 5:00, 6:00, 7:00, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00, 11:00 A. M.; 12:00 M.; 1:00, 2:00, 3:00, 4:00, 5:00, 6:00, 7:00, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00, 11:00 P. M.; 12:00 Night.

FOR ATLANTIC CITY.

1:30 A. M., Philadelphia week-days. For Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, 1:30 P. M. week-days.

For Trenton—1:30, 6:07, 7:30, 7:50, 9:00, 11:0 A. M.; 12:00 M.; 1:30, 3:40, 4:30, 5:10, 7:00, 9:10 P. M. Sundays at 1:30, 3:40, 4:30, 5:10, 7:00, 9:10 A. M.; 1:30 P. M.

For Lambertville, Phillipsburg and Belvidere via Trenton—7:30 A. M. and 5:10 P. M.

For Lambertville and Phillipsburg only, 1:30 P. M. week-days. Sundays, 1:30 P. M.

For Bristol—1:30, 6:07, 7:30, 7:50, 9:00, 11:0 A. M.; 12:00 M.; 1:30, 3:40, 4:30, 5:10, 7:00, 9:10 P. M. Sundays at 1:30, 3:40, 4:30, 5:10, 7:00, 9:10 A. M.; 1:30 P. M.

A full line of tickets are on sale, and accommodations secured at the Company's office in Rinesburg.

For further information, see time tables to be had at the ticket offices.

J. R. WOOD, General Manager.
J. E. WOOD, Gen. Pass. Agent.

Central Railroad of New Jersey

Station in New York foot of Liberty Street. Time Table in effect, Sept. 28, 1890.

PLAINFIELD AND NEW YORK.

Leave Plainfield 5:37, 7:34, 8:52, 9:59, 11:08, 11:37 A. M.; 12:05, 1:11, 2:30, 3:40, 4:45, 5:30, 6:30, 7:34, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 P. M. Sundays—5:37, 7:34, 8:52, 9:59, 11:08, 11:37 A. M.; 12:05, 1:11, 2:30, 3:40, 4:45, 5:30, 6:30, 7:34, 8:30, 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 P. M.

Leave Somerville, 6:00, 7:00, 7:55, 7:56, 7:57, 8:00, 8:01, 8:02, 8:03, 8:04, 8:05, 8:06, 8:07, 8:08, 8:09, 8:10, 8:11, 8:12, 8:13, 8:14, 8:15, 8:16, 8:17, 8:18, 8:19, 8:20, 8:21, 8:22, 8:23, 8:24, 8:25, 8:26, 8:27, 8:28, 8:29, 8:30, 8:31, 8:32, 8:33, 8:34, 8:35, 8:36, 8:37, 8:38, 8:39, 8:40, 8:41, 8:42, 8:43, 8:44, 8:45, 8:46, 8:47, 8:48, 8:49, 8:50, 8:51, 8:52, 8:53, 8:54, 8:55, 8:56, 8:57, 8:58, 8:59, 9:00, 9:01, 9:02, 9:03, 9:04, 9:05, 9:06, 9:07, 9:08, 9:09, 9:10, 9:11, 9:12, 9:13, 9:14, 9:15, 9:16, 9:17, 9:18, 9:19, 9:20, 9:21, 9:22, 9:23, 9:24, 9:25, 9:26, 9:27, 9:28, 9:29, 9:30, 9:31, 9:32, 9:33, 9:34, 9:35, 9:36, 9:37, 9:38, 9:39, 9:40, 9:41, 9:42, 9:43, 9:44, 9:45, 9:46, 9:47, 9:48, 9:49, 9:50, 9:51, 9:52, 9:53, 9:54, 9:55, 9:56, 9:57, 9:58, 9:59, 10:00, 10:01, 10:02, 10:03, 10:04, 10:05, 10:06, 10:07, 10:08, 10:09, 10:10, 10:11, 10:12, 10:13, 10:14, 10:15, 10:16, 10:17, 10:18, 10:19, 10:20, 10:21, 10:22, 10:23, 10:24, 10:25, 10:26, 10:27, 10:28, 10:29, 10:30, 10:31, 10:32, 10:33, 10:34, 10:35, 10:36, 10:37, 10:38, 10:39, 10:40, 10:41, 10:42, 10:43, 10:44, 10:45, 10:46, 10:47, 10:48, 10:49, 10:50, 10:51, 10:52, 10:53, 10:54, 10:55, 10:56, 10:57, 10:58, 10:59, 11:00, 11:01, 11:02, 11:03, 11:04, 11:05, 11:06, 11:07, 11:08, 11:09, 11:10, 11:11, 11:12, 11:13, 11:14, 11:15, 11:16, 11:17, 11:18, 11:19, 11:20, 11:21, 11:22, 11:23, 11:24, 11:25, 11:26, 11:27, 11:28, 11:29, 11:30, 11:31, 11:32, 11:33, 11:34, 11:35, 11:36, 11:37, 11:38, 11:39, 11:40, 11:41, 11:42, 11:43, 11:44, 11:45, 11:46, 11:47, 11:48, 11:49, 11:50, 11:51, 11:52, 11:53, 11:54, 11:55, 11:56, 11:57, 11:58, 11:59, 12:00 P. M.

PLAINFIELD AND SOMERVILLE.

Leave Plainfield 5:40, 7:35, 8:07, 9:45, 11:40 A. M.; 12:40, 1:40, 3:40, 4:40, 5:40, 6:40, 7:40, 8:40, 9:40, 10:40, 11:40 P. M. Sundays—8:40, 9:40, 10:40, 11:40 A. M.; 12:40, 1:40, 3:40, 4:40, 5:40, 6:40, 7:40, 8:40, 9:40, 10:40, 11:40 P. M.

Leave Somerville, 6:00, 7:00, 7:55, 7:56, 7:57, 8:00, 8:01, 8:02, 8:03, 8:04, 8:05, 8:06, 8:07, 8:08, 8:09, 8:10, 8:11, 8:12, 8:13, 8:14, 8:15, 8:16, 8:17, 8:18, 8:19, 8:20, 8:21, 8:22, 8:23, 8:24, 8:25, 8:26, 8:27, 8:28, 8:29, 8:30, 8:31, 8:32, 8:33, 8:34, 8:35, 8:36, 8:37, 8:38, 8:39, 8:40, 8:41, 8:42, 8:43, 8:44, 8:45, 8:46, 8:47, 8:48, 8:49, 8:50, 8:51, 8:52, 8:53, 8:54, 8:55, 8:56, 8:57, 8:58, 8:59, 9:00, 9:01, 9:02, 9:03, 9:04, 9:05, 9:06, 9:07, 9:08, 9:09, 9:10, 9:11, 9:12, 9:13, 9:14, 9:15, 9:16, 9:17, 9:18, 9:19, 9:20, 9:21, 9:22, 9:23, 9:24, 9:25, 9:26, 9:27, 9:28, 9:29, 9:30, 9:31, 9:32, 9:33, 9:34, 9:35, 9:36, 9:37, 9:38, 9:39, 9:40, 9:41, 9:42, 9:43, 9:44, 9:45, 9:46, 9:47, 9:48, 9:49, 9:50, 9:51, 9:52, 9:53, 9:54, 9:55, 9:56, 9:57, 9:58, 9:59, 10:00, 10:01, 10:02, 10:03, 10:04, 10:05, 10:06, 10:07, 10:08, 10:09, 10:10, 10:11, 10:12, 10:13, 10:14, 10:15, 10:16, 10:17, 10:18, 10:19, 10:20, 10:21, 10:22, 10:23, 10:24, 10:25, 10:26, 10:27, 10:28, 10:29, 10:30, 10:31, 10:32, 10:33, 10:34, 10:35, 10:36, 10:37, 10:38, 10:39, 10:40, 10:41, 10:42, 10:43, 10:44, 10:45, 10:46, 10:47, 10:48, 10:49, 10:50, 10:51, 10:52, 10:53, 10:54, 10:55, 10:56, 10:57, 10:58, 10:59, 11:00, 11:01, 11:02, 11:03, 11:04, 11:05, 11:06, 11:07, 11:08, 11:09, 11:10, 11:11, 11:12, 11:13, 11:14, 11:15, 11:16, 11:17, 11:18, 11:19, 11:20, 11:21, 11:22, 11:23, 11:24, 11:25, 11:26, 11:27, 11:28, 11:29, 11:30, 11:31, 11:32, 11:33, 11:34, 11:35, 11:36, 11:37, 11:38, 11:39, 11:40, 11:41, 11:42, 11:43, 11:44, 11:45, 11:46, 11:47, 11:48, 11:49, 11:50, 11:51, 11:52, 11:53, 11:54, 11:55, 11:56, 11:57, 11:58, 11:59, 12:00 P. M.

PLAINFIELD AND EASTON.

Leave Plainfield 5:40, 7:35, 8:07, 9:45, A. M., 12:40, 1:40, 3:40, 4:40, 5:40, 6:40, 7:40, 8:40, 9:40, 10:40, 11:40 P. M. Sundays—8:40, 9:40, 10:40, 11:40 A. M.; 12:40, 1:40, 3:40, 4:40, 5:40, 6:40, 7:40, 8:40, 9:40, 10:40, 11:40 P. M.

Leave Somerville, 6:00, 7:00, 7:55, 7:56, 7:57, 8:00, 8:01, 8:02, 8:03, 8:04, 8:05, 8:06, 8:07, 8:08, 8:09, 8:10, 8:11, 8:12, 8:13, 8:14, 8:15, 8:16, 8:17, 8:18, 8:19, 8:20, 8:21, 8:22, 8:23, 8:24, 8:25, 8:26, 8:27, 8:28, 8:29, 8:30, 8:31, 8:32, 8:33, 8:34, 8:35, 8:36, 8:37, 8:38, 8:39, 8:40, 8:41, 8:42, 8:43, 8:44, 8:45, 8:46, 8:47, 8:48, 8:49, 8:50, 8:51, 8:52, 8:53, 8:54, 8:55, 8:56, 8:57, 8:58, 8:59, 9:00, 9:01, 9:02, 9:03, 9:04, 9:05, 9:06, 9:07, 9:08, 9:09, 9:10, 9:11, 9:12, 9:13, 9:14, 9:15, 9:16, 9:17, 9:18, 9:19, 9:20, 9:21, 9:22, 9:23, 9:24, 9:25, 9:26, 9:27, 9:28, 9:29, 9:30, 9:31, 9:32, 9:33, 9:34, 9:35, 9:36, 9:37, 9:38, 9:39, 9:40, 9:41, 9:42, 9:43, 9:44, 9:45, 9:46, 9:47, 9:48, 9:49, 9:50, 9:51, 9:52, 9:53, 9:54, 9:55, 9:56, 9:57, 9:58, 9:59, 10:00, 10:01, 10:02, 10:03, 10:04, 10:05, 10:06, 10:07, 10:08, 10:09, 10:10, 10:11, 10:12, 10:13, 10:14, 10:15, 10:16, 10:17, 10:18, 10:19, 10:20, 10:21, 10:22, 10:23, 10:24, 10:25, 10:26, 10:27, 10:28, 10:29, 10:30, 10:31, 10:32, 10:33, 10:34, 10:35, 10:36, 10:37, 10:38, 10:39, 10:40, 10:41, 10:42, 10:43, 10:44, 10:45, 10:46, 10:47, 10:48, 10:49, 10:50, 10:51, 10:52, 10:53, 10:54, 10:55, 10:56, 10:57, 10:58, 10:59, 11:00, 11:01, 11:02, 11:03, 11:04, 11:05, 11:06, 11:07, 11:08, 11:09, 11:10, 11:11, 11:12, 11:13, 11:14, 11:15, 11:16, 11:17, 11:18, 11:19, 11:20, 11:21, 11:22, 11:23, 11:24, 11:25, 11:26, 11:27, 11:28, 11:29, 11:30, 11:31, 11:32, 11:33, 11:34, 11:35, 11:36, 11:37, 11:38, 11:39, 11:40, 11:41, 11:42, 11:43, 11:44, 11:45, 11:46, 11:47, 11:48, 11:49, 11:50, 11:51, 11:52, 11:53, 11:54, 11:55, 11:56, 11:57, 11:58, 11:59, 12:00 P. M.

WESTWARD CONNECTIONS.

LEAVE PLAINFIELD.

8:05 A. M. for Boston, Allentown, Reading, Harrisburg, Manch Chunk, Pottsville and Intermediate Stations

The Constitutionalist,
A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE, Editors and Proprietors.
AT PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.
TERMS—TWO DOLLARS A YEAR.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

VOL. XXIV. PLAINFIELD, N. J., THURSDAY, APRIL 30, 1891. No. 18.

"Support the Constitution, which is the consent of the Union, as well as its limitations as to its authorities."—MADISON.

Rates of Advertising

Space	1 WEEK	2	3	1 MONTH	2	3	6	12
Inch Column
Page

All Electric must be sold soon.
"Rule of Everything" column, 5 cts. per line.
Double ads. go out on advance of above rates.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

JACKSON & CODDINGTON,
Counsellors-at-Law,
Commissioners of Deeds, Solicitors in Chancery, Notaries Public. Offices: Library of Park Church and Second street.—[1y27

W. Y. STERLE,
Counselor-at-Law,
Master and Examiner in Chancery, Supreme Court Commissioner, etc.
Cor. PARK AND NORTH AVES. 4-30-1m

GEORGE W. DAY,
Counselor at Law,
Notary Public and Conveyancer.
Office of Prudential Insurance Co., 116, Division St., N. J. Residence in rear of Office. Telephone Connection.

DR. CHARLES S. VIGHAM,
Dentist,
No. 27 West Front street. A new local anæsthetic for extracting teeth without pain. Gold filling a specialty.—[1y27

H. HAND,
Auctioneer,
Office at Adams, Loch Ge-il-ti, Scotch Plains, N. J., Arrives 9:41 a. m. Carriage to attend sales. Telephone Connection. Orders left at Office of Prudential Insurance Co., No. 15, Consolation or Grocery of Al. Gordon, Park avenue, Plainfield, N. J., will receive prompt attention.—[1y27

OSCAR E. TEALE,
Architect,
247 Broadway, New York city, Rooms 33 and 34, (Corporation Law Building.) Residence, Dutch Reading, Plainfield, N. J.—[1y27

J. R. FORSTER,
Veterinary Surgeon,
Office in A. M. Seguine's Livery Stable, corner Main street and Madison avenue, Plainfield, N. J. Day or night calls attended. Telephone Connection. No. 15, Consolation or Grocery of Al. Gordon, Park avenue, will receive prompt attention. To Rent Fine stable, 27 Rear Front street, corner Elm street.—[1y1257

JOHN CHANDLER,
CARPENTER AND BUILDER,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Residence and Shop No. 36 East 2d St.
Jobbing promptly attended to. 4-30-1y

T. J. GILLIES,
Auctioneer & Real Estate Agent.
SALESROOM—Madison Avenue, cor. Front St., Plainfield, N. J.
Goods received on consignment.

TO THE PUBLIC!

We wish to inform our customers and the public generally that we have on hand the best quality of

LEHIGH COAL,
Fresh from the Mines.

It is under cover and well protected from the weather, and we are prepared to deliver it well screened and in good order promptly. We can also furnish to parties all kinds of Screened Lumber and Masons' Materials at short notice.

A. D. COOK & BRO.
Depot, Sandy Hook.

Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure.

RIDING OR LIVERY.
Careful, safe drivers for shopping calls or somewhat extended drives. Can be had from the Depot or from the Hotels at a moment's notice, day or night.—[1y1257
TELEPHONE CALL, No. 20.

J. Hervey Doane,
6 PARK AVENUE,
(Formerly Clarke.)
Watches,
Clocks
And Jewelry.
Repairing neatly and, promptly done. 1y27

FOR BEAUTIFUL DESIGNS
In Furniture
GO TO
23, 25 and 27 PARK AVE.
Garret Q. Packer,

Steam Marble Granite Works.
AND
Monuments & Headstones.
Fencing for Cemetery Plots.
Large assortment of Slate Mantels.
Large variety of Granite Monuments
All work executed in the most skillful manner at LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES. All orders promptly attended to. JAMES MANNING.
Factory St., next to N. Y. Ch., PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Monuments erected in Greenwood Cemetery, N. Y.

Alex. Willett,
DEALER IN
BOOTS & SHOES.
No. 7 PARK AVENUE.
A full assortment of desirable goods always on hand. Custom work a specialty.

Geo. A. Moore,
(Of the late firm of Moore Bros.)
is now the sole proprietor of the old established
No. 14 NORTH AVENUE,
Where he will continue to supply patrons with the best grades of Flour and Feed. Also, for all kinds, Screened Coal. Screen in front of the second finished yellow. Anything and everything kept in store furnished at short notice.

HOTELS AND SALOONS.

FORCE'S HOTEL,
NORTH AVENUE, (NEAR R. R. STATION.)
JAS. H. FORCE, Prop'r.
A FIRST CLASS PLACE FOR STOCK. Queen Hotel, Watrous building.
Transient guests at reasonable rates. 10-31-y

SOMERSET HOTEL,
Cor. Somerset & Canal Sts., North Plainfield, N. J.
RICHARD A. BOYCE, Proprietor.
Pleasantest and handiest hotel, at fair rates.
First-class stables and sheds attached.
Meals at all reasonable hours.

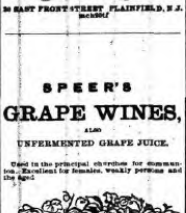
Dime Savings Institution
OF PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Is now receiving deposits payable on demand, with interest at the rate of three (3) per month, per annum payable semi-annually.
JOHN W. MURRAY, President,
WILLIAM WHITE, Vice "
MATHIAS HARPER, " "
ELIAS K. POPE, Treasurer.

Jas. M. Dunn,
Dealer in
GROCERIES, PROVISIONS,
Vegetables, Fruits, etc.
No. 36 Park Ave.
OPPOSITE NORTH AVENUE.
THORBURN & CO'S GARDEN SEEDS,
BEST IN THE WORLD.
ALL GOODS DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE.

ESTABLISHED 1836.
C. E. & J. W. BROWN,
[Successors to G. F. & C. E. Brown & Co.,]
Importers, Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
WALL PAPER,
321 Canal Street,
NEW YORK.
English Tiles, Anaglypta, Rand, Leather Relievo Flock Papers, &c. Borings for Walls.
Manufacturers of Window Shades. 3-13-y

LIVERY.
A. M. SEGUINE,
(Successor to John W. Laing.)
Laing's Hotel Stables
Front street, opposite Madison avenue.
Coaches for Weddings, Funerals and Private Calls. Light carriages of all descriptions for pleasure.

SPEER'S
GRAPE WINES,
AND
UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.



Speer's Port Grape Wine,
FOUR YEARS OLD.
"THIS Celebrated Wine is the pure juice of the Grape first fermented in open tubs, pressed in Speer's wine cellars, and left hang until very strong and perfectly palatable before bottling. Its invaluable
Tonic and Strengthening Properties are frequently prescribed by our eminent physicians. We have produced under Mr. Speer's own personal supervision, the following pure unfermented Grape Juice, used by the principal families in the city, and for sacramental purposes, and from the Pope, or from private parties. Speer's Port Grape Wine can be obtained in any quantity, and ordered by the bottle, case or cask, at the Accommodation Express.
PETER RICKERT, Proprietor.
Office—Vanderbeek's Machine Shop, Front street.
The Accommodation Express will attend to the general carrying business of the city, collecting and delivering of packages, &c. Prompt attention to orders and careful handling a specialty.

Livery Stables!
Mr. D. S. ROBERTS
Has Removed to His New Building on
NORTH AVENUE,
Adjoining Force's Hotel. Mr. Roberts will only be too glad to add to the number of customers he already has. Terms reasonable for first-class horses and carriages. Prompt attention to orders and careful handling a specialty.

INSURANCE.

FIRE INSURANCE!
The undersigned, agent for the following first-class companies, is prepared to take risks at the lowest rates of premium:
Star and Merchants
Fire Insurance Co's of the City of New York, as represented by the undersigned, promptly and satisfactorily adjusted and paid. Office and residence on Plainfield avenue, near Second street.
NATHAN HARPER, Jr.

Speer's (Socialist Claret
is held in high estimation for its richness as a Dry Table Wine, especially suited for dinner

Speer's P. J. Sherry
Is a Wine of superior character, and possesses all the rich qualities of the grape from which it is

Speer's P. J. Brandy
"A PURE distillation of the grape, and stands unrivalled in this country for medicinal purposes. It is now conceded by the medical profession that the brandy distilled from the grape is far superior to that distilled from any other fruit."
See that the signature of ALFRED SPEER, Passaic, N. J., is on every cork.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS WHO KEEP FIRST-CLASS WINES. 5-30-y

WILLIAM A. WOODRUFF,
FIRE AND LIFE
INSURANCE AGENT,
Office cor. Front St. and Park Ave.,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Real Estate for Sale & Exchange.
MONEY TO LOAN
On Approved Security.

J. C. Pope & Co.,
GENERAL AGENTS OF THE
German American Ins. Co.,
of New York.
Also represents prime first-class fire companies. Office: Agents of the Queen Steamship Line. Drafts on Ireland 10/ sht. Fleet and City National Bank Stock Bought and Sold. Also,

BUILDING LOTS

And Other Most Eligible Securities.
OFFICE:
5 E. FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD.
JAMES C. POPE. ELIAS K. POPE

EDUCATIONAL.

Miss SCRIBNER
AND
Miss NEWTON'S
SCHOOL FOR GIRLS
AND KINDERGARTEN,
17 LaGrande Avenue.
CORNER OF WASHINGTON STREET.
Will open Wednesday, SEPT. 17, 1890.
The regular course will include Modeling, Drawing and Sewing. 9-11-y

PAINTERS & PAINTERS' SUPPLIES.

Paints, Varnishes, Glass.
WINDOW SHADES AND FIXTURES.
WALL PAPERS!
PAPER HANGING A SPECIALTY.
A. SWALM,
No. 6 North Avenue, Plainfield.
4-9-3m

L. S. WOOLSTON. J. P. BUCKLE.
Woolston & Buckle,
PAINTERS,
Wall Papers,
PAINTER'S SUPPLIES. 26 NORTH AVENUE
4-23-1y

MISCELLANEOUS.

LEWIS B. CODDINGTON,
[Successor to T. J. Carey.]
Furniture and Freight Express!
OFFICE—26 W. FRONT ST.
Large Covered Vans or Trucks. Goods delivered to any part of the U. S. Satisfaction guaranteed. Charges reasonable. P. O. Box 202. Pianos moving a specialty. 12-5-y

Fresh Garden Seeds
AND F RTILIZERS,
Farm and Garden Implements,
Lawn Mowers Refrigerators,
Ice Cream Freezers,
Gasoline Stoves,
Hardware, Tools, etc.
J. J. HEIDELOFF,
No. 13 SOMERSET ST. 5-15-6

CANOPIES
For Weddings, Parties, Etc.,
TO HIRE. CHARGES REASONABLE
Hugo Weigman,
26 EAST FRONT STREET, PLAINFIELD, N. J.
10-30-1y

Grasse and Bricks for all kinds of Mor's can be found here at Jobbers' prices. Bring your Plumbers, and the best One-Stores in the section. We use none but the very best of materials, and our work always gives satisfaction.

Keys of All Kinds are Made Here.

Tinware Made to Order.
Ranges, Brick and Portable Furnaces
SANITARY PLUMBING.

TOBACCO, SEGARS, &c.

H. EGGERDING,
No. 17 Park Avenue,
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Manufacturer of the Celebrated
C. O. D. CIGAR.
The best tobacconists over the State, and made in the finest manner. Try one.
CLARA HAVANA SMOKED A SPECIALTY.
Always a good assortment of the Choicest Brands of Foreign and Domestic Cigars, Cigarettes and Tobaccos always on hand.
Smokers Articles in Great Variety. 12-4-y

C. M. FINE,
Dealer in HAVANA & DOMESTIC
—SEGARS!—
SPEARE AVE., (NEXT DOOR TO SECOND ST.)
PLAINFIELD, N. J.
Tobacco and Smoker's Materials,
of every description.
The celebrated "Old Judge" Smoking Tobacco, which has given such universal satisfaction, always on hand. 4-2-y

A. WOLFF,
Manufacturer of
CIGARS,
And dealer in all kinds of Smoking and Chewing Tobacco, and smokers' articles, corner of Park avenue and Second street, next door to 41 West Front or one door east of Dudley Arms, and the only place in Plainfield where you can get the celebrated
CARNEY BROS., Ag'ts,
11 SOMERSET ST.
TINNERS,
PLUMBERS,
GAS FITTERS.
PARLOR STOVES,
COOK STOVES,
HEATERS.
Orders and Repairs promptly attended to.

THE NEW BOY IN SCHOOL.

"DON'T YOU WANT TO TRADE?" ASKED THE NEW BOY.

TAUGHT BY A YANKEE.

A New York Man's Experience as a Horse Trader.

NEW YORKER who spent a summer in Vermont says that he learned something up there which he considers a great deal of money. He certainly is an entertaining fellow, and the matter is:

"It was up at Hyde Park," he said, "that we put in our vacation, and we were delightfully situated in a great house upon the top of a big hill. From our windows we could see for miles, and of course the scenery was of course we wanted to ride over it all. We hired our horses of the village livery man, and selected a pretty good one and sometimes, we got stuck.

"One day we were given the worst beast that I ever drove. He was all right as far as looks were concerned, but he wouldn't go worth a cent. I chirruped at him, I goaded him, but he kept on with a steady four-mile gait, absolutely undisturbed by any efforts that I made. I tried to scare the old fellow, but he was braver than Bill the Alien, and wouldn't quicken my switch at any time. Finally I gave up in disgust, and, turning to my wife, 'why this horse is called Molasses,' I said.

"We jogged along until we came to a fork in the road. Which way to go was more than I knew. 'Let the horse take the left road,' said my wife, 'for I've often heard that horses know where to take people when the people themselves are entirely lost.' I acted upon my wife's suggestion at once. Any thing was better than waiting. I threw the lines down over the dash board and said: 'Get up, Molasses.' The first thing I knew the horse was dragging us home at his regulation four-mile-an-hour gait. It took all my strength to stop him and turn him about.

"Of course we went back to the fork of the road and began to wrark and to say: 'You're all right in your place,' I said to my wife, 'but you needn't attempt to run this place for me.'

"I reckon that we waited a quarter of an hour before any body came along, and then the one who came came with a rush, a great rattling of wheels heralding his coming. I stopped the man when he came alongside, and asked him which road to take to get to the place I was headed for. He told me and I thanked him, and was just starting off when he spoke up and said: 'That's a good-lookin' hoss you've got there, Mister.'

"Well, yes,' I said, 'and that's about all you can say for him. He can't travel, or won't, I don't know which it is.'

"'Don't you want to trade for a good hoss?' asked the man.

"I would in a minute, but this old fellow mustn't belong to me. He belongs to a man over at Hyde Park,' I replied.

"'Do you know,' said the man, assuming a confidential air, 'I'd like to get that hoss of yours fust rate. I've got the best wife in the world, and a big house, and I want to make him the next kind. I'll tell you what I'll do with you. I've got a hoss that is worth an even hundred dollars more'n your'n. But if you want to give me fifty dollars to boot between my hoss and your'n, I'll drive your'n home to my house and you can drive mine back to your'n.'

"'But this hoss don't belong to me, I tell you,' I said, somewhat angrily, 'it belongs to Mr. Carroll over at Hyde Park.'

"'Is that Hi Carroll's hoss?' demanded the man, appearing to be very much pleased by the discovery. 'Why, Hi Carroll's been trying to git this hoss of mine for three years. He's offered me two hundred dollars cash for him last week, but I wouldn't look at it, sir; by the time I get mine on the road I'll be higher, I'll be switched if that hain't old Molasses that you're hitched up to.'

"The man went on to offer me fifty dollars to boot between my hoss and old Molasses only day before yesterday, and I didn't know what a good match he was for mine. Of course, I've twenty-five dollars cash in my pocket, and if you say that's a go, she's a go.'

"'My name is Deacon Smith of Smithville,' continued the man, 'and I live a little t' other side of it. Only I reckon Hi Carroll will be the tickledest man you ever see when he gits this hoss. Say, you'll throw in twenty-five dollars and old Molasses.'

"Well, I made the trade. Carroll was tickled to death to get his horse back, and I was glad to get rid of the animal. I've never had a chance to trade since, but I'm getting ready to swap twenty-five dollars cheaper than I had ever hoped to get it. The deacon agreed with me and so did my wife. They say it is fatal to argue with a woman, but I'm not afraid of that. I'm never home traveling sufficiently. I continued to think well of the deacon throughout our drive, and it was with perfect confidence that I should receive some very valuable returns from him. For instance, that I drove into the stable on my return to Hyde Park. My wife was with me, and she said that she wanted to hear what Mr. Carroll had to say.

"But Mr. Carroll was not at home. Mrs. Carroll said that he was, and I agreed with her. But I told the hostler to unharness the new horse and to put him into a stall, and he set at work to do it.

"'Good-looking hoss,' he said, as he touched the traces.

"'Yes,' said I, 'and he is just as good as he looks.'

"Did you get some spectacles to go with him?' the hostler asked a moment later, looking at me with a leer.

"'Did you ever see Deacon Smith's horse was blind, and I was tremendously startled by the knowledge. But I didn't propose to let him get away with me. So I answered back bravely enough: 'Oh, well, that's nothing. He travels just as well as he ever did.'

"'Of course,' said the hostler, seeing that I was on my dignity, 'I don't know but what I'd just as lief have a blind horse as any other kind. I've sometimes thought there wasn't any sense in having eyes into horses, anyway.'

"'Why, Alfred,' said my wife, 'you don't mean to say that that horse is blind?'

"'Certainly he is, my dear. Didn't you know it?' I answered. 'Why, you wouldn't buy that horse for one thousand dollars if he had two good eyes.'

"'That silenced my wife.

"Meanwhile the hostler had gone on unbuckling the straps. He had taken off the headstall and the horse-clipper and hung them up on a hook. Then he came to the horse and gave a strong pull at the saddle. The saddle came off, but the crupper stuck fast. So the hostler gave another pull, but still the crupper kept in place. Then the hostler got angry and exerted all of his strength. You could have hung an ulster on each of my eyes when I saw that crupper come off and the horse's tail with it.

"'You're a brute!' I exclaimed, rushing up to the hostler, 'you deserve to be shot for such cruelty.'

"The hostler leaned back against a post and laughed as though he would burst.

"'You think it's a joke, do you, you miserable villain,' I shouted in a rage, 'but it's a horse's tail off.'

"Still he laughed.

"I took off my coat, having made up my mind to give that man the worst thrashing he ever had in his life, when suddenly my wife dropped to the floor, in the most lifeless way, with a full, shrieking thud, and I was compelled to leave the hostler to go to her.

"'Take me away!' my wife exclaimed as soon as she had recovered consciousness, and I started away with her.

"'I'll attend to your case later,' I hissed at the hostler as I left the stable.

"'Say, boss,' said the hostler, following me for a step or two, 'do you think I would pull the tail off a horse? Not much I wouldn't. That horse hain't had no tail for ten years. That thing I pulled off hain't nothing but a horse hair strapped on for looks' sake and tradin' purposes.'

"I paid Mr. Carroll just an even one hundred dollars before I could get a receipt in full out of him."—N. Y. Times.

SPOTTERS ON STREET CARS.

Some Spotted by the Conductors. They Are Given the Sixth Degree.

Every street-car line in New York employs from forty to sixty "spotters," who are paid twenty cents a round trip, and whose business it is to see that all fares received are rung up on the car indicator.

"It's the easiest thing in the world," said a Broadway car conductor to a World man, "for us to spot them. In the first place they have to keep track of every person who gets on the car and they can be seen taking notes. The usual method is for the spotter to carry a pocketful of beans. As a passenger gets on the car he transfers beans from a full pocket to an empty one, and when he leaves the car, as he usually does when it nearly reaches the terminus, he looks at the indicator, and if his leisure counts the beans and sees if the number tallies with that shown on the register.

"Usually the spotter gets on the car about five blocks from the starting point. One of them once had a piece of mine that he had two pockets in one, so he didn't have to take his hand out of his. He knew the word is always taken, and it is seldom that a conductor rings anything but the number of fares.

"There is no appeal from his report. Seven trips a day is the average made by these men, and if they do not report a man or two a week the officials think they are not attending to business. There is one institution to which the conductors, however, and that is that the spotters have men to watch them, and they are spotted by men with by small. It sometimes happens that two will board the same car unknown to each other, and perhaps give in different reports. Whenever I am sure of a spotter I give him the sixth degree as he is off the car.

